An hundred ſheep.] In this parable Chriſt compares ſinners to ſheep going aſtray, and God the Father to a tender and careful ſhepherd, ſeeking his ſtray ſheep, wherein he ſecretly taxes the Phariſees, for their uncharitableneſs in cenſuring him for converſing with publicans and ſinners, and for their envy at the recovery of ſuch ſinners by repentance; aſſuring them, that they are far from the temper of the holy angels, who rejoice more at the news of one notorious ſinner's converſion, than for many righteous perſons who went not aſtray. (B.) Here alſo, by the loſt ſheep is ſhewn the heedleſneſs and folly of a courſe of wickedneſs; the danger of this ſheep becoming a prey to every beaſt of rapine or deceit, to that "roaring lion in particular, which walketh about continually, ſeeking whom he may devour," 1 Pet. v. 8. and not only ſo, but the ſtupidity, the perſeverance in this wandring, and the want of will or of power to come back again. And ſuch in truth is the condition of people addicted to vice, when they have broken out of God's fold, and forſaken the pleaſant paſtures which he provided for them: They grow careleſs and inconſiderate, are expoſed to and overtaken by ſnares and temptations every moment: They are hardned by cuſtom, are depraved in their affections and judgment, are neither diſpoſed to grow wiſer, nor of themſelves capable of conquering inveterate habits of evil, tho' they ſhould now and then ſhew ſome good inclination to attempt it. (St.) See the notes on Matt. xviii. 12.

Go after that which is loſt.] The wandring ſheep is ſuppoſed not to return of itſelf; and the piece of money never to be found, except the owner ſearch for it: And hence our bleſſed Saviour, whoſe great deſign it was to reclaim and turn men away from their iniquities, does ſo often diſtinguiſh himſelf by the titles of a phyſician to diſtemper'd ſouls, Matt. ix. 12. and one "who came to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt," Luke xix. 10. (Idem.)

On his ſhoulders.] Bringing it home with great care and ſome pains to him. (H.) There is One at hand, who will carry you on his ſhoulders, and vanquiſh all difficulties, if ye will but concur in working out this freedom from bondage, and accept of a reſcue from deſtruction. (St.)

Joy ſhall be in heaven.] For the right underſtanding this joy, ſome caution muſt be uſed; which I ſhall therefore, after the example of ſome learned and great names, explain as clearly and as briefly as I can. 1. For the object of this joy, the repentance of a ſinner; that it ſhould affect angels and God too, may very juſtly ſeem ſtrange. And yet, that ſo it does we have good authority to believe, from theſe words of our bleſſed Saviour, and from the correſpondence of the two applications to their reſpective ſimilitudes: For there the poſſeſſor, who recover'd his loſs, can mean none but God; as the friends and neighbours, to whom ſuch joy is communicated, muſt in all reaſon denote the bleſſed angels and ſpirits, that bear a part in this general gladneſs above. But then, 2. Is it not yet more ſtrange, that the degree of joy ſhould be ſo intenſe upon this occaſion? That one ſuch reformed wretch ſhould raiſe it, above the ſafety of many ſouls, who never fell ſo foully, nor provoked any contrary paſſion ſo highly? That the ninety-nine ſheep, which never ſtrayed, ſhould excite leſs of it, than one poor ſilly wanderer? And yet, that thus in fact it is, we are aſſured from the following parable of the returning prodigal, from the reſt of the flock being left behind in the wilderneſs, and from the expreſs application of our bleſſed Maſter. (Idem.)

Juſt perſons, which need no repentance.] That is, which need not ſuch a ſolemn extraordinary repentance, or the whole change of heart and mind, as great ſinners do; tho' all have need of ſome, and the beſt are moſt ſenſible of it. (H. and Parſons.) Here Chriſt ſets ninety and nine juſt perſons in oppoſition to one ſinner, not that it is ſo in proportion, for there are very few who live according to the rule; but becauſe, if it were ſo, great care and pains ought to be taken, even for the ſake of one. (G.)

Either what woman.] By this compariſon of a loſt piece of money, we are given to underſtand, that God eſteems the ſouls of men precious, and reckons them among his wealth and his treaſures. And his indeed they are, made and formed by his own hand, impreſſed with his own image and ſuperſcription: And from that ſtamp, which carries a reſemblance to the great King of the whole world, deriving all their currency and value. But, when they abandon God's laws, and forſake the divine and rational life; a life of goodneſs and wiſdom, renounced for one of ſenſuality and madneſs and miſchief; then they are loſt, loſt to themſelves, loſt to God; then this coin is debaſed, the impreſs obliterated and gone; and that piece of money, as to all the worth and uſe of it, in a manner, as if it were no longer in being. (St.)

Ten pieces of ſilver.] In the Greek drachmas. See the notes on Matt. xvii. 27. and xviii. 28. But here it may be acceptable to the reader, to give him, in one view,

Light a candle.] There are three common ſources of ſin in the church, and in particular ſinners: 1. Want of knowledge, ignorance of duty, and weakneſs of faith. 2. Public diſorders, and corruption of manners in the houſe of God. 3. The negligence of paſtors. There are on the contrary three ſources likewiſe of reformation in the church, and of the converſion of ſinners: 1. To "light the candle," that is, to illuminate and revive faith by the means of good books, and above all by inſpiring the ſoul with the love of God's word, according to that of the royal prophet, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path;" and by propagating the knowledge of the myſteries of religion, and of the duties of Chriſtianity. 2. To purge the church from the pernicious maxims of corrupt morality, and from public diſorders. 3. To give to particular churches enlightned and zealous paſtors, and ſuch as may labour with an indefatigable care in the converſion and ſanctification of ſouls. (Q.)

In the preſence of the angels.] As to the angels, altho' we are little acquainted with their condition, and the ingredients of their happineſs, yet thus much the ſcripture hath informed us concerning them, that "they are miniſtring ſpirits, ſent out to miniſter for them that ſhall be heirs of ſalvation," Heb. i. 14. and that children, both in the natural and ſpiritual capacity, have thoſe which are ſtiled their angels, Matt. xviii. 10. Thoſe ſpirits then may very reaſonably, and ſeem generally to be thought full of tenderneſs for their charge, ſolicitous for their particular ſafety, and extremely glad of any good that befals them. How theſe heavenly hoſts were affected with the ſalvation of mankind in general, is evident from the hymn, with which they attended at the birth of Chriſt, to welcome him into the world; as alſo from their conſtant earneſt deſire of contemplating the myſtery of our redemption, 1 Pet i. 12. Every occaſion then of this kind may be glad tidings to them: And, tho' their nature be far diſtant from us mortals, and their bliſs exquiſite, beyond what we are able to conceive, yet, in regard both their nature and their bliſs are finite, their joy may certainly admit of an increaſe: And, as often as a ſinner is converted from the evil of his ways, there may ſpring up a freſh object, and a large and literal addition to it. (St.) Moſt interpreters conclude, that the angels and bleſſed ſpirits are acquainted with the converſion of a ſinner; and ſeeing true converſion is wrought in the heart, hence the Romaniſts infer, that they muſt have knowledge of that alſo. But, 1. Here is not one word of bleſſed ſpirits, but of angels only; and whereas Papiſts argue for an equality of knowledge in them to that of angels, becauſe it is ſaid "they are as the angels of heaven," Matt. xxii. 30. I anſwer, Chriſt doth not ſay they are equal to angels now, but at the reſurrection they ſhall be ſo. Nor doth he ſay this abſolutely, or as to the faculties of their ſouls, but as to their freedom from ſecular actions, and paſſions, and as to the ſtate and condition of their bodies; for ſo the text runs, "they that are counted worthy of the reſurrection, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more, (i. e. they are equal to the angels as to immortality) and are the children of God, being the children of the reſurrection," Luke xx. 35, 36. 2. This text affirms not, that the joy here mentioned is the joy of angels, but only that it is the joy of God, enoepion toon angeloon, "before, or in the preſence of the angels," which ſtand continually before his face. Now as an earthly king may rejoice before his court, and they know not the ſpecial motive of his joy, ſo may the King of heaven rejoice before the angels of his preſence, and they know not the reaſon of that joy, and much leſs the particular convert that gave occaſion to it. In a word, it is confeſſedly God who is compared to the ſhepherd, ſeeking his loſt ſheep, and to the father rejoicing for the return of his prodigal ſon; and therefore the ſimilitude requires, that the joy conceived when a loſt ſheep is found, or a prodigal ſon comes home, ſhould be aſcribed to him. (W.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. And he ſaid, A certain man had two ſons: And the younger of them ſaid to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living. And not many days after, the younger ſon gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there waſted his ſubſtance with riotous living. And when he had ſpent all, there aroſe a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. And he went and joined himſelf to a citizen of that country; and he ſent him into his fields to feed ſwine. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the ſwine did eat, and no man gave unto him. And when he came to himſelf he ſaid, How many hired ſervants of my father have bread enough and to ſpare, and I periſh with hunger! I will ariſe, and go to my father, and will ſay unto him, Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven, and before thee, And am no more worthy to be called thy ſon: make me as one of thy hired ſervants. And he aroſe, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father ſaw him, and had compaſſion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kiſſed him. And the ſon ſaid unto him, Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven, and in thy ſight, and am no more worthy to be called thy ſon. But the father ſaid to his ſervants, Bring forth the beſt robe, and put it on him, and put a ring on his hand, and ſhoes on his feet. And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat and be merry. For this my ſon was dead, and is alive again; he was loſt, and is found. And they began to be merry. Now his elder ſon was in the field: and as he came and drew nigh to the houſe, he heard muſick and dancing. And he called one of the ſervants, and asked what theſe things meant. And he ſaid unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, becauſe he hath received him ſafe and ſound. And he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and intreated him. And he anſwering ſaid to his father, Lo, theſe many years do I ſerve thee, neither tranſgreſſed I at any time thy commandment, and yet thou never gaveſt me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends: But aſſoon as this thy ſon was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou haſt killed for him the fatted calf. And he ſaid unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. It was meet that we ſhould make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was loſt, and is found.

A certain man.] This parable is to the ſame purpoſe with the foregoing; ſhewing us, that we ought to rejoice as much when ſinners are reclaimed, as when we have unexpectedly recovered what we had loſt. (Beza.) It is as remarkable and beautiful as any of thoſe which were deliver'd by our bleſſed Saviour; and cannot be parallel'd by any of the Apologues, or allegorical writings of the heathen authors. 'Tis adorn'd and beautify'd with the moſt glowing colours, and charming ſimilitudes: 'Tis carried on, and conducted with admirable wiſdom, and proportion in the parts, as well as the whole; and there is ſo exact a relation between the things repreſented, and the repreſentations of them, that the moſt elevated underſtanding will admire, and the loweſt capacity diſcover, the excellent and moſt uſeful moral than lies under ſo thin and fine a veil. We have here, with full evidence, and even ocular demonſtration, repreſented to us the miſeries and fatal conſequences of riot and a vicious courſe of life. But after our deep concern for the debauchery and conſequent miſeries of the prodigal, how pleaſing is it to every chriſtian charitable mind, to ſee the firſt dawning of good ſenſe and reformation in the young man! How heartily, and with what good reaſon, does every good man rejoice at that unfeigned repentance, and thoſe pious reſolutions, which occaſion joy even in heaven! And then, what an inimitable deſcription we have of paternal affection and tenderneſs! The moſt powerful and conquering paſſions of human nature are drawn with that admirable skill, as to equal life itſelf. With what eager attention and pleaſure do we read and conſider the readineſs of the good parent to receive his long-undutiful ſon, in deplorable circumſtances, melting into tears of pious grief and remorſe; and the exuberance of his goodneſs to the young man upon his humble ſubmiſſion. The ſorrowful convert, upon his return to his father's houſe, propoſes to himſelf a form of acknowledgment and ſubmiſſion to his offended father; Father, I have ſinn'd againſt heaven, and in thy ſight; and am no more worthy to be called thy ſon; make me as one of thy hired ſervants. And yet when he falls upon his knees before his venerable parent, he does not repeat all this confeſſion out. And what may be the reaſon of that? He was interrupted by the embraces and endearments of his gracious father, whoſe goodneſs prevented his petitions, granted him pardon, and admitted him into favour, before he could repeat a very ſhort form of words, in which he pray'd for it. But no enlargement, or paraphraſe, can come any thing near the great original: But when he was yet a great way off, his father ſaw him, and had compaſſion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kiſſed him. And with what condeſcenſion, and aſtoniſhing goodneſs, does this gracious parent bear with the peeviſhneſs, and cure the envy, of the elder ſon; as well as he pardoned the rebellion, and accepted the return and ſubmiſſion, of the younger. (Blackwall.) The place whereon this parable was repreſented, is the church: for out of the church did the prodigal depart, into the church did he return; and moſt of the memorable matters therein related, are related as performed in the church. The perſons mentioned therein are, 1. God himſelf, repreſented under the title of a Father, ver. 20. 2. A penitent, apoſtate, and a juſticiary profeſſor, ſet out under two brothers, ver. 11, 29, 31. 3. Lewd tempters, and inciters to evil, implied under the harlots which the elder brother mentioneth, ver. 30. 4. A covetous worldling, that takes advantage from a diſtreſſed man's neceſſity, to put him to a baſe work, not allowing competent food; he is here ſtiled a citizen, ver 15 5. Hard-hearted neighbours, who are no whit moved with a diſtreſſed man's extremities, intimated under this phraſe, No man gave to him, ver. 16. 6. Obedient ſervants, who readily performed what their maſter commanded, about a welcome entertainment of his ſon, ver. 22, 23. 7. Sympathiſing friends, who rejoiced with the joyful father, compriſed under theſe words, They began to be merry, ver. 24. And further implied by the muſick and dancing mentioned, ver. 25. Moſt of which fore-mentioned perſons are brought in performing ſeveral parts. (Gouge.)

Give me the portion.] Here our Saviour ſets forth the ſtate of a ſinner, in his wilful degeneracy from God, his Father both by creation and providence; his uneaſineſs under his juſt and holy laws; his impatience of being reſtrained by them; his caſting off the bonds of duty to him; and running into all kind of diſorders, without regard to God, or his own ſoul. (Stillingfl.)

Into a far country.] The miſery of a ſinner has its degrees, and he generally arrives, ſtep by ſtep, at the higheſt pitch of it. 1. He loſes ſight of God, and removes at a diſtance from him. 2. The love of God no longer reigning in his heart, carnal love and deſire muſt neceſſarily reign therein, and corrupt all their actions. 3. He loſes all the ſpiritual riches of his ſoul. 4. Having forſaken God, and loſt his grace and his love, he can find nothing elſewhere, but poverty, miſery, and want. 5. He renders himſelf a ſlave to the devil. 6. He finds by experience the hardſhip and rigour of his ſlavery. And, 7. Having deprived himſelf of every thing which he could lawfully and innocently poſſeſs, he, in his hunger, feeds upon a thouſand criminal deſires of worldly pleaſures and riches, wherein he imagines he ſhall find ſomething to ſatisfy his luſts. (Q.)

The huſks that the ſwine did eat.] The keratia, which are here ſet down as the food of ſwine, are the fruit of the carobe, or arbor ceratonia, mentioned by Dioſcorides, and Galen; which Heſychius ſaith is an Egyptian fig. Of this fruit Pliny ſays, In ſiliquis quod manditur, quid niſi lignum eſt? That part which is eaten is the wood. Whence it is, that ſiliqua, the Latin word for that fruit, comes alſo to ſignify the huſk or rind of any kind of fruit; which is the reaſon why the word is ordinarily render'd huſks. Of this fruit, Dioſcorides ſays, if they be taken green, they are apt to breed looſeneſs; but being dried, they are medicinal for it. The uſe of them was probably that which belongs to this place, where the ſwine are ſaid to feed on them; as they were wont to be allow'd to do on thoſe other fruits which were good for nothing elſe. This fruit, ſaith Pliny, was common among the Egyptians, agreeing therein with Heſychius; to which perhaps that part of the parable refers, where the prodigal is ſaid to have took his journey into a far country, tho' the country be not named: for it cannot refer to any country in Judea, both becauſe there is no mention of that fruit in Judea, and becauſe feeding of ſwine was againſt the laws of the Jews, as well as becauſe 'tis ſaid apedeemeeſe macran, he travell'd a great way off. As to that mention of herds of ſwine among the Gadarenes, all that can be concluded thence is, that Gentiles then inhabited there; and ſo Joſephus diſtinctly numbers Gadara among the cities which Pompey took away from the Jews. (H.)

When he came to himſelf.] That is, when he became truly ſenſible of his forlorn condition, and began ſeriouſly to conſider with himſelf. (Trem.) In the conviction of his folly, upon due conſideration of what he had done, (which is emphatically called, coming to himſelf;) having before acted ſo much below himſelf, and againſt himſelf; unworthy of the relation he ſtood in to God; of thoſe faculties he had beſtowed upon him, and of thoſe hopes and expectations he might have had from him, either as to this or another world. (Still.) Here we may obſerve the ſeveral degrees of a ſinner's converſion. 1. That he knows his miſery, and the corruption of his own heart. 2. That he reſolves to forſake ſin, and the occaſion thereof. 3. That he turns towards God, as his Father. 4. His making a confeſſion of his ſin, in terms of filial love. 5. His humbling himſelf, as unworthy of grace and mercy. 6. His ſubmitting to penance. 7. His ſettling and confirming himſelf in the diſpoſitions above-mentioned. 8. God with his grace preventing the penitent in all the ſteps he takes to return towards him. 9. The ſinner's openly owning his ſin, and bearing the ſhame of his ingratitude. 10. The more a penitent humbles himſelf, and the more unworthy he thinks himſelf of every thing, the higher does God raiſe him, and heap upon him the greater benefits. 11. To the grace of reconciliation, God adds abundance of other graces, with which he covers the nakedneſs of the converted ſinner. 12. He ſeals this new covenant with a lively impreſſion of his Spirit, which is the ſeal of adoption. 13. He gives him ſuch graces and aſſiſtances, as enable him to walk in the way of his commandments. 14. The ſinner, being reconciled, has a right to the Chriſtian ſacrifice. 15. For the time to come, he leads the life of a perſon newly found, and raiſed from the dead. 16. The joy of the church, which ſhews itſelf more on this occaſion, than for the fidelity of a juſt perſon. And, 17. The penitent's enjoying ſuch graces as are capable of raiſing envy in the minds of the juſt, or of the imperfect, or of thoſe who are but little inſtructed in the ways of God (Q.)

I periſh with hunger.] And truly, 'tis one good ſign, that God is now taking men into the number of his children, when he is fixing upon them one of the greateſt badges and characters of them. For therefore, ſaith the Apoſtle, "we are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world:" while thoſe who are reſerved for deſtruction hereafter, do uſually in this life "come into no misfortune, nor are plagued like other men:" for God "does not afflict any willingly, nor grieve the children of men;" but as he is grieved himſelf for the ſufferings of his children, (for "in all their afflictions," ſaith the prophet, "he was afflicted,") ſo he doth not uſually puniſh wicked men both here and hereafter; and therefore, they who are to be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction, God ſuffers to "enjoy their portion in this life" without diſturbance. (Parſons.)

He aroſe and came.] Here Theophylact obſerves, that it is not ſufficient for a penitent to make good reſolutions, ſaying, "I will ariſe, and go to my father;" but he muſt immediately put it in practice.

When he was yet a great way off.] The affectionate tenderneſs and compaſſion of the father towards the returning prodigal, tho' he had deſerved to be ſharply reproved, ſeverely corrected, and finally rejected and ſhut out of doors, is above his anger; not a word of his miſcarriages drops from his father's mouth; but as ſoon as ever the ſon looks back, mercy looks out, and the Father expreſſes, 1. His ſpeedy readineſs to receive his ſon, he ran unto him; the ſon did only ariſe and go, but the father made haſte and ran; mercy has not only a quick eye to ſpy out a penitent, but a ſwift foot; it runs to embrace a penitent. 2. Wonderful tenderneſs, he fell upon his neck; it had been much to have looked upon him with the eye, more to have taken him by the hand, but moſt of all to fall upon his neck: Divine mercy will not only meet a penitent, but embrace him alſo. And, 3. Strong affectionateneſs, he kiſſed him; giving him thereby a pledge and aſſurance of perfect friendſhip, and reconciliation with him. (B.) The father is readier to hear than the ſon to deſire; and what his unworthineſs made him aſhamed to aſk, his father's bounty made him willing to beſtow: and he that ſcarce hoped to be admitted a ſervant, is once more owned as a dear ſon: This he found, and ſo ſhall they that follow his example. (Comb.)

Father, I have ſinned.] How unworthy ſoever he may acknowledge himſelf to be called a child of God, yet he cannot forbear calling him father: it is a conteſt betwixt confidence and humility; the former reſtores what the latter takes away. (Q.) It is fit for a man to acknowledge his fault, even after he is aſſured of forgiveneſs; as 1 Cor. xv. 9. and 1 Tim. i. 15. (G. and W.)

Was angry.] By the murmuring of the elder ſon at the prodigal's returning to, and reception with, his father, ſome think the Jews in general are to be underſtood, whoſe peeviſhneſs to the Gentiles, and the repinings at the offer of ſalvation made unto them by the Goſpel, is very evident, from many other places of ſcripture: Others underſtand it of the ſcribes and Phariſees in particular, who, preſuming on their own righteouſneſs, as if they had never tranſgreſſed God's commandments at any time, murmured at our Saviour for converſing with ſinners, tho' it were in order to the bringing of them to repentance; which, inſtead of being frowardly diſcontented at, they ought to have rejoiced in. (B.)

Was dead, and is alive again.] The ſcripture-notion of the word necros, dead, may be learn'd from hence, to ſignify one that is deſperately engaged in a wicked courſe. Thus thoſe that were carried into captivity, and deſpaired of return, are called dead bones, Ezek. xxxvii. 3. and the reducing of them, is ſaid to be the bringing them out of their graves, ver. 12. So the ſtate of Abraham's body, and Sarah's womb, in reſpect of having hopes of a poſterity, is called deadneſs, Rom. iv. 19. noting deſperation of children, and no more. So the ſtate of unchriſtian living is called death, 1 John iii. 14. And they that lived in a Gentile courſe, are ſaid to be dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, Epheſ. ii. 1. (See Rom. iv. 17.) So 1 Tim. v. 6. She that lives in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe lives. So the Jews have a ſaying, Ill men while they live, are ſaid to be dead. And ſo the ancient Arabs, Not he that is at reſt is dead, but the living dead man he is truly dead: and all this no otherwiſe, than according to the ordinary notion of Pythagoras, who for any that had forſaken his ſchool, that is, refuſed to live according to his rules of philoſophy, had a kenotaphion, an empty coffin, ſet in his place, to ſignify him to be morally dead. Accordingly, reformation, or recovery to good life, is called a riſing from the dead, reviving, being quickned, paſſing to life, in theſe and other places, and ſingifies no more by all theſe expreſſions, but only repentance from dead works, or renovation. (H.)

Was loſt, and is found.] Obſerve here, 1. The damage of apoſtacy, He was loſt. For when he went out of his father's houſe, he proved an apoſtate. His father's houſe was the church, wherein alone were the means of ſalvation; and out of which he had no hope of ſalvation, but was in that broad way that leadeth to deſtruction. Thus was he filius perditus, a loſt child. 2. The advantage of penitency, He is found. By ſight and ſenſe of his ſin, and humble acknowledgment thereof, and by returning to his father's houſe, he ſhewed himſelf a true penitent: and by his father's receiving him into his houſe, and giving him ſuch welcome as he did, he was under the means of ſalvation again. Thus was he filius inventus, a child whom his father enjoyed; as great an advantage was this to the ſon, as joy to the father. (Gouge.)

CHAP. XVI.

The parable of the unjuſt, but worldly-wiſe, ſteward. God and Mammon incompatible. The covetous and ſcornful Phariſees rebuked. The caſe of divorce. The parable of the rich man and the beggar.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. AND he ſaid alſo unto his diſciples, There was a certain rich man which had a ſteward; and the ſame was accuſed unto him that he had waſted his goods. And he called him, and ſaid unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy ſtewardſhip, for thou mayeſt be no longer ſteward. Then the ſteward ſaid within himſelf, What ſhall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the ſtewardſhip: I cannot dig, to beg I am aſhamed. I am reſolved what to do, that when I am put out of the ſtewardſhip, they may receive me into their houſes. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and ſaid unto the firſt, How much oweſt thou unto my lord? And he ſaid, An hundred meaſures of oil. And he ſaid unto him, Take thy bill, and ſit down quickly, and write fifty. Then ſaid he to another, And how much oweſt thou? And he ſaid, An hundred meaſures of wheat. And he ſaid unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourſcore. And the lord commended the unjuſt ſteward, becauſe he had done wiſely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiſer than the children of light. And I ſay unto you, Make to your ſelves friends of the mammon of unrighteouſneſs; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlaſting habitations. He that is faithful in that which is leaſt, is faithful alſo in much: and he that is unjuſt in the leaſt, is unjuſt alſo in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your truſt the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who ſhall give you that which is your own? No ſervant can ſerve two maſters, for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or elſe he will hold to the one, and deſpiſe the other: Ye cannot ſerve God and mammon.

And he ſaid alſo.] Not only to the twelve, but to the reſt who followed him, attending on his doctrine, as did the publicans and ſinners, ch. xv. 1. (W.)

A certain rich man.] From this parable we may obſerve, 1. That all perſons, even the higheſt and greateſt of perſons, are but ſtewards of the good things of God. 2. That our ſtewardſhip muſt and ſhall have an end; we ſhall not be always, nay, we ſhall not be long, ſtewards. 3. That when we are put out of our ſtewardſhip, we muſt give an account of our carriage therein; and the greater our truſt was, the heavier will our reckoning be. 4. That therefore it will be our higheſt prudence, while we are intruſted with our maſter's goods, ſo to uſe and improve them, as may make moſt for our comfort and advantage, when we give up our account. (Burk.) That God ſhould be repreſented under the character of a rich man, muſt needs be very natural and proper, becauſe the whole world is his, and all that is therein, Pſ. l. 12. (Stanh.) See the notes on ch. xii. 32, &c.

Give an account.] Tho' wealth be the goods to which the parable is chiefly determined, yet we are not by any means to imagine, that rich men only ſtand in the capacity of ſtewards, or that the uſe of ſuch poſſeſſions ſhall be the only article of our account. For every advantage of nature or of grace, as well as thoſe of fortune, our life, our health, our ſtrength, our wit and parts, our knowledge natural and acquired, our time, our leiſure, our every ability, our every opportunity, our every inclination to do well; every diſpenſation of providence, whether it be a change to honour or diſhonour, to abundance or to poverty, to eaſe or to ſuffering, our very afflictions, and temptations; all are our Maſter's goods; all are entruſted with us, all are capable to be made profit of; all will at laſt be brought to our account. And therefore every man ought to eſteem himſelf a ſteward; for tho' all have not the ſame truſt, yet all have ſome truſt. (Idem.) There are three things at the death of a reprobate, which are very terrible: 1. His being obliged to appear with a guilty conſcience before holineſs itſelf. 2. His having an exact account to give of his whole life, and of whatever he has received. And, 3. His ſeeing himſelf deprived of all for ever. (Q.)

They may receive me.] That is, that I may be entertained by my maſter's debtors. (H.) See the note on ver. 9.

An hundred meaſures.] The original word batos ſignifies a certain meaſure containing ſeven gallons and two quarts. For the more clear explanation of which I ſhall here ſubjoin,

A TABLE of the MEASURES mentioned in the Holy Scripture.

Meaſures of Application.

An hair's-breadth; Judges xx. 16.	The 48th part of an inch.
A finger; Jer. lii. 21.	Somewhat leſs than an inch.
An inch (called alſo ſometimes etſbang, digitus, a finger.	The breadth of 6 barley-corns
An hand-breadth; Exod. xxv. 25. Tophach, palaiſtee, palmus minor.	The breadth of 4 fingers; or three inches.
A ſpan; Exod. xxviii. 16. Zereth, ſpithamee, palmus major.	From the thumb to the little finger ſtretch'd, or 9 inches.
A foot; pagnam, pes.	4 hands, or 12 inches.
A cubit; amma, cubitus; of four ſorts, viz.
1. The common cubit; 2 Chron. iii. 15. Deut. iii. 11.	From the elbow to the finger's end; or a foot and half.
2. The holy cubit; 1 Kings vii. 15. ——	Two common cubits; or a yard.
3. The king's cubit. ——	Three fingers longer than the common cubit.
4. The geometrical cubit; (according to which Noah's ark is thought to have been built.	Six common cubits.
A reed; Ezek. xl. 5. kaneh, arundo.	Six king's cubits and an hand-breadth.
A pace; 2 Sam. vi. 13. Ttagad, paſſus.	Five feet.
A furlong; Luke xxiv. 13 Stadion, ſtadium. ——	125 paces; or the 8th part of a mile.
A mile; Matt. v. 41. Milion, milliarium. ——	1000 paces with us; but much more among the Hebrews.

Meaſures of Capacity.

I. For Dry Things.

Kab, kabus, a kab or cab; 2 Kings vi. 25. The 18th part of an ephah.	About 3 pints.
Omer, homer, or gomer; Exod. xvi. 36. The 10th part of an ephah.	About 6 pints.
Seah; Gen xviii. 6. Modius, 6 kabs, or the 3d part of an ephah.	About 2 gallons and a quart.
Ephah; Ezek. xlv. 11. The 10th part of a chomer.	About 7 gall. and 2 quarts.
Letheck; Hoſ. iii. 2. Half a chomer, or 5 ephahs. ——	About 37 gallons and an half.
Cor, chomer; Ezek. xlv. 14. 10 ephahs.	About 75 gallons of wine meaſure.

II. For Liquids.

Log; Lev. xiv. 10. The 4th part of a kab. ——	About 3 quarters of a pint.
Hin; Exod. xxix. 40. The 6th part of an ephah. ——	About 5 quarts.
Bath; Luke xvi. 6. Batos, cadus; equal to the ephah. ——	About 7 gall. and 2 quarts.
Cor, or chomer, uſed for liquid as well as dry things.

Commended the unjuſt ſteward.] Chriſt commends him, not abſolutely, as a fit example to be followed, in waſting his maſter's goods, but comparatively, as being worthy to be ſo far imitated by "the children of light," as to take the ſame care to ſecure heaven, as others do to get the world. Chriſt commends him no farther than we do a perſon, when we ſay, ſuch an one is a ſhrewd man for the world. In a word, the ſteward is here commended, not for his diſhoneſty, but for his policy, ſhrewdneſs, and ſagacity; having done cunningly for himſelf, tho' knaviſhly for his maſter: From whence our Saviour draws this concluſion, "That the children of this world are in their generation wiſer than the children of light." (W. and B.) In the practice of this ſteward indeed there was great diſhoneſty; for which reaſon our Saviour calls him an unjuſt ſteward: But that part of his character not falling within the compaſs of our Lord's deſign in propounding this parable, is paſſed over, without farther notice taken of it. Mean while his ſilence in that point can by no means be conſtrued approbation; but an inſtruction rather, that, in the interpretation of parables, we are to content ourſelves with drawing ſuch conſequences from thence, as their ſubſtance and main intent naturally lead us to, without inſiſting too nicely upon circumſtances which are incidental only, and beſide the purpoſe, properly to be ſerved by them. (St.) What is meant by adikia, unrighteouſneſs, in ver. 8. may be conjectured by the uſe of the ſame word, ver. 9. and the meaning of both is to be fetched from ſome obſervations in the Hebrew tongue: that dikaios, juſt, and aleethees, true, are taken in the ſame ſenſe by the ſacred writers (and therefore Heſychius explains aleethees by dikaios) as it is render'd by the Septuagint, Gen. xxiv. 49. and Iſa. xxxviii. 19. and conſequently, that adikos, unjuſt, and aleethinos, true, are directly oppoſite to one another. Thus they are ſet in this place, ver. 11. And ſo indeed adikon, unjuſt, and dolion, deceitful, appear to be all one, by comparing Mal. ii. 6. with 1 Pet. ii. 22. In this notion dikaioos ſeems to be uſed, 1 Cor. xv. 34. awake truly, or perfectly, (in oppoſition to hypocritical inſincere reformation) explained by the not-ſinning that follows. Now what is meant by aleethinon mamoona, ver. 11. is clear, that "true, perfect, valuable, durable riches" which is infinitely to be preferred before all the riches of this world (as aleethoos brooſis, truly food, John vi. 55. is ſuch food as will make him immortal that feeds on it, in oppoſition to the manna, which they that fed on, died) that is, either the reward and bliſs in heaven only, or grace here, as preparative to that, together with that hereafter. Conſequently mamoona adikon, oppoſite to that, muſt ſignify this inferior, vain, ſuperfluous (as Phavorinus took it, mamoonas, ho adikos kai huper chreian ploutos) tranſitory, falſe wealth, ſo unvaluable in compariſon of that other, called by the Rabbins, juſt in that ſtile, the vain, or falſe mammon, which they join with the riches of this world; which is ſo ſcandalouſly vain and falſe, and unfit to be truſted on, that the plenty, or riches of this world, which is oft, by the Targum, render'd mammon, is, Prov. x. 2. by them render'd a lye. And then the ſame, no doubt, is the meaning of that other phraſe, varied from this only in the form, by a moſt ordinary Hebraiſm, mamoona adikias, "mammon of injuſtice, or falſeneſs;" and an example of it we have (from whence the phraſe ſeems to be tranſcribed) in the Targum alſo, Iſa. xxxiii. 15. "He ſeparates himſelf from the mammon of iniquity, or the falſe riches; and the mammon of falſeneſs," Ezek. xxii. 27. Having found now the meaning of adikon and adikia, ver. 11. and 9. it will not be hard to reſolve what is the meaning of the oikonomos adikias, ſteward of falſeneſs, alſo; either ſo as may be proportionable to this notion of it, maintained throughout this parable, for thoſe tranſitory falſe riches, called by the Targum (as was ſaid) falſeneſs, that is, adikia, and then it will ſignify the diſpenſer of this inconſtant, tranſitory, falſe riches of this world: Or elſe as it muſt, by that ordinary Hebraiſm, ſignify oikonomos adikos, a falſe, unjuſt ſteward, as critees adikias, an unjuſt judge, ch. xviii. 6. but ſo, not as to commend his falſeneſs, but only his prudence, in making uſe of that wealth, which was put into his hands, ſo, as might give him a ſubſiſtence after, when his office was taken from him; and ſo the oikonomos adikias, the ſteward of falſeneſs, that is, the falſe ſteward, will be as perfectly all one with uioi tou aioonos toutou, the children of this world, i. e. worldly men, following in this verſe, as "the falſe riches, or the riches of falſeneſs, with the wealth of this world, or worldly wealth," as even now was ſaid. As for the mention of adikos, unjuſt, in the ſecond part or application of the parable, ver. 10. which is there oppoſed to piſtos, faithful, that doth not refer to the deceitfulneſs of the ſteward in the parable in cheating his maſter, but to the rich man, in the counter-part; his not making uſe of thoſe poſſeſſions entruſted to him, to that advantage of his own ſoul to which they might have been improved. In which reſpect, he that doeth like the ſteward in the parable, makes ſuch prudent proviſion for himſelf, is not adikos, falſe, but piſtos, faithful, making a gainful uſe of that which was committed to his truſt, which is there called being "faithful in a little," and is the very Chriſtian virtue commended to us in that parable, the making us friends with our riches; ſo that adikos there alſo ſignifies falſe, viz. to that truſt put into their hands, in not making what advantage they might of it. And laſtly, for that paſſage, ver. 12. ei en allotrioo piſtoi ouk egeneſthe, "If ye have not been faithful in that which is another's," it is not ſo to be taken, as if the rich man's gaining by the truſt committed to him, after the manner of the deceitful ſteward, were thereby accuſed; for on the other ſide, the thing found fault with in the parable, in ver. 12. is the not doing that which the falſe deceitful ſteward did, and was commended for, ver. 8. that is, the not making ſuch an uſe of that tranſitory wealth, that paſſes from one owner to another at that time put into his hands, as might help him to reception and entertainment, when he was out of his ſervice. For, it muſt be obſerved, that every rich man is, in reſpect of God, as a ſteward to his maſter, appointed to be a diſpenſer of that wealth put into his hands by God, which may therefore be here called allotrion, another's; not ſo much his who poſſeſſeth it, as God's, whoſe ſteward he is, or theirs to whom it is to be diſpenſed. He hath liberty to uſe the wealth put into his hands ſo as may be moſt (not only for his maſter's, but alſo) for his own advantage, viz. to his endleſs reward in heaven, which tho' it were an injuſtice and falſeneſs in a ſervant here on earth, who is altogether to conſider his maſter's profit, not his own, and ſo was injuſtice in this ſteward here, in the firſt part of the parable; yet it is duty, and that which, by the will and command of God, we are obliged to in the execution of that ſteward's office which the rich man holds under God, and is the only thing commended to us in this parable; and is ſo far from denominating him that makes that advantage of the treaſure entruſted to him, an unjuſt or unrighteous ſteward in the application, that it denominates him piſtos, faithful, in the latter part of the parable, and him only adikos, falſe, that doth it not. (H.)

Becauſe he had done wiſely.] That is, diſcreetly, according to the wiſdom of the men of this world, whoſe concern is only for the good things of this life. (W. and B.)

The children of this world.] By the children of this world are meant thoſe that look after, and take care for, only the advantages and ſatisfactions of this world; have no thought of, or at moſt deſign for, any other; by the children of light, all thoſe that ſee farther into one to come, and who look after that; accordingly all Chriſtians are called ſo, 1 Theſſ. v. 5. (Alleſtr.)

In their generation.] That is to ſay, in their own affairs of this world, which alone they buſy and concern themſelves in; or in their contrivance for their age or time in this life to be wiſer than thoſe others. (Idem.)

And I ſay unto you.] Here our Saviour makes application of the foregoing parable to his diſciples. (B.) Make God your friend by a charitable diſtribution, that he may bleſs you; make the poor your friends, that they may unitedly engage their prayers for you; make your own conſciences your friends, that they may not reproach and ſhame you, ſting and torment you. (Idem.) He does not command alms to be given of that which is gotten by fraud and injuſtice; for ſuch charity cannot be acceptable to God: No; the duty of thoſe who have gotten wealth unjuſtly, is to make reſtitution to the perſon or perſons they have injured; or if they are dead, then to their heirs or executors. If indeed they only know, that they have been unjuſt, but know not the perſons to whom they have been ſo, reſtitution may be made, by giving the fruits of their injuſtice to the poor. (Fox.)

That when ye fail.] That is, when ye die, and your riches fail you, and can ſtand you in no farther ſtead. (B.) St. Jerom, a learned and uſeful commentator, but too bold a cenſurer of the ſacred writers, ſtrikes St. Luke through the Greek tranſlators of the Old Teſtament, when he reflects on them for ſaying of Abraham, kai ekleipoon apethane, Gen. xxv. 8. and adds this remarkable reaſon, becauſe a good man never fails. Yes, with reſpect to this world, he fails and ſinks, when his ſoul leaves the mortal and decay'd body. Which is the ſame expreſſion with that of the great Cyrus on his death-bed, who firmly believed a future ſtate, and the eternal duration of human ſouls. Alla gar eedee eklipein moi phainetai hee pſychee, "Now my ſoul begins to fail me," Xen. Cyrop. 8. c. 7. p. 334. that is, is juſt leaving this ruinous body, and going into the ſtate of immortality. (Blackw.)

They may receive you.] The word dexoontai is here taken impersonally, as it were, not denoting the perſons that ſhould receive them, whether God, or angels, or good works themſelves (tho' 'tis true that Chriſt, who accounts what is done to our poor brethren done unto him, will ſo receive and reward the merciful) but after the manner of the ſcripture-ſpeaking, to ſignify no more than "ye ſhall be received;" that is, that theſe works of charity ſhall (through God's acceptance and promiſe to reward them) prepare, as it were, a place in heaven for you, and ye ſhall, when "your riches fail, be received into everlaſting habitations." This, I ſuppoſe, is the meaning of that place in Ecclus. c. xvi. 14. Paſa eleemoſynee (not in the dative, but the nominative caſe) poieeſei topon, "every work of mercy ſhall make or prepare a place," to wit, in heaven, for thee; and ſo the place will be intelligible, which otherwiſe will not; and the conſequents will be natural, kai ekaſtos kat' erga hautou heureſei, "every man ſhall find according to his works." Many examples of this phraſe, dexoontai humas, for ye ſhall be received, will be obvious to any in the reading of the ſcriptures. So, when we read, 2 Sam. xxi. 8. of the five ſons of Michal (for ſo our Hebrew copies now read, and ſo did thoſe which the Chaldee and Septuagint render) that ſhe bare, &c. it cannot be underſtood, "which ſhe (that is, Michal) bare, but which were born to Adriel, the ſon of Barzillai;" for 'tis clear they were not Michal's, but Merab's children. So 2 Sam. xxiv. 1. "The anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he moved," that is, not God moved, for 'twas Satan, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. but David was moved againſt them, &c. And ſo Caſtellio happily renders it, eo impulſus eſt David, &c. So in this Goſpel, ch. vi. 38. we read dooſouſi, they ſhall give, in the latter part of the verſe, for that which was dotheeſetai, it ſhall be given, in the beginning. So chap. xxiii. 31. ei en too hurgoo xuloo tauta poiouſin, "if they do ſuch things; that is, if ſuch things be done (that is, ſuch judgments fall) on the green tree. So Rev. xvi. 15. kai blepooſi teen ascheemoſyneen autou, "And they ſee his uncomelineſs;" that is, his uncomelineſs be ſeen. So Luke xii. 20. "This night (apaitouſi) they require thy ſoul," that is, thy ſoul is required from thee. So, Matt. xix. 5. eipe, is not he (that is, God) ſaid, but it was ſaid by Adam, or rather by the hiſtorian, as his concluſion from thence, Gen. ii. 24. (H.)

He that is faithful.] Our bleſſed Saviour, having declared to his followers, in the foregoing verſes, the great advantages they ſhall reap by a charitable diſtribution of temporal good things, he acquaints them in theſe verſes with a great detriment and diſadvantage that will redound to them if they do otherwiſe. 1. If they be not faithful in right employing temporal riches, they muſt not expect that God will entruſt them with ſpiritual and heavenly, which are the true riches: God will deal with his ſervants, as we deal with ours, never truſt them with much, whom we find unfaithful in a little. 2. If they be not faithful in the improvement of theſe outward things, which God entruſts them with but for a time, and muſt ſhortly leave them to others, how can they expect, that God ſhould give them thoſe ſpiritual good things, which ſhall never be taken away from them to whom they are given? (B.)

That which is another man's.] The things which are other mens, ſignify the things of this world, which are not properly any particular man's property, but paſs from one man to another: and this truly ſeems the moſt proper notion of allotria, thoſe things which are not properly our own, in reſpect of the weak tenure we have in them, they paſſing from us, or we from them, ſo ordinarily. And ſo the allotrion here will be more fully agreable and parallel to the adikon mamoona, the falſe mammon, and to humeteron, that which is your own indeed (your property, peculiar, which ſhall never be removed from you) will be all one with aleethinos ploutos, the true riches. (H.)

Serve two maſters. See the notes on Matt. vi. 24.

Hate the one.] See the notes on chap. xiv. 26.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. And the Phariſees alſo, who were covetous, heard all theſe things: and they derided him. And he ſaid unto them, Ye are they which juſtify yourſelves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly eſteemed amongſt men is abomination in the ſight of God. The law and the prophets were until John: ſince that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man preſſeth into it. And it is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs, than one tittle of the law to fail. Whoſoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whoſoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband, committeth adultery.

And the Phariſees alſo.] The coherence of theſe words with the foregoing ſeems to lie thus; I have juſt reaſon to caution you thus againſt that affection to the world which obſtructs your charity, and tempts you by fraud and falſhood to acquire it; becauſe it will not permit you to love God truly, or to be faithful ſervants to him; and whereas ye covetous Phariſees deride me for this doctrine, as thinking yourſelves highly favoured of God for other things, viz. your long prayers, your waſhings, your exactneſs in paying tithes, your niceneſs in obſerving your vain traditions, and your ſeparation from the men of the world, know, that however ye may think well of yourſelves upon theſe accounts, and be highly eſteemed of others, while ye continue "covetous, and full of rapine and uncleanneſs, Matt. xxiii. 25. hypocriſy and injuſtice, ver. 27. ye are abominable in the ſight of God." (W.) Theſe Phariſees hearing their covetouſneſs reproved, and the doctrine of charity and alms preached and enforced by our Saviour, they derided him in the ſhamefulleſt manner, with the higheſt degree of contempt and ſcorn; wringing the noſe, and making mouths at him, as the original word ſeems to import. (B.) The word mukteerizoo ſignifies not barely to mock or deride, but to fleer with the noſe and the mouth; and is an irony in geſture rather than in words. (Leigh.)

Which juſtify yourſelves.] That is, ye ſeek to approve yourſelves to men, and expect to be owned by them as righteous perſons, but God knoweth the falſhood of your hearts. (W.) God will in his turn deride and laugh at thoſe, who now deride him, and laugh at his word. (Q.)

The law and the prophets.] Here the coherence ſeems to run thus; It is not to be wonder'd, that ye now hear from John and me, higher precepts of charity, and contempt of the world, than ye find in the law or prophets, who moved you to your duty by the promiſes of temporal bleſſings in the land of Canaan; ſince now "the kingdom of heaven is preached," and every one that enters into it, forces his way, by breaking through the love of temporal concerns and ſenſual pleaſures. For to give you another inſtance of the like nature, whereas the law admitted of divorces at the pleaſure of the husband, by reaſon of "the hardneſs of your hearts;" the Goſpel forbids this now on any other ſcore, than that of fornication, which from the nature of the ſin diſſolves the marriage; yet that you may not cavil at me as a diſſolver of the law, I declare that all the moral precepts of it ſhall obtain, and be of perpetual obligation under the Goſpel-diſpenſation. (W.) The moral law, in all the branches of it, which is ſummarily comprehended in the Ten Commandments, is an eternal rule of life and manners, which is to ſtand in force as long as the world ſtands, and the frame of heaven and earth endures. (B.) The coming of Chriſt was pre-figured by the ceremonial law, and foretold by the prophets; but John pointed him out, and ſhewed him to be come; ſince which the Goſpel is preached, and multitudes of people preſs to enter into the kingdom of the Meſſias, in order to obtain ſalvation by him, expreſſing much zeal, and uſing great diligence and earneſtneſs. (F.)

Until John] It is not here meant, that the law ceaſed upon the coming of John, for that was to continue till the ſolemn ſending of the Holy Ghoſt; nor yet that none of the prophecies were to be extended farther than to John, for there are ſome of thoſe which relate to the final deſtruction of Jeruſalem: but only, that the prophets had foretold of that Meſſiah, the prince of the new kingdom, who was ſhadowed under the ceremonies of the law; and that a more perfect doctrine began to be publiſhed together with John and by John. (G.) Every thing is accompliſhed and perfected by the coming of the kingdom of God; the ſhadows by the light, the figures by the truth, the prophecies by the event, the promiſes by the effects, the imperfection of the Jewiſh diſpenſation by the Evangelical perfection, fear by charity, and the law by grace. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xi. 12, 13.

It is eaſier.] See the notes on Matt. v. 17, 18.

Putteth away his wife.] See the notes on Matt. v. 32. xix. 9. and Mark x. 11.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared ſumptuouſly every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of ſores, And deſiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover, the dogs came, and licked his ſores. And it came to paſs that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's boſom: the rich man alſo died, and was buried. And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and ſeeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his boſom. And he cried, and ſaid, Father Abraham have mercy on me, and ſend Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraham ſaid, Son, remember that thou in thy life time received'ſt thy good things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And beſides all this, between us and you there is a great gulph fixed: ſo that they which would paſs from hence to you, cannot; neither can they paſs to us, that would come from thence. Then he ſaid, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou would'ſt ſend him to my father's houſe: For I have five brethren; that he may teſtify unto them, leſt they alſo come into this place of torment. Abraham ſaith unto him, They have Moſes and the prophets; let them hear them. And he ſaid, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. And he ſaid unto him, If they hear not Moſes and the prophets, neither will they be perſuaded, tho' one roſe from the dead.

There was a certain rich man.] Here Chriſt re-aſſumes his argument concerning the uſe of riches; as if he had ſaid, There is no neceſſity to condemn you out of the Goſpel, ſince the law of Moſes itſelf is ſufficient to your condemnation. See Deut. xv. 7, &c. He therefore tells them they ſhall not eſcape thoſe puniſhments which themſelves confeſs to be reſerved for thoſe who contemn the law. (G.) His general deſign in this parable, is, 1. To forewarn men, that the neglect of ſuch works, and the abuſe of that power to do them which providence puts into our hands, ſhall not eſcape ſevere puniſhent in another world. 2. That ſtanding and ordinary methods are what men ought to be contented with; and ſuch as will abundantly ſuffice for all, who are diſpoſed to make a right uſe of them: That there is no need of expreſſes from the other world, to ſignify the condition of ſouls departed, and the rewards and puniſhments awaiting people there, according to their good or ill behaviour here: That God hath already done enough to reclaim men: And, as he has not obliged himſelf to more; ſo it is hard, if not impoſſible, to ſay what would prove effectual to thoſe, who ſtand out againſt the preſent evidence for religion and a future ſtate. (Blackall and Stanh.) That this is only a parable, and not a real hiſtory of what was actually done, is evident, 1. Becauſe we find this very parable in the Gemara Babylonicum; whence it is cited by Mr. Sheringham, in the Preface to his Joma. 2. From the circumſtances of it, viz. The rich man's "lifting up his eyes in hell, and ſeeing Lazarus in Abraham's boſom;" his diſcourſe with Abraham; his complaint of being tormented with flames; and his deſire that Lazarus might be ſent to cool his tongue: And, if all this be confeſſedly parable, why ſhould the reſt, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted hiſtory? As for the judgment of antiquity in this caſe, they who owned this as an hiſtory, owned the whole ſo to be, thinking the ſoul to be corporeal, as Tertullian did; and that there was "ſome diſcretion, or reſemblance of men as to their ſhapes after death;" which was the ſentiment of Irenæus; proving from this very inſtance, that ſouls when they have put off the body, "do yet preſerve the ſhape, or character of the body," to which they were united, as Tertullian before, from the ſame inſtance, had inferred, effigiem animæ, & corporales lineas, "the ſhape, and corporeal lineaments; and alſo corporalitatem animæ. Much as Theſpeſius, returning to life, repreſents the colours of ſouls; and ſaith, that there be "ulcers and ſcars of their paſſions left upon them, by which they are diſcerned:" Whereas they who renounce theſe opinions as falſe and ridiculous, declared that this was not an hiſtory; but only a repreſentation, "That after the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body, ſhe could receive no advantage from any man; and that 'twas fooliſh to think it an hiſtory;" and this they alſo gather, becauſe there was to be no future retribution before the general reſurrection. Note, 2. That tho' this parable contains ſomething ſuitable to the opinion of the Jews, touching the ſtate of ſouls after death, yet doth it not reſpect their ſtate immediately after death, but the puniſhments that wicked men are to ſuffer after the reſurrection of the dead, or at the laſt day, ſaith Theophylact. For, as Cicero ſays of the fables, by which the poets repreſent the puniſhments of evil ſouls, that "tho' they know their bodies have been burnt, yet they do repreſent them ſuffering ſuch things in the infernal regions, which neither can be done nor ſuffered, or even underſtood to be ſo, without bodies." So it is plainly here, in the forementioned inſtances, produced to prove this a parable. (W.) This man was puniſhed, not for poſſeſſing much, no, nor for ſpending much; but for ſpending it in a wrong, and an unprofitable way: He laid all out upon that which was ſuperfluous, and neglected that which was neceſſary: His hand was always open to his own vanities, and always ſhut to the neceſſities of the poor: So far from retrenching one needleſs expence, as not to reſcue a helpleſs wretch from periſhing, by that which could coſt him nothing. Thus it was want of bowels that condemned the rich man to hell, which had he had and exerciſed, the riches he enjoyed had become a means of advancing him to a brighter crown in heaven: But riches ought not to be blamed for the abuſes of them; for they are capable of being turned to good or evil purpoſes, juſt as the owners pleaſe. All this is clear from our Lord's deſcription of the laſt general judgment: The goats on the left hand are ſuppoſed to have had the ſame abilities and opportunities of doing works of mercy, with the ſheep on the right; and both are equal, ſo far as both were able: But the difference between them lay elſewhere. (G. Stanh. and B.)

Beggar, named Lazarus.] The name, Lahazar, or Lazer, being only the contraction of Eliezer, is the ſame with Ani achad, a poor man in the Gemara, as being in ſenſe aboeethos, one that hath no help, or one that has God only for his help. (Trem. Heinſ. and W.) Such a Lazar as ye now ſee Eleazar is But becauſe it would have been odious to have named the other, he is therefore called a certain rich man. (G) This repreſentation of the hard-heartedneſs of a rich man, and of the patience of a holy beggar, contains in it an important leſſon, which deſerves well to be ſtudied both by rich and poor. This rich man cannot plead, that he is oppreſſed with the multitude of the poor, for this beggar is alone; or that he is at a diſtance from him, for he is at his very gate; or that his miſery is unknown to him, for it is expoſed to his eyes: neither can he ſay, that he might work, for his weakneſs forces him to lie on the ground; or that he was troubleſome, for he ſpeaks not one word; or that he wanted a great deal, ſince he would have been contented only with crumbs; nor, laſtly, can he pretend, either that his ſervants took care of him, ſince not one of them relieves him; or that nobody put him in mind of this object, ſince his very dogs do it by their example, eaſing this poor wretch as much as they are able. (Q.)

The beggar died.] The poor have three advantages: 1. That they do not ſet their hearts ſo much upon this life. 2. That they are ſooner delivered from it, by reaſon of the miſeries of the body. 3. That they find a new, bleſſed, and immortal life, in the boſom of God, which is the manſion of his children. On the contrary, the rich, who live wickedly, are expoſed to a threefold misfortune; 1. That they make themſelves chains, which bind them more ſtrongly, and for a longer time, to the love of a life, which ſerves only to multiply their ſins. 2. That they leave it with regret. And, 3. That they fall from one death into another. (Idem.)

Carried by the angels..] God, in his providence, hath allotted to us the moſt excellent guard of angels, commanding them to wait upon us. (Andr.) The higheſt dignity that is beſtowed on them, is, that they are ſervants, under God, for the uſe of thoſe eſpecially who are now under perſecution, and ſhall ſhortly be reſcued out of it by a ſignal deliverance, and, upon their conſtancy and perſeverance, ſecured of eternal ſalvation, Heb. i. 14 (H.) In death, as Gerhard ſpeaks, we fear eſpecially the craft of our adverſary, that ſerpent, who doth, inſidiari calcaneo, ply at the heel: The heel, ſaith he, is the extreme part of the body; and the extreme term of life is death. In that agony of death, therefore, the cuſtody of angels is chiefly neceſſary, to keep us from the fiery darts of the devil, and convey the ſoul, when it leaves the body, into the heavenly paradiſe. Tertullian, De anima, c. 52. ſtiles them evocatores animarum, the callers forth of ſouls; and ſuch as ſhew them, paraturam diverſorii, the preparation of thoſe manſions they are going to: Agreeably to which, we have ſomewhat alſo among the Platoniſts, (Vide Apuleium, de Deo Socratis.) And then, after the ſeparation of body and ſoul aſunder, they are careful and diligent in their attendance to lodge the departed ſpirit ſafely in its reſt and happineſs. Such a privilege belongs, unqueſtionably, even to the pooreſt and meaneſt of God's ſervants; for ſo it is recorded of Lazarus, for our encouragement: and ſuch, probably, was Elias's fiery chariot and horſes, wherein he mounted to heaven, 2 Kings ii. 11. (Camfield.)

Abraham's boſom.] Among the faithful, all the Jews aſſigned the principal place to Abraham; and, in their banquets, the moſt beloved was wont to lean on the boſom of him who was maſter of the feaſt; as John xiii. 23. (G.) But ſee the notes on Matt. viii. 11.

The rich man alſo died, and was buried.] The word alſo is here very emphatical, to let us know, that riches, for all men's confidence in them, will not deliver from death. The rich man might be ſurfeited by faring ſumptuouſly every day, while Lazarus was famiſhed. (G. and B.) Here is no mention of Lazarus's burial, probably he had none, but flung out of the way into ſome hole or pit; or if he had a burial, a very mean one, which is paſs'd over in ſilence. All the advantage which a rich man has by a great eſtate, after he is dead, is only to have a pompous funeral; which yet ſignifies nothing to him, becauſe he is not ſenſible of it. (B) Our Saviour repreſents all men, both good and bad, paſſing immediately out of this life into a ſtate of happineſs or miſery: Whence we may learn, 1. That the ſouls of men ſurvive in ſenſibility and activity, after the diſſolution of their bodies, and do not ſleep with the body till the day of the reſurrection. 2. That all holy ſouls, and among the reſt, the godly poor, are inſtantly, after death, conveyed by angels to their place of reſt and bleſſedneſs. (Idem) Behold the goodneſs of God! Lazarus died firſt, being happily delivered out of the troubles of this life; while the rich man had more time allowed him for repentance. (G.)

And in hell.] Interpreters are not agreed concerning the proper ſignification of the Greek word hadees. In the New Teſtament it is taken to ſignify, 1. The grave or ſepulchre; as in Acts ii 27. where St. Peter makes a diſtinction and oppoſition between the grave in which David was ſhut up, and the hell out of which Chriſt was delivered, ver. 29, 31. in which ſenſe it is uſually underſtood and expounded in the Septuagint. 2. It ſignifies the place of torment, as in the text here before us. And, 3. It is taken for the devil himſelf; as Matt. xvi. 18. (Leigh.) This, if I am not miſtaken, is the only place in the holy ſcriptures, wherein hadeés is thought to be properly underſtood of the place of torment. (G.) See the note on Matt. xi. 23.

He lift up his eyes.] As bodily actions are frequently aſcribed to God, ſo the like are here, by the ſame figure, aſcribed to ſouls departed from their bodies. (Idem.) Chriſt deſcribes ſpiritual things under ſuch figures, as he knew were adapted to our ſenſes: for ſouls have neither fingers nor eyes, neither are they tormented with thirſt, nor yet do they hold conference with one another. The ſum of all, therefore, is, that the ſouls of the faithful, ſo ſoon as they depart from their bodies, do lead a joyful and bleſſed life in the other world; but that for the reprobate, there are prepared ſuch horrible torments, as our minds are no more capable of conceiving an idea of, than of the immenſe glories of heaven. (Beza.)

Father Abraham.] As the Baptiſt taxed their imaginations, in hoping to be preſerved from divine judgment, while they lived, becauſe they were the children of Abraham, Matt. iii. 9. ſo our Lord here may perhaps ſtrike at a like imagination got among them, that hell-fire had no power over the ſinners of Iſrael, becauſe Abraham and Iſaac came down thither to fetch them thence; declaring, even from the mouth of Abraham, that no help was by them to be expected from him, when they were in that place. (W.)

Dip the tip of his finger.] It is very juſt, that he who has refuſed to give the crumbs which fell from his table to a poor wretch who deſired them, ſhould eternally deſire a drop of water, and not receive it. (Q.) See the notes on Mark ix. 44, &c.

Son, remember.] This word ſon, which is a word of tenderneſs, is here uſed to ſhew us, that God does not puniſh out of any tranſport of anger or paſſion, but out of a calm and ſedate love of his own juſtice. (Idem.) He doth not revile him, tho' a very bad man: If we revile the good, we are unjuſt, they deſerve it not; if we revile the bad, we are unwiſe, we ſhall get nothing by it; a wiſe man knows not what it is to give bad language. (B.) This ſhould teach us to temper our neceſſary ſeverity with ſome goodneſs; for mere ſeverity is nothing elſe but cruelty, which neither God nor nature require at our hands. (Hales.) Abraham could not releaſe this poor man of his pain, he could not ſo much as procure a mitigation of it; he found no means to provide him a drop of cold water; yet he found a way to expreſs his goodneſs, and affords him the title of ſon. (Idem.)

In thy life-time.] Many, no doubt, receive good things, not in this life only, but in the next too; and many likewiſe receive evil things in both: Therefore, when 'tis ſaid, Thou receivedſt good things, and Lazarus evil things; it is neither ſaid, nor meant, that merely for their having received them, the one is tormented now, or the other comforted now; but thoſe good things are brought to the rich man's remembrance, only that he might recollect, and ſee, and juſtify God's providence in all his diſpenſations; to make him ſenſible, how largely even ſo ill a man had ſhared in the divine bounty; and, that thoſe who have leaſt of it in the next world, cannot fairly complain, that God is their debtor, when the whole account is ſtated. (Stanh.)

Receivedſt thy good things.] That is, thy good things, in which thou placedſt all thy happineſs; thy good things which thou lookedſt upon thy ſelf as the proprietor, and not as the diſpenſer of; now remember what thou hadſt, and what thou abuſedſt. (G. and B.) This phraſe of receiving thy good things, ſeems to be agreeable with the Hebrew phraſe of a man's receiving his world, when all things ſucceed to a man's wiſh, in an uninterrupted courſe of ſecular felicity; according to an ancient ſaying of theirs, that "whoſoever ſhall paſs through forty days without chaſtiſements, hath received his world:" a full abundant reward for all the good he hath done here. (H.) The word apolambanein, here uſed, doth not ſignify barely receiving, but to receive it, as it were, in full diſcharge and final ſatisfaction. (G.)

Now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.] No man ought to be exceſſively troubled, if he meets with hardſhip here; becauſe thoſe for whom God deſigns good things hereafter, may have their evil things here. (B.) What miſtaken meaſures do they go upon, who form a judgment either of their own, or another's happineſs and miſery, by their different fortunes or ſtations in the world? For, according to this ſtandard, who would have ſcrupled to pronounce the rich man in this parable moſt bleſſed, and Lazarus the moſt wretched of all mortal creatures? And yet, how diſtant had this raſh ſentence been from the truth of the caſe? Alas! the faſhion, ſays St. Paul (or, as the original hath it, the ſcene) of this world paſſeth away, 1 Cor. vii. 31. And an errand ſcene it is indeed: a mere theatrical repreſentation, all over deluſion and deceit. Upon this ſtage of life, we ſee, we admire, we envy, a perſon, ſupporting the character of a prince: We put his ſplendour, his retinue, his wealth, his power, and large dependencies, into the idea of the man: But when the curtain is let down, and death ſhall (as long it cannot be before it will) diſrobe and ſtrip him of all that borrowed luſtre; this ſets us right, and diſabuſes thoſe falſe imaginations, with which the ſolemn pageantry of forms, the glitterings of greatneſs, and the diſtance of univerſal obeyſance and reſpect, had blinded us before. 'Tis then we ſee the man as he is; and, till this change be made, we judge in the dark. (Stanh.)

A great gulph fixed.] The ſentence ye are now under is irreverſible; and it is to no purpoſe to hope for any change or amendment after death. (Idem.) The ſtate of ſouls at death is unalterably fixed and ſtated. (B.) This text ſeems plainly to refute the opinion of Origen, that there would come a time when the puniſhments of the wicked would have an end. (W.)

They which would paſs from hence.] That is, if any would paſs from hence. (G.)

Send him to my father's houſe.] Reſtored to his body; as appears by ver. 31. For the apparition of his ſpirit only was not the thing deſired. (Idem.) The requeſt was, that the perſon whom they all had known living, and now knew to be dead, ſhould riſe again, and perſonally come to them, and tell them in what a ſad condition he had ſeen him, and that they muſt all expect to run the ſame fortune, if they did not change their courſe of living. (Sharpe.)

They have Moſes and the prophets, let them hear them.] Why does he not ſay, Let them hear him of whom it is written, Unto him ye ſhall hearken, Deut. xviii. 15. and to whom Moſes there refers; becauſe the father of the faithful being here introduced, there muſt be a regard to decorum, leſt the order of the Old and New Teſtament ſhould be confounded, as well as becauſe Moſes and the prophets have every where ſpoken of him as clearly as if they had pointed him out with their finger; for ſo he himſelf ſays, Had ye believed Moſes, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me, Joh. v. 46. (D. H.) When theſe words were firſt ſpoken, it was with a ſpecial reference to the ſtate of the Jews, and to that light, and thoſe means of ſalvation, which were afforded to them, at the time when our Saviour began his preaching; when all the ſtanding revelation of God's will, was contained in the books of Moſes, and in the writings of the prophets. But ſince then our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the eternal ſon of God, a more credible meſſenger than Lazarus from the dead, has come himſelf in perſon, to aſſure us that there is a heaven and a hell; and to ſhew us the means of attaining that, and avoiding this: and God having raiſed him up from the dead, after he had been crucified by the Jews, has given ſufficient aſſurance to the world of his divine miſſion: And that Jeſus did and ſaid ſuch things, and that he died and roſe again, we have the teſtimony of his Apoſtles, and others, who were eye and ear-witneſſes thereof, and who, in confirmation of their teſtimony, were empowered by God to do as great miracles as Jeſus himſelf had done: And laſtly, of what was done and taught by our Saviour and his Apoſtles, we have very credible records ſtill remaining, viz. the books of the New Teſtament; the authority of which is at leaſt as well proved to us, as ever the authority of the Old Teſtament was to the Jews: So that we now have plainly more and ſtronger motives to repentance, than the Jews before our Saviour's time had; we conſequently do ſtand in leſs need of new miracles, and new revelations, than they did. (Blackall.) Moſes and the prophets comprehend all the ſeveral diſpenſations of God's mercy, as expreſſed either in the Old or New Teſtament; they ſignify the whole revealed will of God, and whatſoever he has ſet down therein as neceſſary to our attaining eternal life and happineſs. (Hilliard.) Our rule, in theſe caſes, is, "To the law, and to the teſtimony;" to the publick and undoubted oracles of God, in the Old and New Teſtament. Whatever doctrine can be proved out of them, we are bound to embrace it without a new miracle: On the other ſide, whatever doctrine is inconſiſtent with them, we muſt reject it, tho' an angel from heaven, or one from the dead, ſhould come and preach it to us. (Sharpe.)

Nay, father Abraham.] Here he judges of others by himſelf; as if he had ſaid, thoſe prevailed not with me, and therefore may not do ſo with them. (G. and W.) They have always had Moſes and the prophets in their hands, but yet their hearts remain impenitent? but if a ſpecial meſſenger be ſent to them from the dead, this will not fail to awaken them, and bring them to repentance. (B.)

If they hear not Moſes and the prophets.] That is, if they do not hearken to, and obey the precepts of Moſes and the prophets, whom they own to be perſons ſent from God, and delivering his meſſage, neither will they be perſuaded to repent, even tho' one ſhould ariſe from the dead to preach to them; for he could come with no greater authority, deliver no better motives to repentance, nor give them any greater aſſurance of the truth of what he ſaid, than they did. (G. Sh. Bl. St. H. W. and B.) Chriſt himſelf actually raiſed Lazarus from the dead, John xi. (to which probably he had an eye in this parable;) and yet were the Phariſees ever the more obedient to his doctrine? (G.) Nay, tho' they had the moſt clear proofs of our Lord's own reſurrection; from the teſtimony of his own predictions, of their own prophets, and the guards who kept the ſepulchre, of their own ſenſes, of the Apoſtles, and five hundred witneſſes; and all this confirmed by miraculous effuſions of the Holy Ghoſt on thoſe who believed on him, and a throng of miracles wrought in his name; yet all this was inſufficient to reclaim that wicked generation from their infidelity, and to provoke them to repentance. (W.) Hence-forward then, let us not wonder, if when a drunkard drops down dead upon the ſpot, the companions ſay one to another, Drink on: If ſinners daily tumble one another into the grave, without conſidering the operation of God's hand, this, to thoſe who conſider this text, will not ſeem ſtrange; for if they hear not Moſes and the prophets, neither will they be converted, tho' hundreds of ſinners, before their eyes, drop down dead; nay, If they hear not Moſes and the prophets, neither will they be perſuaded tho' one riſe from the dead.

CHAP. XVII.

Chriſt teacheth his diſciples to avoid all occaſions of offence; and to be ready to forgive one another: The power of faith; and the duty of works. He healeth ten lepers. The coming of Chriſt as the Meſſiah, and as a Judge.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. THEN ſaid he unto the diſciples, It is impoſſible but that offences will come: but wo unto him through whom they come. It were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his neck, and he caſt into the ſea, than that he ſhould offend one of theſe little ones. Take heed to your ſelves: If thy brother treſpaſs againſt thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he treſpaſs againſt thee ſeven times in a day, and ſeven times in a day turn again to thee, ſaying, I repent; thou ſhalt forgive him. And the apoſtles ſaid unto the Lord, Increaſe our faith. And the Lord ſaid, If ye had faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, ye might ſay unto this ſycamine-tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the ſea; and it ſhould obey you. But which of you having a ſervant plowing, or feeding cattle, will ſay unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go, and ſit down to meat? And will not rather ſay unto him, Make ready wherewith I may ſup, and gird thy ſelf, and ſerve me till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou ſhalt eat and drink? Doth he thank that ſervant becauſe he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not. So likewiſe ye, when ye ſhall have done all thoſe things, which are commanded you, ſay, We are unprofitable ſervants; we have done that which was our duty to do.

It is impoſſible.] That is, thro' the unreſtrained wickedneſs of mankind. (W.) It is not to be imagined, that God ſhould ſo think fit to interpoſe his power perpetually, as to hinder, or not permit, falſe doctrines, and ſchiſms, and other like means of diſcouraging men in their Chriſtian courſe. (H.) God, to whom nothing is impoſſible, could prevent all offences or ſcandals; but he chuſes rather to reduce them, by his wiſdom, within the order of his providence, and to make them inſtrumental to the ſanctification of the elect, to the manifeſtation of his Juſtice, and to his other deſigns. (Q.)

Offences will come.] Scandalon, which is originally a Greek word, is derived apo tou ſcazein, from halting; and is properly applied to that whereby the body is hurt, the laying of which is forbidden, Lev. xix. 14. and therefore, a woe belongs to him who lays it; but here, doubtleſs, our Saviour means not ſuch a ſtumbling block, but ſuch a one, whereby the mind or ſoul receives ſome ſpiritual hurt: And whereas, to offend, is commonly underſtood to diſpleaſe; in the ſcripture, he is ſaid to be offended, who is induced to ſin, tho' he be pleaſed thereby: ſo that, to offend, or give offence, is not only to diſpleaſe, but alſo to harm the ſoul, even by pleaſing. (Tombes.)

But wo unto him.] God will not ſuffer them to go unpuniſhed, if even one of the leaſt of thoſe who believe in him be thus offended. (Beza.) Whatever good God brings out of evil, can by no means excuſe the ſinner, becauſe he has no manner of ſhare in that good. (Q.)

Take heed to your ſelves.] That ye be not guilty of any degree of this offence; not only by acts of commiſſion, but alſo of omiſſion, or any neglect of duty. (G. H. and W.)

Rebuke him.] We do then expreſs our friendſhip in the beſt manner, when we do plainly and openly reprove our friends for their faults; which will be much more uſeful to them than any fondneſs, how deep or tender ſoever, when it makes us exceſſively indulgent to them. Such reproofs may be as wounds, Prov. xxvii. 6. and give a very painful uneaſineſs; but even that will be medicinal. (Burnet.) But when we do ſee it neceſſary or expedient to rebuke an offending brother, we muſt take care to do it without any bitterneſs: for all that is gained by rebuking him in a harſh manner, is only to inflame the wound, and render it incurable, and frequently to make us ſtand in need of his pardon, who before wanted ours. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xvi. 25. This place is to be underſtood of private offences, and perſonal wrongs and injuries done by one man to another; which we muſt firſt reprove, and then remit: and altho' it be ſaid, "if he repent forgive him," that is not to be underſtood, as if we needed not to pardon our brother, if he neglects to repent and ask forgiveneſs; but whether he acknowledges his offence or no to us, our hearts muſt ſtand ready to forgive the wrong done to us, and to pray for forgiveneſs on his behalf at the hands of God; laying aſide all thoughts and deſires of revenge in our own cauſe, and ſtanding ready to do any office of love and ſervice to our offending brother. (B.) See the notes on Matt. vi. 14.

Seven times in a day.] As the multiplying of offence is a great aggravation of offences, ſo the multiplying of forgiveneſs is a great demonſtration of a god-like temper in us: He that multiplieth ſin doth, like Satan, ſin abundantly; and he that multiplieth pardon doth, like God, pardon abundantly. (Idem.)

Lord, increaſe our faith.] Theſe three foregoing duties of an inoffenſive converſation, fraternal correption, and full forgiveneſs of a brother, daily multiplying freſh indignities and provocations, being ſo difficult and contrary to their natural inclinations, and faith being the foundation of all Chriſtian virtues, the Apoſtles, in order to the performance of theſe duties, beg the increaſe of faith. Moreover, ſeeing faith is wrought in the heart, which God alone can ſearch, and can immediately work upon, they muſt aſcribe to him (as Woltzogenius here confeſſeth) a divine virtue; which being proper to the deity, and incommunicable to a finite nature, muſt conſequently ſhew, that Chriſt had in him a divine nature. (W) Faith decays every moment, unleſs it be ſupported by prayer: Prayer owes its birth to faith, but faith owes its increaſe to prayer; and both are a gift of God in every degree. (Q) The moſt eminent ſaints, apoſtles not excepted, are very ſenſible of the imperfection of their faith, and very importunate with God daily for the increaſe of it; "Lord, increaſe our faith." (B.) Our faith muſt be in a full meaſure: we muſt endeavour for full aſſurance, Rom. xiv. 5. Interpreters think this is a metaphor, taken from a ſhip under ſails. (Andr.) God will never be wanting to thoſe who truly believe, tho' their faith be weak, to ſtrengthen them, even in ſuch difficulties as cannot be ſurmounted by any human power. (Beza.)

Faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed.] That is, the leaſt degree of true, ſincere, and active faith will enable you to perform this difficult duty of forgiving injuries, and all other duties, with as much facility and eaſe, as a miraculous faith would enable you to remove mountains, and tranſplant trees. (H. W. and B.) See the notes on Matt. xiii. 31.

But which of you.] Here our Saviour explains what he means by a true faith. (H.) The deſign and ſcope of this parable is to ſhew, that Almighty God neither is nor can be a debtor to any of his creatures, for the beſt ſervice which they are able to perform unto him; and, that they are ſo far from meriting a reward of juſtice, that they do not deſerve a return of thanks. Three arguments our Saviour makes uſe of, to evidence and prove this; 1. In reſpect to God, who is our abſolute Lord and maſter; and the argument lies thus; If earthly maſters do not owe ſo much as thanks to their ſervants, for doing that which is commanded them, how much leſs can God owe the reward of eternal life to his ſervants, when they are never able to do all that is commanded them, in a perfect and ſinleſs manner! 2. In reſpect to ourſelves, who are his bond-ſervants, his ranſom'd ſlaves, and conſequently we are not our own men, but his who hath redeemed us; and accordingly do we owe him all that ſervice, yea more than all that we are able to perform unto him: and therefore whatever reward is either promiſed or given, it is wholly to be aſcribed to the Maſter's bounty, and not to the ſervant's merit. 3. To merit any thing by our good works is impoſſible, in regard of the works themſelves, becauſe all that we can do, altho' we do all that is commanded us, is but our duty. The argument runs thus; to bounden duty belongs no reward of juſtice; but all the ſervice we do perform, yea, more than we can perform to God, is bounden duty; therefore there is due unto us no reward of juſtice, but of free mercy. (B.)

Gird thyſelf.] See the notes on chap. xii. 35.

We are unprofitable ſervants.] What is here meant by achreios doulos, unprofitable ſervant, will be matter of ſome queſtion, becauſe of the ſomewhat diſtant character ſet upon it, Matt. xxv. 30. There he is to be "caſt into utter darkneſs," his unprofitableneſs is a damning ſin, expreſſed alſo by wickedneſs and ſlothfulneſs, but here they that have done all that is commanded (which ſure is not a ſtate of ſo much danger) muſt yet call themſelves unprofitable ſervants, becauſe they have done no more than ſo, have done nothing for which they ſhould be thanked or rewarded above ordinary, ver. 9. To this, 'twere anſwer ſufficient to ſay, that the ſame word is often uſed in ſeveral notions; ſometimes in a ſtricter (for barely not profitable) ſometimes in a larger ſenſe. Thus eechreioo-theeſan might ſeem to be uſed, Pſalm xiv. 3. and from thence, Rom. iii. 12. for all kind of impiety (as anomos is ſometimes "he that lives not exactly according to law," ſometimes "the moſt wicked lawleſs perſon"): but that word, in that place, muſt be underſtood according to the notion of the Hebrew there, which ſignifies putrid or ſtinking; which is therefore uſeleſs, good for nothing, as rotten, Eph. iv. 29. is oppoſed to good for uſe. Beſide this therefore, there may be yet a farther account given of the word in that of Matt. xxv. thus; the phraſe achreios doulos ſignifies a "ſervant that brings in no profit to his maſter." Now according as the office or employment of this ſervant is, ſo this will have more or leſs of guilt in it; he whoſe office or ſervice conſiſts in trafficking for his maſter, to whom 'tis under precept (as it was in that ſervant, Matt. xxv. he had been commanded by his maſter to trade with his talent, Luke xix. 13. and from thence an obligation lay upon him, "he ought to have put the money to the exchangers," Matt. xxv. 27.) his not bringing in profit is downright diſobedience; and accordingly, as he is called unprofitable in one place, ver. 30. ſo he is by the ſame Evangeliſt ſtiled wicked and ſlothful, ver. 26. which he could not have been, if he had done all that was required of him. And ſo, tho' a bare unprofitableneſs, founded in a performance of all that was commanded, as here it was, bring not utter darkneſs upon the ſervant, but only deprive him of thanks, or reward above wages, ver. 9. yet when that unprofitableneſs is inſeparable from direct breach of precept, as there it appears to be, there it moſt juſtly brings that ſevere ſentence upon the unprofitable. This difference then, which is but extrinſecal, and accidental to the nature of the word, being acknowledged, and ſo giving the account why the unprofitable in one place ſhould be under a greater guilt than in the other, in all other reſpects the notion will be the ſame in both places. There 'tis ſet to ſignify him, who had brought in no profit to his maſter, made not uſe of his abilities, ver. 15. to improve the talent committed to him. And agreeably ſo it muſt ſignify here. For two ſorts of ſervices are here taken notice of. One, that which is the particular taſk for which he is hired, as ploughing, feeding cattle, ver. 7. Another, which tho' it be not named or ſpecified to him, or indented for, at his entring into the ſervice, yet belongs to every one, what office ſoever he is in, (as he is a ſervant) viz. bringing in meat, waiting upon his maſter at table, ver. 8. This Ariſtotle, in his Politicks, names egkuclia diaconemata, "thoſe ſervices that belong to every ſervant," as the egkuclia mathemata are exerciſes, which belong to all young men, whatſoever faculty they apply themſelves to. Parallel to this, what ſervices are of this kind, tho' they be not ſpecified, or indented for by name, they are yet, in all reaſon, and by obligation of obedience and ſervice to his maſter, to be performed by him; and he that neglects or refuſes to perform them, doth not perform the duty of a ſervant, and for ſuch neglect deſerves ſtripes, where the maſter hath that power over ſervants (as in Chriſt's ſpeeches he is ſuppoſed to have, "he ſhall be beaten with many, or with few ſtripes;" which may be the reaſon that among the Jews there is no law given for the obedience of ſervants to maſters, becauſe the maſters could by puniſhments enforce that themſelves.) But then, when all this is performed, this is little for the commendation of a ſervant; neither thanks nor reward extraordinary are due to him for this. It muſt be remembred, what Seneca hath obſerved, that the ſervant is humilis amicus, a lower ſort of friend, that is to tend and conſider his maſter's good, and to contrive what may moſt tend to it, and perform it upon occaſions: Exiguum eſt ad legem bonum eſſe, ſaith he, "It is a petty ſmall thing to do no more than he is commanded to do," that is the meaning of ta diatachthenta, and ho opheilomen poiein here, "doing what is commanded," nothing but ſtrict duty, what he is obliged to, as a ſervant. The profitable or uſeful ſervant doth more than ſo; whatever he ſees will tend to his maſter's advantage, he doeth it of his own accord; and he that doth not, tho' he have broken no precept, is yet to acknowledge himſelf unprofitable. And this notion of the unprofitable ſervant belongs fitly to this place, where, I ſuppoſe, Chriſt ſpeaketh of the unfaithfulneſs of the diſciples, who contented themſelves with calling the name of Jeſus over the Epileptick, Matt. xvii. 16. Mark ix. 29. and when that would not do, did not proceed to faſting and praying, which means would have enabled them to cure him, and now come and deſire Chriſt to increaſe their faith, ver. 5. that is, their power of working miracles, when, as he tells them, if they would do their duty in all parts, as becomes ſervants to do, that is, faſt and pray when need required, uſe the proper and neceſſary means toward the end, they would be able to do what miracle they pleaſed. And this is but duty, ſaith Chriſt, the doing of it they muſt not look on as a ſupererogating virtue, but as that to which they are ſtrictly obliged, and which, tho' it be not commanded to all, yet being a means neceſſary to an end, is, by interpretation, commanded to all them to whom that end is commanded, and ſo to them who were commanded to cure diſeaſes, &c. Matt. x. 8. For 'tis ordinarily ſaid, that there are two ſorts of neceſſaries, 1. Thoſe things that are ſo neceſſitate præcepti, by neceſſity of precept, or becauſe they are commanded: 2. Others neceſſitate medii, neceſſary as means, without which I cannot do that ſervice which is required of me: And ſo was this of faſting and praying, to the caſting out of ſome devils; (the Apoſtles taſk at that time, part of their office) and as they that do not this, fail much of their duty, and have no reaſon to expect that God will ſupply them, enable them farther to do that work, without uſe of that means; ſo they that do it, have little reaſon to expect any thanks for it, which is the adequate importance of this place. (H.) Tho', ſtrictly and properly ſpeaking, we cannot be profitable to God, yet notwithſtanding, in a lower ſenſe, we may be profitable; for our Lord ſpeaks of "good and faithful ſervants," Matt. xxv. 21. By a ſincere obedience to his laws, we may advance his glory, and promote thoſe deſigns he would have carried on in the world. We ought to look upon ourſelves as poor and weak inſtruments in his hands. We not only fail in our duty, but what we do is by aſſiſtances derived from him; and therefore we cannot merit any reward from him. (Fox.) Here Chriſt deſtroys two doctrines of the ſchools, "the merit of good works, and works of ſupererogation." For, 1. We being, in reſpect of God, unprofitable ſervants, Job xxii. 2, 3. and xxxv. 7. and Pſalm xvi. 2. cannot merit: And, 2. When we have done all we can, it is no more than our duty. (W.) But after all, for as much as libertines take occaſion from this text to conclude, that it is in vain for men to trouble themſelves about the duties of religion, ſince, after all their pains and labour, they can do nothing that is uſeful or profitable; it ſeems more natural and reaſonable, to underſtand it according to the ſignification which the ſcripture itſelf oftentimes gives to the word which is here render'd unprofitable. The Septuagint render the Hebrew word ſchephel, which ſignifies a thing that is mean, by this ſame Greek word achreios, baſe, 2 Sam. vi. 22. and by micros, little, or low, Ezek. xvii. 6. And thus, we ought not to be proud, and value ourſelves upon our ſervices to God, but acknowledge ourſelves, at beſt, to be poor, vile, humble, mean creatures in his ſight. (D.H.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. And it came to paſs, as he went to Jeruſalem, that he paſſed thro' the midſt of Samaria and Galilee. And as he enter'd into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which ſtood afar off: And they lifted up their voices, and ſaid, Jeſus, Maſter, have mercy on us. And when he ſaw them, he ſaid unto them, Go ſhew yourſelves unto the prieſts. And it came to paſs, that as they went, they were cleanſed. And one of them, when he ſaw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God, And fell down on his face at his feet giving him thanks: and he was a Samaritan. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, Were there not ten cleanſed? but where are the nine? There are not found that returned to give glory to God, ſave this ſtranger. And he ſaid unto him, Ariſe, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole.

The midſt of Samaria and Galilee.] It is well known, that Samaria lay betwixt Galilee and Judæa; and ſo our Lord taking his journey to Jeruſalem, muſt go firſt through Galilee, then through Samaria; why therefore is it here ſaid, "that he paſſed through Samaria and Galilee?" To this it may be anſwered, that in medio is often the ſame as metaxu, between; and ſo is dia, as dia neeſoon, inter inſulas; ſo here the Arabic and Syriac, "between Samaria and Galilee," i. e. between the confines of both countries; Chriſt, in this journey, going to the Scythopolitan Bridge, (ſaith Lightfoot) by which he paſſed into Peræa, and ſo on by Samaria into Judæa. (W.)

Ten men that were lepers.] Tho' the leper, by the law of God, was to be ſeparated from all other ſociety, (God thereby ſignifying to his people, that the ſociety of thoſe that are ſpiritually contagious ought to be avoided) yet the law of God did not reſtrain them from converſing with one another: Accordingly theſe ten lepers get together, and are company for themſelves. Fellowſhip is that we all naturally affect, tho' even in Leproſy; lepers will flock together. Where ſhall we find one ſpiritual leper alone?

Drunkards, and prophane perſons, will be ſure to conſort with one another! Why ſhould not God's children delight in an holy communion, when the wicked join hand in hand? Tho' Jews and Samaritans could not abide one another, yet here in leproſy they accord: Here was one Samaritan leper with the Jewiſh: Common ſufferings had made them friends, whom religion had disjoined! Oh, what virtue is there in affliction, to unite the moſt alienated and eſtranged hearts! (B.)

They lifted up their voices.] Prayer muſt be ſtrong and earneſt, when the diſeaſe is great and inveterate. The gift of prayer, in the beginning of converſion, is a great gift; and it is preſerved by prayer itſelf. The farther we ſee ourſelves from God, the higher muſt we lift up our voices. (Q.) They cry unto him for mercy, with reſpect to their afflictions: They jointly cry, they all "lifted up their voice" with fervent importunity; teaching us our duty, to join our ſpiritual forces together, and ſet upon God by troops. (B.)

Go ſhew yourſelves unto the prieſts.] Chriſt commanded them to go to the prieſts, 1. In compliance with the ceremonial law, which required the leper to be brought to them, to judge whether heal'd or not; and if ſo, to receive the offering preſcribed in token of thankfulneſs: 2. For the trial of their obedience: Had they ſtood upon terms with Chriſt, and ſaid, Alas! to what purpoſe is it to ſhew ourſelves to the prieſts? what good can their eyes do us? we ſhould be glad to ſee ourſelves cured; but why ſhould we go to them, to ſee ourſelves loathed? Had they thus expoſtulated, they had not been healed; what command ſoever we receive from Chriſt, we muſt rather conſider the authority of the commander, than the weight of the thing commanded; for God delights to try obedience by ſmall precepts. Happy for thoſe lepers, that in obedience to Chriſt they went to the prieſts, "for as they went they were healed." (Idem.) They went, believing they ſhould be found clean, by virtue of his word: And accordingly, before they reached the "prieſts, they were cleanſed. (St.) While they implored Jeſus to heal them, they might well expect that he ſhould have uſed ſome ſenſible ways and means for their recovery: And ſo, indeed, in many other inſtances of reſtoring the ſick and the impotent, he had recourſe to ſome external means. Once he made "clay of his ſpittle, and anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay," John ix. 6. At other times he cured with the viſible tokens of his touching, or laying hands upon them, Mark vii. 32. and viii. 22. Or elſe, he ſuffered them to touch but the hem of his garment, and as many as touched were made whole, Matt. ix. 20. and xiv. 36. Mark v. 28. and vi. 56. and Luke vi. 19. And, no doubt, our Saviour dealt thus in his wiſdom, to inſtruct mankind, that in the common exigencies of infirmity, pains and ſickneſs, he would have them make uſe of the ordinary means of health and ſafety. (Kennet.) See the notes on Matt. viii. 4. By ſending the lepers thus to the prieſts, who were to make their offerings in the temple, Chriſt decides the cauſe betwixt the Jews and the Samaritans, ſending the Samaritans not to mount Gerizim, but to Jeruſalem. (G. and W.)

And one of them.] This paſſage is the very picture of mankind; and holds to us a glaſs, in which almoſt every ſoul may ſee its own diſpoſition, but too exactly reſembled, too ſtrongly reflected. The generality of the world, are they not like theſe lepers, extremely clamorous and importunate in their cries and complaints, impatient of ſorrow and diſtreſs; but, when thoſe cries have prevailed for eaſe and deliverance, are they not then every whit as like them, in the other part of their deportment too? For rarely, very rarely, do we meet with ſuch vigorous impreſſions, ſuch becoming acknowledgments, as every conſidering ſtander-by can eaſily diſcern the goodneſs of God to call for at our hands? (St.) This noble pattern of thankfulneſs ſingly returns his thanks; he gets away from his fellows, to make his acknowlegment. There are caſes, wherein ſingularity is not only lawful but laudable: Inſtead of ſubjecting ourſelves to others examples, it is ſometimes our duty to reſolve to ſet an example to others; for it is much better to go the right way alone, than to err with company. Again, he ſpeedily returns his thanks: no ſooner doth he ſee his cure, but he haſtes to acknowledge it. (B.) This man alſo points out the right method and order of thankſgiving. Firſt, Our grateful returns muſt be made unto Almighty God, the prime mover of all events, the fountain of goodneſs and joys: Next to this, all ſuitable thanks and reſpects ſhould be given to God's great inſtruments of doing good. Upon every ſignal favour, we muſt keep to the connexion of theſe duties; firſt to praiſe and glorify God, then to honour and highly eſteem the perſons, whom God hath diſtinguiſhed for the means of conveying that mercy to us Thus, this humble and well diſpoſed man firſt paid his duty to God, "turning back, and with a loud voice he glorified God; and then (not till then) fell down on his face, at the feet of his deliverer, giving him thanks. (K.)

And he was a Samaritan.] That is, none of the Jewiſh nation, but one that was a ſtranger to the commonwealth of Iſrael. Neither place nor parentage can block up the way, nor ſtop the current of God's free mercy, which reaches the unworthy and ill-deſerving. (B.) It was rather to be expected, that the Jews themſelves would have hoſanna'd their own Meſſiah; and the poor Samaritan might have been excuſed for a little more of ignorance and unbelief: But, it ſeems, God is no reſpecter of perſons; and the tribe who thought themſelves beloved of him, had the leaſt ſenſe of duty to him. However, this help'd to raiſe the glory of the miracle; that when the Jews themſelves would not ſee the power of God, a very ſtranger did behold it and adore it. (K.) It is a lively image of the reception, which Jeſus and his Goſpel met with in the world: How the ungrateful Jews rejected both with indignation and ſcorn: How the Gentiles, like this Samaritan, from whom ſuch an inſtance of ingenuity could be leaſt expected, received his doctrine thankfully, improved it diligently, and ſhewed, that they valued the ineſtimable mercy juſtly. (St.)

Ariſe, go thy way.] The lower a penitent proſtrates himſelf at the feet of Chriſt, by a thankful humility, and an humble thankfulneſs, the higher he lifts him up, and the more he encourages him to walk in his ways. Chriſt praiſes the faith of man, to the end that man may praiſe the grace of God, which is the principle from which it proceeds, and frequently beg this principle of him. It is faith, which gives birth to the life of grace in ſinners; it is faith likewiſe, which increaſes and perfects it in the righteous. (Q.) See the notes on Mark x. 52.

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. And when he was demanded of the Phariſees, when the kingdom of God ſhould come; he anſwered them and ſaid, The kingdom God cometh not with obſervation. Neither ſhall they ſay, Lo here, or lo there: for behold, the kingdom of God is within you. And he ſaid unto the diſciples, The days will come, when ye ſhall deſire to ſee one of the days of the Son of man, and ye ſhall not ſee it. And they ſhall ſay to you, See here, or ſee there: go not after them, nor follow them. For as the lightning that lightneth out of the one part under heaven, ſhineth unto the other part under heaven: ſo ſhall alſo the Son of man be in his day. But firſt muſt he ſuffer many things, and be rejected of this generation. And as it was in the days of Noe, ſo ſhall it be alſo in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entred into the ark: and the flood came, and deſtroyed them all. Likewiſe alſo as it was, in the days of Lot, they did eat, they drank, they bought, they ſold, they planted, they builded: But the ſame day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimſtone from heaven, and deſtroyed them all: Even thus ſhall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed. In that day, he which ſhall be upon the houſe-top, and his ſtuff in the houſe, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewiſe not return back. Remember Lot's wife. Whoſoever ſhall ſeek to ſave his life, ſhall loſe it: and whoſoever ſhall loſe his life, ſhall preſerve it. I tell you, In that night there ſhall be two men in one bed: the one ſhall be taken, and the other ſhall be left. Two women ſhall be grinding together; the one ſhall be taken, and the other left. Two men ſhall be in the field; the one ſhall be taken, and the other left. And they anſwered, and ſaid unto him, Where Lord? And he ſaid unto them, Whereſoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.

The kingdom of God.] The Phariſees, and the Jews in general, expected the Meſſiah, as a temporal prince, to deliver them from the Roman yoke: And this is what they here enquire about. See the notes on ch. xiii. 18.

Not with obſervation.] i. e. Not with that royal ſplendour, or worldly pomp and grandeur, which ſhall render it conſpicuous in the eyes of the world, as ye expect it ſhould, ſo that a man may be able to ſay, from the luſtre of its firſt appearance, Lo, it is here, or it is there. (W.) But Chriſt tells them, the kingdom of God was already among them, by the miniſtring of John the Baptiſt and himſelf, and ſet up in the hearts of his people, by the ſecret operation of his Holy Spirit. (B.) See the notes on chap. xvi. 19. Entos humoon, among you, which we tranſlate within you, is a Syriac phraſe; to which the French is correſpondent, when they ſay, Il eſt au milieu de vous. (Trem.)

One of the days of the Son of man.] That is, the time of their viſitation by him, when he came to offer them all the bleſſings of the kingdom of God, upon their faith and repentance. This offer, ſaith Chriſt, in your extremity, ye will be glad to hear; but ſhall not hear it. (W.)

See here, or ſee there.] Pretending that there is a Meſſiah in this or that place. (H.)

As the lightning.] Here our Saviour foretells the days of tribulation and diſtreſs, which were to come upon Jeruſalem and the Jews; which being an emblem of the final judgment, inſtructs us, that the coming and appearance of Chriſt to judge us, will be very certain, ſudden, and unexpected. (B.) Chriſt had told them, that the kingdom of God was already come among them, and had appeared in the purity of his doctrine, and the miracles by which it was confirmed, tho' not with ſuch an outward ſplendour as might enable them to point to it, and ſay, Lo it is here, or there, ver. 20, 21. He tells them in the 25th verſe, that this Son of man ſhould ſuffer, and be rejected by them, and ſo the glory of it would be for a while eclipſed; and here, that, after his reſurrection, it would ſhine with ſuch a freſh and glorious brightneſs, by the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt on his diſciples, as it would render it equal to the ſplendour of the ſun ſhining from one part of heaven to the other, and cauſe it to be propagated almoſt as quick as lightning through the world, ſo that there ſhall be no need to attend to any man, ſaying, It is here, or there, ſeeing it would be quickly and conſpicuouſly ſet up among all nations, Matt. xxiv. 15. and that then this Son of man, ſo faſtidiouſly rejected by them, would alſo appear ſuddenly and glorioſly, to revenge upon them their infidelity, and the affronts which they offered to him. (W.)

But firſt he muſt ſuffer.] Suffering, and the croſs of Chriſt, are the only means choſen by God to form his church, and to fit and prepare her to appear with Chriſt at the great day. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. x. 38. and Luke ix. 23.

Even thus it ſhall be.] Jeruſalem's deſtruction, and the world's final deſolation, ſhall be like the deſtruction of the old world in the days of Noah, and of Sodom in the days of Lot; both in regard of its unexpectedneſs, and of their ſenſuality and ſecurity. (B.) Theſe two dreadful hiſtories are read with the ſame indifference with which the Roman hiſtory is read: and yet they are types and prophecies of the miſerable end of the ſinners who read them, if not prevented by a timely repentance. (Q.)

Upon the houſe-top.] See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 17.

Remember Lot's wife.] What befel her, for looking back to Sodom, Gen. xix. 26. leſt ye likewiſe periſh in this ſlaughter of the unbelieving Jews, by looking back to what ye have in your houſes, or in the fields. (W.) Lot, who did not look back, is an emblem of ſteady reaſon, and manly reſolution; and his wife, of our frail and treacherous fleſh; which as the ſoul is advancing on its way to ſalvation, is ſtill caſting an eye back, and willing a return to ſenſual enjoyments: Accordingly, our bleſſed Saviour himſelf, having told us, that no one putting his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God, Luke ix. 62. bids us here Remember Lot's wife. (Parker.)

Whoſoever ſhall loſe his life, ſhall preſerve it.] In this hour, when judgment is come upon Jeruſalem, Chriſt declares, that whoſoever ſhall take any unchriſtian courſe to preſerve his life, by denying him and his holy religion, he ſhall loſe eternal life; but he that for Chriſt's ſake ſhall loſe his natural life, inſtead of a mortal, ſhall enjoy an immortal life in bliſs and glory. (B.) Zoogonein, the word here uſed, hath a ſpecial ſignificancy in Greek authors, oppoſite oogonein; as the latter belongs to thoſe creatures which bring forth eggs firſt, and then, after ſome time, living creatures; ſo the former belongs to all other creatures which bring forth alive at firſt. And this might not only have a commodious, but elegant, ſenſe in this place, thus; that they who die and loſe their lives for Chriſt's ſake, ſhall immediately, without any interval of the ſleeping of the ſoul in death, bring forth a new life into all eternity. But perhaps it may be unfit to affix this critical notion of the word in human writers to this of St. Luke; and if we judge by the uſe of the word in the Greek of the Old Teſtament, which hath a greater conſent and ſympathy with the writers of the New Teſtament, than any other ſort of books, zoogonein will ſignify no more than ſoozein, to ſave, or preſerve; for ſo it is uſed Exod. i. 17, 18, 22. and then the meaning of the verſe will be, that he that ſhall uſe any crafty means of policy at that time to ſave his life, it ſhall probably prove unſucceſsful to him, when he that entruſts himſelf and his life to God's providence and direction, and ſo doth endanger the loſing of it, ſhall be more likely to ſave it than any other. (H.) See the notes on Matt. x. 39.

The eagles.] Wherever the Jews are, there will the ſword of the Romans, whoſe enſign is the eagle, be ready to devour them. (W.) Meaning, that Judea in general, and Jeruſalem in particular, would be the theatre and ſtage of thoſe tragical calamities. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 28. and Mark xii. 21.

CHAP. XVIII.

Chriſt recommends fervency in prayer, by the parable of the importunate widow: Prefers the humble publican before the vain-glorious Phariſee: Encourages children to be brought to him: Exhorts us to forſake all, and follow him: Foretelleth his diſciples of his death and reſurrection: And reſtoreth a blind man to his ſight.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. AND he ſpake a parable unto them, to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint; Saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man. And there was a widow in the city, and ſhe came unto him, ſaying, Avenge me of mine adverſary. And he would not for a while: but afterwards he ſaid within himſelf, Though I fear not God, nor regard man; Yet becauſe this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, leſt by her continual coming ſhe weary me. And the Lord ſaid, Hear what the unjuſt judge ſaith. And ſhall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you, that he will avenge them ſpeedily. Nevertheleſs, when the ſon of man cometh, ſhall he find faith on the earth?

Men ought always to pray.] Theſe words import, 1. That we ſhould be always in a praying temper, in ſuch a diſpoſition of mind, as always to carry about us the neceſſary requiſites of hearty prayer. 2. That upon every ſolemn occaſion we ſhould actually addreſs ourſelves to God. 3. That we ſhould, at leaſt twice every day, either in public or private, offer up the ſacrifice of prayer and praiſe. 4. That we ſhould pray with great importunity and earneſtneſs. And, 5. That we ſhould continue and perſevere in the practice of this duty, tho' we have not a return of our prayers ſo ſoon as we expect. (Sharpe.) Not as if we ſhould do nothing elſe but pray; but that prayer ſhould accompany every thing elſe we do, ſo as to begin, continue and end all our actions with praying to, and praiſing God for his direction and aſſiſtance; tho' not always with our mouths, yet howſoever in our hearts, by lifting them up to him, as any man may do in the midſt of other buſineſs. (Beveridge.) A man may be juſtly ſaid "always to pray," when he has God always preſent to his mind, and always deſires him; whether he do it ſtanding or kneeling, in reſt or labour, in grief or joy. (Q.) Here it ſignifies not to pray oft every day, but to pray perſeveringly, day after day, without giving off our ſuit: And then mee ekkanein will be, not to faint under the preſſures and perſecutions they ſuffered, either from the perſecuting Jews, or others, by their inſtigation; from which they are here ſuppoſed to pray for deliverance, ver. 7. or not to deſpond under them. For ekkakein is not ſo properly to be ſlothful, as malis ſuccumbere, animo concidere, malis cedere, to faint and deſpond, ſay the Lexicons; and this eſpecially when it relates, as here, to tribulations. So Eph. iii. 13. mee ekkakein en thlipſeſi is well rendered not to faint under tribulation; and, 2 Cor. iv. 16. ouk ekkakoumen, we faint not under thoſe afflictions which make the outward man periſh, but continue ſtedfaſt in the faith; ver. 1. we faint not; tho' we are troubled on every ſide, and perplexed, we deſpair not of help from God, ver. 8. So Gal. vi. 9. mee ekkakein, not to grow weary of well doing, is mee ekluein, not to faint; which two things are put together in St. Paul's injunction to the Chriſtian ſufferer, "not to grow weary, or faint in his mind, Heb. xii. 3. And ſo, 2 Theſſ. iii. 13. mee ekkakein, not to be weary of well doing, being an exhortation to them who received the word with much affliction, 1 Theſſ. i. 6. and were in danger by them to fall from their ſtedfaſtneſs, may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to have the ſame import. (W.) See the notes on Luke xi. 8.

A judge.] This judge in the parable was an inferior and ſubordinate judge, an unrighteous and unjuſt judge, a mercileſs and hard-hearted judge; and yet, upon the widow's importunity, he avenged her, and did her juſtice: How much more will the ſovereign and ſupreme Judge, the holy and righteous, the merciful and compaſſionate Judge of all the earth, hear and help his praying people, and be the juſt avenger of thoſe who fear him? (B.) He muſt needs be very deſirous to grant, who ſo readily inſpires men with the confidence to ask. (Q.)

Tho' he bear long with them.] That is, with thoſe who afflict them; and ſo for a ſeaſon ſeemeth not to hear them. (W.)

Shall he find faith on the earth?] When the Son of man comes, to exerciſe this vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, how few ſhall he find in the Jewiſh nation that will believe it? As for the unbelieving Jews, tho' Chriſt, and his fore-runner, had told them ſo frequently and plainly of their approaching ruin; and tho' they had ſo many ſigns of it, recorded in Joſephus, he tells us, they were ſtill expecting deliverance from God: And they among them who believed and profeſſed the Chriſtian faith, being preſſed with continual ſufferings, began to "grow weary, and faint in their minds," and to ask, "where is the promiſe of his coming?" Yea, ſome of them began to "forſake the aſſemblies of the ſaints," Heb. x. 25. and many of them became apoſtates, and fell back to their old Judaiſm; ſo that all the Epiſtles, directed to them, are manifeſtly deſigned to keep them ſtedfaſt in the faith. (Idem.)

Ver. 9. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. And he ſpake this parable unto certain which truſted in themſelves, that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others: Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Phariſee, and the other a publican. The Phariſee ſtood and prayed thus with himſelf, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers, or even as this publican. I faſt twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I poſſeſs. And the publican ſtanding afar off, would not lift up ſo much as his eyes unto heaven, but ſmote upon his breaſt, ſaying, God be merciful to me a ſinner. I tell you, this man went down to his houſe juſtified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himſelf, ſhall be abaſed; and he that humbleth himſelf, ſhall be exalted.

Truſted in themſelves that they were righteous.] As the Phariſees generally did; ſeparating themſelves from the reſt of mankind by an affected piety, which paſſed for great ſtrictneſs in that age: But, as ſpecious and glorious as it look'd, it was perfectly of the nature of the glow-worm, and ſhined bright in that dark night of ignorance, but, view'd by day-light, was nothing but a ſquallid worm, a mere skeleton of devotion. (Horneck.) See the notes on Mark vii. 3. and Luke xi. 42. This parable is a good inſtruction with what diſpoſition of mind it is fit we approach Almighty God: It proves, that lowlineſs, and modeſty, and conſciouſneſs of our own guilt and miſery, are proper qualifications to recommend our prayers: But it ſeems to have ſtill a more general view; that of diſcountenancing ſpiritual pride, and a contempt of other people. (Stanh.)

The Phariſee ſtood, and prayed.] With himſelf, or by himſelf, as fearing to be polluted by the touch of the impure publican, ch. vii. 39. In his prayer he offends, 1. That he concludes himſelf good, becauſe he is not ſo bad as other men; whereas, he ſhould have done this only from the evidence of his own ſincerity in heart and actions; it being only from this approving our own works, that we can have "rejoicing in ourſelves, and not in another," Gal. vi. 4. 2. In judging ſo ill of others, many of whom he could have no certain knowledge of, and particularly in his judgment on this publican; from whoſe ſubmiſſive geſture, and penitential actions, he might have charitably concluded, that he came to the temple with a true penitent heart. (W.) The plain Engliſh of what he thanks God for here, is in effect but thus much, That he was clear, not of all, but of the groſſeſt and moſt infamous vices; had lived more cautiouſly than many others, and been hitherto ſucceſsful in deceiving the world with a pretence and pomp of godlineſs, without the true power of it. (S.)

The publican, ſtanding afar off.] He ſtood afar off, perhaps in the court of the Gentiles, looking upon himſelf unworthy to draw nigh to God, or ſtand in the holy place; he would "not lift up his eyes to heaven," from the ſenſe of the ſame unworthineſs; he ſmites upon his breaſt, puniſhing himſelf, out of a deep ſenſe of his guilt; this being the ſign of a mind vehemently afflicted, chap. xxiii. 48. And, laſtly, He humbly confeſſes that he was a ſinner, and earneſtly begs mercy; and therefore it is ſaid, "He went down to his houſe juſtified rather than the other." (W.) There are two infallible marks, by which the true devotion may be diſcerned from the falſe, 1. When a man relies only upon the mercy of God, and the grace of Chriſt, being fully perſuaded, that, without this grace, he has in himſelf nothing but an inclination to evil, and an utter inability to do good. 2. When he concerns himſelf wholly about his own ſins and miſeries; and when the more he beholds in others, the more he fears in himſelf. (Q.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17. And they brought unto him alſo infants, that he would touch them: but when his diſciples ſaw it, they rebuked them. But Jeſus called them unto him, and ſaid, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of ſuch is the kingdom of God. Verily I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, ſhall in no wiſe enter therein.

They brought.] Here was a ſolemn action performed; children, infants, ſucking children, as the word ſignifies, are brought to Chriſt, that he might bleſs them: The parents, looking upon Chriſt as a great and extraordinary prophet, perſuaded themſelves, that by his prayers, and laying his hands on their children, they ſhould be preſerved from bodily diſeaſes, and from Satan's power, and that he would confer upon them all needful bleſſings. From whence we may learn, 1. That infants are capable of benefit by Jeſus Chriſt. 2. That it is the beſt office parents can perform unto their children, to bring them unto Chriſt, that they may be made partakers of that benefit. 3. That if infants are capable of benefit by Chriſt; if capable of his bleſſings on earth, and preſence in heaven; if they be ſubjects of his kingdom of grace, and heirs of his kingdom of glory, then may they be baptiſed: For, they who are within the covenant, Acts ii. 39. have a right to the privileges of the covenant, and to baptiſm, the ſeal of the covenant: And if Chriſt denies not infants the kingdom of heaven, which is the greater, what reaſon have his miniſters to deny them the benefit of baptiſm, which is the leſs? And, 4. That Chriſt will have all his diſciples and followers to reſemble little children in ſuch properties, wherein they may be patterns to them, viz. in humility and innocency, in freedom from malice and revenge, in docibility and teachableneſs, in cleaving to and depending upon their parents, and in contentedneſs with their condition. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xviii. 3.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. And a certain ruler asked him, ſaying, Good Maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life? And Jeſu ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? none i good ſave one, that is God. Thou knoweſt the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not ſteal, Do not bear falſe witneſs, Honour thy father and thy mother. And he ſaid, All theſe have I kept from my youth up. Now when Jeſus heard theſe things, he ſaid unto him, Yet lackeſt thou one thing: ſell all that thou haſt, and diſtribute unto the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven: and come follow me. And when he heard this, he was very ſorrowful: for he was very rich. And when Jeſus ſaw that he was very ſorrowful, he ſaid, How hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! For it is eaſier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. And they that heard it, ſaid, Who then can be ſaved? And he ſaid, The things which are impoſſible with men, are poſſible with God. Then Peter ſaid, Lo, we have left all, and followed thee. And he ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, There is no man that hath left houſe, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's ſake, who ſhall not receive manifold more in this preſent time, and in the world to come life everlaſting.

All theſe have I kept.] This aſſertion might be very true, according to the Phariſees ſenſe and interpretation of the law, which condemned only the groſs outward act, not the inward luſts and motions of the heart. An external obedience to the letter of the law this man might poſſibly have performed: This made him think well of himſelf, and conclude the goodneſs of his own condition. (B.)

Yet lackeſt thou one thing.] That is, true ſelf-denial, in renouncing the ſin of covetouſneſs, and the inordinate love of worldly wealth: We ought, in the midſt of our abundance, to maintain a readineſs of diſpoſition to part with all, for God's ſake, that is dear unto us in this world. (Idem.)

Sell all that thou haſt.] See the notes on Matt. vi. 19, 20. xix. 21. and Luke xii. 33.

He was very ſorrowful.] Such as are wedded to the world will renounce Chriſt rather than the world, when the world and Chriſt ſtand in competition: "He went away ſorrowful, or ſadly grieved," Mark x. 22. (B.)

Eaſier for a camel. The word render'd a camel likewiſe ſignifies a cable, or thick rope, uſed by ſeamen in caſting their anchors: and ſo it ſhould be render'd here; there being ſome reſemblance between drawing a thread and rope thro' the eye of a needle, but none between a thread and a camel. (Fox.) See the notes on Matt. xix. 23.

Ver. 31, 32. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. Then he took unto him the twelve, and ſaid unto them, Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man ſhall be accompliſhed. For he ſhall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and ſhall be mocked, and ſpitefully entreated, and ſpitted on; And they ſhall ſcourge him, and put him to death: and the third day he ſhall riſe again. And they underſtood none of theſe things: and this ſaying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were ſpoken. And it came to paſs, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man ſat by the way-ſide begging. And hearing the multitude paſs by, he asked what it meant. And they told him, that Jeſus of Nazareth paſſeth by. And he cried, Jeſus, thou ſon of David, have mercy on me And they which went before, rebuked him that he ſhould hold his peace: but he cried ſo much the more, Thou ſon of David, have mercy on me. And Jeſus ſtood and commanded him to be brought unto him: and when he was come near, he asked him, Saying, What wilt thou that I ſhall do unto thee? And he ſaid, Lord, that I may receive my ſight. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Receive thy ſight: thy faith hath ſaved thee. And immediately he received his ſight, and followed him, glorifying God: and all the people when they ſaw it, gave praiſe unto God.

We go up to Jeruſalem.] This moſt probably happened between the time of raiſing Lazarus from the dead, and Chriſt's triumphant entry into Jeruſalem. (St.) We find our bleſſed Saviour very frequently acquainting his diſciples with his approaching ſufferings, to prevent the offence that they might take at them, when the providence of God brought them on; his deſign being to arm them with expectation of his ſufferings, and to quicken them to a preparation for their own. (B.)

They underſtood none of theſe things.] Why ſo? Were not the words eaſy enough to be underſtood? Yes; but they could not reconcile them to the notion of the Meſſiah, which they had drank in; they concluded he ſhould be a temporal prince, and ſubdue their temporal enemies, but could not conceive how he, that ſhould redeem Iſrael, ſhould die, and be thus barbarouſly us'd. We had great need to conſider well what notions we have concerning the things of God, before we entertain them; for falſe notions once taken up, are not without great difficulty laid down. (Idem.)

A certain blind man.] Probably Bartimæus, or the ſon of Timæus, mentioned Mark, x. 46, and another with him, as appears Matth. xx. 30.

CHAP. XIX.

Zaccheus the Publican called. The parable of the ten pounds. Chriſt's entry into Jeruſalem: He weepeth over it; and driveth the buyers and ſellers out of the temple.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. AND Jeſus entred and paſſed through Jericho. And behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich. And he ſought to ſee Jeſus who he was, and could not for the preſs, becauſe he was little of ſtature. And he ran before, and climbed up into a ſycamore-tree to ſee him; for he was to paſs that way. And when Jeſus came to the place, he looked up and ſaw him, and ſaid unto him, Zaccheus, make haſte, and come down; for to day I muſt abide at thy houſe. And he made haſte, and came down, and received him joyfully. And when they ſaw it, they all murmured, ſaying, That he was gone to be gueſt with a man that is a ſinner. And Zaccheus ſtood, and ſaid unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor: and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation, I reſtore him four-fold. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, This day is ſalvation come to this houſe, forſomuch as he alſo is the ſon of Abraham. For the ſon of man is come to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt.

A man named Zaccheus.] The hiſtory, which relates the calling and converſion of Zaccheus the Publican, is uſhered in with a note of wonder, "Behold, there was a man named Zaccheus." It is both great and good news to hear of a ſoul converted unto God; eſpecially ſuch a remarkable ſinner as Zaccheus was: For, 1. He was by profeſſion a publican; a calling that carried extortion in its face, and bad defiance to his converſion; yet, behold, from the toll-booth is Zaccheus called to be a diſciple, and Matthew an Apoſtle; ſuch is the freeneſs of divine grace, that it often calls the greateſt ſinners, and triumphs in their powerful converſion. 2. He was a chief publican, and probably one of the chief of ſinners, yet behold him among the chief of ſaints. Lord! What penitent need diſpair of thy mercy, when he ſees a publican, nay the chief of publicans, gone to heaven? 3. It is added, as a farther circumſtance, that he was rich; his trade was not a greater obſtacle to his converſion than his wealth: not that there is any malignity in riches, conſidered in themſelves, but they become a ſnare through the corruption of our natures. Zaccheus had not been ſo famous a convert, if he had not been rich; if more difficulty, yet was there more glory in the converſion of rich Zaccheus. To all theſe might be added a fourth Circumſtance, namely, That Zaccheus was converted in his old age, after a long habit of ſin contracted. Such inſtances, though few, has God left upon record in ſcripture; Abraham and Manaſſes in the Old Teſtament, Zaccheus and Paul in the New. (B.)

To ſee Jeſus.] He ſeems as yet to have had no other end or thought, but to ſee the Perſon of Jeſus, of whom he had heard ſo much reported. (G.)

He made haſte, and came down.] Chriſt had no ſooner ſpoken to Zaccheus, to make haſte and come down, but he preſently obey'd: For he made haſte, and came down, and received him joyfully, ver. 6. Where we may obſerve by the way how punctually he obſerved Chriſt's command, and hearkened to his call: Chriſt bid him come down, and he came down; Chriſt bid him make haſt, and he did make haſt to do it; Chriſt told him he muſt go to his houſe, and he did not only receive him, but did it joyfully; and all this in a matter which might ſeem very indifferent. Howſoever Zaccheus made no ſcruple of that; he had Chriſt's command, and that was enough for him; for he preſently and cheerfully obey'd it; and ſo hath ſet all chriſtians an example what to do in the like caſe; what Chriſt commands us to do, we muſt not diſpute about it, but do it in obedience to his command, and we ſhall ſoon find the happy effect of it, as Zaccheus did. (Bever.) Zaccheus was the firſt man we read of to whoſe houſe Chriſt invited himſelf. With what ſpeed did he haſten down; and with what alacrity did he entertain our Saviour? Curioſity carried him up, but love brought him down; and he entertained Chriſt joyfully. (B.)

They all murmured.] That is, the Phariſees who were here, were highly diſcontented, that Chriſt went to a publican's houſe, whom they looked upon as the worſt of men; their eye was evil, becauſe Chriſt's was good. Whither ſhould the Phyſician go, but to the ſick? the whole need him not. However, the envious Phariſees cenſure and condemn him for it. Lord who can hope to eſcape the aſperſions of cenſorious tongues, while ſpotleſs innocence, and perfect holineſs, falls under the laſh of them. It is ſufficient for the ſervant to be as his maſter. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. xv. 2.

Zaccheus ſtood and ſaid.] Hearing himſelf called a ſinner, and Chriſt upbraided for only coming into his houſe, he was preſently prick'd in the heart, and call'd his ſins to remembrance, and was ſtruck with ſo quick a ſenſe of them, with ſo great a ſorrow for them, and with ſo ſtrong an averſion to them, and reſolution againſt them for the future, that he was not able to bear it any longer, not ſo much as to keep it in, but up he gets, and in the midſt of them all, addreſſeth himſelf to our Lord in this humble and penitent manner, ſaying, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to "the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe

“ accuſation I reſtore him four-fold.” As if he had ſaid, I perceive, Lord, that the People who attend thee are very much offended at thy coming into my houſe, who am a ſinner; I confeſs I am ſo, a very great ſinner: but I beſeech thee not to diſdain to ſtay a little with me, and to be my gueſt upon that account; for whatſoever ſins I have hitherto committed I now heartily repent of them, and reſolve and promiſe, before thee and them, that I will never commit them any more. And to teſtify my ſincerity therein, Behold, Lord, I will now relieve the poor as much as ever I oppreſſed them; for I will give them half my goods, and whatſoever I have wrong'd any man of I will not only reſtore it to him again, but I will give him four times the value of it. (Bever.) By two things Zaccheus ſhews the ſincerity of his reformation and converſion. 1. That he is ready to repair any injury that he hath done to any man by oppreſſion or falſe accuſation, which is the proper import of the word ſycophanteo, not only by adding a fifth part, as the law required in caſe of theft, when what was purloined was voluntarily reſtored, Numb. v. 7. Not by reſtoring double, as the treſpaſſer was to do by law, when that which was taken away was found in his hands, Exod. xxii. 4. But by reſtoring for money and goods, what the rigour of the law required only in the caſe of an ox or ſheep killed after it was ſtolen, Exod. xxii. 1. i. e. four-fold; doing not only what juſtice required for compenſation of the injury; for no man can be righteous till he, if he be able, hath ſatisfied for the injury done to his brother, but inflicting on himſelf this ſurpluſage, by way of penalty for his ſins; and as a teſtimony of his great diſpleaſure againſt himſelf for committing it, And, 2. Whereas the law and tradition of the Jews required only that a fifth part of their income ſhould be ſpent in charity, he bequeaths half his eſtate to charitable uſes. (W.) Two things are here obſervable; the greatneſs of his charity, and the juſtneſs of his reſtitution. As to his charity, obſerve, 1. the freeneſs of it; not I lend, but I give. 2. The readineſs of it; not I will, but I do give. 3. The juſtneſs and honeſty of it, my goods, not my ſpoils; what is my own, and not rent from others by rapine or extortion. 4. The largeneſs and extenſiveneſs of his charity: half of my goods, not an inconſiderable pittance. 5. The fitneſs of his charity, to the poor; not to the rich, not to his rich heirs, but to his poor neighbours. Again, as his charity was large, ſo his reſtitution was juſt; as he gave half to the poor, ſo he reſtored four-fold to the wronged. What an evidence was here of a true penitent! confeſſion and ſatisfaction are both found with him: whenever repentance is ſincere and ſaving, there is not only an hatred of former ſins, but a vigorous exerciſe of graces contrary to thoſe ſins. (B.)

If I have taken any thing.] The word ſignifies more generally; “ If have been injurious to any one; if I have wronged any man,” as appears by the conſtant uſe of this word by the LXX, who by this word do tranſlate the moſt general Hebrew words, which ſignify any kind of injury or oppreſſion, either by fraud or violence, or calumny: ſo that there is no reaſon here to reſtrain it, to wronging men by falſe accuſation. (Tillotſon.) See the notes, chap. iii. 14.

I reſtore.] Reſtitution and ſatisfaction for the injuries we have done to others, is a proper and genuine effect of true repentance. I know, the text only ſpeaks of reſtitution in caſe of oppreſſion and exaction: but there is the ſame reaſon why reſtitution ſhould be made for all other injuries. For this is as much as in us lies, to undo what we have done, and to unſin our ſins. (Idem.) It is eaſy to determine who are bound to make reſtitution; even all perſons that ever wrong'd any man of any thing whatſoever, and all that have been either principals or acceſſaries in it; they are all bound to reſtore it again; by what way and means ſoever it was that they wronged him. (Bever.)

Four-fold.] Here we learn what penitents are to do. 1. They ought if poſſible, to make full ſatisfaction for the injuries done to others: and, 2. To impoſe upon themſelves ſomewhat over and above, by way of penance, 1 Cor. xi. 31. (G.) But why four-fold? Why any more than what he had unjuſtly gotten? and why ſo much more as four-fold? To underſtand this, we muſt conſider, that by the Moſaic law, which he profeſſed, “ If a man “ ſtole an ox or a ſheep, and killed it, or ſold it, he was bound to “ reſtore five oxen for an ox, and four ſheep for a ſheep,” Exod. xxii. 1. According to which law, when Nathan the prophet, in his parable, told David, that a rich man had taken away a poor man's lamb, David ſaid, that he ſhould reſtore the lamb four-fold; 2 Sam. xii. 6. From whence it appears, that in ſome caſes of theft, a four-fold reſtitution was required by the law of God; and ſo it was too by the law of the Roman empire, under which Zaccheus lived, and of which he held his place: for ſo we read in the Pandects, or body of the old Roman laws ſtill extant, that Goods either taken away by force, or manifeſtly ſtolen, were to be reſtored in quadruplin, that is, four-fold, l. 1. De publicanis. But this law was made more mild and gentle as to publicans: for of them it is enacted, What is unlawfully exacted by a publican, either publickly or privately, is paid back with as much more, to thoſe who have ſuffered the wrong; but what is extorted by force, is reſtored three-fold, l. 9. ſect. in eod. But there was this great privilege alſo granted to a publican, that if he reſtored what he had forcibly taken away, without going to law about it, he was freed from any future puniſhment, or trouble about it, l. 1 ſect. in eod. So that Zaccheus being a publican, if he had voluntarily reſtored what he had unjuſtly taken away, or the bare value of it, the law could have taken no hold of him; and if he had ſtood it out to the laſt, he could have been forced to have reſtored no more than the double of what he had unlawfully exacted, or the treble of what he had violently extorted from any man. But Zaccheus, being now truly penitent for his ſins, would not make uſe of the favour which the law ſhewed to publicans; but conſidering, that the law, both of God and man, required fourfold reſtitution in the caſe of manifeſt theft, and being fully perſuaded in his conſcience that all the exaction and extortion that he had uſed was plainly theft or robbery, howſoever the law might call it, he preſently reſolves to reſtore whatſoever he had any way wronged any man of fourfold; that ſo he might be ſure to do not only what the law, but what his own conſcience required of him; which being once touched with a ſenſe of his ſin, would never have been ſatisfied with his making only ſimple reſtitution of what he had unlawfully gotten; for by that means he would have ſuffered nothing for his ſin, neither would he have made full reſtitution of all that he had unjuſtly gotten; for he had doubtleſs wrongfully taken money from ſome people many years before; all which time he had enjoyed, and they had loſt, the uſe of the ſaid money, which, in an ordinary way of trading, might probably have amounted to four times as as much as the principal; and therefore he would not be content with reſtoring any leſs, for fear he ſhould reſtore too little; he was now reſolved to do all he could to expreſs his hearty ſorrow and repentance for what he had done; and for that purpoſe having given half his own goods to the poor, ſo whatſoever he had wronged other men of, he reſtores it to them fourfold. (Bever.)

Salvation.] See the notes on chap. xiii. 23.

The ſon of Abraham.] Not only by faith, of which ſonſhip the Jews, to whom Chriſt ſpake, had then no notion, but by birth; for the Phariſees do not murmur againſt Chriſt, that he did eat with one uncircumciſed, but that he did it with a ſinner: it would alſo have been no indication to the Jews, that he was a ſon of Abraham, that he believed in Chriſt; and laſtly his reſpect to the law of Moſes, in making reſtitution, ſhews he was no ſtranger to that law. Moreover, tho' the phraſe “ Salvation is come unto this houſe,” doth not neceſſarily argue that his whole family believed; and the pronoun ipſe, and the reaſon here aſſign'd, ſeem perſonally to reſpect Zaccheus, the maſter of the houſe, yet is it piouſly obſerved, that Chriſt here promiſeth “ ſalvation to the houſe,” becauſe it was the duty, and uſually the practice of the maſter of the family, to reduce his whole houſe to the faith he had embraced; as in the caſe of the centurion, Acts x. 2. of Lydia, Acts xvi. 14, 15. of the jaylor, ver. 33, 34. of Criſpus the ruler of a ſynagogue, Acts xviii. 8. and of the nobleman, John iv. 46, 53. (W.) This man, whom ye look upon as a ſinner and a heathen, may, by better right, call Abraham father, than any of you formal Phariſees and Jews, who glory ſo much in being the children of Abraham. (Tillotſ.) The heir of Abraham's faith, which was alſo imputed to him for righteouſneſs. (B.)

To ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt.] Here we have, 1. A deſcription of man's deplorable ſtate and undone condition; he is loſt. 2. The care of Chriſt to ſeek and recover man out of that loſt ſtate. From whence we may learn, firſt, That man's condition is a loſt condition, and every unregenerate man is a loſt man; he has loſt his God, his ſoul, his happineſs, his excellency, his liberty, his ability. 2. That the great errand that Chriſt came into the world upon, was to ſeek and to ſave loſt ſinners; which he does by his blood, by his word, by his ſpirit, and by his rod. (B.) Theſe are comfortable words for ſinners. How much ſoever they are gone aſtray, let them not deſpair, ſince no leſs perſon than God is come to ſeek them. What progreſs ſoever the righteous have made, let them not imagine, that they have no longer any occaſion of being ſought; they have ſtill their wanderings, as well as ſinners, and always carry in their own hearts an evil principle, which leads them out of the way. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xv. 24. and Luke xv. 4.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. And as they heard theſe things, he added, and ſpake a parable, becauſe he was nigh to Jeruſalem, and becauſe they thought that the kingdom of God ſhould immediately appear. He ſaid therefore, A certain noble man went into a far country to receive for himſelf a kingdom, and to return. And he called his ten ſervants, and delivered them ten pounds, and ſaid unto them, Occupy till I come. But his citizens hated him, and ſent a meſſage after him, ſaying, We will not have this man to reign over us. And it came to paſs, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded theſe ſervants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading. Then came the firſt, ſaying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds. And he ſaid unto him, Well, thou good ſervant: becauſe thou haſt been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. And the ſecond came, ſaying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds. And he ſaid likewiſe to him, Be thou alſo over five cities. And another came, ſaying, Lord, behold here is thy pound which I have kept laid up in a napkin: For I feared thee, becauſe thou art an auſtere man: thou takeſt up that thou layedſt not down, and reapedſt that thou didſt not ſow. And he ſaith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked ſervant. Thou kneweſt that I was an auſtere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not ſow: Wherefore then gaveſt not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with uſury? And he ſaid unto them that ſtood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds. (And they ſaid unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds.) For I ſay unto you, That unto every one which hath, ſhall be given: and from him that hath not, even that he hath ſhall be taken away from him. But thoſe mine enemies, which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring hither, and ſlay them before me.

As they heard theſe things.] Viz. That he was come to bring ſalvation to the ſons of Abraham. From whence the diſciples conceived a notion, that Chriſt would now, in this his triumphant proceſſion towards Jeruſalem, in a moſt ſolemn manner, proclaim himſelf a mighty monarch, make Jeruſalem the chief ſeat of his empire, and promote them to the higheſt places of truſt and dignity. (G. H. and Barne.) In this parable, he lets them know the quite contrary; that he was now taking his laſt journey to Jeruſalem, to die there. The nobleman here mentioned is meant of our Saviour himſelf; his going into a far country ſignifies his return to heaven; his coming again, is his coming to judgment; his calling his ſervants, and delivering them their talents, intimates to us the various gifts he beſtows upon the ſons of men, to be employ'd in his ſervice, and improv'd to his glory; and his calling them to an account, plainly denotes, the final account every individual perſon muſt give of the talents ſo entruſted with him, and the rewards or puniſhments to be expected accordingly. (B.) This parable ſeems to be of the very ſame import with that recorded in Matt. xxv. 14, &c.

A certain nobleman.] The Greek word eugenees implies one to whom the kingdom was due by right of birth. (G.) And here we may obſerve, 1. That it is ingeniouſly conjectured by Mr. Cl. that Chriſt took the riſe of this parable from the cuſtom of the kings of Judæa, Herod the great, and Archelaus his ſon, who uſually went to Rome, to receive the kingdom of Judæa from Cæſar, without whoſe permiſſion and appointment they durſt not take the government into their hands; and in the caſe of Archelaus, there is indeed ſome reſemblance of this; for the Jews ſent their complaints after him, ſhewing their unwillingneſs that this nobleman, or eugenees, the ſon of Herod the great, to whom the kingdom of Judæa was aſſigned by his father's will and teſtament, ſhould reign over them; and that at his return, he receiving the kingdom, tyrannized over them for ten years; but with this ſignal difference, that upon their ſecond complaint to Cæſar, they prevailed againſt him, and procured his baniſhment to Vienna. 2. That the parable here, as it reſpects our Lord Chriſt "going into a far country to receive a kingdom, and return," either reſpects his going to heaven to ſit down at the right hand of God in majeſty and glory, and ſo take poſſeſſion of his mediatory kingdom, and then return to puniſh the unbelieving and obdurate Jews; or going by his apoſtles and diſciples to erect a kingdom among the Gentiles, and then coming as it were back to puniſh the Jews, according to theſe words of his, "the Goſpel of the kingdom ſhall be preached throughout the world for a teſtimony to all nations, and then ſhall the end (of the Jewiſh polity) come." Matt. xxiv. 14. 3. That this parable doth certainly reſpect the Jewiſh nation; as appears, firſt, Becauſe they are here ſaid to reject Chriſt's kingdom, ſaying, "We will not have this man to reign over us;" and upon this account are ſtiled his enemies, and devoted to deſtruction by him, which agrees ſtill only to the Jews; ver. 27. Secondly, To them is threatned the puniſhment of the unprofitable ſervants, to wit, "to be caſt out into outer darkneſs," &c. Matt. viii. 12. xxii. 13. Luke xiii. 28. Matt. xxv. 30. In fine, it is expreſly ſaid, he "therefore ſpake this parable to them, becauſe they thought the kingdom of God ſhould immediately appear," ver. 11, 12. 4. The only difficulty remaining is, how to apply the pounds here, and the talents mentioned, Matt. xxv. to any of the Jews: but this ſeeming difficulty is removed by a careful obſervation of the words, which ſhew they were diſtributed not to his citizens, but tois idiois doulois, to his own proper ſervants, Matt. xxv. 14. to his ſervants, ver. 13. i. e. to his apoſtles, five; and to the ſeventy diſciples, or thoſe who had received leſſer ſpiritual gifts, two talents; to the Jews, who are alſo ſtiled his own, John i. 11. only one talent, (viz. the law and the prophets, promiſing to them the Meſſiah, and pointing out his advent, and his characters to them) which they might, and ought to have employed, ſo as to have believed, and fitted themſelves to receive and to improve the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, as others did. 5. That as the dreadful deſtruction of the unbelieving Jews was an emblem of the laſt judgment, ſo Chriſt's reckoning with them is a repreſentation of that reckoning he will make with all men, at the great day, for all the talents they have reſpectively received; and with reſpect to that, this Lord is ſaid, Matt. xxv. 19. to come, meta chronon polun, after a long time. (W.)

Into a far country.] The far country here ſpoken of ſufficiently confuted their error in thinking Jeruſalem ſhould be the chief ſeat of his empire; and by making his ſervants factors and merchants in his abſence, and requiring an improvement at his return, they had little reaſon to dream, that his kingdom ſhould privilege ſloth and idleneſs, or ſecure the enjoyment of carnal pleaſures. (Barne.)

Occupy till I come.] He gave each of them a ſtock of money to traffick with in his abſence, commanding them to improve it to his beſt advantage, that he might receive the benefit of it at his return. (H.) There is no perſon whatever, who hath not ſome of theſe gifts to improve. The common ſort of Chriſtians have the knowledge of God and Chriſt, the call to the true church, inſtructions, and many other graces: Beſides theſe gifts, the miniſters of the church ought to improve whatever they have received for the ſalvation of others How few of them are there, who take care to employ their talent, and to employ it well! They either loſe it by vanity, or let it lie uſeleſs through ſloth. (Q.)

We will not have this man to reign over us.] This mad decree could only ſhew the folly and impiety of theſe rebellious citizens: for the king whom they rejected did reign over them. 1. In his mercy, in the converſion of three thouſand of them at one ſermon of St. Peter's. 2. In judgment, at his ſecond advent, but firſt eminent judicial return, after his glorious inſtalment in his far country; in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when theſe rebellious citizens, or their deſcendants, ſuffered all the extremities of temporal calamities. 3. He ſhall reign over them at his third and laſt terrible advent, when he ſhall come with all the ſolemnities of majeſty to judge the world, pronounce ſentence upon theſe wicked citizens, and make them the vaſſals of eternal vengeance, the certain doom of all unrepenting rebels. (Barne.)

How much every man had gained.] See the notes on chap. xvi. 2.

Thy pound hath gained ten pounds.] He modeſtly aſcribes the gain to his Lord's money, and not to his own induſtry. So, 1 Cor. xv. 10. (G. and Spanhem.)

Thou good ſervant.] See the notes on chap. xvi. 10. and xvii. 10.

Be thou alſo over five cities.] i. e. Be thy reward anſwerable to the improvement of thy talent. (W.) Fidelity has ſeveral degrees, as talents are different, and not one ſhall loſe its reward, from him, whoſe juſtice and goodneſs are equally infinite. Fidelity is the thing which God requires: it is this which makes the good ſervant; it is this which makes all his merit in the ſight of God. (Q.)

Kept laid up in a napkin.] He made no kind of uſe of the abilities that God had given him, but lay idle, without ever endeavouring to do any thing that might bring in any glory to God. (H.) This negligent and ſlothful ſervant ought to make all paſtors and clergymen tremble, who imagine that they lead an innocent life, if they do but avoid the groſſer ſins, and only lead an eaſy and quiet life in idleneſs and indolence. In a prieſt, it is a great evil, not to do any good. Not to uſe the gifts of God is to abuſe them. He loſes them, who does not make them ſerviceable to the good of the church. Reſt is a crime, in one who is called to a laborious life; and we cannot live to ourſelves alone, when we belong to the church. (Q.)

Thou art an auſtere man.] Servile fear repreſents God to itſelf no otherwiſe than as a hard, auſtere, imperious, and unjuſt maſter; and this it does, to palliate its own idleneſs, to have ſome pretence to murmur againſt him, and to ſcreen itſelf from his juſtice. (Idem.)

Out of thine own mouth.] By his own confeſſion his ſlothfulneſs and unprofitableneſs appear to be a ſin againſt conſcience in him. (H.)

Thou wicked ſervant.] See the notes on chap. xvii. 10.

Give it to him that hath ten pounds.] The more unprofitable this man hath been, the fitter 'twill be to increaſe the reward of him who hath been diligent and ſucceſsful. (H.)

Unto every one which hath.] To have here, is to make a right and a good uſe of what we have, to improve the gifts of nature, of fortune, or of grace, which God hath beſtowed upon us. This if any ſhall refuſe, or neglect to do, they may juſtly fear, that God will be provoked to take away his bleſſings here, and to puniſh them hereafter. But if, on the contrary, they ſhall improve them, God will beſtow more and greater bleſſings upon them, and in the end crown them with life everlaſting. "Every branch in me (ſays our Lord) that beareth not fruit, he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit," John xv. 2. (Fox.) Diſtributive juſtice conſiſts not in giving to all equal portions, but moſt to them who have done moſt diligent, faithful ſervice, and puniſhing the unfaithful and idle. (H.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48. And when he had thus ſpoken, he went before, aſcending up to Jeruſalem. And it came to paſs, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of olives, he ſent two of his diſciples, Saying, Go ye into the village over-againſt you; in the which at your entring ye ſhall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man ſat: looſe him, and bring him hither. And if any man ask you, Why do ye looſe him? thus ſhall ye ſay unto him, Becauſe the Lord hath need of him. And they that were ſent went their way, and found even as he had ſaid unto them. And as they were looſing the colt, the owners thereof ſaid unto them, Why looſe ye the colt? And they ſaid, The Lord hath need of him. And they brought him to Jeſus: and they caſt their garments upon the colt, and they ſet Jeſus thereon. And as he went, they ſpread their clothes in the way. And when he was come nigh, even now at the deſcent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the diſciples began to rejoice and praiſe God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works that they had ſeen, Saying, Bleſſed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory in the higheſt. And ſome of the Phariſees from among the multitude ſaid unto him, Maſter, rebuke thy diſciples. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, I tell you, that if theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would immediately cry out. And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, Saying, If thou hadſt known, even thou, at leaſt in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days ſhall come upon thee, that thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee, and compaſs thee round, and keep thee in on every ſide, And ſhall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they ſhall not leave in thee one ſtone upon another: becauſe thou kneweſt not the time of thy viſitation. And he went into the temple, and began to caſt out them that ſold therein, and them that bought, Saying unto them, It is written, My houſe is the houſe of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves. And he taught daily in the temple. But the chief prieſts and the ſcribes, and the chief of the people ſought to deſtroy him, And could not find what they might do: for all the people were very attentive to hear him.

He went before.] Our Lord was now upon his laſt journey to Jeruſalem, where he was to ſhed his blood, and lay down his life for the redemption and ſalvation of a loſt world: And it is obſervable, what a demonſtration he gives of his great willingneſs and forwardneſs to go up to Jeruſalem, there to die. (B.) Chriſt our head and pattern goes before us towards the croſs and to the ſacrifice; can we refuſe to follow him? It is the comfort and conſolation of his faithful miniſters, who in performing their duty expoſe themſelves to all kind of dangers, to ſee Jeſus Chriſt at their head, and to fight and ſuffer under his conduct, after his example, and by his grace. Men are very willing to follow him to Jeruſalem, there to celebrate the Paſſover with him: but very rarely do they follow him ſo as to be willing to be, together with him, the ſacrifice of the Paſſover. (Q.)

Nigh to Beth-phage and Bethany.] Bethany lies two miles from Jeruſalem, near the foot of the mount of Olives, and Beth-phage near the top of the ſame; the former now a tatter'd village, inhabited by Arabians, but the very foundations of the latter are quite deſtroyed. (Sandys.)

The mount of Olives.] Or mount Olivet, on the eaſt of the city, and ſeparated from it by the valley of Jehoſaphat, over-toppeth the neighbouring mountains: its weſt ſide gives a full ſurvey of the city, and is bedeck'd with olives, almonds, fig-trees, and heretofore with palms; pleaſantly rich when husbanded, but now neglected. It is not much leſs than a mile in height, ſtretching from North to South. From hence Chriſt paſſed unto Jeruſalem, in this his triumphant entry; which is ſuperſtitiouſly imitated by the Pater-guardian every Palm-Sunday. (Idem.) See the notes on Matt. xxi. 1.

A colt tied.] Our Saviour, who all his life-time travelled like a poor man on foot, now he goes up to Jeruſalem to die for us, he will ride, to ſhew his great forwardneſs to lay down his life for us; but what was the beaſt he rode upon? An aſs's colt; to fulfill that prophecy, Zach. ix. 9. "Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh, riding upon an aſs;" yea, it was a colt, upon which never man rode before; to let us ſee, how the moſt unruly and untamed creatures become obedient and obſequious to Chriſt, and render themſelves ſerviceable to him at his pleaſure. It was alſo a borrowed aſs; whereby our Saviour's right to all the creatures was manifeſted; and accordingly he bids his diſciples to tell the owner, "That the Lord had need of him;" not your Lord, or our Lord, but the Lord; that is, he that is Lord of the whole earth, "whoſe are the cattle upon a thouſand hills." Here note, what a clear and full demonſtration Chriſt gave of his divine nature, of his omniſciency, in foreſeeing and foretelling the event; of his omnipotency, in inclining the heart, and over-ruling the will of the owner, to let the colt go; and of his ſovereignty, that as he was Lord of the creatures, he could command and call for their ſervice when ever he needed them. (B.) The eaſineſs, which theſe diſciples find in bringing away the colt, denotes that eaſineſs, wherewith the almighty power of God would bring all people into the church, by the preaching of the Apoſtles, and that docility which grace inſpires into the moſt ſavage and untractable hearts. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xxi. 2.

They brought him to Jeſus.] That which God requires of us by theſe circumſtances, wherein Chriſt appears to the eyes of our faith, is, to carry this Saviour in our hearts and bodies; to be humble, teachable, and obedient to his word; to ſuffer ourſelves to be guided by his Spirit, by no means to contradict the holineſs of his precepts, to go forward with peace and meekneſs in his ways, bearing the yoke of our duty; and to be always diſpoſed to follow the will of him, whom we carry within ourſelves. It is not through want of power, but through myſtery, that Chriſt chuſes to be aſſiſted by his Apoſtles: He thereby teaches us, that it is the part of his miniſters to prepare ſouls for him, to be workers together with him towards their ſanctification, and to ſerve him by their miniſtry, in engaging them to bear the yoke of the Goſpel. (Idem.)

They caſt their garments.] Obſerve here the actions of the multitude, in acknowledging Chriſt to be their king; they ſpread their clothes in the way, caſting their garments on the ground, for him to ride upon, according to the cuſtom of princes when they ride in ſtate; yea, the multitude do not only diſrobe their backs, but expend their breath in joyful acclamations and loud Hoſannahs, wiſhing all manner of proſperity to their meek but mighty prince. In this princely, yet poor and deſpicable pomp, doth our Saviour enter the famous city Jeruſalem. Oh, how far was our holy Lord from affecting worldly greatneſs and grandeur! he deſpiſed that glory, which worldly hearts fondly admire; yet becauſe he was a king, he would be proclaimed ſuch, and have his kingdom confeſſed, applauded, and bleſſed; but that it might appear, that his kingdom was not of this world, he abandons all worldly magnificence. (B.) It is an inſtance of generoſity well becoming a Chriſtian, to make every thing ſubſervient to the triumph and reign of Chriſt in the church. We muſt, if it be neceſſary, ſtrip ourſelves of all, that he may reign and triumph in our hearts. We here ſee the power of Chriſt over the hearts of men, in this ſudden and general agreement of all the people, who without the leaſt unwillingneſs "ſpread their clothes in the way," to honour Jeſus Chriſt. But what ſhall we think, when we ſee millions of martyrs pour out their blood, and lay down their lives for the glory of his name, and Chriſtians without number renounce all things, and trample under foot honours and riches, in order to follow him? (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xxi. 7.

Bleſſed be the King.] See the notes on Matt. xxi. 9. and Luke ii. 14.

Rebuke thy diſciples.] The praiſe of God is troubleſome to the ears of the world; and envy cannot hear the good which is ſpoken of others. The proud, like the Phariſees, will not have Chriſt to reign over them; and cannot bear our inſiſting upon the kingdom of his grace. (Q.)

The ſtones would immediately cry out.] This is a proverbial expreſſion, ſignifying, that if theſe followers of Chriſt ſhould hold their peace, ſome more unlikely way ſhould be found out for the proclaiming the Meſſiah; even by thoſe who are reckon'd the moſt ſtupid and inſenſate people, as by you the Gentiles are. So, lapidi loqueris, thou ſpeakeſt to one who hath little ſenſe to hear or underſtand; lapis being metaphorically put for a ſtupid and brutiſh perſon. (W.) Chriſt tells them, that they labour in vain to ſuppreſs the teſtimony given him by his diſciples: for "if they ſhould be ſilent, the ſtones would cry out;" yea, cry out ſhame of them for neglecting their duty; as if Chriſt had ſaid, The ſpeechleſs ſtones will ſpeak, and give witneſs to me, if men will not. Learn hence, They that are owned of God ſhall not want ownings and witneſſings from man, at one time or other, in one way or other, tho' the envy and malice of men do never ſo much gainſay and oppoſe it. (B.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 9.

And wept over it.] I hope, Epiphanius (in Anchorat. ſect. 31. p. 36.) may be miſtaken, when he tells us, theſe words, and the like, in John xi. 35. were blotted out, as being denied to be in the moſt correct copies: For it is certain, and confeſſed by him, that they were to be found in Irenæus, and in Origen twice, who ſaith, our Lord wept, eulogoos, with good reaſon, over Jeruſalem. For he did it out of a profound charity, and deep commiſeration of the evils coming upon Jeruſalem; in both which virtues he came to be an example to us, and therefore could do nothing in it unworthy of himſelf. (W. and B.) Such are the grief, the compaſſion, and the tears of Chriſt over a ſoul, which ruins itſelf by its own wickedneſs; tears very different from thoſe of men, who weep through weakneſs, paſſion, intereſt, or hypocriſy. Theſe of Chriſt are holy and ſanctifying tears, tears of religion and zeal for the glory of God, and which make part of his ſacrifice; they are tears of compaſſion and charity towards ſinners, of contrition and repentance for their ſins, and of inſtruction and conſolation to penitents. (Q.)

If thou hadſt known.] Here the criticks note, that ei often ſignifies utinam; and ſo the words will contain an ardent wiſh, that the people of Jeruſalem had been thus wiſe; conceived after this manner, "Oh that thou hadſt known!" but tho' this be true, (ſee note on Luke xii. 49.) yet the particle hoti, that, makes it not applicable to this place: and therefore I think it better to ſupply the deficient ſenſe, by the words contained in the parentheſis. Here then obſerve, 1. That Chriſt here plainly ſhews, and takes it for granted, that the people of Jeruſalem, in this day of their viſitation by the Meſſias, might have ſavingly known the "things belonging to their peace;" ſince otherwiſe our Saviour's tears may rather have been looked upon as the tears of crocodiles, than of charity, and true commiſeration; and either his aſſertion, that they might have been happy, would have been contrary to truth, or his wiſh, that they had thus known the things belonging to their peace, contrary to his Father's will and decree; both which are palpably abſurd: And ſeeing the will of Chriſt was always the ſame with that of his Father, it follows alſo that God the Father had the ſame charitable affection to them, and ſo had laid no bar againſt their happineſs by his decrees, nor been wanting in any thing on his part, neceſſary towards their everlaſting welfare. See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 37. (W.) This is a figure natural enough to every language, without going to ſearch for a Hebraiſm: There being ſomething in this way of expreſſion that is ſo tender and languiſhing, that it exceeds any thing that could have come to give it a more regular concluſion: In a word, it imports that all that is great or good, all that they could wiſh for or deſire, either with relation to the public, or in their own particular, all the preſervations and deliverances, all the felicities and proſperity of a nation, might be juſtly expected from ſo happy a diſcovery, and ſuch a change in their tempers, as firſt to find out and know, and then to ſeek after "the things that belonged to their peace." They could not indeed have continued to have been as they had been formerly, the people of God, with the excluſion of all others, but they would ſtill have retained this privilege, that the Goſpel was to be offered to the Jews firſt, and then to the Gentiles; ſo that they would have been always the firſt-born of the churches of God: and if they had received the Meſſias, they might have continued to be the head of all nations. But it was otherwiſe appointed in the wiſe and holy councils of God, for reaſons which we do not now perfectly underſtand. This only we know, that God's rejecting them was "the calling of the Gentiles" (Burn.)

At leaſt in this thy day.] In ſcripture this word of the day, or time of a nation, ſtands in a double ſenſe; ſometimes for a "time of mercy and kindneſs, an acceptable time, and day of ſalvation;" ſometimes for a day of trial or viſitation, as it is in the following words. The meaning of the firſt is, that when God receives nations into his protection and favour, he, not being as a man, inconſtant and changeable, does not eaſily repent of the good that he ſhews them, or change his methods towards them; and therefore, till their ſins become ſo high and crying, that it does not agree with the honour of his providence not to ſhew his anger againſt them, he bears with their offences; or if he corrects them for them, he does it not in anger; he will chaſtiſe them, as he ſaid with relation to David's poſterity, "if they ſin againſt him, but he will not quite caſt them off; he will viſit their tranſgreſſions with the rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes, nevertheleſs he will not take his loving-kindneſs utterly from them," Pſalm lxxxix. 30, &c. The ſecond ſenſe of this thy day imports, that there is a time of trial and repentance granted by God even to guilty nations, in order to their preventing the laſt ſtrokes of his wrath, and the final calamity that is threaten'd, Gen. vi. 3. Jonah iii. 4. Num. xiv. 33, 34. (Idem.) It is a matter of great importance, to know the time and ways of ſalvation, which ſlip away from us, whenever we neglect them. The greateſt misfortune does not conſiſt in a man's being a ſinner, but in not knowing either his ſin, or the remedy thereof; and in rejecting the ſaving hand of him, who would heal him by repentance. The time of performing this is but a day, and this is the day of the ſinner: whoever lets this opportunity paſs without improving it, will ſee what the days of vengeance, the great days of the Lord are. Herein lies the great blindneſs of the ſinner, in that he prefers the peace, which he finds in ſin, in his paſſions, and in the delights and pleaſures of the preſent life, before the true and ſubſtantial peace of repentance and the croſs (Q.) 'Tis moſt unſafe for us to hug ourſelves with confidences, if we be not better husbands of our time than the Jews were, and if we do not ſtudy to do the things which belong unto our peace, while it is yet called to-day. (Pelling.)

The things which belong unto thy peace.] By this phraſe we are to underſtand the preſence of Chriſt among them, the preaching of the Goſpel to them. (B.) Theſe may be divided into thoſe things that belong to our peace with God; thoſe things that may preſerve the whole nation, and its peace, as it is a complicated body; and the things which belong to our peace amongſt ourſelves, one with another. (Burn.)

But now they are hid from thine eyes.] But how hid? Was there no more preaching in Jeruſalem; no publick Miniſtry after that Day? Yes, behold the patience and mercy of Chriſt in waiting upon this people. After this, Chriſt ſent the whole College of Apoſtles, and they preached there the things belonging to their temporal and eternal peace; but they wanted Hearts to conſider, and their ruin was unavoidable. (B.)

Thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee.] Here Chriſt proceeds to declare the reaſon why he had wept over Jeruſalem. (G.) How exactly this prediction was fulfilled by the Romans, we learn from Joſephus; who tells us, that when Veſpaſian beſieged Jeruſalem, his army compaſſed the city round about, and "kept them in on every ſide." And tho' 'twas judg'd a great, and almoſt impracticable work, to compaſs the whole city with a wall, yet Titus animating his ſoldiers to attempt it, they in three days built a wall of thirty-nine furlongs, having thirteen caſtles in it; and ſo cut off all hopes, that any of the Jews within the city ſhould eſcape. Upon which the greateſt diſtreſs, that ever was, followed, as eating of girdles, and ſhoes, and the coverings of their ſhields; and at length dung and dirt, and hay, and man's-fleſh: and a rich woman, called Mary, fed on her own ſucking-child: and many other ſad expreſſions of this ſynechee, or diſtreſs, are ſet down by Joſephus. (H. and W.) And 'tis particularly remarkable, that the Romans firſt pitched their tents upon this very mount of Olives, where Chriſt ſpake theſe words. (Howel.) See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 22.

Lay thee even with the ground.] How exactly this was alſo fulfilled, Joſephus relateth, viz. that Titus having commanded the ſoldiers to dig up the city, this was ſo effectually done, by levelling the whole compaſs of it, except three towers, that they who came to ſee it were perſuaded it never would be built again. (W.) The temple was ſo ſet on fire, that it could not be quenched by the induſtry of man. (Genebrardi Chron. l. 2. A. D. 69.) And at the ſame time the temple at Delphi, being the chief in requeſt among the heathens, was utterly overthrown by earthquakes and lightning, and neither of them could ever ſince be repaired.

(Theodor. l. 3. c. 11. Sozom. l. 5. c. 19. &c.) The concurrence of which two miracles evidently ſheweth, that the time was then come, when God would put an end both to Jewiſh ceremonies, and heatheniſh idolatry, that the kingdom of his Son might be the better eſtabliſhed. (Godw.) Turnus Rufus, with his plough, plowed up the very foundation ſtones upon which the temple ſtood. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 2.

The time of thy viſitation.] That is, the time when God viſited them with his Goſpel; firſt by the miniſtry of John, then by the preaching of Chriſt himſelf, and afterwards by his apoſtles and diſciples. (Idem.) There is viſitatio miſericordiæ as well as juſtitiæ, a time when men are viſited in a way of mercy. Thus Chriſt here viſited Jeruſalem, when he went to her to heal, and to ſave, and to deliver her from deſtruction. This lucid interval and lightning of mercy, before her tragical overthrow, is called the day of Jeruſalem, her day, as it was diſtinguiſhed from God's day, that time of judgment which followed it, and which our Saviour himſelf calls the days of vengeance. (Pelling.)

Caſt out them that ſold therein.] Having ſuffered his kingdom and divine authority to be thus proclaimed by others, he proceeds to exert it himſelf. For he now purged the temple (a ſecond time, as he had done at another paſſover, three years before) of thoſe who kept a public mart there, in the court of the Gentiles. This they did for the convenience of ſelling birds and beaſts for ſacrifice, and returning money for ſuch as came from diſtant parts of the country up to this feſtival. (Stanh.) But our bleſſed Saviour, being juſtly offended at this prophanation of his Father's houſe, caſt the buyers and ſellers out of the temple; teaching us, that there is a ſpecial reverence due to God's houſe, both for the owner's ſake and the ſervice ſake: Nothing but holineſs can become the place where God is worſhipped in the beauty of holineſs; the reaſon is added, " my houſe is the houſe of prayer," where by prayer is to be underſtood the whole worſhip and ſervice of God, of which prayer is an eminent and principal part. That which gives denomination to an houſe is moſt certainly the chief work to be done in that houſe; now God's houſe being called an houſe of prayer implies, that prayer is a chief and principal work to be performed in this houſe; yet take we heed, that we ſet not the ordinances of God at variance one with another; we muſt not idolize one ordinance, and vilify another, but reverence them all, and pay an awful reſpect to all divine inſtitutions. Our bleſſed Saviour here in his houſe of prayer preached daily to the people, as well as prayed with them; and all the people were as attentive to hear his ſermons, as he was conſtant at their prayers. Prayer ſanctifies the word, and the word fits us for prayer. If we would glorify God, and edify ourſelves, we muſt put honour upon all the ordinances of God, and diligently attend them upon all occaſions. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxi. 12. and Mark xi. 17.

But ye have made it a den of thieves.] The temple was not only polluted by their traffick, but alſo by the injuſtice of the gains they made there. Well therefore might they be accuſed of making God's houſe " a den of thieves," ſince the profit extorted by fraud and oppreſſion is no better than downright robbery, and the exerciſe of ſuch trades in a conſecrated place was ſo far from its primitive inſtitution, that it made their injuſtice to become ſacrilege. (St.)

Sought to deſtroy him.] The Sanhedrim ſate in conſultation how they might put him to death. (H.)

CHAP. XX.

Chriſt ſilenceth the Jews queſtioning his authority: Reprehendeth them, and denounceth vengeance againſt them, under the parable of the vineyard: Defeateth their deſign to enſnare him, with reſpect to Cæſar: Convinceth the Sadducees, who denied the reſurrection: Sheweth how Chriſt is the ſon of David; and cautions his diſciples to beware of the ſcribes.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. AND it came to paſs, that on one of thoſe days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the Goſpel, the chief prieſts and the ſcribes came upon him, with the elders, And ſpake unto him, ſaying, Tell us, by what authority doeſt thou theſe things? or who is he that gave thee this authority? And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, I will alſo ask you one thing; and anſwer me: The baptiſm of John, was it from heaven, or of men? And they reaſoned with themſelves, ſaying, If we ſhall ſay, From heaven; he will ſay, Why then believed ye him not? But and if we ſay, Of men; all the people will ſtone us: for they be perſuaded that John was a prophet. And they anſwered, that they could not tell whence it was. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do theſe things.

And preached the Goſpel.] He went into the temple, and expounded the leſſon; taking occaſion from thence to make known the Goſpel to the people, when the Sanhedrim came to him. (H)

The chief prieſts, &c.] The chief prieſts were preſidents in matters of religion, the Scribes were the interpreters of the law, and the Elders were the ſecular Magiſtrates. (Beza.) Envy and Hatred have no manner of regard, either to the holineſs of the place, or to the goodneſs of the work, or to truth itſelf, when the taking away the credit of a perſon who gives umbrage is the thing in queſtion. They leave no ſtone unturn'd to oppreſs him, but employ the ſacred miniſters, and the holy Scripture, and the ſecular authority to this purpoſe. The wicked, when they cannot excuſe their crimes, do what they can to ruin the authority of the paſtors who reprove them for them. (Q.)

By what authority.] The Phariſees having often quarrelled with our Saviour's doctrine before, they call in queſtion his Miſſion and Authority now: Altho' they might eaſily have underſtood his divine Miſſion by his divine Miracles; for Almighty God never impowered any to work miracles, that were not ſent by him. Our bleſſed Saviour underſtanding their deſign, gives them no direct anſwer, but replies to their queſtion, by asking them another: " The baptiſm of John, Was it from heaven, or of men?" that is, Was it of Divine Inſtitution, or of human invention? plainly implying, That the calling of them, who call themſelves the miniſters of God, ought to be from God; No man ought to take that honour upon him, but " he that is called of God, as was Aaron," Heb. v. 8. The Phariſees reply, that they could not tell whence John had his Miſſion and Authority; which was a manifeſt untruth; they knew it, but durſt not own it. By refuſing to tell the truth, they fall into a lye againſt the truth; thus one ſin enſnares and draws men on to the commiſſion of more: Such as will not ſpeak exact truth according to their knowledge, fall into the ſin of lying againſt their knowledge and their conſcience: Our Saviour anſwers them, " Neither tell I you by what authority I do theſe things;" He did not ſay, I cannot, or I will not, tell you; but I do not, I need not tell you; becauſe the miracles which I work before you, are a ſufficient demonſtration of my Divine Commiſſion, that I am ſent of God amongſt you; becauſe God never ſet the ſeal of his Omnipotency to a lye, nor impowered any impoſtor to work real miracles. (B.) The queſtion theſe men put to our bleſſed Saviour would have been juſt, had he not anticipated and rendred it unneceſſary, by ſuch evident proofs of his extraordinary miſſion. We have always a right to ask this queſtion, where no true miracles appear, to warrant ſuch a miſſion. (Q.)

The baptiſm of John.] See the notes on Matt. xi. 9. and xxi. 23.

They reaſoned with themſelves.] A miniſter of the church is in the moſt miſerable diſpoſition which can poſſibly be imagined, when he will neither acknowledge, nor publiſh the truth, but only ſo far as it is ſerviceable to his deſigns, and ſuppreſſes it without ſcruple when he finds his own condemnation therein. In vain do men endeavour to hide and conceal their craft and malice within themſelves; God who ſees all things, can neither be ignorant of it, nor let it go unpuniſhed. He who forbears ſpeaking againſt the truth, only through fear of men, has betrayed and diſhonoured it already in his heart, and is judged at the inviſible Tribunal of God. (Idem.)

Neither tell I you.] It is ſuitable to the prudence of Chriſt's miniſters, and to the dignity of his word, not to expoſe it to the malice of the wicked. God, who diſcovers himſelf to the ſimple, hides his light from the crafty, and confounds the falſe prudence of the world. Chriſt does not tell theſe men, from whence his authority came; but his miracles tell them very plainly. They who did not believe theſe, would not have believed him upon his bare word. The ſilence of the truth is one of the moſt terrible puniſhments of the Divine Juſtice in this world. (Idem.)

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. Then began he to ſpeak to the people this parable: A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to huſbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time. And at the ſeaſon he ſent a ſervant to the huſbandmen, that they ſhould give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the huſbandmen beat him and ſent him away empty. And again he ſent another ſervant; and they beat him alſo, and entreated him ſhameſully, ſhamefully, and ſent him away empty. And again he ſent the third; and they wounded him alſo, and caſt him out. Then ſaid the lord of the vineyard, What ſhall I do? I will ſend my beloved ſon: it may be they will reverence him, when they ſee him. But when the husbandmen ſaw him, they reaſoned among themſelves, ſaying, This is the heir: come let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours. So they caſt him out of the vineyard and killed him. What therefore ſhall the lord of the vineyard do unto them? He ſhall come and deſtroy theſe husbandmen, and ſhall give the vineyard to others. And when they heard it, they ſaid, God forbid. And he beheld them and ſaid, What is this then that is written, The ſtone which the builders rejected, the ſame is become the head of the corner? Whoſoever ſhall fall upon that ſtone ſhall be broken: but on whomſoever it ſhall fall, it will grind him to powder. And the chief prieſts and the ſcribes the ſame hour ſought to lay hands on him; and they feared the people: for they perceived that he had ſpoken this parable againſt them.

This parable.] In the parable before us, the Jewiſh church is compared to a vineyard, God the father to an Houſholder, his planting, pruning, and fencing his vineyard, denotes his care to furniſh his church with all needful helps and means to make it fruitful; his letting it out to husbandmen, ſignifies the committing the care of his church to the Prieſts and Levites, the public paſtors and governors of the church; his ſervant's are the Prophets and Apoſtles whom he ſent from time to time, to admoniſh them to bring forth anſwerable fruits to the coſt which God had expended on them; his ſon is Jeſus Chriſt, whom the rulers of the Jewiſh church ſlew and murdered. So that the deſign and ſcope of the parable is to diſcover to the Jews, particularly to the Phariſees, their obſtinate impenitency under all the means of grace, their bloody cruelty towards the Prophets of God, their tremendous guilt in crucifying the ſon of God; for all which God would unchurch them finally, ruin their nation, and ſet up a church among the Gentiles, that ſhould bring forth much better fruit than the Jewiſh church ever did. From the whole, note, 1. That the church is God's vineyard; a vineyard is a place encloſed, a place well planted, well fruited, and exceeding dear and precious to the planter, and the owner of it. 2. That as dear as God's vineyard is to him in caſe of barrenneſs and unfruitfulneſs, it is in great danger of being deſtroy'd and laid waſt by him. 3. That the only way and courſe to engage God's care over his vineyard, and to prevent it's being given to other husbandmen, is to give him the fruits of it; 'tis but a vineyard that God lets out; it is no inheritance; no people had ever ſo many promiſes of God's favour as the Jews; nor ever enjoy'd ſo many privileges, while they continu'd in his favour, as they did; but for rejecting Chriſt and his holy doctrine, they are a deſpiſed ſcatter'd people throughout the world. (B.)

Another Servant.] The holy ſcripture may be look'd upon as a ſecond ſervant, which calls upon and urges the miniſters of the Lord to labour in gaining ſouls, and conſecrating them to him. It is but too true, that the word of God is abuſed and ſhamefully treated by thoſe, to whom God has ſent it in order to their ſalvation, and to that of his church. We too often ſee mercenary and faithleſs paſtors read it without any reſpect, make it ſubſervient to their vanity and ambition, deſpiſe it's admonitions, and treat it as a profane and dangerous book. (Q.)

This is the heir.] Ambitious and covetous wretches know no Godlineſs, but gain; nor care whoſe that ſhould be, which by craft, or power, they can make their own: Be it an inheritance, and be it known to be ſo, yea be it his inheritance, who is immediate heir to the Almighty; be it the inheritance of God's anointed, even the ſon of God; yet even his inheritance (be the guilt what it may be) they are reſolved to make their own; for tho' they confeſs and acknowledge he had the right and title of inheritance to his vineyard, yet they ſay, "Come let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours." (Allington.) Theſe husbandmen, ſeeing the heir, reſolved to kill him, and ſeize on his inheritance as their own, of which they were already in poſſeſſion. (H.)

He ſhall come and deſtroy theſe husbandmen.] If we would have power to call any thing ours; if we would have a durable Inheritance, we muſt have a care that we come righteouſly by it, and that we ſpend what we have to God's glory; for, ſeeing the ſin of the husbandmen was the denying to the heir the profits of his vineyard; God will undoubtedly take that vineyard from us, which we ſhall deny him the fruit of: and whatever ſhall be got by blood, uſurpation, and unjuſt ways; of that God will not ſuffer us to have an inheritance, nor permit any of us long to ſay, This is ours. (Allingt.) In Matt. xxi. 41. and in Mark xii. 9. Chriſt enquires of them, "What the Lord of the vineyard will do to theſe husbandmen?" And they anſwer, "He will deſtroy them, and let out his vineyard to other husbandmen:" Here Chriſt himſelf declares, what the lord of the vineyard will do to thoſe husbandmen; and they ſeem to ſay, God forbid that he ſhould do ſo. Now this ſeeming contrariety is by ſome ſolved thus, That the Phariſees do not by theſe words deny, that the lord of the vineyard would deſtroy thoſe husbandmen; but knowing, that the parable was ſpoken againſt them, they ſay, "Far be it from us husbandmen, to do a work ſo worthy of this puniſhment;" And this ſenſe Chriſt's reply ſeems to require, "If the prieſts and Phariſees will not do this, what means that which is written?" What means that ſaying of the Pſalmiſt? which even you Jews interpret of the Meſſiah; "The ſtone which the builders refuſed, is become the head-ſtone of (or in) the corner, Pſal. cxviii. 22. To ſtrengthen this interpretation, let it be conſider'd, that our Lord ſpake this parable againſt them, Matt. xxi. 45. Mark xii. 12. They therefore deny what they underſtood, that they ſhould deſtroy the ſon of the Lord of the vineyard, i.e. the Meſſiah, as not believing Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, but an impoſtor; but they deny not, that they who ſhould do this, were worthy of this puniſhment: Or, 2. Becauſe St. Luke peculiarly notes, ver. 9. that this parable was ſpoken to the people, this may be their anſwer, Far be it from our rulers to do ſo vile a thing as may bring down this judgment on us, while the rulers and Phariſees, who thought themſelves far from being ſuch husbandmen as they knew Chriſt ſuggeſted they would be, ſtick not to ſay ſuch husbandmen deſerve indeed to be deſtroyed, as thinking they ſhould never be concerned in their ruin. Either of thoſe ſolutions I like better than that of Mr. le Clerk, who will have theſe words in the beginning of this verſe, "He will come and will deſtroy theſe husbandmen, and let out his vineyard to others," to be the words not of Chriſt, but of the Sanhedrim; and yet will have the words immediately following in the ſame verſe, "and underſtanding, they ſaid (within themſelves) God forbid," to be alſo the words of the ſame Sanhedrim. For could they, underſtanding that theſe words were ſpoken againſt them, firſt give this ſevere ſentence againſt themſelves, and then in the ſame breath contradict themſelves? And, 2. Why muſt eipon be rendred they ſaid within themſelves, and not in the hearing of Chriſt, who, when they had ſaid this, looks upon them, and enquires of them, What then is it which is written? ver. 17. (W.)

The ſtone which the builders rejected.] See the notes on Matt. xxi. 42.

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. And they watched him, and ſent forth ſpies, which ſhould feign themſelves juſt men, that they might take hold of his words, that ſo they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor. And they asked him, ſaying, Maſter, we know that thou ſayeſt and teacheſt rightly, neither accepteſt thou the perſon of any, but teacheſt the way of God truly. Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæſar, or no? But he perceived their craftineſs, and ſaid unto them, Why tempt ye me? Shew me a peny: whoſe image and ſuperſcription hath it? They anſwered and ſaid, Cæſars. And he ſaid unto them, render therefore unto Cæſar the things which be Cæſars, and unto God the things which be Gods. And they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at his anſwer, and held their peace.

Sent forth ſpies.] The Phariſees perceiving themſelves reprehended in the parables of our Lord, and not being able to take any advantage of his words, they grew enraged; and full of envy conſulted together, to put ſuch a captious queſtion to him, as by returning an anſwer to it, he muſt fall into their ſnare, and unavoidably expoſe his life, or loſe his reputation. (Moore.) Theſe Egkathetoi, ſpies, or informers, (whoſe buſineſs it was to watch an opportunity to entangle him in his talk, or to catch him in his words, as fiſhermen do with nets, or baited hooks,) were certain of the Phariſees and of the Herodians. The Phariſees generally look'd upon the Cæſarean or Roman authority, as an uſurpation: The Herodians, on the contrary, were ſtrenuous aſſerters of it; being dependants of Herod, and ſuppoſed to be collectors of the tribute-money; for it concerned Herod, who at firſt received his crown from Cæſar, to further Cæſar's tribute; not only in way of thankfulneſs, but alſo in way of policy, to prevent a poſſible depoſing; for it was in Cæſar's power to take away the crown when it pleaſed him. Now in reſpect that Herod ſought to kill Chriſt, and the Herodians with the Phariſees took counſel againſt him, unto this our Saviour might have reference, ſaying, Mark viii. 15. "Beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the leaven of Herod," viz. of their contagious doctrine, and fox-like ſubtilties. See the notes on Matt. xxii. 16. and Mark xii. 15.

Feign themſelves juſt men.] They put on the diſguiſe of a tender conſcience, as if they had only wanted ſatisfaction for their ſcruples; whereas their real intent was to take occaſion to entrap him. (G. and H.)

Is it lawful.] By this ſpecious queſtion they thought to bring him into a dilemma; for if he anſwer'd, that it was lawful, the Phariſees were ready to accuſe him to the people, as an enemy to their liberties; and if he ſaid, it was not lawful, then the Herodians would charge him with diſaffection to Cæſar, and deliver him up to the Roman governour as a traytor. For it is the laſt ſhift of falſe prophets, in order to the deſtruction of the true, to charge them with ſedition or treaſon. (Beza.)

Render therefore.] By this anſwer our Saviour eſcapes both their ſnares; that of the Herodians, by awarding to Cæſar the things which are Cæſar's; and that of the Phariſees, by rendering unto "God the things which are God's. (Bever.) We muſt never ſeparate theſe two ſentences, which Chriſt has joined with ſo much wiſdom; that ſo we may never do any thing contrary to the Rights of God in obeying princes, and never violate the rights of princes under pretence of doing ſervice to God. No reaſon, no conjuncture, no human power, can excuſe ſubjects from being faithful to their prince, ſince Jeſus Chriſt enjoins them to be ſo. (Q.) Subſtantial religion and loyalty are true and mighty, and will prevail at laſt. (Kettlew.) See the notes on Matt. xxii. 21. and Mark xii. 17.

The things which be Cæſar's.] This was not properly a determination what things were Cæſar's, but only a command to "reſtore every man his own;" or, as St. Paul expreſſes it, to "render to all their dues," Rom. xiii. 7. Whatever is due to ſovereign princes, and does not interfere with our duty to God, that we muſt give to Cæſar. (Sherl.) By Cæſar is meant here every king within his own dominion. (Hieron.) But if they claim that which is not theirs, and which either by the laws of God, or by the expreſs laws of the conſtitution, are declared not to belong to them, we are not bound to pay or render that, ſince it is not at all theirs. (Burn.) We muſt pay all due reſpect and juſt obedience to our prince, whatever religion he be of, ſo that the pretence of religion muſt never make us ill ſubjects. (Kettlew.)

The things which be God's.] The things of God, or thoſe things which are due to him in religion, are, 1. A belief of his Revelations. 2. Worſhipping him according to his own rules; and, 3. The ſervice of a good life, and an upright practice. (Idem.) But ſince the paying tribute was the point here in queſtion, it may be ſuppoſed, that the rendering to God that which was his, may more immediately relate to the poll-money, of half a ſhekel, that all the males among the Jews were bound to pay, towards the expence and repairs of the temple, Exod. xxx. 13, 14. So that by this deciſion none might exempt themſelves from that, under the pretence of their being charged with a tribute to the Romans, and that they could not be double charged, and pay both. (Burn.) Sometimes princes profeſs a wrong religion; nay, ſometimes they ſet themſelves againſt the true, and perſecute God's ſervants. And when at any time this is the caſe, our duty to God and the king ſeem as if they were at odds, and look like irreconcileable and inconſiſtent things. And then men oft times think themſelves exempt from one of them, becauſe they cannot ſerve two maſters of contrary intereſts; ſo that either in zeal for religion they caſt off all duty to their prince, and turn bigotted rebels, or elſe in compliance with their prince they throw aſide true religion, and their duty towards God, and turn irreligious time-ſervers. But the true determination of the caſe, our Saviour tells us, is to do neither of theſe. When princes happen to have any miſ-perſuaſions about religion, we muſt ſtill pay them all civil ſubjection and obedience. But our loyalty muſt not carry us to embrace their errors; but at the ſame time we muſt keep true to religion and God's ſervice. (Kettl.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. Then came to him certain of the Sadducees (which deny that there is any reſurrection) and they aſked him, Saying, Maſter, Moſes wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wiſe, and he die without children, that his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother. There were therefore ſeven brethren: and the firſt took a wife, and died without children. And the ſecond took her to wife, and he died childleſs. And the third took her; and in like manner the ſeven alſo. and they left no children, and died. Laſt of all the woman died alſo. Therefore in the reſurrection whoſe wife of them is ſhe? for ſeven had her to wife. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage: But they which ſhall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the reſurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the reſurrection. Now that the dead are raiſed, even Moſes ſhewed at the buſh, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him. Then certain of the ſcribes anſwering ſaid, Maſter, thou haſt well ſaid. And after that they durſt not aſk him any queſtion at all.

The Sadducees.] Our bleſſed Saviour having put the Phariſees and Herodians to ſilence in the foregoing verſes, here the Sadducees encounter him. (B.) Tho' the Phariſees and Sadducees were no great friends to one another, yet in the cauſe againſt the Saviour of the world they joined forces: But notwithſtanding this union in part, they were glad upon any occaſion to ſee one another foil'd; of which an inſtance was plain in the Sadducees queſtion about the reſurrection; for the Phariſees were well pleaſed, not that Jeſus ſpake ſo excellently, but that the Sadducees were confuted. (Howel.) See the notes on Matt. xxii. 23. and Mark xii. 18.

The children of this world marry.] As if our Lord had ſaid, After men have lived a while in this world, they die, and therefore marriage is neceſſary to maintain a ſucceſſion of mankind; but in the other world, men ſhall become immortal, and live for ever; and then the reaſon of marriage will wholly ceaſe, for when men can die no more, there will be no need of any new ſupplies of mankind. (B.)

Equal unto the angels.] The glorified ſaints, in the morning of the reſurrection, ſhall be like unto the glorious angels; not like them in eſſence and nature, but like them in their properties and qualities; namely, in holineſs and purity, in immortality and incorruptibility; and alſo like them in their way and manner of living: They ſhall no more ſtand in need of meat or drink, than the angels do; but ſhall live the ſame heavenly and immortal lives that the angels live. (Idem.)

The dead are raiſed.] Our Saviour having got clear of the Sadducees objection, by taking away the ground and foundation of it, he produces an argument for the proof of the ſoul's immortality, and the body's reſurrection, thus: Thoſe to whom Almighty God pronounces himſelf a God are alive, but God pronounces himſelf a God to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, many hundred years after their bodies were dead; therefore their ſouls are yet alive, otherwiſe God could not be their God; for "he is not the God of the dead, but of the living." (Idem.) The Sadducees rejected the prophets, and all other ſcripture, ſave only the five books of Moſes. (Joſeph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 18.) Therefore, when our Saviour would confute their error concerning the reſurrection of the dead, he proves it not out of the prophets, but out of Exod. iii. 6. (Godw.)

All live unto him.] Woltzogenius interprets theſe words thus; "they live in reſpect of God's power and decree that they ſhall live again;" and hence he argues, that the ſouls of good men live not after death till the reſurrection; for, ſaith he, Chriſt argues thus, If Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, were not to live again, God, who ſtiles himſelf their God, would be the God of the dead; whereas, if their ſouls lived, and enjoyed a ſtate of happineſs, God would not be the God of the dead, tho' they never roſe again. To this I anſwer, 1. That when 'tis ſaid, "God is not the God of the dead," the meaning is, he is not the God of them who are to abide in a ſtate of death, and never to enjoy the reſurrection of the juſt; i. e. he owns not them for his, who are not to be "the ſons of the reſurrection, ver. 36. and will not be called their God, as having "not prepared for them an heavenly city," Heb. xi. 16. Hence doth the ſcripture ſay of them, that they are "paſſed from death unto life," John v. 24. and that they ſhall not die, becauſe Chriſt will raiſe them up at the laſt day, John vi. 40. And in the opinion of the Jews, they only ſeem to die in the eyes of fools, becauſe their "hope is full of immortality," Wiſd. iii. 2, 3, 4. and they proverbially ſay, "the juſt live when they are dead;" and in this ſenſe, Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, would not live to God; tho' their ſouls lived with him, unleſs their bodies alſo roſe again. 2. God here ſtiles himſelf the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, i. e. not of their ſouls only, but of their perſons; in which ſenſe the Jews always underſtood theſe words: now thus he would be the God of the dead, tho' their ſouls lived, unleſs their bodies alſo roſe again. (W.) The ſouls of the juſt are already in the hands of God, and their bodies ſure to be raiſed up, and united to them by the power of God. (H.)

Ver. 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47. And he ſaid unto them, How ſay they that Chriſt is David's ſon? And David himſelf ſaith in the book of Pſalms, The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, Till I make thine enemies thy footſtool. David therefore calleth him Lord, how is he then his ſon? Then in the audience of all the people he ſaid unto his diſciples, Beware of the ſcribes, which deſire to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the higheſt ſeats in the ſynagogues, and the chief rooms at feaſts; Which devour widows houſes, and for a ſhew make long prayers: the ſame ſhall receive greater damnation.

How ſay they.] The deſign of this queſtion was, 1. To confute the people's erroneous opinion touching the perſon of the Meſſiah, who they thought ſhould be a mere man, of the ſtock and lineage of David only, and not the Son of God. 2. To ſtrengthen the faith of his diſciples touching his Godhead, againſt the time that they ſhould ſee him ſuffer, and riſe again. The place Chriſt alludes to, is Pſalm cx. 1. "The Lord (that is, God the Father) ſaid to my Lord," that is, to God the Son, who was to be incarnate, whom David calleth his Lord, both as God, and as Mediator: his Lord by a right of creation and redemption alſo: Now the queſtion our Saviour puts to the Phariſees is this, How Chriſt could be both David's Lord and David's ſon? no ſon being lord of his own father: Therefore if Chriſt were David's ſovereign, he muſt be more than man, more than David's ſon. As man, he was David's ſon; as God-man, he was David's Lord. Note hence, 1. That tho' Chriſt was truly and really man, yet he was more than a mere man; he was Lord unto, and the ſalvation of, his own fore-fathers. 2. That the only way to reconcile the ſcriptures, which ſpeak concerning Chriſt, is to believe and acknowledge him to be both God and man in one perſon. The Meſſiah as man was to come forth out of David's loins, but as God-man was David's Lord, his ſovereign and Saviour; as man he was David's ſon, as God-man he was Lord of his own father. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxii. 41.

CHAP. XXI.

Chriſt commendeth the poor widow's offering: Foretelleth the deſtruction of the temple, and city of Jeruſalem; and the ſigns which ſhall happen before that time: Forewarneth his diſciples of great and dreadful perſecutions; but exhorteth them to caution, courage, faith, patience, and watchfulneſs.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. AND he looked up, and ſaw the rich men caſting their gifts into the treaſury. And he ſaw alſo a certain poor widow caſting in thither two mites. And he ſaid, Of a truth I ſay unto you, that this poor widow hath caſt in more than they all. For all theſe have of their abundance caſt in unto the offerings of God; but ſhe of her penury hath caſt in all the living that ſhe had.

He looked up and ſaw.] Our Saviour ſees with pleaſure, and beholds with delight, whatever we have hearts to give unto him; whether for the relief of his members, or for the ſupport of his ſervice. (B.) We muſt deſire to be ſeen by no other eyes but thoſe of Chriſt, if we deſire to receive the inviſible reward of charity, and not the empty reward of vanity. (Q.)

Caſting their gifts into the treaſury.] At the door of the temple, through which all the people paſſed in and out, who came up three times a year, at the ſolemn feaſts, to worſhip Almighty God in his own houſe, there was a cheſt ſet (like the poor man's box in ſome of our churches) into which all perſons caſt their free-will offerings and oblations; which were employed either for the uſe of the poor, or for the ſervice of the temple; and what was thus given our Saviour calls an offering to God, ver. 4. (B.) It ſeems a miſtake, to ſay that doora, gifts, ſignifies the treaſury itſelf, which in Hebrew is called korban; for that is dooron, not doora, in the plural number. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xv. 5.

Two mites.] See the notes on Mark xii. 42. and the table of Coins, Luke xv.

More than they all.] In all works of pious charity which we perform, God looks at the heart, the will, and the affection of the giver, more than at the largeneſs and liberality of the gift. It is not ſaid, The Lord loveth a liberal giver, but a chearful giver; He accepteth the gift according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. (B.)

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. And as ſome ſpake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly ſtones and gifts, he ſaid, As for theſe things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there ſhall not be left one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down. And they asked him, ſaying, Maſter, but when ſhall theſe things be? and what ſign will there be when theſe things ſhall come to paſs? And he ſaid, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt; and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them. But when ye ſhall hear of wars, and commotions, be not terrified: for theſe things muſt firſt come to paſs, but the end is not by and by. Then ſaid he unto them, Nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, and kingdom againſt kingdom: And great earthquakes ſhall be in divers places, and famines, and peſtilences, and fearful ſights, and great ſigns ſhall there be from heaven. But before all theſe, they ſhall lay their hands on you, and perſecute you, delivering you up to the ſynagogues, and into priſons, being brought before kings and rulers for my name's ſake. And it ſhall turn to you for a teſtimony. Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before, what ye ſhall anſwer. For I will give you a mouth and wiſdom, which all your adverſaries ſhall not be able to gainſay, nor reſiſt. And ye ſhall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinſfolks, and friends; and ſome of you ſhall they cauſe to be put to death. And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my name's ſake. But there ſhall not an hair of your head periſh. In your patience poſſeſs ye your ſouls. And when ye ſhall ſee Jeruſalem compaſſed with armies, then know that the deſolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midſt of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto. For theſe be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled. But woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days: for there ſhall be great diſtreſs in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they ſhall fall by the edge of the ſword, and ſhall be led away captive into all nations: and Jeruſalem ſhall be troden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And there ſhall be ſigns in the ſun, and in the moon, and in the ſtars; and upon the earth diſtreſs of nations, with perplexity; the ſea and the waves roaring; Mens hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after thoſe things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven ſhall be ſhaken. And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when theſe things begin to come to paſs, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. And he ſpake to them a parable, Behold, the fig-tree, and all the trees; When they now ſhoot forth, ye ſee and know of your own ſelves, that ſummer is now nigh at hand. So likewiſe ye, when ye ſee theſe things come to paſs, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Verily I ſay unto you, This generation ſhall not paſs away, till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, but my words ſhall not paſs away. And take heed to yourſelves, leſt at any time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting, and drunkenneſs, and cares of this life, and ſo that day come upon you unawares. For as a ſnare ſhall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to eſcape all theſe things that ſhall come to paſs, and to ſtand before the Son of man.

Adorned with goodly ſtones, and gifts.] Lithois kalois kai anatheemaſi. Budæus makes this difference between this word anatheema (or anathema, with an E long) and anathema with an E ſhort, that the former here uſed ſignifies the things themſelves, which are dedicated to ſacred uſes; the latter, the perſons who are devoted to deſtruction: and he deriveth them both from the word anatithenai, of hanging or ſetting up; that as the one were ſet up in the temples, ſo the others names were ſet up in places of execution, in hatred and deteſtation of them. But Tolet obſerves, that in the ſcripture they are both uſed in the ſame ſenſe. So likewiſe Chryſoſtom and Illyricus, Beza and Bucan confeſs, that they are deriv'd from the ſame verb, but are of a different ſignification, according to the different ſignification of the verb itſelf; for it ſometimes ſignifies, to lay up, or ſeparate, from whence it is ſaid to be anathema, ſeparation, or that which is ſeparated; and ſometimes it ſignifies, to ſet or hang up; and then it is called anatheema, ſuſpenſion, hanging, or that which is hung up. For which reaſon thoſe gifts, which were dedicated to holy uſes, are by the Greeks called anatheemata, as being hung up on high, upon the walls and pillars of their temples. They uſed to have fine things in their temples, which they called anatheemata; and from thence came anatheema, accurſed, becauſe they dedicated them to their idols. (Leigh.) It is moſt certain, that the ancient Greeks did carefully diſtinguiſh between theſe two words. (Heinſ.)

One ſtone upon another.] See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 2. and Luke xix. 44.

When ſhall theſe things be?] Here we may learn, what an itching curioſity there is in the beſt of men, to know futurities, and to underſtand things that ſhall come to paſs hereafter, and when that hereafter will come to paſs. O how happy were it, if we were as forward to obey the declarations of God's revealed will, as we are to pry into the hidden counſels of his ſecret will! (B.)

And he ſaid, Take heed,] Tho' Chriſt could not be induced to admire the curioſity of human works, which ſhall all periſh, yet he very readily enters into a converſation concerning the judgments of God. (Q.) Neither does he gratify his diſciples curioſity, but acquaints them with their preſent duty, namely, to watch againſt deceivers and ſeducers, who ſhould have the impudence to affirm themſelves to be Chriſts, "ſaying, I am Chriſt:" ſome, Chriſt perſonal, or the Meſſias; others, Chriſt doctrinal, affirming their erroneous opinions to be Chriſt's mind and doctrine; "Take heed that ye be not deceived, for many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt." Obſerve farther, the ſigns which our Saviour gives of Jeruſalem's approaching deſtruction, namely, the many broils and commotions, the civil diſorders and diſſentions, that ſhould be found among the Jews immediately before; "Ye ſhall hear of wars and commotions, and ſee fearful ſights, and great ſigns from heaven." Joſephus declares, that there appeared in the air chariots and horſemen skirmiſhing, and that a blazing ſtar in faſhion of a ſword hung over the city for a year together. Hence learn, that war, peſtilence, and famine, are judgments and calamities inflicted by God upon a ſinful people, for their contempt of Chriſt and Goſpel-grace. (B) This is one ſign or fore-runner of the deſtruction at hand, that ſuch deceivers ſhall ariſe, each pretending to be the Meſſiah. (H.) If the apoſtles themſelves had need of being warned not to miſtake, in taking a ſeducer for a Saviour, a falſe Chriſt for the true, alas! what ſeducement have we not reaſon to fear? We find a falſe Chriſt, whenever we find a deceitful guide, who directs us not to Jeſus Chriſt, who leads us to a church which is not his, who inſpires us with a doctrine which he never taught, who diverts us from the way of the Goſpel, and who by his whole conduct carries us at diſtance from the croſs, and from ſalvation. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 6.

Settle it therefore in your hearts.] He who enjoyns his ſervants to watch at all times, and to pray without ceaſing, is far from deſigning here to forbid them to do either; ſince it is by means even of vigilance and prayer, that this very thought is moſt deeply ſettled in their hearts. It is a great part of vigilance, and one of the chief fruits of prayer, for a man to learn therein to put his whole truſt and confidence in God, and rely only upon his grace. (Q.)

I will give you a mouth and wiſdom.] Tho' the truth of Chriſt may be oppoſed, yet the defenders of it ſhall never be aſhamed: for rather than they ſhall want a tongue to plead for it, God himſelf will prompt them by his Holy Spirit, and ſuggeſt ſuch arguments to them, as all their enemies ſhall not be able to gainſay. (B.) From this text, compared with Mark xiii. 11. it is evident, 1. That this promiſe is peculiar to the Apoſtles, to whom alone Chriſt here diſcourſeth. 2. That it belongs to them alone, when they were brought before kings and rulers, to plead the cauſe of Chriſt, and leave before them a teſtimony of the truth of it, Matt. x. 18. And therefore there can be nothing more ridiculous, than the Quakers applying this to their extemporary effuſions, their ſenſeleſs prayers and harangues; of which it cannot, without blaſphemy, be ſaid, "It is not ye that ſpeak, but the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh in you;" ſeeing, if ſo, all their fooliſh and ignorant harangues muſt be as ſacred, and as worthy to be preſerved, as the inſpired ſcriptures. (W.)

There ſhall not an hair of your head periſh.] This, ſaith Grotius, is a proverbial expreſſion, uſed 1 Sam. xiv. 45. 2 Sam. xiv. 11. 1 Kings i. 52. Acts xxvii. 34. ſignifying that they ſhould ſuſtain no loſs, i. e. all circumſtances conſider'd; for to ſuffer ſome loſs fot the preſent, to gain eternal life, is the greateſt advantage, whilſt that which ſeems at preſent to be loſt is laid up with God to be reſtored to us with uſury; and this limitation ſeems neceſſary, not only from the former words, "Some of you they ſhall cauſe to be put to death," ver. 16. but alſo from the event; for as moſt of the Apoſtles were cut off before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſo the Protomartyr Stephen was taken away by the Jews; James the leſs, and other chriſtians, by Ananus the high prieſt. But yet I cannot acquieſce in this interpretation; 1. Becauſe this proverb, in all the places cited, contains a promiſe, that the perſons ſpoken to ſhould not die, or periſh in the danger they lay under, or as they apprehended they might do. So "no hair of any man's head ſhall periſh," Acts xxvii. 34. is the ſame as, "there ſhall be no loſs of any man's life," ver. 22. "One hair of Jonathan's head ſhall not periſh," 1 Sam. xiv. 45. is in the ſame verſe, ou thanatootheeſetai, "he ſhall not be put to death." "An hair of thy ſon's head ſhall not fall to the earth," 2 Sam. xiv. 11. is in the ſame verſe, "they ſhall not deſtroy thy ſon." "One hair of Adonijah ſhall not fall to the earth," 1 Kings i. 52. is in the ſame verſe, "he ſhall not be put to death." Chriſt therefore ſeems to promiſe, that whatever might befall them at other times, yet in theſe days of vengeance upon the Jews, or at the time of the deſtruction of the city, and the temple, none of thoſe Chriſtians which endured to the end ſhould periſh in that ſiege. And this the following words ſeem to inſinuate, "in patience poſſeſs your ſpirit;" that is, ſaith Tertullian, "by patience you will preſerve yourſelves," ver. 19. So Matt. xxiv. 13. "he that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved." See here ver. 8. Accordingly the Pſeudo-Clemens, in his Recognitions, ſaith, that this was an evident token of this great myſtery, that "every one that believed in this prophet, and was baptized in his name, ſhould be kept ſafe from the deſtruction which ſhould happen to that unbelieving nation, and to their temple, by the war." And Theodoret ſaith, there was a fame, that "when Veſpaſian and Titus came to fight againſt them, the faithful that were there, by revelation, left the city, according to our Lord's admonition," Luke xxi. 20. "and that of them Zachary foretold, the reſt ſhall not periſh." (Idem.)

In your patience poſſeſs ye your ſouls.] Our Lord here recommends to his followers the patient bearing afflictions and perſecutions; and that they ſhould have a firm truſt and dependance on his good providence; whereby they would often ſave and deliver themſelves (for ſo the words "poſſeſs ye yourſelves" may ſignify) from ſome ſufferings, and eſcape thoſe terrible judgments by which others would be miſerably deſtroyed. (Fox.) There are three degrees of Chriſtian patience, 1. A ſilent ſubmiſſion to God's will. 2. A thankful acceptation of God's fatherly rod; and, 3. A ſerious chearfulneſs under ſorrowful diſpenſations, rejoicing in tribulation, and counting it all joy when we fall into divers temptations. As faith gives us the poſſeſſion of Chriſt, ſo patience gives us the poſſeſſion of ourſelves. (B.) It is by this, that ſinners obtain righteouſneſs, that the juſt preſerve it, that penitents recover it, that martyrs ſacrifice themſelves for it, and that the ſaints receive the crown thereof, and poſſeſs themſelves in poſſeſſing God. (Q.)

Jeruſalem compaſſed with armies.] See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 15. and Mark xiii. 14.

The days of vengeance.] Here our Saviour gives a dreadful relation of thoſe deſolating calamities which were coming upon Jeruſalem, partly from the Roman army without, and partly from the ſeditions and factions of the zealots within; who committed ſuch outrages and ſlaughters, that there were no leſs than an hundred thouſand Jews ſlain, and ninety-ſeven thouſand taken priſoners: And they who bought our Saviour for thirty pence, were now themſelves ſold thirty for a peny. (B.) But the whole number of thoſe who died, by ſword and famine, in the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Titus, is ſaid to be eleven millions, Euſeb. Hiſt. l. 3. out of Joſephus.

Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.] That is, ſay ſome interpreters, till the full number of the Gentiles, which God ſhall call, be compleated. This, I confeſs, is a very ancient interpretation of theſe words, but it is contrary to the expreſs word of the apoſtle Paul, who declares, that at the converſion of the Jews, there ſhall be a greater and more glorious converſion of the Gentiles, than that which happened at the fall of them; that "their fulneſs ſhould be much more the riches of the Gentiles than their fall was," Rom. xi. 12, 13. and that "their coming in ſhould be to the Gentiles as life from the dead," and ſhould much more enrich them than their caſting off, ver. 15. I therefore do interpret theſe words thus, "Jeruſalem ſhall be inhabited," not by the Jews, but by the Gentiles ruling there, till the ſeaſon for the full converſion of the ſtill heathen Gentiles ſhall come in, i. e. till the time of the converſion of the Jews, and the "flowing in of all nations to them." (W.)

And there ſhall be ſigns.] Many prodigies ſhall be ſeen in the heavens, very frightful to all; and there ſhall be terrible diſtreſs upon all the ſeveral parts of Paleſtine, preſſing them ſo that they ſhall not know what to do, whether to ſtay, or to forſake their country. (H.) A farther account of which prodigies will be given in the notes on Rev. vi. 12. But ſuch expreſſions as thoſe, that "the ſun ſhall be darken'd," &c. Matt. xxiv. 29. Mark xiii. 24. &c. are not to be underſtood literally. Wherever therefore we meet with them, or to what time or place ſoever they relate, the idea we ſhould form in our minds is, that fearful judgments ſhall come upon that place or people; not that the ſun, &c. ſhall really fall from heaven, &c. For the inhabitants of the eaſtern countries, whoſe manner of ſpeaking the writers of the holy ſcriptures imitate, were wont to expreſs themſelves in very lofty and figurative terms. The learned Jews underſtand thoſe words of Iſa. xxx. 26. "The light of the moon ſhall be as the light of the ſun, and the light of the ſun ſhall be ſeven-fold," to be a prophecy of great proſperity; for they are wont to repreſent proſperity and abundance by light, and adverſity and want by darkneſs. Dr. Lightfoot ſays, that by the ſun is ſignified the ſtate of religion and the church, by the moon the civil government, and by the ſtars the judges and doctors of both (Fox.)

Diſtreſs of nations.] The ethnee, nations, here are the ſeveral parts or tetrarchies of Paleſtine, ſo divided by the Romans; (ſee the notes on Luke iii. 1.) each of which was called ethnos. For 'tis ſure the diſtreſs and conſternation here belongs to the Jews, not to the Gentiles. (H.)

The ſea and the waves roaring.] To this I would refer thoſe words of Joſephus, "at that time an immenſe ſtorm of the ſea brake out, and violent winds, with moſt vehement ſhowers, and terrible lightnings, and thunders, and vaſt roarings of the ſhaken earth." (De Bello Jud. l. 4. c. 17. p. 881.) or rather to that violent ſtorm called Malemboreas; which happened to the Jews at Joppa, who got in boats to the ſea; in which their boats periſhed with a violent noiſe, the people howling, and the waves roaring at the ſame time; of which Joſephus gives a very tragical deſcription, De Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 29. p. 855. (W.) But, as it is ordinary in theſe books, to expreſs the whole by the enumeration of the parts, and the whole world by the mention of heaven, and earth, and ſea, ſo 'tis probable the univerſal deſtruction of the Jews may be deſcribed here by all theſe. (H.)

The Son of man coming.] Here our Lord mingles the ſigns of the particular deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and of the general ruin of the world, together; that he might the better keep them awake, to attend both his general and particular coming; and make both them and us, at the approach of particular judgments upon cities or nations, always mindful and prepared for the general judgment of the laſt day; which he here calls the coming of the Son of man, and tells us how to entertain it. (Frank.)

In a cloud, with power and great glory.] Chriſt's being ſeated upon a cloud, we have reaſon to underſtand in the plain and literal ſenſe, whether we reflect upon the manner of God's uſual manifeſtation of his preſence in the Old Teſtament, or our Lord's transfiguration in the New: Or eſpecially, upon the teſtimony of thoſe angels which attended at his aſcenſion, Acts i. 9. &c. And by the power mentioned here, ſome have underſtood thoſe heavenly hoſts, which, we are aſſured, ſhall then attend this judge. But, beſides this military ſenſe of the word, I ſee no reaſon why we ſhould not extend it to all thoſe demonſtrations of majeſty and omnipotence, in which the Lord Chriſt ſhall then exert himſelf; ſuch as opening the graves, aſſembling all nations and ages of men, and compelling the moſt mighty, the moſt unwilling, to obey the unwelcome ſummons; doing himſelf honour upon his enemies, reſcuing and rewarding his once deſpiſed and afflicted ſervants, unlocking the myſteries of Providence, exerciſing a dominion uncontroulable, and diſplaying all the attributes of the Godhead in exquiſite perfection. This ſhall be the power, this the glory of that great day. And all this will be done, in a manner ſenſible and conſpicuous to the whole world, that ungodly wretches may "look on him whom they have pierced" with their blaſphemous impieties, and feel the terrors which they diſdained to fear. (St.)

Your redemption draweth nigh.] God had a remnant which he deſigned ſhould ſurvive that deſtruction, to be an holy ſeed: theſe are called upon to look up with chearfulneſs and joy, when the hearts of others were failing them for fear. And thus ſhall it be at the general day of judgment (of which Jeruſalem's viſitation was a type) Lord! how will the glory and terror of that day dazzle the eyes, and terrify the hearts of all the enemies of Chriſt, but delight the eyes, and rejoice the hearts of all that love and fear him, that ſerve and obey him! Then may the friends of Chriſt "look up, and lift up their heads, for their full redemption draweth nigh." (B.)

The kingdom of God is nigh at hand] Our Saviour tells them, that when they ſhould ſee the forementioned ſigns, they might conclude the deſtruction of their city and temple to be nigh at hand; and accordingly ſome of that generation then living did ſee theſe predictions fulfilled. (Idem.) See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 32. and Mark xiii. 28.

Take heed to yourſelves.] Here our Saviour calls upon the believing Chriſtians, to take care, and uſe the greateſt vigilance that they do not miſcarry in this dreadful ſeaſon, by reaſon of that exceſs and luxury which may render them unmindful of it, or thoſe cares which may render them unwilling to part with their temporal concerns, leſt they ſhould be involved in that ruin which would come on others, as a ſnare ſuddenly, and unexpectedly; and that they ſhould add to this vigilance, conſtant prayer to God that they might be found worthy to eſcape theſe tremendous judgments, and might ſtand ſafely and boldly before the Son of man, when he comes to execute them on the unbelieving Jews. Whence note, 1. That God's promiſe of a deliverance to the Chriſtians then was only conditional; provided that they took care to avoid thoſe ſins which might render them obnoxious to theſe judgments, and to do thoſe things which might render them worthy to eſcape them. 2. That there is to be a connexion of our endeavours with the divine aid, and providence, for our preſervation; and that we are not to expect preſervation immediately from him, without the uſe of theſe means which he hath put into our power to effect it. (W.) There is a threefold reaſon, why our Saviour forewarns us of theſe ſins, with reference to the day of judgment; 1. Becauſe they are peccata præcurrentia, certain prognoſticks of the day of judgment approaching; "As it was in the days of Noah, ſo ſhall the coming of the Son of man be." 2. Becauſe they are peccata accelerantia, they do not only foretell, but haſten the coming of Chriſt. To ſee the world drowned in voluptuouſneſs and earthly-mindedneſs, in ſecurity and ſenſuality, is not only a ſign to foretell, but a ſin that haſtens judgment, and pulls down vengeance upon a wicked world. 3. Chriſt bids us beware of theſe ſins, with reference to the day of judgment, becauſe theſe ſins are deriſoria judicii, they beget in men a prophane ſpirit of ſcoffing at and deriding the notices of Chriſt's appearing to judgment, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. "In the laſt days there ſhall come ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts, and ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming?" Our Saviour having thus warned them of theſe ſins, he next exhorts them to watchfulneſs; "Watch therefore, for as a ſnare that day will come upon you;" that is, very ſuddenly, and very unexpectedly. A ſnare has a threefold property, to catch ſuddenly, to hold ſurely, to deſtroy certainly. Our Lord's coming to Jeruſalem was very unexpected, and his coming to us by death and judgment will ſteal upon us, if we be not watchful. Watch we then, for our Lord will come; at what hour he will come cannot certainly be known; there is no time in which we can promiſe and aſſure ourſelves, that our Lord will not come; the time of our life is little enough to prepare for his coming. Our preparation for it will be no acceleration or haſtening our Lord's coming. And oh! how dreadful will his coming be, if we be found off our watch, and altogether unready for his appearance! Appear we muſt in judgment, but ſhall not be able to ſtand in the judgment; ſee Chriſt we ſhall as a judge, but not behold him as a redeemer. (B.)

The face of the whole earth.] As all interpreters do remark, this general expreſſion ſhould be reſtrained, and limited to thoſe places of the world which are ſpoken of, and according to the cuſtom of thoſe who ſpeak, and the time wherein they live. Whence Grotius and others have obſerved, that in the prophecies which ſpeak of the ruin of the Jews, the ſame expreſſion is always to be tranſlated by that of "all the land," verſe 26. And that when the Romans did call their empire the world, becauſe it was the moſt conſiderable part of it, we ſhould tranſlate that expreſſion by that of the Roman empire. We muſt therefore tranſlate ver. 25, 26. thus; "And the inhabitants of that country ſhall be in perplexity and deſpair, as when the ſea and its waves do roar, mens hearts failing them for fear of thoſe things which are coming on that country." Matt. iv. 8. "Then the devil brought him up into an exceeding high mountain, and ſhewed him all the kingdoms of the Roman empire." Luke ii. 1. "And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that there went out a decree from Cæſar Auguſtus, that all the Roman empire ſhould he taxed." Acts xi. 28. "Agabus ſignified by the Spirit that there ſhould be a great dearth throughout all the Roman empire;" and Rom. i. 8. "That your faith is ſpoken of through all the Roman empire.

Accounted worthy] See the notes on chap. xx. 35.

Ver. 37, 38. And in the day time he was teaching in the temple, and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives. And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him.

In the day time.] Our Lord had exhorted his diſciples, in the foregoing verſes, to diligence and prayer; here he ſets an example of both before them: Buſying himſelf in God's ſervice all the day, and at night ſpending much time in prayer; in the day time he was in the temple preaching, in the evening he was in the mount of Olives praying. Lord, what an example of indefatigable zeal and diligence haſt thou ſet before thy miniſters and members! Oh, that when our Maſter comes we may be found working, our people watching, and both they and we waiting for the joyful coming of our Lord and Saviour! Amen. (H. B. and Q.)

CHAP. XXII.

The Jews conſpire againſt Chriſt. Judas covenanteth to betray him. Chriſt eateth the paſſover; and inſtituteth the ſacrament of the Euchariſt: Foretelleth that he ſhould be betrayed: Cautioneth his diſciples againſt ambition: comforteth Peter; but forewarneth him of his denial: Warneth them of dangers at hand: Prayeth in the garden; and is in an agony: Is betrayed with a kiſs: Diſapproveth Reſiſtance: Being carried to the high-prieſt's houſe, he is thrice denied by Peter, and ſhamefully abuſed; confeſſing himſelf to be the Son of God.

Ver. 1, 2. NOW the feaſt of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the paſſover. And the chief prieſts and ſcribes ſought how they might kill him; for they feared the people.

The feaſt of unleavened bread.] See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 1. and Mark xiv. 12.

Ver. 3, 4, 5, 6. Then entred Satan into Judas ſirnamed Iſcariot, being of the number of the twelve. And he went his way, and communed with the chief prieſts and captains, how he might betray him unto them. And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money. And he promiſed, and ſought opportunity to betray him unto them in the abſence of the multitude.

Then entred Satan.] That is, two days before the paſſover: for, 1. As for that ſupper, in which our Saviour gave him the ſop, at which Satan entred, the ſcripture doth expreſly tell us, that it was held "before the feaſt of the paſſover," John xiii. 1. And when our Saviour, having given him the ſop, ſaid, "What thou doeſt do quickly," ſome of our Lord's diſciples thought that Chriſt had bid him "buy thoſe things which were needful for the paſchal feaſt," ver. 29. whence it is evident that feaſt was not yet celebrated by them. And here St. Luke ſaith, Satan entred into Judas, and he conſulted with the high prieſts, and with the ſoldiers, "how he might deliver him up unto them;" and then it follows, ver. 7, 8. "then came the days of unleavened bread," and Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, "prepare the paſſover for us that we may eat;" ſo that Satan muſt have entred into Judas before the paſſover was prepared. The Apoſtle declares that Satan inwardly "worketh in the children of diſobedience," Eph. ii. 2. and "leads them captive at his will," 2 Tim. ii. 26. When therefore Judas had, through the temptation of his covetouſneſs, robbed even the poor of the charity deſigned for them, John xii. 6. Satan ſuggeſts unto him another way to ſatisfy his avarice, even the betraying of his Maſter for a ſum of money; and when this ſuggeſtion prevailed with him to go to the high prieſts with that queſtion, "What will you give me to betray him?" Matt. xxvi. 15. then Satan fully entred into him, and carried him on without remorſe, to the performance of that horrid enterpriſe. (W.)

Give him money.] viz. Thirty pieces of ſilver, Matt. xxvi. 15. which were ſo many ſhekels of the ſanctuary; amounting at moſt to no more than three pounds and fifteen ſhillings of our money; (ſee the table of coins in chap. xv.) the ordinary price of a ſlave, Exod. xxi. 32.

He promiſed.] i. e. conſented to do the thing. For, that this word doth not only ſignify to confeſs, and to give thanks, but alſo to conſent and engage, is evident not only from the Inſtitutions of Theophilus, where we read, that homologein is to promiſe; but from Phavorinus, who renders homologoo, ſuntithemai, ſumpheemi, I promiſe, I conſent; of which import of the word we find many inſtances from Plato, Zenophon, Demoſthenes in Conſtantine. So that exoomologeeſe is here well render'd, he promiſed, or conſented to the price: nor is it to be wondred that St. Luke, born at Antioch, where there was an academy, and ſtudying in the univerſities of Greece, ſhould uſe this word, not as the Septuagint, but as thoſe Grecians did. (W.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the paſſover muſt be killed. And he ſent Peter and John, ſaying, Go and prepare us the paſſover, that we may eat. And they ſaid unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare? And he ſaid unto them, Behold, when ye are enter'd into the city, there ſhall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the houſe where he entreth in. And ye ſhall ſay unto the good-man of the houſe, The Maſter ſaith unto thee, Where is the gueſt-chamber, where I ſhall eat the paſſover with my diſciples? And he ſhall ſhew you a large upper room furniſhed: there make ready. And they went and found as he had ſaid unto them: and they made ready the paſſover. And when the hour was come, he ſat down, and the twelve apoſtles with him. And he ſaid unto them, With deſire I have deſired to eat this paſſover with you before I ſuffer. For I ſay unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and ſaid, Take this, and divide it among yourſelves: For I ſay unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God ſhall come.

There ſhall a man meet you.] This is ſuppoſed to have been John, ſirnamed Mark: whoſe houſe was always open to this bleſſed family. (Howel.) Here we may obſerve, 1. An eminent proof and evidence of Chriſt's divinity, in foretelling his diſciples all the particular occurrences and circumſtances, which they ſhould meet with in the city, as "a man bearing a pitcher of water," &c. 2. How readily the heart of the houſholder was diſpoſed to receive our Saviour and his diſciples, and to accommodate them with all things needful upon this occaſion. (B.)

With deſire I have deſired.] This is an Hebrew phraſe, and imports ſomewhat more than barely to deſire; for it noteth a vehement, earneſt, and continued deſire; a deſire which is in action, and working till we have our deſire accompliſhed: whereas to deſire ſimply may be a ſudden motion, or momentary paſſion. (Leigh.) This earneſt deſire of Jeſus Chriſt does not relate to the legal and ceremonial paſſover, but to the Euchariſtic paſſover, and the ſacrifice, of which he was going to be the victim. (Q.) He ſeems to have been ſo exceedingly deſirous, to explain to his diſciples what it was, to which the paſchal ceremony did chiefly refer; and to imprint it upon their minds by a viſible rite. (G.) Let us bluſh at our exceſſive coldneſs in relation to ſo precious a gift, when we conſider the ardent deſire and love with which Chriſt beſtows it upon us. (Q.) But J cannot here ſee, what Grotius and others affirm, that Chriſt gives here a reaſon, why he would anticipate the paſchal ſupper; our Lord himſelf giving a reaſon of theſe words in the following ſupper, viz. that "he would eat no more of it till that which was typified by this paſchal lamb, was fulfilled in the kingdom of heaven;" that is, till he who is ſtiled our paſchal Lamb was offered, and by his death had procured to men a liberty from that death, by the fear of which they were formerly kept in bondage, Heb. ii. 15. and in perpetual memory of his oblation, and the benefits purchaſed by it, had inſtituted a new paſchal ſupper, in which his diſciples ſhould eat at his table with him; that our Lord did not antedate the paſchal ſupper. See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 18. (W.)

He took the cup.] The company which were to eat the paſſover being come together, the chief Perſon began the feaſt with a cup of wine, which he gave to be diſtributed among thoſe who were preſent. This therefore was not that cup which our Lord took when he inſtituted the ſacrament; for this cup was drank at the beginning of the feaſt, but our Lord did not inſtitute the ſacrament till ſupper was ended. (Fox.)

Ver. 19, 20. And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, ſaying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. Likewiſe alſo the cup after ſupper, ſaying, This cup is the new teſtament in my blood, which is ſhed for you.

He took bread.] Here is a very near reſemblance to the rites of the Jewiſh paſſover: in which the maſter of the family was wont in general to give God ſolemn Thanks for the fruits of the earth; acknowledging him to be creator and beſtower of them: And then, applying himſelf to the occaſion of that feſtival, and taking the unleavened bread into his hand, he ſaid, "This is the bread of affliction, which our fathers did eat in Egypt:" A form, which muſt in all reaſon be admitted, for the beſt key to that ſo very near of kin to it, by which our Saviour conſecrated bread to a ſacramental uſe, under the New Teſtament. Now this form ſeems plainly to ſignify, that neither the one, nor the other, is ſtrictly and literally the thing it is called; but a memorial only, and repreſentation, of that thing whoſe name it bears. Nor was it indeed poſſible, that the bread in Chriſt's hand could be in reality his body broken, at a time when his body was not yet broken. But the breaking of that bread was a proper figure, and a lively image of thoſe wounds and breaches, which were about to be made in his body. Thus it was to thoſe diſciples then; and thus it is now to us, by repreſenting them already made. And of this manner of ſpeech the ſcripture furniſhes other inſtances in caſes of like nature. God himſelf ſays to Abraham, of circumciſion, "This is my covenant," Gen. xvii. 10. tho' Abraham was not then actually circumciſed: And when he was ſo, it is evident from St. Paul, Rom. iv. 11. that circumciſion never was the covenant itſelf, but only the evidence and ſeal of that covenant. Moſes in like manner ſays of the Paſchal Lamb, "It is the Lord's paſſover," Exod. xii. 11. when yet the Lord had not paſſed over their dwellings, till that Lamb was actually kill'd, and their doors ſprinkled with its blood: And afterwards, that Lamb could be no other, than the memorial of his paſſing over them. So clearly it appears, that the ſign hath often the title of the thing ſignified; and that it hath the name and ſignificance of a thing to be done, as well as of a thing already done. This is a figure uſual in any caſe; but moſt natural, and in a manner neceſſary, where a ſacrament is the ſubject. For the very condition of a ſacrament implies, that the thing repreſenting, and that repreſented by it, be different; it being manifeſtly abſurd, to make any thing a ſign of itſelf. And, that we might lie under no temptation to underſtand our Saviour's words in a ſenſe different from thoſe other forms I mentioned, he ſeems to have ſufficiently explained his own meaning, by that addition, "Do this (take, and break, and eat bread) in remembrance of me:" To which interpretation St. Paul agrees exactly. (Stanh.) It is much to be feared, that they do not remember Chriſt at all to purpoſe, who refuſe this reſpect to his command, his perſon, his ſufferings, and cannot be prevailed upon to remember him, in the method of his own appointing. (Idem.)

Likewiſe alſo the cup.] The cup here correſponds to the Jews cup of bleſſing, at the cloſe of the paſchal feaſt; which is now converted to a nobler and better ſignification, in the uſe Chriſtians are commanded to make of it. But, by the manner of expreſſion it is evident, that by the cup was intended the wine in it; that this wine is the "blood of the New Teſtament," or the "New Teſtament in Chriſt's blood," no farther, than as it repreſents and commemorates that blood, and the covenant ratified by the ſhedding of it: Which blood yet was not ſhed, at the time when this cup firſt received that denomination. And therefore here again, to ſet us right, St. Paul adds thoſe other words of our Lord, at the conſecration of it, "Do this, as oft as ye ſhall drink it, in remembrance of me," 1 Cor. xi. 25. (Idem.) Here is a double metonymy, 1. That of the cup for the wine contained in it; 2. That of the ſign for the thing ſignified by it; the wine being the ſymbol of that blood in which that new covenant was eſtabliſhed. And this, ſaith the Evangeliſt, was ſaid after the paſchal ſupper, to ſignify, that this cup pertained not to the ſolemnity of the paſſover. (Beza and W.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 26. and Mark xiv. 22.

Ver. 21, 22, 23. But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table. And truly the Son of man goeth as it was determined: but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed. And they began to enquire among themſelves, which of them it was that ſhould do this thing.

Him that betrayeth me.] Jeſus made this prediction, that his diſciples might not be ſcandalized at the ſadneſs of his paſſion, but be confirmed in their belief, ſeeing a great demonſtration of his wiſdom and ſpirit of prophecy, in this very inſtance of foretelling the treachery of Judas Iſcariot. (Howel.) Had the preſence of Judas polluted this ordinance to any but himſelf, doubtleſs our Saviour would not have ſuffered him to approach unto it. It teaches us, That altho' nothing be more ordinary, than for unholy perſons to preſs into the holy ordinances of God, which they have no right, while ſuch, to approach unto, yet their preſence pollutes the ordinances only to themſelves. Holy perſons are not polluted by their ſins, therefore ought not to be diſcouraged from coming by their preſence. (B.)

As it was determined.] Kata tco ooriſmenon; that is according to the prophecies concerning the death of Chriſt, made by the counſel and appointment of God. From the wo, denounced upon him that ſhould betray the Meſſias, we learn, that he was highly criminal in ſo doing, and therefore could not be under an abſolute neceſſity of doing ſo. They therefore who, from theſe words, gather that Judas was, from the beginning of this action to the end, under an abſolute neceſſity of doing as he did, by virtue of the decree of God impelling him to this action, render Judas free from guilt; and to them, ſaith Grotius, we may ſay as Irenæus did to Florinus, (maintaining that ſome ſouls were not by choice, but by nature good; and others were by nature evil;) theſe doctrines are not ſound, nor conſonant to the ſentiments of the church; nay, they induce the greateſt impiety; theſe things neither the ancients, which were before us, and which were the diſciples of the Apoſtles, delivered, nor durſt our hereticks aſſert. Since God is good, ſaith Plato, we muſt by no means allow any body to ſay, he is the cauſe of the evil done by any; but muſt by all means refel, and reject ſuch opinions: And indeed all the ancients unanimouſly held, that neither the prophecies, nor the preſcience, nor the decrees of God laid any neceſſity upon the will of man; for they who aſſert this, ſaith Origen, abſolve ſinners from all guilt, and lay the charge of all the evils, which they do, upon God, as by his decree, preſcience, or prediction; laying upon them that neceſſity which will not ſuffer them to do otherwiſe. They alſo, ſaith he, take away the freedom of our will, and with that all praiſe and diſpraiſe, or all difference betwixt things worthy of praiſes or reprehenſion: This doctrine alſo cuts off all that is ſaid of the equity of the divine Judgment, and of the threats made againſt, or the puniſhments inflicted on, the wicked, and of the promiſes of a better life, and the reward of them that do well. For, ſaith Clemens of Alexandria, there is no difference betwixt faith and infidelity, nor is either of them worthy of praiſe or diſpraiſe, if they have an antecedent phyſical neceſſity from God: Nor are praiſes or reprehenſions, rewards or puniſhments juſt, if the ſoul hath not a freedom of deſiring, or abſtaining from things, but is carry'd on to them by an unwilling neceſſity: God, ſaith Irenæus, hath always preſerved to man his freedom and power over his own actions, that they may juſtly be condemned who do not obey him: For man, ſaith Juſtin Martyr, would neither be worthy of praiſe or reward, did he not of himſelf chuſe what is good, but was ſo by nature; nor being evil, could be juſtly puniſhed, if he were not ſo of himſelf, but could be no other than what he was made; for we are crowned or puniſhed for that which it is in our power to do. And this they eſpecially apply to this fact of Judas: For, ſaith Chryſoſtom, neither is preſcience the cauſe of wickedneſs; nor does it induce a neceſſity of doing it; for Judas was not a traytor becauſe God foreſaw it; but God foreſaw that Judas would be ſo. (W.) It is blaſphemy, to ſay that the treachery of Judas, or any other ſin, is the work of God, as ſome hereticks have done: for the will of God, in reſpect to ſuch, is only permiſſive, not efficient. (G. Beza and Q.) See more of this in the notes on Acts ii. 23. iv. 28.

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. And there was alſo a ſtrife among them, which of them ſhould be accounted the greateſt. And he ſaid unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exerciſe lordſhip over them; and they that exerciſe authority upon them, are called benefactors. But ye ſhall not be ſo: but he that is greateſt among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth ſerve. For whether is greater, he that ſitteth at meat, or he that ſerveth? is not he that ſitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that ſerveth. Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my father hath appointed unto me: That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and ſit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

A ſtrife among them.] Some interpreters have taken pains to acquaint us, what reaſons, they imagine, ſeveral of the Apoſtles might find, to feed their hopes of obtaining a pre-eminence above the reſt of their brethren. St. Peter, they tell you, is not only mentioned firſt; but, upon his confeſſing "Chriſt to be Jeſus, the ſon of the living God," he received the peculiar honour of that anſwer, Matt. xvi. 16, &c. St. James and St. John had been dignified with the title of "Sons of Thunder;" Mark iii. 17. had been equall'd with St. Peter, by the ſame admiſſion to the privacies of their maſter; particularly at the raiſing of Jairus's daughter, Mark v. 37. and his glorious transfiguration in the mount, Matt. xvii. 1. (as we find them again, ſhortly after this, at his agony in the garden, Matt. xxvi. 37.) diſtinctions of favour, which perhaps were made encouragements to that requeſt here referred to. St. Andrew was, firſt of the whole fraternity, brought to the knowledge of Chriſt, and introduced his brother Peter to him, John i. 40, &c. St. Matthew had quitted a very gainful employment for his ſervice, Matt. ix. 9. St. Thomas ſeems to have excelled the reſt in courage; and, when his maſter, notwithſtanding the repreſentation they made of his danger, determined to return into Judea, he exhorts them all to follow his fortunes, come what would; "Let us alſo go, that we may die with him," John xi. 16. (For thus it ſeems reaſonable to underſtand that paſſage, rather than ſpoken in a ſenſe of fear and irony.) Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Thaddeus, might think this preference a natural effect of their near relation to Jeſus in blood, Matt. xiii. 55. And Bartholomew, by many ſuppoſed the ſame with Nathanael, on account of the high character given him; and the promiſe made of ſeeing Chriſt's glory, John i. 45. &c. To which ſome add the conſideration of his being more learned in the law, and of greater quality, than the other Apoſtles. Such have been the conjectures (and no better than conjectures) advanc'd upon this occaſion. (Stanh.) But, I ſee not any reaſon, why interpreters ſhould here ſay, this account of their contention is miſplac'd; ſince in the other Evangeliſts, it is mentioned after Chriſt's admonition concerning his paſſion, viz. Matt. xx. 25. Mark x. 42. See the notes there. (W.) Now, that our Saviour might effectually quench thoſe unhappy ſparks of ambition, which were kindled in his Apoſtles minds, he tells them, that ſupremacy and dominion belong to ſecular princes, not to evangelical paſtors, who ought to carry themſelves with humility and condeſcenſion one towards another. Not that Chriſt directs to a parity and equality among his miniſters, or forbids the pre-eminency of ſome over others: but the affecting of ſuperiority, and the love of pre-eminency, is that which our Saviour diſalloweth. Learn, 1. That ſo far ought the miniſters of Chriſt to be from affecting a domination and ſuperiority of power over their fellow-brethren, that, in imitation of Chriſt their Lord and maſter, they ought to account themſelves fellow-ſervants; "I am among you as one that ſerveth." 2. That ſuch miniſters as do love and affect pre-eminency and ſuperiority, are moſt unfit for it, and they deſerve it beſt that ſeek it leaſt. 3. That the dignity and honour which the miniſters of Chriſt ſhould chiefly and only affect, is in another world; and the way to be the greateſt and higheſt there, is to be low and humble here; mean in our own eyes, and little in our own eſteem; Whoſoever is chief, ſays Chriſt, let him be your ſervant. (B.) He ſets himſelf to compoſe this emulation by two arguments, 1. Taken from the different nature of his, from that of the kingdoms of this world: 2. From his own example; who ſought no other pre-eminence, than that of doing and ſuffering more for the good of mankind, than any other perſon whatſoever. (St.)

Which of them ſhall be accounted the greateſt.] That is, which of them ſhould be the greateſt. For the word dokeoo is oftentimes no more than an expletive, as 1 Cor. vii. 40. and elſewhere. (W. and Blackwall.)

Let him be as the younger.] As they who were rulers among the Jews, or judges in their Sanhedrim, were called Elders; ſo others, and eſpecially their officers, who attended them, are commonly, by way of diſtinction, ſtiled neooteroi the younger; and proportionably in the church, as prebyteroi, are they who preſide and govern, called here meizones, greater, ſuperior to others, ſo they who are under them are here called neooteroi. (H.) See the notes on Matt. xx. 26.

Ye are they.] Obſerve here, What an honourable acknowledgement Chriſt makes of the conſtancy of his diſciples love and affection towards him; "Ye are they that have continued with me in my temptations;" that is, in my afflictions, trials, and ſufferings. It is an eaſier matter to abide with Chriſt in days of peace, in times of conſolation; but when we are under afflictions, temptations, and troubles, then to abide and keep cloſe to Chriſt, this is the proof of love and friendſhip: And as Chriſt makes an honourable mention of their conſtancy toward him, ſo he preſently aſſures them of an honourable reward; "I appoint you a kingdom." Learn thence, That ſuch as are ſharers with Chriſt in his ſufferings, ſhall certainly communicate with him in his glory; "If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall alſo reign with him:" And whereas our Saviour promiſes his Apoſtles, "To ſit upon thrones with him, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael;" We may gather, That ſuch miniſters as do moſt ſervice for Chriſt, and forſake moſt to follow him, and continue in temptation and tribulation with him, ſhall in his kingdom partake of moſt honour and dignity with him and from him. (B.)

And I appoint unto you a kingdom.] Chriſt ſpeaks not here of the kingdom common to all the faithful, but of a kingdom proper to his Apoſtles, viz. That, as his father had given him power to make laws, by which all his ſubjects ſhould be governed, and to which they ſhould be ſubject, ſo did he give to his Apoſtles power to deliver to Chriſtians thoſe Evangelical laws which they ſhould all be obliged to obey. Now hence it follows, that the Goſpels and Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, muſt be owned as the laws of Chriſt: And whereas the nobility in a kingdom, uſe to be known by two things, the honour and the power imparted to them, their honour in eating at the king's table, their power in having a ſhare in the government under the king; therefore our Saviour repreſents the honour of his Apoſtles by "eating and drinking with him at his table," and their power by "judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael." (W.)

Sit on thrones judging.] Setting all the dark conjectures about this matter aſide, the moſt ſafe and probable way (in my apprehenſion) of applying this paſſage, is to look upon it, as ſpoken after the manner of men, to ſignify in general a brighter crown, and more exquiſite degrees of happineſs and glory; Juſt as thoſe in princes courts are moſt highly honoured, who are allowed to ſit down with them at their own tables, and are in the chief places of truſt, and moſt eminent poſts about them. Theſe perſons accompanied, and owned, and ſtuck cloſe to Chriſt in his loweſt eſtate; they kept the faith, when there were the greateſt temptations to draw them off from it; they were indefatigably diligent, undauntedly conſtant, in their labours and ſufferings for the truth; and moſt eminently ſerviceable in advancing the kingdom of Chriſt upon earth: And therefore they ſhall receive an eminent diſtinction in his kingdom in heaven. (Stanh.) See the notes on Matt. xix. 28.

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34. And the Lord ſaid, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath deſired to have you, that he may ſift you as wheat: But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren. And he ſaid unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee both into priſon, and to death. And he ſaid, I tell thee, Peter, the cock ſhall not crow this day, before that thou ſhalt thrice deny that thou knoweſt me.

Simon, Simon.] Here our Lord ſpeaks to all the Apoſtles in the perſon of Peter. (G.) The ſenſe of the words is this: As for you, my diſciples in general, and for thee, Peter, in particular, I muſt tell thee, that Satan hath accuſed you all before God, and deſires that he may have the ſifting of you all by his winnowing winds of temptation and perſecution, that he may ſhake your faith, and weaken your confidence; but I have prayed for you all, and particularly for thy ſelf, who art in greateſt danger of falling, becauſe ſo confident of thine own ſtrength and ſtanding, that thy faith, tho' ſeverely ſhaken, may not utterly fail: And when, by repentance, thou art recover'd from thy fall, be careful to confirm and ſtrengthen others, that they fall not in like manner. (B.) Here note, 1. For the conſolation of good men, that Satan cannot afflict or tempt them without Divine Permiſſion, Job i. 12. 2 That Satan is ſaid ſiniaſai, to ſift thoſe whom he tempts and afflicts; becauſe afflictions toſs and ſhake them, as wheat is toſſed and ſhaken in a ſieve. 3. That Chriſt prayed, that the faith of Peter might not fail; not that he was conſtituted by him the head of the church; but becauſe he was ſo infirm in faith as to deny his maſter thrice: Whence he deſerved to make ſhipwreck of his faith, by the ſubſtraction of Divine Grace; and had actually done ſo, had not his ſudden converſion obtained the pardon of his ſin. (W.)

I have prayed for thee.] Obſerve here, 1. That it is not ſaid, I will pray for thee, but I have prayed for thee. Chriſt prayed for Peter, before Peter underſtood that he had need of Chriſt's prayer; Chriſt prayed for Peter as ſoon as ever Satan deſired to ſift Peter: our interceſſor is full as nimble and ſpeedy in his ſuit for us, as Satan is in his accuſations againſt us; he has deſired, but I have prayed; he is a potent aſſailant, but thou haſt a powerful aſſiſtant. 2. The ſubject matter prayed for, "That thy faith fail not;" not that thy faith be not aſſaulted, not that thy faith be not ſhaken, but, that thy faith may not fail by an abſolute and total deficiency. (B.)

Lord, I am ready to go with thee.] St. Peter's reſolution to accompany Chriſt both to priſon and to death, was holy and good: but his too confident opinion of his own ſtrength and ability ſo to do, without a divine aid and aſſiſtance, was his failing and infirmity. (Idem.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 34. and Mark xiv. 30.

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38. And he ſaid unto them, When I ſent you without purſe, and ſcrip, and ſhoes, lacked ye any thing? And they ſaid, Nothing. Then ſaid he unto them, But now he that hath a purſe, let him take it, and likewiſe his ſcrip: and he that hath no ſword, let him ſell his garment, and buy one. For I ſay unto you, that this that is written, muſt yet be accompliſhed in me, And he was reckoned among the tranſgreſſors: for the things concerning me have an end. And they ſaid, Lord, behold, here are two ſwords. And he ſaid unto them, It is enough.

Let him ſell his garment, and buy one.] Here our bleſſed Lord prepares his diſciples, with extraordinary courage, to overcome thoſe dangers they had hitherto been freed from, but after he ſhould leave them they were preſently to encounter. In the verſe foregoing he appeals to them, whether they had wanted any thing in his ſervice, tho' formerly he had ſent them forth without purſes, or ſcrips, or ſhoes, without having taken any common care beforehand for their ſubſiſtance: And they acknowledging they had lacked nothing, he proceeds here to adviſe them, that for the future, whoever had purſes, or ſcrips, they ſhould not neglect them, whoever had not ſwords, they ſhould provide them. (Sprat.) This paſſage is not to be underſtood literally, but figuratively. For our Lord could not intend that his diſciples ſhould "ſell their garments and buy ſwords," and thereby oppoſe force to force; for had this been his deſign, he would not have ſaid, ver. 38. that two ſwords are "enough;" nor would he have blamed St. Peter for uſing his ſword as he did, Matt. xxvi. 52. He wanted not weapons, had he been diſpoſed to put his enemies to flight. Good Expoſitors therefore think, that by theſe figurative expreſſions, our Lord admoniſhed his diſciples to arm themſelves with faith and patience againſt the perilous times which were juſt at hand. (Beza, G. H. W. B. and Fox.) See the notes on Matt. x. 9.

It is enough.] Theſe two ſwords were enough, and even too much for him, who deſigned to defend himſelf only by delivering himſelf up; to fight only by ſuffering, and to conquer only by dying. Theſe were enough to give occaſion to Chriſt to inſtruct the Church, in one of the chief of the Apoſtles, concerning the uſe ſhe was to make of the ſword, concerning the mildneſs we ought to ſhew towards our enemies, and the ſubmiſſion we ought to have for authority; and to give Chriſt an opportunity of doing good to his perſecutors, of making known his power to them, and of ſhewing them plainly that his being ſeized by them, and his death, were altogether voluntary on his part. (Heinſ. G. H. and Q.)

Ver. 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46. And he came out, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his diſciples alſo followed him. And when he was at the place he ſaid unto them, pray, that ye enter not into temptation. And he was withdrawn from them about a ſtones caſt, and kneeled down, and prayed, Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheleſs not my will, but thine be done. And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, ſtrengthening him. And being in an agony, he prayed more earneſtly: and his ſweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. And when he roſe up from prayer, and was come to his diſciples, he found them ſleeping for ſorrow, And ſaid unto them, Why ſleep ye? riſe and pray, leſt ye enter into temptation.

Mount of Olives.] See the notes on chap. xix. 37.

He ſaid unto them, pray.] Prayer is the beſt preparative for, as well as the moſt powerful ſupport under the heavieſt ſufferings that can befall us (Beza and B.) See the notes on Matt. vi. 13. and Luke xviii. 1.

He was withdrawn.] The ancient Greek and Latin manuſcripts read it apeſtathee, receſſit; not apespasthee. But it is obſervable, that among the Helleniſts, even apespasthee is uſed to ſignify no more than to depart, as in 2 Macc. xii. 10. and Acts xxi. 1. So that if this be the word in this place, it muſt certainly ſignify, and will be beſt render'd, he withdrew, or departed from them. (H.) Theſe circumſtances of our Bleſſed Saviour's prayer, are the pattern of a chriſtian prayer in affliction, under the apprehenſion of danger, and the expectation of death. 1. We muſt ſeparate ourſelves even from our deareſt friends, in order to open our hearts to God alone. 2. We muſt humble ourſelves internally at leaſt, and if we are able externally alſo. 3. We muſt lay our condition before God with plainneſs and ſimplicity. 4. We muſt be full of truſt and confidence. 5. We muſt ſpeak but little. 6. We muſt reſign ourſelves up to the will of God, and chuſe rather to have that done than our own. 7. We muſt perſevere in praying. 8. We muſt not reject thoſe external conſolations which God ſends us in our troubles. 9. We muſt fight valiantly againſt every thing within us which oppoſes the will of God. 10. We muſt pray the more earneſtly, and redouble our fervency, when the affliction or temptation is redoubled. 11. We muſt be prepared to reſiſt even unto blood, in fighting againſt ſin. And, 12. We muſt not forget even the wants of thoſe who are intruſted to our care. (Q.)

If thou be willing.] As Chriſt had two natures, being God and man, ſo he had two diſtinct wills: As man, he feared and ſhunned death; as God-man, he willingly ſubmitted to it. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 39. and Mark xiv. 36.

Remove this cup.] The afflictions which God ſends on men, are often in ſcripture expreſs'd by the name of a cup. This is a metaphor borrowed from an ancient cuſtom of giving a cup, full of poiſon, to thoſe who were condemned to dye, as was done to Socrates; and as the Jews preſented to our Saviour vinegar and gall, Matth. xxvii. 34. according to their cuſtom on ſuch occaſions, to leſſen the pain of the perſon that ſuffered. There was likewiſe a cuſtom among the ancients, that thoſe who entertained their friends, gave them laws of drinking, which they were not at liberty to tranſgreſs, either as to the quantity or quality of what they were to drink: which cuſtom all reaſonable perſons look'd upon as a ſingular happineſs to be exempted from; as appears from Eſth. i. 8. as well as from that in Horace, ſerm. l. 2. ſat. 6.

Prout cuique libido eſt,
Siccat inæquales calices conviva, ſolutus
Legibus inſanis.

My gueſts ſhall have good liquors to their fill;
And every one drink freely what he will:
None ſhall preſcribe or dictate to the reſt;
Freedom and hearty welcome's always beſt.

And there appeared an Angel unto him from heaven ſtrengthening him.] In St. Jerome's time, theſe words ſeem to be wanting, both in ſome Latin and Greek copies; nor hath Ambroſe any thing of this Angel, in his commentary on this chapter: but Epiphanius, anſwering an objection of the Arians, (who contended that Chriſt could not be God, becauſe he wanted the help of Angels,) acknowledged, that this was written in the goſpel of St. Luke; making no mention of any variation of the copies: whence it may be conjectured, that this variation happened after the conflict with the Arians. But, whereas Woltzogenius ſaith, after them, that this anxiety and conſternation of our Lord, which required, that he ſhould be ſtrengthened by an Angel, proves, he was not God; he might as well have hence concluded, that he was not "filled with the ſpirit above meaſure:" and, before he made this concluſion, he ſhould have confuted Grotius ſaying here, that "the divinity dwelling in him had ſubſtracted his influence; whence Chriſt, being left to his own nature, needed the comfort of an Angel:" For otherwiſe, he who, with a word, made the whole band of ſoldiers "fall to the Ground," John xviii. 6. and healed the ear of Malchus with a touch, ver. 51 of this chapter, ſure gave ſufficient indications of the divinity reſiding in him. (W.)

Sweat, as it were great drops of blood.] That Chriſt ſweat drops of blood, is not affirmed in this place, but only that he ſweat drops of ſweat, of a ſtrange thickneſs or viſcouſneſs, and conſequently as big as the drops wherein blood is wont to fall upon the ground. So ſaith Juſtin Martyr, Theophylact, and Euthymius; and 'tis Ariſtotles obſervation of the "men in agony, that they ſweat extremely." But that the ſweat ſhould ſo far exceed the proportion of ſweat, as the drops wherein blood uſes to fall are above the drops wherein ſweat is wont, this was the ſtrange thing, and the expreſſion of the heavineſs of this agony, which is here mentioned. But I ſee nothing why this might not be ſo great an agony, as to force blood out of his capillary veins, to mix with it; this being no unuſual thing. For Ariſtotle ſays, "Some have ſweat a bloody ſweat" &c. and Diodorus Siculus ſays of the Indian Serpents, that "if any one be bitten by them, he is tormented with exceſſive pains, and ſeized with a bloody ſweat" (W.) The agony ſignifies the vehemence of the ſtruggle which Chriſt was then under: for he had not only the terrors of death to ſtruggle with, as all men have; for, if ſo, many of the martyrs might have been thought to have had more conſtancy than Chriſt himſelf: but he lay under the weight of the terrible judgment of his father's wrath, as having taken the burthen of our ſins upon him, to which nothing can poſſibly be imagined to be equally formidable. (B)

Ver. 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53. And while he yet ſpake, behold a multitude; and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jeſus to kiſs him. But Jeſus ſaid unto him, Judas, betrayeſt thou the ſon of man with a kiſs? When they which were about him ſaw what would follow, they ſaid unto him, Lord, ſhall we ſmite with the ſword? And one of them ſmote the ſervant of the high-prieſt, and cut off his right ear. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, Suffer ye thus far: and he touched his ear and healed him. Then Jeſus ſaid unto the chief prieſts and captains of the temple, and the elders which were come to him, Be ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and ſtaves? When I was daily with you in the temple, ye ſtretched forth no hands againſt me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkneſs.

To kiſs him.] See the note on Matth. xxvi. 47.

Shall we ſmite with the ſword.] Here, being in doubt, between what nature dictated, and the precepts of patience, ſo often repeated to them, the diſciples put this queſtion to our Lord: but Peter, without waiting for an anſwer, endeavours to repel force by force. (G.) Zeal, which carries us beyond the bounds of our vocation, is by no means acceptable to Chriſt. (Beza.) They know Chriſt but little who are for defending him by force of arms. He is very far from deſiring to ſave his own life, by expoſing that of others; ſince he came on purpoſe to ſhed his blood, and to die for mankind. (Q.)

And one of them ſmote.] This was Peter; as appears, John xviii. 10. There were two Swords in Chriſt's family, and Peter bore one: either becauſe he was to kill the paſchal lamb, or, according to the cuſtom of the country, to ſecure them from beaſts of prey, which in thoſe parts were frequent and dangerous in the night. But now St. Peter uſed it in an unlawful war: he had no competent authority: It was againſt the miniſters of his lawful prince: and againſt our prince we muſt not draw a ſword for Chriſt himſelf; he having forbidden it. As his "kingdom is not of this world," ſo neither were his defences ſecular; tears and prayers being the only, and proper, arms of the true ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt. (Taylor and Howel) Tho' St. Peter's heart was ſincere, his hand was too raſh: good intentions are no warrant for irregular actions; and accordingly Chriſt, who accepted the affection, reproved the action. To reſiſt authority, even in Chriſt's own defence, is raſh zeal, and diſcountenanced by the goſpel. (B.) "Put up thy ſword," ſays he, O Peter: ſubmit with patience: oppoſe not authority: do not thou break the laws of thy country, tho' for kindneſs and love of me. "Put up thy ſword:" he that uſes the ſword unlawfully, tho' on a pretence ever ſo pious, "ſhall periſh by the ſword;" ſhall either be deſtroyed by it here, or puniſhed hereafter by God himſelf for having ſo uſed it: Wherefore we are not to conclude, that our bleſſed Lord, by this check given to St. Peter, did abſolutely prohibit all manner of uſing the ſword among chriſtians; but only that he taught us the great duty of chriſtian ſubmiſſion: for, if St. Peter was, then certainly all other chriſtian ſubjects are, forbidden to unſheath their ſword againſt their lawful ſoveraign, or his miniſters, as they are commiſſion'd by him, tho' they do it on a pretext ſo ſpiritual as the cauſe of Chriſt himſelf. (Sprat) This conduct of our bleſſed ſaviour, in his own caſe, doth ſo expreſly diſcharge all buſtling and fighting, on the pretence of religion, that we muſt either ſet up for another goſpel, or utterly reject what is ſo formally condemned by the author of this we profeſs to believe. (Burn.) If neither the malice of the Jews, nor the innocence of our Lord; if neither the truth of our religion, perſecuted in its founder, nor the apparent marks of malice and envy, of violence and oppreſſion, which appeared in the whole courſe of their proſecution of him, were ſufficient to warrant St. Peter to draw the ſword in his defence, againſt that legal authority by which they acted, we muſt conclude, that neither will any of theſe pretences ſuffice to juſtify any other chriſtians in the like circumſtances now: But, if it ſhall pleaſe God, at any time, to permit the lawful powers to be againſt us, we muſt ſubmit patiently to their authority; and not, with this warm apoſtle, "take the ſword" againſt thoſe to whom God has committed the power of the ſword. (Wake)

Suffer ye thus far.] I do not think that Chriſt ſpake this to his diſciples, bidding them to permit his enemies to deal thus with him, and not do any thing for his reſcue: but rather that he ſpake thus to the ſoldiers, permit this injury, or aſſault, offered by one of my apoſtles, which I will preſently repair; for it follows, "and he healed him." And this he ſaid, and did, partly to ſhew, that he who had ſuch power to heal, and throw down his enemies, was taken willingly, and not for want of power to preſerve himſelf; and partly to preſerve his apoſtles from their aſſaults. (W.) But it ſeems ſtill more reaſonable, that Chriſt ſpake theſe words to thoſe who came to apprehend him; to let him alone, but ſo long as to reſtore the man's ear; which he did. (H.) The only miracle wrought by Chriſt, without being ask'd of him. (Q.) And it is remarkable, that as Peter, from whom the pope pretends to claim his ſupremacy, was the perſon reſiſting; ſo the perſon wounded, and miraculouſly healed again, was called Malchus, which in the original ſignifies a King: not without a myſtery, to ſhew us the unlawfulneſs of the doctrine of killing and depoſing lawful Kings, ſo much contended for by ſome of the worſt of papiſts, and from them taken up by others.

Captains of the temple.] It is paſt doubt with me, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, that theſe "Captains of the temple" were not the Roman ſoldiers placed in the tower of Antonia; of whoſe conſpiring againſt the life of Chriſt we read not; but the captains of the ſeveral watches of the temple. For, ſay the Jews, the prieſts kept watch in three places of the temple, and the Levites in twenty-one: and to every one of theſe watches there was a chief; they conſiſting of many, and to them all, one who was eminently archegos, the Captain, or chief ruler of the temple. But theſe, ſay ſome, could not be the Jews, becauſe they kept watch at the paſſover, and on the ſabbath. To this I anſwer, that the Jews did not think their feaſts or ſabbaths were prophaned by ſervice done in, and for the temple on that day. That the Jews had then ſuch watches, we learn from thoſe words of Pilate, Matt. xxvii. 65. "Ye have a watch:" that the office of the prieſts and levites was called a warfare, ſee 1 Cor. ix. 7. that theſe captains were not Romans, may probably be argued even from their name, "captains of the temple;" which name is never given by Joſephus to the governours of the ſoldiers in the tower of Antonia; they being by him called phrourarchoi, "the governours of the caſtle;" whereas this officer is ſtill called ho ſtrategos, "the ruler of the temple," both by the ſcripture, Acts iv. 1. and v. 24, 26. and by Joſephus: and by Dr. Lightfoot, he is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the man of the mount, ſo often mentioned in the Jewiſh writers, or the ruler of the mountain of the houſe. And by what we read of him both in Joſephus and the ſcripture, he ſeems to be an officer of the high prieſts, appointed to bring them who offended in the temple, (as the apoſtles were thought to have done, by preaching in it Jeſus,) to the high-prieſt and ſanhedrim, to be puniſhed. (W.)

This is your hour.] This is the time in which it is permitted to the devil and you, to exerciſe your malice, and to execute your bloody deſigns againſt me. (Idem and H.)

Ver. 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62. Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high-prieſt's houſe. And Peter followed afar off. And when they had kindled a fire in the midſt of the hall, and were ſet down together, Peter ſat down among them. But a certain maid beheld him as he ſat by the fire, and earneſtly looked upon him and ſaid, This man was alſo with him. And he denied him, ſaying, Woman I know him not. And after a little while, another ſaw him, and ſaid, Thou art alſo of them. And Peter ſaid, Man, I am not. And about the ſpace of one hour after, another confidently affirmed, ſaying, Of a truth this fellow alſo was with him; for he is a Galilean. And Peter ſaid, Man, I know not what thou ſayeſt. And immediately while he yet ſpake the cock crew. And the Lord turned, ned, and looked upon Peter: and Peter remembred the word of the Lord, how he had ſaid unto him, Before the cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice: And Peter went out and wept bitterly.

And he denied him.] How may the ſlaviſh fear of ſuffering drive the holieſt and beſt of men to commit the fouleſt and worſt of ſins. It was a great aggravation of St. Peter's ſin, that the voice of a poor maid, which kept the door, ſhould be of more force to overcome him, than his faith in Jeſus to ſuſtain him: but ſmall things are ſufficient to caſt us down, if God doth not hold us up. He denies Chriſt again and again; firſt with a lye, then with an oath, and next with a curſe. (B.)

Immediately, while he yet ſpake.] Even while he was ſwearing and curſing, "the cock crew," and, as it were, took the words out of his mouth. Which circumſtance teacheth us, that tho' God ſee good to let his children fall, yet he will not long leave them, and ſuffer them to lie in ſin, (as St. John ſaith, this wicked world doth, 1 John v. 19.) but will ſeaſonably and ſpeedily put under his hand, to help them up again, and ſtrike their hearts before they be cauterized through cuſtom, which take away the ſenſe of ſin. (Jackſ.) The Greeks tell us, that a cock is called alectoor in their tongue, becauſe by his crowing he doth waken men, and raiſe them out of their beds: and the word ephooneeſe, which we render crew, literally ſignifies, "he lift up his voice," or according to the vulgar Latin phraſe, he ſung. (Idem.) The cock was a preacher to call St. Peter to his duty; there being ſomething of emblem between a cock and a preacher: the preacher ought to have the wings of a cock, to rouſe himſelf from drowſineſs and ſecurity, and to awaken others to a ſenſe of their duty: he muſt have the watchfulneſs of the cock, to be ever ready to diſcover and forewarn danger: he muſt have the voice of the cock, to cry aloud, to tell Iſrael of their ſin, to terrify the roaring lion of hell, and make him tremble, as they ſay the natural lion does: in a word, he muſt obſerve the hours of the cock, to crow at all ſeaſons, to preach the word "in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon." (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 34. and Mark xiv. 30.

The lord turned, and looked upon Peter.] Silently admoniſhing him of his preſumptuous boaſting, as well as of the neceſſity of his ſpeedy repentance. (G.) Chriſt was now upon his trial for his life, (a time when our thoughts would have been wholly taken up about our ſelves:) but even then did Chriſt find leiſure to think upon Peter, to remember his diſconſolate diſciple, to turn himſelf about, and give him a pitiful but piercing look; even a look that melted and diſſolved him into tears. (B.)

Went out, and wept bitterly.] As this fall of St. Peter ought to be applied for a neceſſary mortification of our vanity; ſo may it likewiſe ſerve us for a ſupport under our frailties and temptations: but then this is a comfort which can be regularly adminiſtred to none, except to them who are careful, to be like him in his repentance. As his fault was ſudden and ſurprizing; ſo was his recovery ſpeedy and effectual: Long it was not, before he was awakened into recollection, by the crowing of the cock, and a pitying look of his injured maſter. Immediately upon the reflection, he forſook the guilty ſcene of his foul offence, ſought a convenient place for retired thoughts, melted away in tears for the horror of his crime, and from thence-forward became again the ſame faithful, affectionate, undaunted St. Peter he had been before. The book of Acts informs us at large, what noble reparation he afterwards made for this breach of faith: how vigorous and bold he was in preaching; how forward, and even joyful, in ſuffering for the goſpel of his once-denied Lord. (Stanh.) Eccleſiaſtical hiſtory reports, that ever after, when St. Peter heard the crowing of the cock, he fell upon his knees and wept: Others ſay, that he was wont to riſe, and ſpend the time in prayer and humiliation, between cock-crowing and daylight; and hence began that practice of ſetting up weather-cocks upon towers and ſteeples, to put people in mind of St. Petet's fall and repentance, by that ſignal. (B.) Have any of us fallen with Peter, tho' not with a formal abjuration, yet by a practical denying of him; let us go forth and weep with him; let us be more watchful over ourſelves for the time to come; let us expreſs more fervent love and zeal for Chriſt, more diligence in his ſervice, more concern for his honour and glory: this would be an happy improvement of this example; God grant it may have that bleſſed effect. (Idem.) See the note on Mark xiv. 72.

Ver. 63, 64, 65. And the men that held Jeſus mocked him, and ſmote him. And when they had blindfolded him, they ſtruck him on the face, and asked him, ſaying, Propheſy, who is it that ſmote thee? And many other things blaſphemouſly ſpake they againſt him.

The men that held Jeſus.] The ſoldiers and ſervants, and the baſeſt ſort of the people, who had him in cuſtody, took the advantage of the time, while the pack'd convention of the Sanhedrim was preparing to aſſemble; thus to divert themſelves, with mocking, ſmiting, and otherwiſe outrageouſly inſulting him, and blaſphemouſly ſpeaking againſt him. What degree of contempt, what mark of ſhame, what kind of ſuffering, can we then be expoſed to, which we ought not chearfully to undergo for his ſake, who endured ſo much with patience for our ſakes?

Propheſy, who is it.] The word propheteuo, here uſed, properly ſignifies to foretell ſomething that is afterwards to happen: Tho' it is alſo uſed to ſignify the expounding and applying of the ſcriptures to the edification of the church; as 1 Cor. xiv. 3, 24. &c. But here it is uſed for gueſſing; when they had blindfolded our Lord, and ſtruck him, they ask him to gueſs, or tell, who it was that had ſmote him.

Ver. 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71. And aſſoon as it was day, the elders of the people, and the chief-prieſts and the ſcribes came together, and led him into their council, Saying, Art thou the Chriſt? tell us. And he ſaid unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe: And if I alſo ask you, ye will not anſwer me, nor let me go. Hereafter ſhall the Son of man ſit on the right hand of the power of God. Then ſaid they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he ſaid unto them, Ye ſay that I am. And they ſaid, What need we any further witneſs? for we ourſelves have heard of his own mouth.

Art thou the Chriſt? If theſe men had been willing to have believed, they ſhould have asked the prophecies concerning Chriſt, and the miracles which he had wrought; and theſe would have anſwered for him, that he was the only Son of God: But they would fain induce him to ſpeak, with no other deſign than to deſtroy him. (Q.)

If I alſo ask you.] That is, if I demonſtrate to you, by ever ſo convincing arguments, that I am the Meſſiah, ye will neither anſwer my proofs, nor yet yield to the force of them. (G. and H.)

Art thou then the Son of God?] They conclude Chriſt guilty of blaſphemy, and conſequently of death, becauſe he ſtiled himſelf the Son of God; not in their ſenſe, in which they allowed that of the Pſalmiſt to belong to him, "Thou art my Son," Pſalm ii. 7, 12. but in his own; i. e. becauſe "being a man he made himſelf God," John x. 33. Whence it is manifeſt, 1. That in the ſenſe of the Jews, to own himſelf the Son of God, and to make himſelf God, was the ſame thing. 2. Hence alſo it is certain, that the Jews of that age did not think the Meſſias was to be God, but only a man, who could not challenge to himſelf divinity; ſeeing they never conclude him a blaſphemer, becauſe he ſaid he was the Chriſt, but only becauſe he ſaid he was the "Son of God," making himſelf "equal with God," John v. 18. and becauſe he declared, he ſhortly was to "ſit at the right hand of power," Matt. xxvi. 64. (W.)

CHAP. XXIII.

Jeſus is accuſed before Pilate, and ſent to Herod. Herod mocketh him, and ſendeth him again to Pilate; whereby they are reconciled to each other. Barabbas is preferred to Jeſus, and releaſed. Jeſus delivered up to be crucified: Telleth the mourning women of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: Is crucified between two malefactors: Prayeth for his enemies. One of the malefactors, reviling him, is rebuked by the other. His death, and burial.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND the whole multitude of them aroſe, and led him unto Pilate. And they began to accuſe him, ſaying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Ceſar; ſaying, that he himſelf is Chriſt a king. And Pilate asked him, ſaying, Art thou the king of the Jews? And he anſwered him and ſaid, Thou ſayeſt it. Then ſaid Pilate to the chief-prieſts, and to the people, I find no fault in this man. And they were the more fierce, ſaying, He ſtirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

The whole multitude of them aroſe.] The Jews, having condemned the holy Jeſus of blaſphemy, and now all things being ready for the purpoſe, the high-prieſt and his council led him to the houſe of Pilate; hoping that he would verify their ſentence, and order execution. St. Baſil affirms, that the high prieſt cauſed him to be led with a cord about his neck; and in memory of that, the prieſts for many ages wore a ſtole about theirs: But the Jews did it according to the cuſtom of the nation, to ſignify that he was condemned to death. (Taylor and Howel.) The Jews at that time were under the dominion of the Romans; who, tho' they permitted them the liberty of their religion, and whatſoever depended directly on that, yet they debarred them of civil juriſdiction, and all cognizance of capital crimes, as in other provinces they were accuſtomed to do: So that they, having no authority to put him to death, led him thus to Pilate, who was the Roman preſident for Judæa. (Hayward.)

They began to accuſe him.] Chriſt, who was accuſed of blaſphemy againſt God, of treaſon againſt Cæſar, and of ſowing ſedition among the people, affords abundance of conſolation to thoſe who ſuffer under calumny; and admoniſhes judges and princes not to give credit to it very eaſily. No conduct or behaviour, how upright and innocent ſoever, can ſecure a man from accuſations of this nature, ſince that of Chriſt could not ſecure him from them. (Q.)

Perverting the nation.] The holy Jeſus endeavoured to recall the people from a moſt corrupt and erroneous life, into the way of truth and ſalvation: And this is what theſe impious wretches ſtile perverting them. (G.) Diaſtrephonta; the ſame word which wicked Ahab had miſ-applied to Elijah, when he charged him with being ho diaſtrephoon ton Iſrael, (according to the Septuagint) he that troubleth or perverteth Iſrael, 1 Kings xviii. 17.

Forbidding to give tribute to Cæſar.] The Jews, perceiving the governour's coolneſs and indifference towards them, very artfully attempt him. For, knowing him to be a creature of the court of Rome, and a ſlave to its greatneſs, the high-prieſt, to the ſcandal of his character, becomes informer and proſecutor; accuſing Jeſus of ſedition, denying to pay tribute to Cæſar, and calling himſelf king. Here was an impeachment of high-treaſon againſt the Roman empire; and of which, as they thought, the governour could not but take ſtrict cognizance, tho' it was no part of the accuſation of thoſe crimes they had condemned him for. (How.) But, that here they lied againſt their own conſciences, is evident from Matt. xxii. 21. But yet, this lie was covered under two ſpecious pretences, 1. That he profeſſed himſelf "king of the Jews," which theſe hypocrites here abuſe, to render him odious to the Romans, tho' they themſelves ſtill gave this title to the Meſſiah. 2. That he was a Galilean, and ſo likely to embrace the opinion of Judas Gaulonites, who held it was not lawful to pay tribute to Cæſar. (W.) See the notes on chap. xx. 22.

Saying, that he himſelf is Chriſt, a king.] He is guilty of a lie, even who only conceals any part of the truth which is material to the point in hand. And this the Jews here do: For tho' Chriſt did ſay, that he was a king, yet he declared, that his kingdom was not of this world, John xviii. 36. (G.)

Thou ſayeſt it.] It is as thou haſt ſaid. (W.) Hence the apoſtle ſays, "Jeſus Chriſt, before Pontius Pilate, witneſſed the good confeſſion," 1 Tim. vi. 13. teaching us, that tho' we may, and ſometimes ought to hold our peace, when our reputation is concerned, yet we muſt never be ſilent, when the honour of God and his truth may be effectually promoted by a free and full confeſſion. (B.)

I find no fault in this man.] Chriſt, who was to be condemned of ſedition, was firſt declared innocent, that it might be manifeſt, that he voluntarily ſubmitted to ſuffer the puniſhment of our ſins, not of his own, for he had none. (Beza.) It is ſomething indeed, for a judge not to ſuppreſs and ſtifle the knowledge which he has of innocence: but he becomes the more guilty upon this account, if he abandons the defence of it, and delivers it up to its enemies. (Q.)

They were the more fierce.] It is the common artifice of thoſe, whoſe bad doctrine or hypocriſy is diſcovered and laid open by others, to decry their accuſers as turbulent and ſeditious perſons. To hinder ſuch falſe teachers from corrupting every thing, by their pernicious maxims and calumnies, is, if you will believe them, to trouble the conſciences of men, and to diſturb the peace of church and ſtate. (Idem.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean. And aſſoon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's juriſdiction, he ſent him to Herod, who himſelf was alſo at Jeruſalem at that time. And when Herod ſaw Jeſus, he was exceeding glad: for he was deſirous to ſee him of a long ſeaſon, becauſe he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have ſeen ſome miracle done by him. Then he queſtioned with him in many words; but he anſwered him nothing. And the chief-prieſts and ſcribes ſtood, and vehemently accuſed him. And Herod, with his men of war, ſet him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and ſent him again to Pilate. And the ſame day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before, they were at enmity between themſelves.

Heard of Galilee.] The Jews ſeem here to have mentioned Galilee, to incite Pilate againſt Chriſt as a ſeditious perſon, and to inſinuate, that he was an enemy to Cæſar, forbidding to pay tribute to him; the Galileans being prone to ſedition and rebellion upon that account, for which ſome of them were ſlain by Pilate. (W.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 1.

He ſent him to Herod.] Pilate, being informed that Jeſus was a Galilean, readily takes hold of this occaſion, to diſcharge himſelf from the Jews importunity, and his own further concern in this unjuſt trial: Beſides, conſidering that Galilee was under Herod's government, and ſuppoſing Herod, by his knowledge in the Jewiſh religion and laws, to be a fitter judge for the cognizance of this caſe, he remitted the hearing of it to Herod, who was perſonally then at Jeruſalem, on the occaſion of the feaſt. (How.) Tho' Herod was an homicide, an inceſtuous adulterer, a man widely wicked, yet our Saviour appeared before him; to teach us obedience to ſuperior magiſtrates, and not ſo much to enquire into their lives, as into their authority. (Hayw.) Chriſt never went to court of his own accord; he is led thither: And he appears there in bonds; to ſignify to us, that truth is there ſeldom free from captivity and inſults! (Q.)

He hoped to have ſeen ſome miracle done by him.] To divert him, as is uſual at court. But God is not ſo prodigal of his acts of power, as to make them ſubſervient to human curioſity. (G.)

But he anſwered him nothing.] Thus did the holy Jeſus reprove the ſottiſh careleſneſs of Herod; who, living in the place of his abode, never had ſeen his perſon, or heard his ſermons. If we neglect the opportunities of grace, and refuſe to hear the voice of Chriſt, in the time of mercy and divine appointment, we may arrive at that ſtate of miſery, in which Chriſt will refuſe to ſpeak one word of comfort to us; and the homilies of the Goſpel ſhall be dead letters, and the ſpirit not at-all refreſhed, nor the underſtanding inſtructed, nor the affections moved, nor the will determined: but, becauſe we have, during all our time, ſtop'd our ears, in his time God will ſtop his mouth, and ſhut up the ſprings of grace, that we ſhall receive no refreſhment or inſtruction, or pardon or felicity. (Tayl.)

The chief-prieſts and ſcribes.] Corrupt prieſts and teachers are generally the moſt implacable enemies of Chriſt and of the truth. (Q.)

Herod, with his men of war.] Among thoſe Greeks who follow the Hebrew idiom, ſtrateia, ſtratia, and ſtrateuma (the word here uſed) do ordinarily and primarily ſignify military forces: But they are alſo uſed, ſecondly, for any great concourſe, or aſſembly; as where we meet with ſtrateia ouranou paſa, which we render exercitus, "the hoſt of heaven;" that is, the whole company of heaven: And thirdly, for officers, ſervants or attendants. In which laſt ſenſe we have here ſtrateumata, for the officers, ſervants or attendants of Herod: And ſo the Syriac tranſlates it, and gives us authority to do the like; tho' otherwiſe it might be render'd, more vulgarly, either his company, or his ſoldiers about him. (H.) The company of nobles, and military officers, which had attended Herod out of Galilee. (Beza.) For it is not probable, that Pilate would have ſuffered him to come into Judæa and Jeruſalem with a formal army, eſpecially ſince they two "were at enmity between themſelves," ver. 12.

Arrayed him in a gorgeous robe.] Learned men do here tranſlate estheeta lampran, a ſplendid garment, as the Greek word properly ſignifies; but according to the Latin way of ſpeaking, it ſhould rather be render'd white. (Leigh.) Tho' purple and white colours were not appropriated unto kings, yet theſe colours were in chief eſteem, and principally uſed by them: yea, purple, above others, was affected by the emperors and nobility of Rome, and white by the nobility of the Jews: whence the Hebrews term their noblemen, and ſuch as are of beſt rank, chorim, albatos, men clad in white; and on the contrary, men of meaner rank, chaſchucim, ſordidatos, men clad with a foul garment, or "in vile rayment," James ii. 2. This may be the reaſon why, when the Jews accuſed Chriſt of treaſon, Pilate's ſoldiers put on him a ſcarlet, or rather a purple robe, Matt. xxvii. 28. Mark xv. 17. John xix. 2. and Herod, and his, put on him a white one; both therein applying themſelves to the cuſtoms of their own country, and in deriſion cloathing him as a king. (Godw.) Tho' this was commonly a robe of honour or excellency, it was given to Chriſt in mockage. (Marbeck.) See the notes on Matt: xxvii. 28. and Mark xv. 17. And, ſince that accident to our Lord, the church hath, not indecently, choſe to clothe her prieſts with albs, or white garments. (Tayl.)

Pilate and Herod were made friends.] The enmity, which had before been between them, is ſuppoſed to have been occaſioned by the ſlaughter of the Galileans made by Pilate, chap. xiii. 1. (G.) Irreligious men and hereticks, tho' ever ſo oppoſite to one another, frequently unite together againſt Chriſt, his truth, and his church. Worldly intereſt divides carnal men, and worldly intereſt makes them friends again; but religion rather ſuffers than gains by this reconcilement. (Q.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. And Pilate, when he had called together the chief prieſts, and the rulers, and the people, Said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and behold, I having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man, touching thoſe things whereof ye accuſe him: No, nor yet Herod: for I ſent you to him, and lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him. I will therefore chaſtiſe him, and releaſe him. For of neceſſity he muſt releaſe one unto them at the feaſt. And they cried out all at once, ſaying, Away with this man, and releaſe unto us Barabbas: (Who for a certain ſedition made in the city, and for murder, was caſt into priſon.) Pilate therefore, willing to releaſe Jeſus, ſpake again to them. But they cried, ſaying, Crucify him, crucify him. And he ſaid unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cauſe of death in him: I will therefore chaſtiſe him, and let him go. And they were inſtant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified: and the voices of them, and of the chief prieſts, prevailed. And Pilate gave ſentence, that it ſhould be as they required. And he releaſed unto them him that for ſedition and murder was caſt into priſon, whom they had deſired; but he delivered Jeſus to their will. And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the croſs, that he might bear it after Jeſus.

Found no fault in this man.] How much more juſtice and equity did Chriſt meet with from Pilate, an heathen, than from the chief prieſts and people of the Jews, profeſſing the true religion? He abſolves him, while the hypocritical Jews, that heard his doctrine, and ſaw his miracles, do condemn him. (B.) His conduct will certainly condemn thoſe Chriſtian judges, who do not hold out in defence of calumniated innocence, even ſo long as this heathen. (Q.)

No, nor yet Herod.] Here he enforceth his own opinion, by that of Herod; as if he had ſaid, If ye do not believe me, that he is innocent, believe Herod, who is your own countryman, and of your own religion. (G.)

Nothing worthy of death is done unto him.] Herod ſent him back again, without any ſign or token, whereby he could be underſtood to deſerve death. (Idem.)

I will therefore chaſtiſe him, and releaſe him.] If Chriſt be guilty, why ſhould he be releaſed? If he be innocent, why ſhould he be chaſtiſed? (Q.) Pilate, being willing to deliver Jeſus from capital ſentence, appointed this of ſcourging to be inflicted on him. For that Pilate did not believe Chriſt guilty of any capital crime, it is evident, and conſequently not fit to be crucified: ſo likewiſe, beſides his own conſcience, his wife's dream did make him very unwilling to pronounce ſentence of death on him, but very induſtrious to find ſome pretence of releaſing him; and finally 'twas only the importunity of the Jews, to which he ſacrificed him: And here it is plain, that he propoſes to the Jews the ſcourging of him, as a lighter puniſhment, proportionable to his crimes, and then that he may releaſe him. From hence therefore 'tis evident, that the notion of his ſcourging was that of a lighter puniſhment, to releaſe him from a greater, (and that, as John ſets it, inflicted on him before the ſentence of death was pronounced againſt him) tho' when that was done, he was fain to gratify them, by delivering him up to their fury to be crucified alſo. And ſo the place may well be render'd, Matt. xxvii. 26. "having ſcourged Jeſus," that is, formerly having done ſo, he proceeded farther, and "delivered him to be crucified:" And Mark xv. 15. "He delivered Jeſus, having ſcourged him, (having done ſo before he thus delivered him,) to be crucified." And this ſort of ſcourging was a puniſhment uſual among the Jews for offences not capital. See Deut. xxv. 3. and 2 Cor. xi. 24. (H. and W.) Scourging was two-fold; either virgit, with rods, or flagellis, with ſcourges: Both which were in uſe among the Romans, but only the latter among the Jews. The ſcourge conſiſted of three throngs, ſo that each blow gave three ſtripes: And in their greateſt corrections they gave thirteen blows, that is, "forty ſtripes ſave one." (Godw.)

Of neceſſity he muſt releaſe one.] Cuſtom had laid a neceſſity on him. But this was no cuſtom of the Jews; only a popular act of grace, or favour of the governour, introduced by Pilate himſelf. And thus the emperors Valentinian, Theodoſius, and Arcadius, by a general law, commanded the judges, that on the firſt day of the paſſover, all the priſoners of the Jews, except thoſe who were committed for ſome certain crimes, ſhould be releaſed. (H.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 15. and Mark xv. 6.

They cried out all at once.] This is uſually a property of the wicked, in matters of virtue to diſagree one from another, ſo many men, ſo many minds; but in wickedneſs and miſchief, as if they were quickned by one ſpirit, they all jump in one judgment, they always concur in one deſire. (Hayw.) But, by that phraſe of "the people," or "all the people," is not meant every individual, but the greater part; as when a thing becomes very general among the people. Thus it is ſaid, "all the congregation of the children of Iſrael murmured againſt Moſes," Numb. xvi. 41. whereas 'tis plain, many were on Moſes's ſide: that "all the men of Iſrael came to Jeruſalem, and choſe Abſalom," 2 Sam. xvi. 15, 18. whereas many were with David: and that they were "all dead men," Iſa. xxxvii. 36. when the angel had ſmitten a great many, in the camp of the Aſſyrians. See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 22.

Releaſe unto us Barabbas.] Theſe wretches made a great outcry concerning the publick good, the rights of the prince, and the royal prerogative, in order to oppreſs our bleſſed Saviour: but they entirely forget and neglect all this, in begging the releaſement of a ſeditious perſon, and an enemy to peace and the public good! (Q.) Deſiring to have him crucified who raiſed the dead, and to have the other releaſed who deſtroyed the living. (Tayl.) Pilate himſelf put them in mind of the cuſtom of releaſing a priſoner, and would have had them choſen Jeſus, Matt. xxvii. 15, 17. and John xviii. 39. To this end, he puts Barabbas in nomination with him; one that was a murderer and a robber; in hopes, 'tis likely, to determine them, by ſuch an odious and abhorred compariſon, to pitch on Jeſus. There were, no queſtion, many malefactors in their priſons: Barabbas had many accomplices that lay bound with him, Mark xv. 7. for inſurrection, but he alone had committed murder in that inſurrection: and this villain, above all, he fixes on, to ſee if that could move them to prefer Jeſus to him. (Fleetwood and Delaune.) And haply, this might be one ſecret cauſe why Barabbas was preferred before him; Barabbas, albeit a villainous offender, did bear no man's ſin but his own, but Jeſus was charged with all the ſins of the world. This alſo might haply be a ſecret cauſe which did ſtrike him into ſuch a ſet ſilence, as neither the malice of accuſers, nor falſhood of witneſſes, nor injury of officers, nor cruelty or partiality of judges, were able to break it: For his innocency needed not, and our guiltineſs could not poſſibly be defended. (Hayward.)

Crucify him, crucify him.] See here how vainly variable the opinions of men are; how uncertain the friendſhip of the world! conſtant only in inconſtancy, and perſiſting in nothing but in change. They who, but ſix days before, cried out, Hoſannah in the higheſt, do now cry out, crucify him, crucify him! They who ſaluted him for their King, do preſently profeſs that they have no king but Cæſar! They who had met him with olive branches, do now preſent him with ſwords and ſtaves! They who had ſpread their garments before him, did now deſpoile him of his own! Finally, they who did both acknowledge and adore him for the ſon of God, within few days, preferred Barrabbas before him. (Idem and Q.) Barabbas here was to be pardon'd, and Chriſt muſt be condemned, only becauſe the multitude will have it ſo. Theſe are the unavoidable conſequences of a magiſtrate's yielding to the clamours of a rout, againſt his rule, and againſt his conſcience. (Fleetw.) Crucifixion was a death the moſt dreadful of all others, both for the ſhame and for the pain of it. 1. It was full of ſhame: So ſcandalous, that it was inflicted, as the laſt mark of deteſtation, upon the vileſt of people; peculiar to the meaneſt condition, and moſt heinous offences: It was the puniſhment of robbers and murderers, provided that they were ſlaves too; but otherwiſe, if they were free, and had the privileges of the city of Rome, this was then thought a proſtitution of that honour, and too infamous a penalty for ſuch a one, let his miſdemeanour have been what it would. 2. For the extreme pain and torture of it, it muſt needs be moſt acute; becauſe thoſe parts of the body which are pierced in the nailing, being the inſtruments of action and motion, are provided by nature with a much greater quantity of nerves, than others have occaſion for; and ſince all ſenſation is performed by the ſpirits in theſe nerves, whereſoever they abound, the ſenſe muſt needs, in proportion, be more quick and tender. (St.) But, when the Roman Emperors became chriſtians, this puniſhment was forbidden, out of a due reſpect and pious honour to the manner of Chriſt's death. (Nelſ.) The croſs was not the puniſhment which the law appointed for blaſphemy, but ſtoning; Lev. xxiv, 16. But, all this was done, that the ſcriptures might be fulfilled. (Hayw.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 22.

The voices of them, and of the chief prieſts, prevailed.] That is, they wrought upon Pilate to do contrary to his own judgment and inclination. (H.) The confederacy and clamour of the wicked often prevail againſt the reaſons of thoſe who ſpeak in behalf of truth and juſtice. (Q.) Few people but approve of Pilate's care and purpoſe to acquit our Lord, becauſe he thought him innocent: and all condemn his falling from that purpoſe, tho' under force and fear, and apprehenſive of great dangers. And yet, who is there amongſt us all, that has not made as honeſt and becoming reſolutions of diſcharging well his duty, in this and that particular occurrence; yet has not fainted upon trial; yielded if not to fear, yet to ſome other paſſion, that has over-born his reaſon, and made him act againſt his ſettled judgment; and yet has faintly tried to waſh his hands in innocency, by ſome poor plea or other, in excuſe of what he did, that hardly ſatisfies himſelf, much leſs impartial ſtanders by? (Fleetw.) Tho' by this God ſerved his end, to declare the innocence of his ſon; yet Pilate ſerved no end of his, nor preſerved any thing of his innocence. He that rails upon a Prince, and cries, Saving your honour, you are a tyrant; and he that ſtrikes a man upon the face, and cries him mercy, and undoes him, and ſays it was in jeſt, does juſt like that perſon that ſins againſt God, and thinks to be executed by ſaying, it was againſt his conſcience: that is waſhing our hands when they are ſtained in blood; as if a ceremony of purification were enough to cleanſe a ſoul from the ſtains of a ſpiritual impurity! So, ſome refuſe not to take any Oath, in times of perſecution; and ſay, it obliges not, becauſe it was forced, and done againſt their will: As if the doing of it were waſhed off by proteſting againſt it! whereas the proteſting againſt it declares me criminal, if I rather chuſe not death, than that which I profeſs to be a ſin. (Taylor.) Theſe very Jews, to whoſe outragious cries Pilate gave up Chriſt, within a few years, complained of his government, to Vitellius, then preſident of Syria; who put him out, and ſent him to Rome, to anſwer for his miſdemeanors: But, before he reached that place, Tiberius Cæſar died, and his ſucceſſor ſent him, by way of baniſhment, to Vienne, a city of France, upon the Rhoſne; where he lived deſpiſed and miſerable for five or ſix years, and then diſpatched himſelf by his own hands. ((Idem and Fleetw.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 24,

Simon a Cyrenian.] Some think, this Cyrenian was a Gentile, and that his bearing Chriſt's Croſs ſignified, that the Gentiles ſhould have a part in Chriſt, as well as the Jews, and be ſharers with them in the benefits of the croſs. (B.) Others tell us that Pentapolis, from whence he came, was full of Jews; and that the ſoldiers laid hold of this Simon, to bear a part of the burthen, at the inſtigation of the Jews, as knowing him to favour Chriſt. (G.) Be that as it will, it ſeems to have been done, not out of any favour to eaſe him of the weight, but for fear he ſhould die by the way, with leſs ſhame and ſmart than they intended him. (Howel.) See the Notes on Matt. xxvii. 32.

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which alſo bewailed and lamented him. But Jeſus turning unto them, ſaid, Daughters of Jeruſalem, weep not for me, but for your ſelves, and for your children. For behold, the days are coming, in the which they ſhall ſay, Bleſſed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave ſuck. Then ſhall they begin to ſay to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us. For if they do theſe things in a green tree, what ſhall be done in the dry?

A great company.] There were four ſorts of perſons which attended our Saviour at his crucifixion; the executioners that tormented him; the Jews that mocked him; the ſpectators and lookers on that marked him; and ſympathizing friends which lamented him. (B.) We ſee here none but the meaner ſort of people touched with compaſſion for Chriſt, and bearing him company while he carries his croſs. All the reſt, the king of the Jews, the Roman governor, the high prieſt, the chief prieſts, doctors of the law, ſcribes, and ſoldiers; all theſe concern themſelves no otherwiſe about Chriſt, than only to contribute to his ſufferings. (Q.)

Jeſus, turning unto them.] At the Court, Chriſt kept a perfect ſilence: He vouchſafed not to honour king Herod with ſo much as one word; And he here ſpeaks in publick to the meaneſt of the people. How ought this preference to humble the great! How ought it to comfort thoſe, whom they generally look upon as mere worms of the earth, unworthy of their notice; but whom Chriſt thinks worthy of his notice, his acknowledgment, and his laſt inſtructions! (Idem.)

Weep not for me, but weep for yourſelves.] That is, weep rather upon your own account than mine: reſerve your ſorrows for the calamities coming upon "yourſelves and your children." It is very probable, that the tears and lamentations of many of theſe mourners, were but the fruits of tender nature, not the effects of faith, and flowing from a principle of grace. (H. and B.) It was no fault in theſe devout "daughters of Jeruſalem," to ſhed tears for the divine Jeſus in his way to mount Calvary; when the bleſſed virgin was ſo affected with ſorrow, as ſhe ſtood by the croſs, that old Simeon had before deſcribed it in prophecy, by a "Sword piercing through her ſoul; ch. ii. 34. There were reaſons however, that would in ſome meaſure have alleviated their ſorrow; ſome of which perhaps they did not perfectly know, and others their grief might not ſuffer them to conſider. (Higden.) In vain do we weep for Chriſt, if we do not "weep for our ſelves," when we conſider the juſtice of God. (Q.)

In the which they ſhall ſay.] That is, it ſhall be ſaid; the word erouſi being uſed imperſonally, by an ordinary hebraiſm. (Trem.) See the notes on ch. xix. 43.

Bleſſed are the barren.] This expreſſion had certainly its completion in what befel Jeruſalem in the time of the ſiege. But more particularly it may refer to one paſſage: After that Titus had incompaſs'd the city with a wall, ſo that none could come out to forage, they were forced to feed on dung, ſaith Joſephus, on ſhoes and girdles, &c. And for want of ſuch proviſion as this, one Mary, a noble and rich woman, daughter of Eleazar, bereaved of all by the ſeditious, killed her ſucking child, and dreſs'd it, and eat part of it: and the ſoldiers breaking in upon her, and finding a part left, went away in deteſtation, and preſently the news of it went over the whole city; and every one (ſaith Joſephus,) look'd upon it with horror, and with the ſame compaſſion, "as if they had done it themſelves." Then was this ſpeech fit for them to take up, on hearing this horrible news, "Bleſſed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave ſuck," in compariſon to thoſe that are forced to feed on the fruits of their wombs, and devour their own ſucking infants. And then that which follows, "If they do theſe things in a green tree, what ſhall be done in the dry?" may perhaps be beſt interpreted in relation to this particular fact alſo, of that noble and rich woman, Mary. If ſuch horrible things befal the wealthieſt among you, what a diſmal ſtate ſhall others be involved in? This may poſſibly be the meaning of the phraſe. But if not, then in that other notion of the righteous and the wicked, it may have had its completion alſo. (H. and W.) See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 19. and Luke xxi. 23.

Mountains fall on us.] That this is a proverbial expreſſion uſed, Hoſea x. 8. and not to be fulfilled by what the Jews ſhould then ſay, but by what they ſhould afterwards ſuffer, is evident in it ſelf, and confeſs'd by the Jews: for the Targum upon Hoſea ſpeaks thus, He will bring ſuch judgments upon them, which will render their condition as miſerable, as if the mountains ſhould cover them, and the hills fall upon them. (W.)

If they do theſe things in a green tree.] Righteous and good men are in the holy ſcriptures compared to a "green flouriſhing tree," whoſe "leaves do not wither, Pſa. i. 3. and the wicked and ungodly to a "barren and dry tree," fit only for the fire. Thus, when God threatens, that he would "kindle a fire" which ſhould "devour every green tree, and every dry tree," Ezek. xx. 47. the meaning is, he would cut off the righteous and the wicked. The ſenſe therefore of theſe words is, If ſuch afflictions befal me, who have not deſerved them, what puniſhments will God bring upon the wicked, who are the inſtruments of them, and are fitted for deſtruction, as dry wood is for the fire? (H. W. Higd. Fox and Q.) It is proverbial among the Jews, that "two dry ſticks will burn a green one;" that is, that the company of two wicked men will corrupt and bring judgments upon a good man. (D. Heinſ. and W.) See the note on ver. 29.

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. And there were alſo two other malefactors led with him to be put to death. And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors; one on the right hand, and the other on the left. Then ſaid Jeſus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and caſt lots. And the people ſtood beholding: and the rulers alſo with them derided him, ſaying, He ſaved others, let him ſave himſelf, if he be Chriſt the choſen of God. And the ſoldiers alſo mocked him, coming to him and offering him vinegar; and ſaying, If thou be the king of the Jews, ſave thy ſelf. And a ſuperſcription alſo was written over him, in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

The place which is called Calvary.] Mount Calvary was then at ſome diſtance out of a gate in the weſt-wall of the old city, (called the old gate, the port of Jebus, and the gate of judgment,) but now almoſt in the heart of the city: It is a rocky hill, neither high nor ample; and was once a place of publick execution. Here the emperor Adrian erected a temple to Venus: but the virtuous Helena overthrew that receptacle of paganiſm, and built in the room of it a magnificent temple, in honour of Chriſt. (Sandys) Here was Golgotha, where 'tis ſaid Abraham built the altar for the intended ſacrifice of his ſon Iſaac. (Howel) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 33. 38. and Mark xv. 25.

Father, forgive them.] Chriſt had often preached the doctrine of forgiving enemies, and praying for them: and there he practiſes it himſelf in a moſt exemplary manner. (B.) In the midſt of all his torments he only made one prayer of ſorrow to repreſent his ſad condition to his father; but no accent of murmur, no ſyllable of anger againſt his enemies: inſtead of that, he ſent up a holy, charitable and effective prayer for their forgiveneſs; which was ſo efficacious, that, within five and fifty days, eight thouſand of them were converted. (Tayl.) Tho' he was very God, and had the power of remiſſion of Sins, as well upon the croſs as in other places, as he himſelf teſtified and practiſed, and might freely, and from himſelf, ſpontaneouſly have abſolved them, without any farther interceſſion: yet, as he was now both prieſt and ſacrifice too, it became him, having not as yet perfected the great work of our redemption, not to pronounce pardon in an authoritative manner, but by way of petition and ſupplication, to implore the divine mercy for his perſecutors: "He did not (ſays St. Chryſoſtom) pray to the father, as if he could not himſelf abſolve them from that great tranſgreſſion; but that he might inſtruct us, not only by word, but alſo by example, to pray for our perſecutors." (Sachev.) See the notes on Matt. v. 44.

They know not what they do.] That is, who it is they crucify. (W.) But they knew, that Jeſus was a good and juſt Man; and had given him that Teſtimony, that he had "done all things well," Mark vii. 37. They knew, that he was a great prophet, "a teacher come from God," John iii 2. They were in ſome ſort too convinc'd, that he was the Chriſt, John xi. 47. Where we may behold them fighting againſt the light of their own knowledge, with which our Saviour expreſly charges them, John vii. 28. and xv. 24. This appeareth further by that which is ſaid in the parable of the houſholder, Matt. xxi. 45. So that they had ſome knowledge of Chriſt; but it was not the true knowledge. (Bp. H. Leſlie) The ſchools diſtinguiſh of neſcience and ignorance. Neſcience is ſimplex ſcientiæ negatio, or negative ignorance; this may be, nay is, even in ſaints and angels: for a finite nature cannot have an infinite power, and therefore of neceſſity muſt be ignorant in many things. Ignorance is the privation of knowledge; and is two-fold, lawful and unlawful; of thoſe things which we may know, and of thoſe things which we are bound to know. We may know many things which we are not bound to know, but may be ignorant of them without ſin. Now, in thoſe things which we are bound to know, there is a double ignorance; the one they call ſimple, the other groſs or affected. The firſt I take to be St. Paul's caſe, a "blaſphemer, a perſecutor and injurious;" but all through ignorance, 1 Tim. i. 13. and therefore, ſaith he, "I obtained mercy." The other, when he that is ignorant will be ignorant ſtill: He quencheth the motions of the ſpirit; ſlights the dictates of his own conſcience, neglects to inquire, or uſe the means whereby he may be better informed. Thus the ſadduces did "erre, not knowing the ſcriptures," Matt. xxii. 29. They would not know them. And this was the Jews ignorance; as our Saviour himſelf tells us, Matt. xiii. 15. (Byam) Here our Lord does not only wiſh their pardon; but plead, and turn advocate for the vileſt of miſcreants. A noble warning to all his diſciples, that they too, when ill-treated, ſhould make all poſſible allowances; and put the moſt favourable conſtruction upon the wrongs they ſuffer; that they would let ignorance and infirmities, paſſions and ſurprizes, be heard in mitigation of their ſentiments; and by theſe be inclin'd to give their own, and to beg of God his pardon, for the worſt of injuries and enemies. (St.)

They parted his raiment, and caſt lots.] That which is done here by the avarice of theſe ſoldiers, was guided and directed by the ſame ſpirit who had foretold it; to give the greater authority to theſe myſteries, by the completion of the leaſt circumſtances. (Q.) See Pſal. xxii. 18. and Matt. xxvii. 35.

Derided him.] Perſecutors are generally atheiſtical ſcoffers. The chief prieſts and elders, who perſecuted Chriſt, do blaſpheme God: they mock at his power and deride his providence; which was as wicked, as to deny his being. (B.)

Offering him vinegar.] Dr. Lightfoot ſhews, from Ælius Spartianus, Capitolinus, and Trebellius Pollux, that vinegar was the uſual drink of the ſoldiers. Two cups were therefore offered to Chriſt; one of wine mixed with myrrh, before he was nailed to the croſs, Mark xv. 23. as the cuſtom of the Jews was towards men condemned to capital puniſhment; the other of vinegar by the ſoldiers, in a ſcoffing manner, after he was nailed to the croſs. (W.) Interpreters vary much about this. Some will have it, that in St. Matthew's ſenſe, "vinegar mingled with gall" was a bitter poiſonous draught, to ſtupify the perſon that drank it; that benumming the ſenſe he might feel leſs pain. Thoſe that differ from this ſay, that by the piety of ſome of the diſciples, and it is probable of ſome of thoſe good women which uſed to miniſter to Jeſus, there was prepared wine "mingled with myrrh; which, according to Pliny, among the Levantines, is an excellent and pleaſant mixture; and ſuch as the piety and indulgence of nations uſed to adminiſter to condemned perſons, to fortify their drooping ſpirits againſt the terrors of approaching death. But, be it which way it will, the holy Jeſus, by a voluntary taking our nature upon him, did chuſe to ſuffer the pains thereof without the refreſhment their piety intended, either by ſtupifying his ſenſe, or fortifying his ſpirits. (How.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 34.

A ſuperſcription.] This was written after the Jewiſh manner, from the right hand to the left; the Latin letters being to be read as if they were Hebrew; for this reaſon, as it is ſuppoſed, to make it more legible to the Jews, who, by converſing with the Romans, began to underſtand a little Latin. (Idem.) It was to ſhew the cauſe of his death. The Latin was with reſpect to the majeſty of the Roman empire; the Hebrew, being the proper language of the country where he ſuffer'd; and the Greek, becauſe of the many Grecians who came thither. Thus God directed it, that Chriſt's croſs ſhould be adorned with the titles of the nations; which, tho' not yet ſubdued, ſhould yet in a ſhort time become ſubject to his ſcepter. (G.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 37.

THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.] The kingſhip and regal dignity of Chriſt was proclaimed by an enemy; and that in a time of his greateſt ſufferings and reproaches. Pilate, without his knowledge, did our Saviour an eminent piece of ſervice; which none of his own diſciples durſt do: but no thanks to him for it; becauſe the higheſt ſervices perform'd for Chriſt undeſignedly, ſhall never be accepted nor rewarded by him. (B.)

Ver. 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. And one of the malefactors, which were hanged, railed on him, ſaying, If thou be Chriſt, ſave thy ſelf and us. But the other anſwering, rebuked him, ſaying, Doſt not thou fear God, ſeeing thou art in the ſame condemnation? And we indeed juſtly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiſs. And he ſaid unto Jeſus, Lord, remember me when thou comeſt into thy kingdom. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Verily I ſay unto thee, To day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe.

One of the malefactors.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 44.

The other anſwering, rebuked him.] Almoſt all interpreters that I have read, here ſay, that this thief began his repentance upon the croſs; and hence others are apt to conceive, that tho' they repent only at the laſt gaſp, they may enter into paradiſe as he did; but this is but a precarious ſuppoſition at the beſt, and like to prove a broken reed to the chriſtian that depends upon it. For, 1. It is not certain that this thief only then began to act the penitent; for any thing we know to the contrary, he might have begun that work in priſon long before; and ſo the whole foundation of their hopes who depend upon this inſtance, is built upon a great uncertainty. And whereas, in favour of this opinion, it is ſaid, that "both the thieves upbraided him;" and therefore this thief muſt do ſo at the firſt, and after that repent; I anſwer, That St. Luke here expreſly ſays, that "one of them" only did it; and that the other did rebuke him for it; and therefore, to reconcile him with St. Matthew, let it be obſerved, that it is uſual in the Evangeliſts to aſcribe that to many, which agrees only to one of them: (ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 44.) 2. This probably was the firſt time that this thief had the knowledge of Chriſt, or was acquainted with him; he therefore haply had no call, no day of grace, before this hour; and ſo he brake no vows or covenants, abuſed no Grace vouchſafed, ſinned againſt no ſuch light and ſtrong convictions, reſiſted no ſuch ſtrivings of the ſpirit, as they who live under the Goſpel-diſpenſation tion muſt have often done; what comfort therefore can this example give to them, who, having once been waſhed in the laver of regeneration, ſtill wallow in the mire; who having often heard the joyful ſound, have ſlighted all the promiſes, deſpiſed all the threats, been deaf to all the callings of the word, abuſed all the means of grace, and reſiſted all the motions of the ſpirit? And to whom Chriſt may ſay, as to the Jews, "How oft would I have gathered you under my wings, and ye would not?" 3. This thief improved his time at laſt in that extraordinary manner, as perhaps no man ever did before, or will hereafter: He then believed Chriſt to be the Saviour of the world, when one of his diſciples had betrayed, another had denied him, and all of them had forſook him, to be the Son of God, the Lord of life, when he was hanging on the croſs, ſuffering the pangs of death, and ſeemingly deſerted by his Father; he proclaims him the Lord of paradiſe, when all the Jews condemned him, the Gentiles crucified him as an impoſtor and a malefactor; he feared God, acknowledged the juſtice of his puniſhment, and did with patience ſubmit unto it; he condemned himſelf, and juſtified the holy Jeſus, declaring that he had done nothing amiſs; he was ſolicitous, not for the preſervation of his body, but the ſalvation of his ſoul; not only for his own, but the ſalvation of his brother-thief, whom he ſo charitably reprehends, ſo earneſtly requeſteth not to proceed in his blaſphemous language, ſo lovingly inviteth to the fear of God: So that the glory which he did to Chriſt by his faith and piety upon the croſs, ſeems ſuch as the whole ſeries of a pious life in other men can hardly parallel. (W.)

Here we learn, 1. That true converſion is never too late for obtaining mercy and ſalvation. 2. That true converſion, how late ſoever, will have its fruits: The forementioned fruits of faith and repentance were found with this penitent thief; yet muſt not this extraordinary caſe be drawn into example: This extraordinary and miraculous grace of God is not to be expected ordinarily: We have no warrant to expect an overpowering degree of God's grace, to turn our hearts in an inſtant at the hour of death, when we have lived in forgetfulneſs of God, and in a ſupine neglect of our ſouls concern, all the days of our life; for it is evident as to this caſe of the penitent thief's converſion at the laſt hour, 1. It is an example without a promiſe. 2. It is but a ſingle example. 3. It is an example recorded but by one Evangeliſt: The Spirit of God, foreſeeing what an ill uſe ſome would make of this inſtance, leaves one example upon record, that none might deſpair; and but one, that none might preſume. 4. This was a miracle, with the glory whereof Chriſt would honour the ignominy of his croſs: So that we have no more ground to expect ſuch another converſion, than we have to expect a ſecond crucifixion This converted perſon was the firſt fruits of the blood of the croſs. From whence we learn, That God can, and ſometimes doth, tho' very ſeldom, prepare men for glory, immediately before their diſſolution by death. His grace is his own, he may diſpenſe it how, and when, where, and to whom he pleaſes; yet this is no warrant to neglect the ordinary, becauſe God doth ſometimes manifeſt his grace in an extraordinary way. True, in this converſion we have a pattern what free grace can do; but it is a pattern without a promiſe; where we have not a promiſe to encourage our hope, our hope is nothing but preſumption. (B. and Stanh.)

Doſt not thou fear God?] This is well ſaid, becauſe he who inſulteth over thoſe who are afflicted, doth in ſo doing contemn God. (G.)

Lord, remember me.] Here he ſhewed an incomparable modeſty, begging but for a remembrance only; he knew himſelf ſo ſinful, that he durſt ask no more. (Tayl.) The fruit of faith in a penitent puniſhed for his ſins is, 1. To conſider the difference betwixt the ſufferings of Chriſt, intirely innocent, and thoſe of ſinners. 2. To acknowledge, that he himſelf ſuffers juſtly. 3. To have compaſſion on thoſe, who loſe all the fruit of their ſufferings by receiving them ill, and to exhort them to repentance. 4. Not to be offended or ſcandalized at the humiliations of Chriſt. 5. To expect his eternal kingdom. 6. To pray humbly to him: and, 7. To have no other ambition, than to be remember'd by him; for his memory is his heart, and all is well when we have a place therein. (Q.)

To day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe.] That the words to day are not to be connected with I ſay, as if the ſenſe were this, "I ſay to thee to day," but with the words following, ſo as to contain a promiſe, that the thief ſhould even that day be in paradiſe, as to his better part, appears from the familiar phraſe of the Jews, who ſay, of the juſt man dying, "to day he ſhall ſit in the boſom of Abraham." To be ſure, Chriſt ſpake in that ſenſe, in which the thief could, and in which he knew he would, underſtand him: Now he being a Jew, would ſurely underſtand him according to the received opinion of his nation concerning paradiſe; but they plainly held it to be the place into which pious ſouls, ſeparated from the body, were immediately received: Hence ſprung that oracle of the Chaldees, "Seek paradiſe, the glorious country of the ſoul:" Hence their kind wiſh for the dying or dead perſon, "let his ſoul be in paradiſe." Now hence it follows, 1. That the ſouls of men die not with their bodies, but remain in a ſtate of ſenſibility: Chriſt here commends his into the hands of God, ver. 46. where the ſouls of the juſt are, Wiſd. iii. 1. in peace, ver. 3. and in hope, ver. 4. 2. That the ſouls of good men after death are in a happy ſtate, a ſtate of joy and felicity; for "Paradiſe (ſaith Philo) is the repreſentation of a ſoul leaping for fulneſs and greatneſs of joy;" and 'tis, according to Tertullian, "a place of divine delights." So that, as the thief could only be there that day by the preſence of his ſoul, ſo could not his ſoul be there without the greateſt joy and felicity. (W.) Chriſt, the ſovereign diſpenſer of his own grace and glory, gives it to a thief at the laſt moment of his life; to ſhew us, that he does not give it to merit. (Q.)

Ver. 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49. And it was about the ſixth hour, and there was a darkneſs over all the earth, until the ninth hour. And the ſun was darkened, and the vail of the temple was rent in the mids. And when Jeſus had cried with a loud voice, he ſaid, Father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: and having ſaid thus, he gave up the ghoſt. Now when the centurion ſaw what was done, he glorified God, ſaying, Certainly this was a righteous man. And all the people that came together to that ſight, beholding the things which were done, ſmote their breaſts, and returned. And all his acquaintance, and the women that follow'd him from Galilee, ſtood afar off, beholding theſe things.

About the ſixth hour.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 44. and Mark xv. 33.

Darkneſs over all the earth.] That is, over all the land. See the notes on chap. xxi. 35.

The ſun was darkned.] At the time of our Saviour's paſſion the ſun was ſo darkned, that the ſtars appeared: and the eclipſe was prodigious in the manner, as well as in degree; becauſe the moon was not then in conjunction, but full. And it was noted by Phlegon, the freed man of the emperor Adrian, by Lucian out of the acts of the Gauls, and Dionyſius, while he was yet a heathen, excellent ſcholars all, great hiſtorians and philoſophers; who alſo noted the hour of the day, and day of the week, agreeing with the circumſtances of the croſs. (How.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 45.

The vail of the temple was rent in the mids] That which is here ſaid of the "vail of the temple," eſchisthe meſon, muſt be ſo rendred, that meſon may be taken adverbially, for "in the middle," ſo as to be anſwerable to eis ta duo, "into two parts," in Matthew and Mark. Now what "vail of the temple" this was, is the only thing that will need to be here determined; for of this it is certain, that there were two vails, or high walls, intimated by the mention of the "ſecond vail," Heb. ix. 3. the one that covered or incloſed the ſanctuary from the eyes and approach of the people, who were permitted to go no farther than the court of the Jews, and only the prieſts admitted into the ſanctuary; for thus the manner was, the thumateerion, or altar of incenſe, was within the ſanctuary, and thither the prieſts went daily, and offered incenſe, the people mean while ſtaying without, and praying every one privately by himſelf; the thing noted by the "ſilence in heaven for half an hour," Rev. viii. 1. And thoſe prayers of the people, for ſupply of their ſeveral wants, were thus offered up by the prieſt, with that incenſe of his that went up to heaven. But the people themſelves ſtaid without, and might not enter or look in there; that vail, or wall, or ſcreen, made a full ſeparation of one from the other. And as the ſanctuary was incloſed or ſeparated from the court, ſo was the holy of holies incloſed from the ſanctuary, and thither none enter'd but the high-prieſt once a year, and ſo there was a ſecond vail. That this is here meant, is no way ſpecified, or deducible from any circumſtances of the ſtory in any of the Goſpels; yet may be thought moſt probable from one intimation of the author to the Hebrews, c. x. 20. where our way to heaven is ſaid to be conſecrated by Chriſt by the vail, that is, his fleſh. There, as the vail is made a type of Chriſt's fleſh, and being ſo, the rending of the vail will be a fit ſolemnity of the piercing and crucifying Chriſt's fleſh; ſo that vail is clearly the ſecond vail, entring into the hagia, the holies, ver. 19. that is, the holy of holies, as appears by chap. ix. 8, 12. And if that were here meant, then the ſignificancy is not only the approaching deſtruction of all the Jewiſh rites, but alſo that that unapproachable place, a type of heaven, was now laid open to all true Chriſtians, and that in the mean time there is liberty to approach unto God in prayer allowed to them; and again that Chriſt not now once a year, as the high-prieſt, but once for ever, there to continue, enter'd into the holy of holies, that is, beyond the ſanctuary, the common place of all the prieſts (and ſo the type of heaven, where all the angels and ſaints are) even into the inmoſt adytum at the right hand of God, far above all angels, &c. a place of pre-eminence peculiar to him. (H.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 51.

Cried with a loud voice.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 46, 50.

Father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit.] The manner of our Lord's giving up his ſpirit hath generally been thought to carry in it an air of authority; and to intimate, that, as the delivering it was an act of free choice, ſo the reſuming of it was likewiſe fully in his own power. The form made uſe of on this occaſion, is ſuch as properly denotes the leaving goods of value, to be kept by a truſty friend, till called for again. It may be ſaid indeed, that other good men, who confeſſedly have not the ſame power, are found to have committed their ſouls to God in like manner. They have indeed done ſo; but with this difference, that in Chriſt this was a declaration of his having purchaſed immortality for human nature, and a ſort of claim for raiſing it from the dead: In others, it is an expreſſion of their faith, that their ſouls and bodies ſhall again be united, by virtue of that reſurrection, which their Saviour's riſing hath enſured to them. (St.)

The centurion glorified God.] Here note, that Chriſt had a teſtimony of his innocency and righteouſneſs given unto him from all ſorts of perſons whatſoever; Pilate and Herod pronounced him innocent; Pilate's wife proclaimed him a righteous perſon; Judas, the traytor, declared it was innocent blood; the thief on the croſs affirmed he had done nothing amiſs; and the centurion owned him to be a righteous man, yea, the Son of God, Mark xv. 39. Only the Phariſees and chief prieſts, which were teachers of others: not ignorance, but obſtinacy and malice, blinded and hardned them to their ruin and deſtruction; inſtead of owning and receiving him for their Saviour, they ignominiouſly put him to death as the vileſt impoſtor. (B.)

Ver. 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56. And behold, there was a man named Joſeph, a counſellor; and he was a good man, and a juſt: (The ſame had not conſented to the counſel and deed of them) He was of Arimathea, a city of the Jews, who alſo himſelf waited for the kingdom of God. This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jeſus. And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a ſepulchre that was hewn in ſtone, wherein never man before was laid. And that day was the preparation, and the ſabbath drew on. And the women alſo, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the ſepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared ſpices and ointments; and reſted the ſabbath-day, according to the commandment.

A man named Joſeph.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 57.

He was of Arimathea.] Arimathea is the place were Samuel was born and bred up; called by the Hebrews Ramathaim ſophim, in Greek Armathaim. (How.) See the notes laſt referred to.

In a ſepulchre.] It was a ſepulchre hewn out of a rock; that ſo his enemies might have no occaſion to ſay, that his diſciples ſtole him away by ſecret holes, and unſeen paſſages under ground: It was a new ſepulchre, "wherein never man was laid before;" leſt his adverſaries ſhould ſay, it was another that was riſen, who was buried there before him. And it was in a garden; for, as by the ſin of the firſt Adam we were driven out of the garden of pleaſure, the earthly paradiſe, ſo by the ſufferings of the ſecond Adam, who lay buried in a garden, we may hope for entrance into the heavenly paradiſe. (B.)

The preparation.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 62.

C H A P. XXIV.

Chriſt's reſurrection is declared by angels to the women; who report it to the apoſtles. He himſelf appeareth to two diſciples, in the way to Emmaus: And after that to the eleven apoſtles at once; reproving their unbelief. He promiſeth them the Holy Ghoſt: Bleſſeth them; and aſcendeth to heaven.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. NOW upon the firſt day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the ſepulchre, bringing the ſpices which they had prepared, and certain others with them. And they found the ſtone rolled away from the ſepulchre. And they entred in, and found not the body of the Lord Jeſus. And it came to paſs, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men ſtood by them, in ſhining garments. And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they ſaid unto them, Why ſeek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is riſen: remember how he ſpake unto you, when he was yet in Galilee, Saying, The Son of man muſt be delivered into the hands of ſinful men, and be crucified, and the third day riſe again. And they remembred his words, And returned from the ſepulchre, and told all theſe things unto the eleven, and to all the reſt. It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told theſe things unto the apoſtles. And their words ſeemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not. Then aroſe Peter, and ran unto the ſepulchre, and ſtooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themſelves, and departed, wondring in himſelf at that which was come to paſs.

The firſt day of the week.] See the notes on Matt. xxviii. 1. and Mark xvi. 1.

They came.] That is, the women who are named here, ver. 10. (H.) They who had followed Chriſt, when his diſciples left him; who accompanied him to his croſs, and to his grave, when his diſciples durſt not appear, now, very early in the morning, viſit his ſepulchre, fearing neither the darkneſs, nor the preſence of the watchmen, tho' a band of rude ſoldiers. (B.) The diligence and earneſtneſs of a ſoul which ſeeks God is repreſented in theſe holy women. All ſloth muſt be ſhaken off, when the doing ſomething for Chriſt is the matter in queſtion. (Q.)

Bringing the ſpices.] To embalm the holy body. For the rites of embalming, among the Hebrews, uſed to laſt forty days; and their love was not ſatisfied with what Joſeph had already done. (Tayl.)

Found the ſtone rolled away.] When perſons have a true confidence in God, obſtacles do not hinder them from undertaking whatever they have reaſon to believe he requires; and the removal of them they leave to him; All manner of difficulties vaniſh before thoſe who are led by a lively faith, and a ſincere deſire to pleaſe God. (Q.)

Behold, two men.] That is, angels. For that angels appeared in ancient times in the ſimilitude of men, is clear from Gen. xviii. 2. and xix. 1, 2. and Joſh. v. 13. (F.) He that raiſed himſelf could eaſily have rolled away the ſtone, without the help of angels: But God thought fit to ſend an officer from heaven, to open the priſon-door of the grave; and, by ſetting our ſurety at liberty, proclaimed our debt to the divine juſtice to be fully ſatiſfied: Beſides, it was fit, that the angels, who had been witneſſes of our Saviour's paſſion, ſhould alſo be witneſſes of his reſurrection. His reſurrection was alſo firſt declared, 1. To women, becauſe God ſometimes makes choice of weak means for producing great effects; knowing, that the weakneſs of the inſtrument redounds to the greater honour of the agent: In the whole diſpenſation of the Goſpel, God intermixes divine power with human weakneſs: Thus, the conception of Chriſt was by the power of the Holy Ghoſt; but his mother a poor woman, a carpenter's ſpouſe: So the crucifixion of Chriſt was in great meanneſs and outward baſeneſs, being crucified between two thieves; but the powers of heaven and earth trembling, the rocks rending, and the graves opening, ſhewed a mixture of divine powers. Thus here, God ſelects women to declare, that he will honour what inſtruments he pleaſes, for the accompliſhment of his own purpoſes. 2. To theſe women, the two Maries; poſſibly, as a reward for their magnanimity and courage. (B.)

Why ſeek ye the living among the dead?] Thoſe do this, 1. Who ſeek ſalvation by the law of Moſes, long ſince dead and buried. 2. Who ſeek it by the works of nature, or by the power of them. 3. Who ſeek it, or think to be ſaved, by a meer outward holineſs; by the outward body of religion, without the inward life; by forms of godlineſs, whether they be merely ceremonial performances of religion, or great ſhews and pretences of godlineſs, without the power of it in their lives and converſations; and, 4. Who ſeek Chriſt upon worldly intereſts, taking up their religion upon by-reſpects, and for carnal or worldly affections. (Frank.)

He is not here] The angels ſhew theſe women the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1. By way of negation, "He is not here;" that is, in reſpect of his corporal preſence: which place of ſcripture alone is ſufficient to diſprove all the ubiquitaries in the world; for if his body was in every place, how could the angel ſay, that he was not in that place? 2. By way of confirmation, "for he is riſen;" as it is expreſſed in St. Matt. xxviii. 6. and the reaſon is natural, and unanſwerable: "He is riſen," and gone to another place; therefore he cannot be here, in this place. 3. By way of illuſtration; "He is riſen, as he ſaid;" and as ye may be convinced by ocular demonſtration; "come, ſee the place where the Lord lay." (Bp. Griff. Williams.) As no truth is of more importance to the Chriſtian religion than this, ſo none had greater care taken to ſtrengthen the belief of it. The teſtimony of angels, of diſciples, of women, of numbers of people; the converſation of forty days, the teſtimony of the elements themſelves, the earth trembling and quaking, as if in pangs and travel, to diſcharge this new birth; the teſtimony of others, whoſe bodies appeared in the holy city; nay, the teſtimony of the moſt inveterate enemies of Chriſt: For even the Jews themſelves, by advancing ſo incredible a ſtory, as that of his diſciples ſtealing him away, do in effect confeſs and corroborate a truth, which they ſo very weakly endeavour to deſtroy. (Stanh.) There are ſome rules, as to the truth of matters of fact in general, ſo certain, that where they all meet, ſuch matters of fact cannot be falſe, viz. "1. That the matter of fact be ſuch, as that mens outward ſenſes, their eyes and ears may be judges of it. 2. That it be done publickly, in the face of the world. 3. That not only publick monuments be kept up in memory of it, but ſome outward actions to be performed. 4. That ſuch monuments, and ſuch actions, or obſervances, be inſtituted, and do commence from the time that the matter of fact was done;" all which rules do meet in the matters of fact recorded of Chriſt, and particularly of his reſurrection. (Leſl.)

Remember how he ſpake.] The belief of myſteries is founded chiefly upon the word of Chriſt. It is to this word that the angels refer theſe very ſouls, whom they inſtruct with their own mouth by the direction of God. (Q.) See the notes on Mark ix. 31.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. And behold two of them went that ſame day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jeruſalem about threeſcore furlongs. And they talked together of all theſe things which had happened. And it came to paſs, that while they communed together, and reaſoned, Jeſus himſelf drew near, and went with them. But their eyes were holden, that they ſhould not know him. And he ſaid unto them, What manner of communications are theſe that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are ſad? And the one of them, whoſe name was Cleophas, anſwering, ſaid unto him, Art thou only a ſtranger in Jeruſalem, and haſt not known the things which are come to paſs there in theſe days? And he ſaid unto them, What things? And they ſaid unto him, Concerning Jeſus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God, and all the people: And how the chief-prieſts and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we truſted that it had been he, which ſhould have redeem'd Iſrael: and beſide all this, to day is the third day ſince theſe things were done. Yea, and certain women alſo of our company made us aſtoniſhed, which were early at the ſepulchre: And when they found not his body, they came, ſaying, that they had alſo ſeen a viſion of angels, which ſaid that he was alive. And certain of them which were with us went to the ſepulchre, and found it even ſo as the women had ſaid; but him they ſaw not. Then he ſaid unto them, O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all that the prophets have ſpoken! Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moſes, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the ſcriptures the things concerning himſelf. And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went: and he made as though he would have gone further. But they conſtrained him, ſaying, Abide with us, for it is towards evening, and the day is far ſpent. And he went in to tarry with them. And it came to paſs, as he ſat at meat with them, he took bread, and bleſſed it, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were open'd, and they knew him; and he vaniſhed out of their ſight. And they ſaid one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the ſcriptures?

Two of them.] Not of the apoſtles; for theſe two returning told what paſſed between Chriſt and them to the eleven apoſtles: But two of the reſt who were with them, ver. 9, 33. (W.) One of theſe two was Cleophas, as appears ver. 18. who, Hegeſippus ſaith, was the brother of Joſeph the husband of Mary; and whoſe ſon Simeon, as Euſebius ſaith, was by the conſent of all the ſurviving apoſtles made biſhop of Jeruſalem after James. (H.) The other was by ſome of the ancients thought to have been this Evangeliſt, Luke himſelf; tho' Epiphanius (contra Saturnilianos) reports it to have been Nathanael: But theſe conjectures are uncertain. (Beza.)

To a village called Emmaus.] Not that Emmaus near Tiberias, ſo called from the hot baths there; for that was in Galilee: but a village in the tribe of Judah, 60 furlongs from Jeruſalem. (W.) And 'tis probable, theſe two diſciples dwelt there, and were returning home after the feaſt. (G.)

Their eyes were holden.] That they knew him not, might be, not becauſe their eyes were held by miracle, but becauſe he appear'd to them "in another form" or ſhape than that which he formerly had when he converſed with them, Mark xvi. 12. and which when they knew him might be changed: for that their eyes did not perceive him through grief, as Mr. Le Clerc conjectures, is not very likely; for tho' they were ſad, ver. 17. we read not that they wept. And ſeeing it is elſewhere ſaid, that "the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam," Numb. xxii. 31. "of the young man," 2 Kings vi. 17. of the hoſt of the king of Syria, ver. 20. which was with-held from ſeeing, or ſtruck blind, ver. 18. in all which caſes doubtleſs an extraordinary power was exerted, I believe rather according to the plain import of the words, that God withheld the eyes of Hagar from ſeeing the well, and then opened her eyes, Gen. xxi. 19. by taking away the impediment; and that here Chriſt ſome way with-held their eyes from perceiving him; and then, removing that impediment, opened their eyes, that they knew him. (W.)

What manner of communications.] Chriſt asks not, becauſe he knew not what they ſaid; for what could he be ignorant of, who knew mens hearts and reins? But to give them an occaſion to begin the diſcourſe. (Idem.)

A Stranger in Jeruſalem.] Paroikein here may ſignify to be extra patriam, one of another country, and as ſo a ſtranger to the affairs of Judea and Jeruſalem. So the ſeed of Abraham was paroikon en ge allotria, ſtrangers in another country, Acts vii. 6. Moſes was paroikos, a ſtranger in the land of Midian," ver. 29. The Gentiles, not yet called to be fellow citizens with the ſaints, are xenoi kai paroikoi, "Strangers and aliens," Eph. ii. 19. And, according to this metaphor, the Patriarchs are ſaid paroikein, "to ſojourn in the Land of Promiſe, as in a ſtrange country," Heb. xi. 9. The Chriſtians to live in this world, hoos paroikous, "as ſtrangers and pilgrims," 1 Pet. ii. 11. the time they ſpend here is the time paroikias autoon, "of their ſojourning," 1 Pet. i. 17. So alſo the Philoſophers held, that heaven was their own country, that they were tees poleos tees anotates politai, citizens of the city above, and ſtrangers in this world. Hence any one who is ignorant of what is done in any place, is ſtiled a ſtranger in it. So Antonius ſaith they are xenoi koſmou, ſtrangers in the world, who know not what is done in it. And Cicero ſpeaks thus to Atticus, I deſire thee, ne illuc hoſpes veniam, that I may not come thither as a ſtranger, that is, as ignorant of things done there: and again, 'tis ſomething for him that comes to Rome, non eſſe hoſpitem, & peregrinum, not to be ignorant of what is done there; and in his familiar epiſtles he writes for inſtructions in what is done in the common-wealth, ne hoſpes plane veniam; that he might not come thither as a ſtranger. So here, "Art thou a ſtranger?" i. e. art thou ignorant of things well known to all that dwell at Jeruſalem? (Idem)

Mighty in deed and word.] That is, in miracles and doctrine, approved by God. (H.) See the notes on ch. vii. 16.

To be condemned to death.] Eis krima thanatou, To the ſentence of death. So 1 Kings iii. 28. all Iſrael heard to krima toutou, this judicial ſentence of king Solomon. Tou krima to Moab, God's ſentence againſt Moab, Jer. xlviii. 47. and to krima Babuloonos, his ſentence againſt Babylon, ch. li 9. Let my ſentence to krima mou, come forth from thy preſence, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. xvii. 2. (W)

We truſted, that it had been he.] The notion of the Meſſias being a temporal Saviour was ſo deeply rooted in the minds of the diſciples, ciples, that it remained here with them, even after he was riſen from the dead: they acknowledge him to be "a prophet mighty in deed and word;" but they queſtion whether he were the Meſſias, the "redeemer of Iſrael:" they could not reconcile the ignominy of his death with the grandeur of his office; nor conceive how the infamy of a croſs was conſiſtent with the glory of a king: "We truſted, that it had been he, who ſhould have redeemed Iſrael;" as if he had ſaid, we were full of hopes, that this had been the Meſſias, ſo long expected by us; but this being "the third day" ſince he died, we fear we ſhall find ourſelves miſtaken. (B.)

O fools.] Hence note, that the command, Matt. v. 22. is not always tranſgreſſed by this expreſſion; but only when it is uſed without cauſe, from an undue commotion of ſpirit, or a mind evil-affected towards our brother. (W.) This reproof from Chriſt ſeems ſomewhat harſh; but it is extremely charitable, and neceſſary to awaken their faith: For, the very reaſon here given for their doubt, ought to have convinced them; ſince he could not have been riſen, if his body had then been found in the ſepulchre. (Q.)

Ought not Chriſt to ſuffer.] As if he had ſaid, Do ye not find, that the perſon deſcribed by the prophets in the Old-Teſtament to be the Meſſias, was to wade to his glory through a ſea of blood? Why then do ye think your ſelves deceived in the perſon that ſuffered three days ago, when his death doth agree ſo well with the predictions of the prophets, who foretold, That the Meſſias ſhould be cut off, but not for himſelf, and be ſmitten for the iniquities of his people? Here we may obſerve, the great wiſdom and grace of God, who makes ſometimes the diffidence of his people an occaſion of farther clearing up the choiceſt truths unto them: never did theſe diſciples hear ſo excellent an expoſition of Moſes and the prophets concerning the Meſſiah, as now, when their ſinful diſtruſt had ſo far prevailed over them. Obſerve, 2. The doctrines which Chriſt inſtructs his diſciples in, namely, in the neceſſity of his death and paſſion, and of his glory and exaltation; "Ought not Chriſt to ſuffer, and to enter into his glory?" Learn, 1. That with reſpect to God's decree, and with relation to man's guilt, the death of Chriſt was neceſſary and indiſpenſable. 2. That his reſurrection and exaltation was as neceſſary as his paſſion. 3. That there was a meritorious connexion between Chriſt's ſufferings and his glory; his exaltation was merited by his paſſion; "he was to drink of the brook in the way, and then he ſhould lift up his head." (B.)

The things concerning himſelf.] That all things written by the Evangeliſts concerning Chriſt are certainly true, is manifeſt by comparing the ſeveral predictions of the prophets. (Beza.) For there are ſome expreſs prophecies: as in Iſaiah and Daniel: and ſome types and ſymbols; as the ſerpent lifted up by Moſes, the expiatory ſacrifice offer'd up for the people, the affairs of David; the explication of all which was made by Chriſt to his apoſtles, and by them to us. (G.) See more of this in the notes on ver. 46.

He made, as though he would have gone further.] Yea, perhaps he would have done ſo, had they not been urgent with him to abide with them, ver. 29. or he ſeemed to them, by continuing on his courſe, to be willing ſo to do: So Mark vi. 48. ethele parelthein autous, "he would have paſſed by them;" not that Chriſt intended this, but that he ſeemed to them, by continuing his courſe on the ſea, to be willing ſo to do. Here therefore was no diſſimulation in Chriſt; but only, in the diſciples and apoſtles, a miſtaken conjecture from his walking. Now, tho' words ought to be the certain interpreters of our minds, and therefore ought not to be uſed ſo as that we may be deceived by them; yet walking hath no certain ſignification, nor was inſtituted to be a certain indication of the mind; and ſo there ſeems here to be no juſt occaſion for the long diſcourſes, which ſome hence make of lying, ſimulation or diſſimulation; here being no inſtance of that kind. (W.)

They conſtrained him.] But that was only by their earneſt deſire and entreaty; "ſaying, abide with us." See the notes on ch. xiv. 23.

He took bread.] After the manner of the maſter of the family; bleſſing the meat, and carving, and diſtributing it to them. (G. and H.) This, ſay the papiſts, he did when he celebrated the ſacrament, chap. xxii. 19. therefore here alſo he celebrated the ſacrament, tho' in bread only. This he did, ſay I, when he fed the four, and the five thouſand: for then artous eulogeſe ki klaſas edooke, "he bleſſed the bread, and breaking it, gave it to his diſciples" to give to the multitude, Matt. xiv. 19. Mark vi. 41. and viii. 6. and will they ſay, that then alſo he celebrated the ſacrament before the inſtitution of it? 2. To make of bread a ſacrament, 'tis abſolutely neceſſary, according to them, that Chriſt ſhould ſay, "This is my body," which here he ſaid not: If they rejoin, that this is to be underſtood, I ſay, with as much reaſon, That wine, the uſual concomitant of a ſupper, is to be underſtood; and ſo here will be no example of communicating in one kind. 3. If Chriſt here celebrated a ſacrament without wine, he alſo conſecrated without wine; which yet, the papiſts ſay, is never to be done. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xiv. 19. and Luke xxii. 19.

They knew him.] That myſtical interpretation of the ancients is worthy of obſervation, that Chriſt cannot be truly known, except by thoſe who are in the unity of his body, the church; which is ſignified by the "breaking of bread." (G.) We may know religious perſons, not only in the exerciſes of religion, but even in the moſt common actions of life; which they convert into holy actions, by the holineſs of their diſpoſitions, by prayer which ſanctifies every thing, and by the oblation which they make thereof to God. The meals of Chriſtians ought to reſemble thoſe of Chriſt; who here teaches them, never to ſit down to them, till they have invoked the divine bleſſing by thankſgiving and prayer, which muſt be performed with faith, attention, and reverence, and not careleſſly, by rote, and only for faſhion-ſake. (Q.)

He vaniſhed out of their ſight.) He withdrew himſelf again out of their ſight: either by a ſudden change of place, or by a cloud caſt over his body: whence we can no more argue, that he had only an airy body, than that he had the like when ekrube, "he hid himſelf, paſſing through the Jews, when they were about to ſtone him" John viii. 59. where this word is uſed of Pelops, in Pindar, it ſignifies one that was loſt, and no where to be found, though much ſought after, by the men his mother ſent to look after him; and I grant to Mr. Clerc, that a man may be loſt, and not found by them that ſeek after him, without a miracle; but aphantos ap autoon egeneto, "he became inviſible to them," or diſappeared from them, ſeems to carry the matter higher, though it may be otherwiſe. (W.) He diſapeared; but, in what manner, or by what means, it is not known. (H.)

Ver. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48. And they roſe up the ſame hour, and returned to Jeruſalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, Saying, The Lord is riſen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon. And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread. And as they thus ſpake, Jeſus himſelf ſtood in the midſt of them, and ſaith unto them, Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and ſuppoſed that they had ſeen a ſpirit. And he ſaid unto them, Why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts ariſe in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I my ſelf: handle me, and ſee, for a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones, as ye ſee me have. And when he had thus ſpoken, he ſhewed them his hands, and his feet. And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondred, he ſaid unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of a broiled fiſh, and of an hony-comb. And he took it, and did eat before them. And he ſaid unto them, Theſe are the words which I ſpake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things muſt be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moſes, and in the prophets, and in the pſalms, concerning me. Then opened he their underſtanding, that they might underſtand the ſcriptures, and ſaid unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem: And ye are witneſſes of theſe things.

The ſame hour.] Here we may obſerve, that theſe two diſciples at Emmaus, being fully ſatisfied in the truth of Chriſt's reſurrection, by his appearing to them in breaking of bread, they aroſe preſently, and went from Emmaus to Jeruſalem: it muſt needs be late at night, being after ſupper, and ſeven miles diſtance; yet conſidering the ſorrow that the diſciples were under, theſe two leave all their private affairs, and haſten to comfort them with the glad tidings of our Lord's reſurrection; Teaching us, That all ſecular affairs, all private and particular buſineſs muſt give place to the glory of God, and the comfort and ſalvation of our ſouls. (B.)

Found the eleven gathered together.] At their private aſſembly, where they met together by night, for fear of the Jews, to comfort and encourage one another; as John xx. 19.

Saying, The Lord is riſen indeed.] The two diſciples, full of the joyful news, ſay thus to the apoſtles, and the reſt who were with them, at their firſt entrance, without any previous ſalutation.

And hath appeared to Simon.] We had been in our ſins for all his death, if he had not riſen again: his care therefore, for our greater faith and comfort, is to make that appear; and ſo he did to Simon. Not firſt of all: for that was to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had caſt ſeven devils" Mark xvi. 9. She was therefore ſent with the bleſſed news, ver. 7. to Simon Peter; and ſo it appeared to his ears: but that's not enough, he muſt have it in his eye too; and ſo he "appeared to Simon:" particularly to her, and to him, a polluted woman and a perjur'd man, for the comfort of poor penitents; grievous ſinners now become gracious ſaints. Thus he is the firſt man (as ſhe was the firſt perſon) honour'd with the firſt apparition of Chriſt. Penitential tears gain Chriſt's heart. (Brough.) He diſtinguiſhes Peter, and favours him with a particular viſit; becauſe he is a penitent, whoſe heart is under great affliction and humiliation. It is a very great conſolation to the diſciples, recover'd from their errors but continuing ſtill weak, to learn ſo ſoon, that Chriſt does not reject ſinners, and that he has even a compaſſion and tenderneſs towards penitents. (Q)

How he was known of them.] We may here obſerve the wonderful effects of the Euchariſt, of the practice of works of mercy, and of the word of God. 1. To recover us out of dangerous ways and errors. 2. To bring us back to unity. 3. To confirm us in the faith; and 4. To open our eyes, that we may know Chriſt more perfectly. (Idem.)

As they thus ſpake.] Obſerve the great endeavours which our Saviour uſed to confirm his diſciples faith in the reſurrection: "He comes and ſtands in the midſt of them, and ſays, Peace be unto you:" next "he ſhews them his pierced hands, ſide, and feet," with the ſcars and marks, which he yet retained, that they might ſee it was their crucified maſter: after all this, "he eats before them a piece of a broiled fiſh, and honey-comb;" not that he needed it, his body now being become immortal; but to aſſure them that it was his own perſon, and that he had ſtill the ſame body: yet ſo ſlack and backward were they to believe that Chriſt was riſen, that all the predictions of the ſcripture, all the aſſurances they had from our Saviour's mouth, and the ſeveral appearings of Chriſt unto them, were little enough to eſtabliſh and confirm their faith in the reſurrection of our Saviour. (B.)

Suppoſed that they had ſeen a ſpirit.] i. e. A phantaſm, or a ſpirit aſſuming the ſhape of Chriſt, and appearing to them in it: viz. becauſe they heard no noiſe of any doors opening, or of feet moving towards them: and ſo, though they doubted not of Chriſt's reſurrection, ver. 34. yet might they, for theſe reaſons, doubt of this appearance of him in the midſt of them, without knocking at the door for entrance, or giving any indications of his coming to them. (W.)

Handle me, and ſee.] Chriſt proves, that he has a true body, from the evidence of their ſight and touch: as the apoſtles teſtify to the truth of the reſurrection of his body; as being "that which their eyes had ſeen, and their hands had handled;" 1 John i. 1. Therefore thoſe ſenſes muſt be ſufficient to teſtify the truth of any body; and much more the truth of the ſubſtance of Bread remaining after the ſacrament, confirm'd alſo by the taſte and ſmell: and the denial of this muſt render the argument of Chriſt here, and the teſtimonies of the apoſtles, infirm. Our Saviour goes on, in confirmation of the ſame thing, by ſaying, "A ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones, as ye ſee me have." Now, certain it is, that our Lord's argument muſt be firm: It therefore muſt be certain, 1. That evil ſpirits cannot aſſume ſuch a body as will not yield unto the touch; but only a meer phantom, or an aerial appearance of a Body, which cannot cheat the touch and eyes of men. And, 2. That good ſpirits, if they can aſſume a more ſolid body, yet cannot put illuſions upon men in things belonging to their faith, or be ſent by God for ſuch ends. (Idem.] And if the church of Rome will not allow us to believe our ſenſes, we ſhall loſe the beſt external evidence we can have to prove the truth of the Chriſtian religion; namely, the miracles of Chriſt: for how can I know that thoſe miracles were true, but by the judgment of my ſenſes? Now as our ſenſes tell us, that Chriſt's miracles were true, ſo they aſſure us, that the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation is falſe. (B.)

Yet believed not, for joy.] Their joy was greater than their minds were able to contain. (G.) The greater and more tranſporting it was, the leſs confident were they of the truth of it. (H.) Thinking it was too good to be true, and rather might be a pleaſant dream, Pſal. cxxvi. 1. (W.) And therefore, to confirm them in the certain belief of it, he called for ſome meat, and Did eat before them.] To prove to them that his body was truly raiſed. And ſeeing it cannot be ſuppoſed, that Chriſt in this action deſigned any illuſion, it follows from his truly eating, that his body had thoſe parts by which meat is chewed; and a ſtomach to receive it. (Idem.) See Acts x. 41.

All things muſt be fulfilled.] Theſe two great events, of the Meſſiah's death, and riſing again the third day, were foretold in theſe three parts of the holy ſcripture: "the law of Moſes," or Penteteuch; the Nebiin, or prophets, and the pſalms: which diviſion of the books of the Old-Teſtament obtained in our Saviour's time, as Joſephus witneſſeth.

Then opened he their underſtanding.] It is one thing to open the ſcriptures themſelves, or to explain them, and another to open their underſtandings to perceive them; Chriſt did the latter. Whence note, That the opening of the mind and heart effectually to receive the truths of God, is the peculiar prerogative and office of Jeſus Chriſt; "Then opened he their underſtanding;" namely, by the illuminations of his holy ſpirit. One of the greateſt miſeries under which lapſed nature labours, is ſpiritual blindneſs: Chriſt has the only Eye-ſalve which can heal and cure it, Rev. iii. 18. And there is no worſe cloud to obſcure the light of the ſpirit, than a proud conceit of our own knowledge. (B.) Chriſt here expounded, or explained to them, the ſcriptures concerning the Meſſiah. (Joſ. Mede.) And probably alſo gave them ſome firſt fruits of that ſpirit of prophecy, which fell more plentifully on them at the day of Pentecoſt. (W.)

Thus it is written.] Certain it is therefore, that, ſomewhere in the Old-Teſtament, theſe things were foretold: yea, St. Paul further aſſures us that they are "according to the ſcriptures," 1 Cor. xv. 3 4. It becomes not us therefore to be ſo ignorant, as commonly we are, which thoſe ſcriptures be which foretel them. It is a main point of our faith; and that which the Jews moſt ſtumble at, becauſe their doctors had not obſerved any ſuch thing of Meſſiah: but the more they were ignorant thereof, the more it concerns us to be confirmed therein. (Mede.) This is a ſure and convertible rule, nothing was done by Chriſt which was not foretold; nothing was foretold which was not done: If the law ſends forth a writ, with a ſcriptum eſt, it is written, the Goſpel ever returns it with a factum eſt, it is done. (Hodſon.)

Thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer.] That Meſſiah ſhould ſuffer death, was fore-ſignified in the law, or Pentateuch. 1. In the ſtory of Abraham, where he was commanded to offer his ſon Iſaac, the ſon wherein his ſeed ſhould be called, and to whom the promiſe was entailed, "that in it ſhould all the nations of the world be bleſſed, Gen. xxii. 18. What was here acted elſe, but the myſtery of Chriſt's paſſion? to wit, that the promiſed ſeed ſhould make all the nations of the world bleſſed, by becoming a ſacrifice for ſin? For which, that it might be the more evident, the place is alſo deſigned; the region of mount Moriah: there Abraham was bid to offer his ſon Iſaac, even where Meſſiah, who was then in the loins of Iſaac, was one day to be offered upon the Croſs. 2. By the ſlaying of beaſts, for the atonement of ſin, in their ſacrifices; which were nothing elſe but ſhadows and repreſentations of that offering upon the croſs which the Meſſiah was one day to make of himſelf for the ſins of the world; which myſtery of the end of thoſe legal ſacrifices, was ſhewed in the former ſtory of Abraham's offering Iſaac. For when he had brought his ſon to the place appointed, and had built an altar, and was now ready to ſlay him, as he was commanded, the angel of the lord ſtayed his hand, and ſhewed him a ram caught in a thicket by the horns: which ram Abraham took, and offered for a burnt offering, inſtead of his ſon; to ſignify, that the offering of the bleſſed ſeed was yet to be ſuſpended, and that God in the mean-while would accept the offerings of bulls and rams, as a pledge of that expiation, which the bleſſed ſeed of Abraham in the loins of Iſaac ſhould one day make. And as to the prophets, we find three evident prophecies that Meſſiah ſhould ſuffer death. 1. That famous one, Iſa. liii. "He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities, the chaſticement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed;" ver. 5. "he was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he is brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before his ſhearers is dumb, ſo he openeth not his mouth." ver. 7. "He was cut off out of the land of the living; for the tranſgreſſion of my people was he ſmitten." ver. 8. Now that this prophecy was one of thoſe, by which the apoſtles uſed to prove this verity, appears by the ſtory of the converſion of the Eunuch, Acts viii. 32. unto whom Philip coming, whilſt he was in his chariot, reading this place of ſcripture, and he thereupon asking Philip, of whom the prophet ſpake theſe words, the text tells us, that "Philip began at the ſame ſcripture, and preached unto him Jeſus." ver. 35. 2. That of Dan. ix. who pointing out the time of Meſſiah's coming, by "ſeventy weeks," limits his account, not at his birth, but at his ſuffering; as the moſt principal moment of his ſtory. "From the going out of the commandment, to reſtore and to build Jeruſalem, unto Meſſiah the prince, ſhall be ſeven weeks, and threeſcore and two weeks: and after the threeſcore and two weeks, ſhall Meſſiah be cut off; ver. 25. 26. 3. Zach. xii. 10. where, at the time when the Jews ſhall be converted, Chriſt is brought in, ſpeaking in this manner; "I will pour upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications; and they ſhall look upon me, whom they have pierced. "Hence it follows, that the Jews ſhould have "pierced Meſſiah," before they received him to be their Redeemer. And that this place alſo was one of thoſe applied by the apoſtles to this purpoſe, appears by St. John's twice alledging it: once, in his Goſpel, when the ſoldier with a ſpear pierced our Saviour's ſide; then ſaith he, was fulfilled that ſcripture, which ſaith, "They ſhall look upon him whom they pierced:" again, in the beginning of his revelation, "Behold, ſaith he, he cometh with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, and they alſo which pierced him," Rev. i. 7. Now for the third diviſion of ſcripture, the Pſalms, the principal place there, is that of Pſal. xvi. 10. quoted both by St. Peter, and St. Paul in the "Acts of the apoſtles "My fleſh ſhall reſt in hope, for thou wilt not leave my ſoul in the grave, neither ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption," Acts ii. 25, &c. and xiii. 35, &c. For David, as St. Peter, and St. Paul ſay, was buried, and his body ſaw corruption: therefore it cannot be ſpoken of him; but of Meſſiah, in the perſon of David, as a type in whoſe loyns Meſſiah was. Now then if Meſſiah's body were to be laid in the grave, it follows he was to dye, and to be in the ſtate of the dead. (Mede.) And that the ſecond Pſalm had alſo a peculiar reference to the Meſſiah, we learn from the alluſion made to it, by the whole college of the apoſtles, Acts iv. 25, &c. (Stanh.)

And to riſe from the dead the third day.] It behoved Chriſt to do this according to the ſcriptures. For this was alſo foreſhewn in the law, 1. In the ſame hiſtory of Iſaac, wherein his ſacrifice or ſuffering was acted. For, from the time that God commanded Iſaac to be offered for a burnt-offering, Iſaac was a dead man; but the third day he was releaſed from death. This the text tells us expreſly, that it was "the third day," Gen. xxii. 4. when Abraham came to mount Moriah, and had his ſon, as it were, reſtored to him again; which circumſtance, there was no need, nor uſe at all, to have noted, had it not been for ſome myſtery. For had there been nothing intended, but the naked ſtory, what did it concern us to know, whether it were the third, or the fifth day, that Abraham came to Moriah, where he received his ſon from death? Now, St. Paul expreſly makes this releaſe of Iſaac from ſlaughter, a figure of the reſurrection: for thus he ſpeaks of this whole ſtory; "By faith Abraham when he was tried, offered up Iſaac; and he that had received the promiſes offered up his only begotten ſon: of whom it was ſaid, that in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called; accounting that God was able to raiſe him up even from the dead; from whence alſo he received him in a figure." Heb. xi. 17, &c. 2. By the law of ſacrifices, which were to be eaten before the third day: ſome ſacrifices were to be eaten the ſame day they were offered, Lev. vii. 15. but thoſe which were deferred longeſt, as the peace-offerings, were to be eaten before the third day: the third day no ſacrifice might be eaten, but was to be burnt; ver. 17. if it were eaten, it was not accepted for an attonement, but counted an abomination; ver. 18. to ſhew that the ſacrifice of Meſſiah, which theſe ſacrifices repreſented, was to be finiſhed the third day, by his riſing from the dead; and therefore, the type thereof determined within that time, beyond which time it was not accepted for attonement of ſin, becauſe then it was no longer a type of him. As for the prophets, we find no expreſs prediction in them, for the time of Chriſt's riſing (for that of the prophet Jonah, I take to be rather an alluſion, than a prophecy: only in general, it is implied, that Chriſt ſhould riſe again; both in that famous prophecy of Iſa. liii. and that of Zach. xii. In the former it is ſaid, that after he had "made his ſoul a ſacrifice for ſin, he ſhould ſee his ſeed, and prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhould proſper in his hand." Iſa. liii. 10. And again, that the Lord ſhould "divide him a portion with the great;" and that he ſhould "divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong, becauſe he had poured out his ſoul unto death;" ver. 12. which argues that he ſhould not only live again, but be victorious after he had died. In that of Zachary it is ſaid, the Jews ſhould look upon, or ſee him whom they had formerly pierced; and, that in that day he would "pour upon them the ſpirit of grace and ſupplication, Zach. xii. 10. Therefore he was to live again after they had pierced him. But, in the Pſalms, not only his riſing again is propheſied of, but the time thereof determined; tho' at firſt ſight it appears not ſo: namely, in that fore-alledged paſſage of the ſixteenth Pſalm, "Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, nor ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption." All men ſhall riſe again, but their bodies muſt firſt return to duſt, and ſee corruption: But Meſſiah was to riſe again before he ſaw corruption: if before, then the third day at fartheſt; for then the body naturally begins to ſee corruption. This may be gathered by the ſtory of Lazarus in the Goſpel, where Jeſus commanding the ſtone to be rolled from his grave, Martha, his ſiſter, anſwered, "Lord by this time he ſtinketh; for he hath been dead four days," John xi. 39. Alſo by that rule, given by the maſters of phyſick, (vid. Meurſii gloſſar. græco-barbarum, in Tritennatai) that thoſe who dye of the apoplexy, ſuffocation of the mother, or like ſudden deaths, ſhould not be buried till ſeventy-hours were paſt; becauſe within that time, they might revive; and examples are given of thoſe who have done ſo. They give alſo a reaſon of it in nature; becauſe, ſay they, in that time the humours of the body make their revolution: the flegm in one day, or twenty-four hours; the choler in two days, or forty-eight hours; the melancholy in three days, which is ſeventy-two hours: and this to be the reaſon why an ague, founded in an inflammation of flegm, returns every day; an ague, which comes from choler, every other day; from melancholy, every third day. Now if a body may be kept ſo long unburied, it is ſuppoſed, it may be kept ſo long uncorrupted, when a corruption is not begun before death, as in ſome diſeaſes; but longer it will not continue. When therefore it is ſo often inculcated in the New-Teſtament, that our Saviour ſhould "riſe again the third day," the Holy Ghoſt, in ſo ſpeaking, reſpects not ſo much the number of days, as the fulfilling of ſcripture, that Meſſiah's body ſhould not ſee corruption, but ſhould riſe before the time wherein dead bodies begin to corrupt. So that if there be any other ſcripture, which implies that Meſſiah ſhould riſe before his body ſhould ſee corruption, that ſcripture, whatſoever it be, ſhews he ſhould riſe again within three days. (Mede.)

Repentance and remiſſion.] Obſerve here the ſpecial charge given by our Saviour to his apoſtles, "to preach repentance and remiſſion of ſins;" to preach it in Chriſt's name; to preach it "to all nations, beginning firſt at Jeruſalem." Whence note, the aſtoniſhing mercy of Jeſus Chriſt; although Jeruſalem was the place where he loſt his life, the city that barbarouſly butchered, and inhumanly murdered him, yet there he will have the doctrine of repentance preached; nay, firſt preached; there the Goſpel-combination muſt firſt begin, "that repentance and remiſſion of ſin be preached, beginning at Jeruſalem." Lord! How unwilling art thou that any ſhould periſh, when thou not only prayedſt for thy murderers, and offeredſt up thy blood to God in behalf of them that ſhed it, but requiredſt thy ambaſſadors to make Jeruſalem the firſt tender of remiſſion, upon condition of repentance, "that repentance and remiſſion of ſin ſhould be preached among all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem." (B.)

Ye are witneſſes of theſe things.] Chriſt's reſurrection being a matter of fact, muſt be proved by the teſtimony of eye-witneſſes, who, if they be honeſt men, and ſuch as ſuffer the greateſt prejudices in fortunes, reputation, and life, for this teſtimony, we have the greater reaſon to believe it: for their honeſty muſt render them unwilling to teſtify a falſhood; their intereſt and prudence would not ſuffer them, without any neceſſity laid upon them, to teſtify a lye; much more to teſtify the groſſeſt falſhood to their utmoſt damage, and without any proſpect of advantage: but farther, if they confirm this teſtimony by all kinds of ſigns, miracles, and wondrous powers, exerciſed by themſelves, and others, who embraced their teſtimony; if this was done in all places, on all kinds of perſons, for a whole age, or ages, this renders it impoſſible they ſhould thus atteſt a lye; and therefore Chriſt bids them ſtay at Jeruſalem till they were thus impower'd by virtue from on high, to confirm this teſtimony, Acts i. 8. (W.)

Ver. 49. And behold I ſend the promiſe of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jeruſalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.

The promiſe of my father.] That is, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, which was promiſed him by the father, to be by him given to his apoſtles. (G.) To ſupply the want of his bodily preſence; and to inſtal them to ſucceed him in his holy office. (H. and B.)

Tarry ye in the city of Jeruſalem.] That is, continue in the Church, there expecting the divine promiſes, which are received only in her boſom. (Q.) Theſe words ſhould teach us, neither to expoſe ourſelves to the world and its temptations, nor to undertake the work of God, "until we be endued with power from on high." (Idem.)

Ver. 50, 51, 52, 53. And he led them out as far as to Bethany: and he lift up his hands, and bleſſed them. And it came to paſs, while he bleſſed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven. And they worſhipped him, and returned to Jeruſalem with great joy: And were continually in the temple, praiſing and bleſſing God. Amen.

As far as Bethany.] To that part of Bethany, which was on mount Olivet, where Chriſt had often poured forth his prayers and tears to his father; that the place which had been the witneſs of his humiliation, might be ſo likewiſe of his exaltation. (G.) See the notes on Mark xvi. 19. and Luke xix. 29.

He lift up his hands and bleſſed them.] Here is ſignified the rite of benediction, which was wont to be performed with "laying on of hands." But whenever the bleſſing was to be imparted to numbers of people at once, it was uſual, for ſaving of time, to "lift up the hands" over the heads of thoſe for whom the bleſſing was begg'd; as Levit. ix. 22. And the like has been uſed by the Chriſtian Biſhops, as well at the beginning as at the end of every aſſembly. (Idem.)

Carried up into heav'n.] This muſt be underſtood of his human nature only: for the divine nature fills all places both in heaven and earth; and this at all times too, being incapable of that which we properly call local motion. The ſame Body of Chriſt, which was born, and ſuffer'd, and died, was actually carried up thither:

and ſo our Saviour's aſcenſion was no imaginary or figurative, but a real, proper, and corporal, aſcent into heaven. (St.) As he raiſed himſelf out of his grave, ſo did he aſcend into heaven by his own power; there to appear in the preſence of God for us; and, as our fore-runner, to give us an aſſurance, that, in due time, we ſhall aſcend after him, "whither the fore-runner is for us entred;" Heb. vi. 20. (B.)

They worſhipped him.] Obſerve here the act of homage and adoration, which the apoſtles perform to the Lord Jeſus; how they worſhipped him, that is, as God, the eternal ſon of God, being ſo declared by the reſurrection from the dead, and by his aſcenſion into heaven before their eyes; from whence he will certainly come at the end of the world, to judge both the quick and the dead. (Idem.) Theſe words are rejected by Dr. Mill; though they are owned by Jerome, Theophylact, and all the verſions, and wanting only in his imaginary old vulgar. (W.)

Returned to Jeruſalem with great Joy.] Becauſe they now underſtood the wonderful methods, whereby the redemption of mankind was brought about; and had heard that gracious promiſe of ſending the Holy Ghoſt. (G.) Our Saviour's aſcenſion into heaven adminiſters unſpeakable comfort aud great degrees of confidence, with regard to the capacity, in which he aſcended thither. The Author to the Hebrews takes notice, that this action of our Lord was typified under the old law, by the high-prieſts entring into the "holy of holies," on the ſolemn day of atonement: whither alſo he brought in the blood of the ſacrifice. Now this was done, not upon the high-prieſt's account alone: but in behalf of the whole congregation; whoſe repreſentative he then was, and for whoſe benefit the ſin-offering had been ſlain. Thus alſo Chriſt, the ſubſtance and antitype of that antient figure "is entred into places not made with hands, even into heaven itſelf," for this very purpoſe (ſays the apoſtle) "now to appear in the preſence of God for us," Heb. ix. 24. Hence we have leave to look on this aſcent, not merely as a private and perſonal advantage, but as performed under that publick character which Chriſt ſuſtained, in the quality of our great high-prieſt. And as the ſacrifice of his death was acceptable for the "ſins of many:" ſo the repreſentation of that ſacrifice, at his aſcenſion, does likewiſe affect, and extend to as many as are purged and pardon'd by it. He went up therefore before us; and he went up for us. From whence the ſame author mentions, as "an anchor of our hope both ſure and ſtedfaſt, that Jeſus, the fore-runner is entred for us within the veil," ch. vi. 19, 20. Now the fore-runner is a relative term, and of neceſſity muſt have regard to ſome perſons following behind. A better application whereof we cannot have, than that made by our Lord himſelf, when, comforting his diſciples for his departure from them, he ſays, "In my father's houſe are many manſions. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myſelf; that where I am, there ye may be alſo." John xiv. 2, 3. (St.)

Continually in the temple.] That is to ſay, daily, at the proper hours: though they had at the ſame time, their conſtant aſſemblies among themſelves in private houſes; as appears from Acts i. 15 ii. 46. iii. 1. and xii. 12. (G.) Some, from theſe words conceive they dwelt in ſome upercon, "upper room," or apartment of the temple, belonging to ſome prieſt or levite; ſuch as are mentioned, 2 Kings xi. 2, 3 2 Chron. xxii. 11, 12. But it is not eaſy to conceive, the Sanhedrim and rulers of the people would have permitted this; and yet notwithſtanding all their hatred of, and oppoſition to them, we never read they thus diſlodged them. They therefore may be ſaid to have continned "always in the temple, as conſtantly reſorting thither at the hours of prayer; as the ſacrifices offered morning and evening, are ſtiled holokautomata diapantos, "continual ſacrifices," 1 Chr. xvi. 40. 2 Chr. ii. 4 (W.)

CRITICAL and EXPLANATORY
ANNOTATIONS
ACCORDING TO St. JOHN.

SAINT John the Evangeliſt was a native of Bethſaida in Galilee, the ſon of Zebedee and Salome, and younger brother to St. James, commonly ſtiled James the Greater; with whom he was brought up in their father's employment of a fiſherman, and together with him called to be a follower and apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt.

He was the youngeſt of all the apoſtles; being under thirty years of age when he was called to that dignity: And he lived till the reign of Trajan, ſurviving our Lord's paſſion near ſeventy years; ſo that he died about one hundred years old.

His intimacy with St. Peter is the leſs remarkable, becauſe of the familiarity with which he had the honour to be treated by Chriſt himſelf. For he was not only admitted (as his brother James alſo and Peter were) to the more private paſſages of our Saviour's life; but was particularly diſtinguiſhed, as "the diſciple whom Jeſus loved," to lie in his boſom at the laſt ſupper, and to be intruſted with the peculiar care of the bleſſed virgin-mother by her dying Son.

After our Lord's aſcenſion, 'tis probable he continued in Jeruſalem till ſhe alſo died; which is ſaid to have happened about fifteen years from that time. But in the diviſion of the ſeveral provinces among the apoſtles, that of Aſia fell to his ſhare: where he founded the churches of Smyrna, Pergamus, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea; tho' his chief place of reſidence was Epheſus, where St. Paul had ſettled a church before, and conſtituted Timothy the firſt biſhop of it: And yet, 'tis thought, he did not confine his miniſtry to Aſia Minor, but preached alſo in ſome other parts of the Eaſt; and probably in Parthia; his firſt epiſtle being anciently intitled "To the Parthians."

After many years ſpent there, he was, by order of Domitian, ſent to Rome; where, in the heat of that perſecution, he was caſt into a cauldron of burning oil: out of which it pleaſed God to deliver him in ſafety. But the cruel emperor, nothing moved with this miraculous deliverance, immediately thereupon baniſhed him into Patmos, a diſconſolate iſland in the Archipelago. And here it was, that thoſe viſions were manifeſted to him, which are intitled his Revelation.

In the reign of Nerva, the perſecution ceaſing, St. John had liberty to return to Epheſus: where, during this his ſecond reſidence, he wrote his Goſpel, at the requeſt of the Aſian biſhops and others; as he is alſo thought to have done his Epiſtles about the ſame time.

In this Goſpel he relates ſeveral paſſages of our Saviour's life, (particularly in the beginning of his miniſtry) which the other Evangeliſts had omitted; and ſets himſelf to prove the eternal exiſtence of the Word, or Son of God, in oppoſition to the hereſies of Ebion, and Cerinthus, and the Nicolaitans, who denied our Lord's divinity. It was written by him in Greek, but afterwards tranſlated into Hebrew and other languages.

The deſign and ſcope of it is to deſcribe the perſon of Chriſt in his two natures, divine and human, as the object of our faith: And this he does in ſuch a ſublime and lofty manner, that he was by the ancients compared to the eagle, which ſoars aloft, and makes her neſt on high, and commonly, by way of eminence, diſtinguiſhed with the character (which he well deſerved) of John the Divine; agreeably with that title which Chriſt himſelf had conferred upon him, of a "Son of thunder." For, whereas the other Evangeliſts inſiſt chiefly upon Chriſt's humanity, proving him to be truly man, the ſon of Mary; St. John, with a particular eye to the hereticks, proves him to be God as well as man; God from eternity, and man in the fulneſs of time: They relate what Chriſt did; he reports what Chriſt ſaid: They recount his miracles; he records his ſermons and prayers: In ſhort, the profound myſteries of the Goſpel are here unfolded by "the beloved diſciple, as if (in St. Auguſtin's phraſe) he had drawn them out of "Chriſt's boſom;" and particularly thoſe of the divinity and incarnation of our bleſſed Redeemer.

As to his ſtyle, whatſoever objections may be made to it, by certain criticks, who take the liberty to charge all the inſpired writers of the New Teſtament with "barbarous language, falſe Greek, and ſoleciſms," we may ſay, in the words of a very learned modern, "He who cannot ſee true and genuine eloquence in the apoſto-"lical writings, is unqualified to be a critick." And how groundleſs and unjuſt that charge is upon them all, and particularly upon this Evangeliſt, I beg leave to refer my reader, for full and ample proof, to The ſacred Claſſicks defended and illuſtrated, by A. Blackwall, M.A.

CHAP. I.

The Eternity, Divinity, Humanity, and Office of Jeſus Chriſt. The Miſſion, Miniſtry, and Teſtimony of John the Baptiſt. Two of his Diſciples follow Chriſt. Andrew brings Peter to him. Chriſt calls Philip: and he brings Nathanael.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. IN the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The ſame was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life, and the life was the light of men. And the light ſhineth in darkneſs, and the darkneſs comprehended it not.

In the beginning.] En archee cannot here ſignify in the beginning of the Goſpel; but, as Grotius ſaith, it being taken from the word beriſcheth, Gen. i. 1. tranſlated by the Septuagint en archee, muſt ſignify cum primum rerum univerſitas cœpit creari, from the beginning of the creation; as appears from what follows. (W.) In the beginning of all time; before which there was nothing but eternity. (Bever.)

Was the Word.] Ho Logos, a title underſtood by the generality of the Jews, and many heathens of that and former ages, to denote a divine perſon. For, that the Word is a perſon, a divine perſon, and the maker of all things, were notions very familiar to the Jews; as is plain from the Chaldee paraphraſts: And many of the Gentile philoſophers had mentioned the Logos, or Word, as inſeparable from the deity, and the cauſe and artificer of all things: So that, thus far the Evangeliſt neither expreſſed himſelf in any uncouth terms, nor affirmed any thing new. But that which lay upon him to prove, for the inſtruction and conviction of both theſe ſorts of men, was that this divine Word did come into the world; did converſe among and enlighten mankind, with thoſe diſcoveries of truth and ſalvation contained in the Goſpel; and did do and ſuffer all thoſe wondrous things related there at large, in the perſon of our Redeemer. (Stanh.) Obſerve here, 1. The perſon ſpoken of, Jeſus Chriſt, under the name of the Word; becauſe God ſpeaks to us by him, and makes known his will to us by Chriſt, as we make known our minds to one another by our words. Again, as our words are the conception and image of our minds, ſo Chriſt is the expreſs image of his Father's perſon; and was begotten of the Father, even as our words are begotten of our minds. 2. What the Evangeliſt here aſſerts concerning the Word; viz. (1.) His eternal exiſtence: "In the beginning was the Word." When all things received their being, then the Word was, and did actually ſubſiſt, even from all eternity: "For all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made;" which plainly ſhews, that the Evangeliſt is here ſpeaking of the creation, riſe, or beginning of all created things; and that Jeſus Chriſt, not only antecedent to his incarnation, but even before all time, and the beginning of all things, had an actual being and exiſtence. (2.) His perſonal co-exiſtence with the Father: "The Word was with God;" that is, eternally and inſeparably with him, in the ſame eſſence and nature, being in the Father as well as with him; ſo that the Father never was without him, Prov. viii. 30. So that the Son is a perſon diſtinct from the Father, but of the ſame eſſence and nature with the Father: He is "God of God, very God of very God; being of one ſubſtance with the Father, by whom all things were made." (3.) His divine eſſence: "The Word was God." Here St. John declares the divinity, as he did before the eternity, of our bleſſed Saviour: He was with God, and exiſted in him; therefore he muſt be God, and a perſon diſtinct from the Father "The Word was God," ſay the Socinians; that is, a God by office, not by nature, as being God's embaſſador. But, the word God is uſed eleven times in this chapter in its proper ſenſe; and it is not reaſonable to conceive, that it ſhould be here uſed in an improper ſenſe; in which this word in the ſingular number is never uſed throughout the whole New Teſtament. (W. and B.) Hence we may learn, That the eternity, the perſonality, and the divinity of Chriſt, are of neceſſity to be believed, if we will worſhip him aright. Chriſt tells us, We muſt worſhip the Son even as we worſhip the Father, chap. v. 23. Now, unleſs we acknowledge the eternity and divinity of Chriſt, the ſecond perſon, as well as of God the Father, the firſt perſon, we honour neither. There is this difference between natural things and ſupernatural: Natural things are firſt underſtood, and then believed; but ſupernatural myſteries muſt be firſt believed, and then will be better underſtood: If we will firſt ſet reaſon on work, and believe no more than we can comprehend, this will hinder faith; but if, after we have aſſented to Goſpel-myſteries, we ſet reaſon on work, this will help faith. (B.) The Socinian gloſs makes a very plain and flat tautology in the words of the Evangeliſt. For the ſenſe of them, according to it, muſt be this; That Chriſt was, when John Baptiſt preached that he was; or, which is all one, when he was preaching his own Goſpel. Now, how can it be worthy of an inſpired apoſtle to aſſert, that the Word had a being when he began to preach, or when he was twenty-nine years old; that is, when the Baptiſt came to make him manifeſt to Iſrael? This being as true of any other man living, as of the Word; even of Judas and Pilate; and as plainly told by all the foregoing Evangeliſts. (W.) See the notes on Luke i. 2.

Was with God.] Pros ton Theon; that is, meta Theou, ſaith Theophylact: Which Mr. Cl. interprets, in God; ſaying, Reaſon was in God. But he gives no inſtance where the prepoſition pros in the New Teſtament ſignifies in; whereas there be many inſtances where it hath the ſignification of para and meta, with; as, Matt. xiii. 56. xxvi. 18. Mark ix. 19. xiv. 49. 1 Cor. ii. 3. xvi. 6. So in this Evangeliſt, 1 Ep. i. 2. iii. 21. v. 14. And thus in Ignatius, Chriſt is mentioned, as being with the Father before the world, and proceeding from him alone. Nor will this phraſe admit of either of the ſenſes impoſed on it by the Socinians, viz. Not of that which ſaith, he "was with God," that is, "he was known to God alone." For, 1. This is not abſolutely true; he being known, before his prophetick office was begun, to the angels, Luke ii. 11. to the virgin, Mary, to whom the angel had revealed that he was "the Son of the Higheſt," one that ſhould "ſit on the throne of David," and was to be called Jeſus, Luke i. 30. &c. as well as to Zachary, Joſeph, Simeon, Anna, and the wiſe men. 2. It is a gloſs without example of any ſuch import of the phraſe, and without any probability. For who would think that, by ſaying, only Titius was with Sempronius, I ſhould mean that he was known to him alone? And, 3. This is as true of Antichriſt, of hypocrites latent among believers, of a ſecret thief, or murderer: but can it therefore properly be ſaid that they are with God? Wherefore, this gloſs being ſo plainly abſurd, they flie to a ſecond, viz. That Chriſt, before he entred upon his prophetick office, was taken up into heaven, to be inſtructed in the mind and will of God; as Moſes was into the mount; and upon that account it is here ſaid, that he "was with God." But here lies the great difference. When Moſes was called up into the mount, the people had publick notice, and many witneſſes of it, Exod. xxiv. 3, 9. &c. and the like at his coming down, chap. xxxiv. 29. &c But, if Chriſt was thus taken up into heaven, before he entred upon his office, why was not that alſo then made publick? why no witneſſes of it? When he was transfigured on the holy mount, he took Peter, James, and John with him; which circumſtance is carefully recorded, and Peter himſelf lays great weight upon it, 2 Pet. i. 16. &c. But not one of the Evangeliſts ſays a word of his being taken up into heaven to be inſtructed in his embaſſage. (W.)

The Word was God.] The article ho joined to Logos ſheweth, that this is the ſubject, and Theos that wanteth it the predicate. (Beza and Lightf.) "He that made all things is God," in the proper acceptation of the word, Heb. iii. 4. But, by the "Word (here ſpoken of) were all things made, and without him was not any thing made that was made," ver. 3. "He in the beginning laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of his hands," Heb. i. 10. "He created all things, viſible and inviſible" Col. i. 16. Therefore he muſt be God, in the proper acceptation of the word. (W. and B.)

Made by him.] The Hebrews, when they would ſay a thing with the greateſt force and certainty, are wont to expreſs it both affirmatively and negatively; as "he ſhall live, and not die;" that is, he ſhall moſt aſſuredly live. So here, "All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made;" that is, he made all things, without exception: And conſequently, he himſelf is not a creature, becauſe it is abſolutely impoſſible that any thing ſhould ever make itſelf. But then, if he be, and yet was never made, it is certainly true, that he always was, even from all eternity. (Fox.)

In him was life.] Here we have a farther proof of Chriſt's divinity, and an evidence that he had a being as God, before his incarnation; for as much as all life is centred in him, communicated by him, and derived from him. In him was life, formaliter & cauſaliter. Life was formally in Chriſt, as the ſubject of it, and alſo cauſally in him, as the fountain of it. Learn, 1. That Chriſt is the author and diſpenſer of all life unto his creatures. He is original life in the order of nature, becauſe by him man was created, Gen. i. 26. He is ſpiritual life in the order of grace, John xiv. 6. He is eternal life in the order of glory, 1 John v. 20. Learn, 2. That all creatures receiving light and life from Chriſt, not as an inſtrument, but as the fountain from whence it floweth, and in which it is preſerved, it is an evident proof of his divinity, and an argument that he is truly and really God. (B.) The Evangeliſt, having conſidered the Word, in the former verſe, as the author of nature, cometh now to treat of him as the author of grace; there as the Creator, here as the Redeemer: For, having related there, that "by him all things were made," and amongſt "all things," man received his natural life and being, he goes on now to ſhew, that by the ſame Word alſo, man, when he was fallen and periſhed, and had incurred the penalty of dying the death, re-obtained a new and better life, namely by faith, and laying hold of him in the promiſe. (Lightf.)

And the life was the light of men.] By giving them the knowledge of eternal life, and of the way leading to it; and in which they that walk are ſaid to "walk in the light," 1 John i. 7. to "abide in the light," ii. 10. and to be the "children of the light," chap. xii. 36. And Chriſt ſays, "I am the light of the world; he that follows me ſhall have the light of life," chap. viii. 12. ix. 5. and xii. 46. And then theſe following words, "the light ſhineth in darkneſs," muſt reſpect the heathen world, ſtiled Darkneſs, Rom. xiii. 12. Eph. v. 8. and the blind Jews: And the darkneſs muſt be ſaid not to comprehend it, becauſe the vicious part of the world would not own, but hated the light; and "loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil;" and ſo they were reproved by it, chap. iii. 19, 20. (W.) That ſmall remainder of the knowledge of what is good, and of natural light in ſinners, namely, reaſon itſelf, is no other than a communication of the eternal light of the Word: And yet the generality of men are either altogether ignorant of it, or at leaſt unmindful of rendering to him the glory of it. (Q.) The life of the promiſe was the light that ſhone in the world, and to which all the patriarchs and prophets, and all the holy men of God, that lived before the fulfilling of it, had an eye and reſpect, as to a light ſhining in a dark place, and whereby they guided all their devotions, and whereto they aimed all their actions. And this light then ſhone, and yet ſhineth, in all the types, ſhadows, figures and predictions of the Law, and of the prophets, as we daily read them; and that darkneſs and myſtical cloudineſs, which lay over them, did not comprehend it, but that it gave ſome ſhare in that obſcureneſs: And yet did they not reach to that brightneſs of revealing of Chriſt, but that it was neceſſary that the Goſpel ſhould be preach'd; the beginning of which is mentioned in the very next verſe, namely, the preaching of John. (Lightf.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. There was a man ſent from God, whoſe name was John. The ſame came for a witneſs, to bear witneſs of the light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that light, but was ſent to bear witneſs of that light. That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them he gave power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name: Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the Word was made fleſh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth. John bare witneſs of him, and cried, ſaying, This was he of whom I ſpake, He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before me. And of his fulneſs have all we received, and grace for grace. For the law was given by Moſes, but grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt. No man hath ſeen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the Boſom of the Father, he hath declared him. And this is the record of John, when the Jews ſent prieſts and Levites from Jeruſalem, to ask him, Who art thou? And he confeſſed, and denied not; but confeſſed, I am not the Chriſt. And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he ſaith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he anſwered, No. Then ſaid they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an anſwer to them that ſent us: what ſayeſt thou of thyſelf? He ſaid, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Make ſtraight the way of the Lord, as ſaid the prophet Eſaias. And they which were ſent, were of the Phariſees. And they asked him, and ſaid unto him, Why baptizeſt thou then, if thou be not that Chriſt, nor Elias, neither that prophet? John anſwered them, ſaying, I baptize with water: but there ſtandeth one among you, whom ye know not; He it is who, coming after me, is preferred before me, whoſe ſhoes latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe. Theſe things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing. The next day John ſeeth Jeſus coming unto him, and ſaith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the ſin of the world. This is he of whom I ſaid, After me cometh a man, which is preferred before me: for he was before me. And I knew him not: but that he ſhould be made manifeſt to Iſrael, therefore am I come baptizing with water. And John bare record, ſaying, I ſaw the Spirit deſcending from heaven, like a dove, and it abode upon him. And I knew him not: but he that ſent me to baptize with water, the ſame ſaid unto me, Upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending and remaining on him, the ſame is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt. And I ſaw, and bare record that this is the Son of God. Again the next day after, John ſtood, and two of his diſciples: And looking upon Jeſus as he walked, he ſaith, Behold the Lamb of God.

A man ſent from God.] With commiſſion from God, to preach repentance to the Jews. (H.) Here may we look back, and ſee the method and intention of the Evangeliſt, and the reaſon why he calleth Chriſt by this name, "The Word," rather than any other. For, 1. He was the Word, by whom all things, and among them, man, were created. 2. The Word, by which man, being fallen, was recovered, and obtained life. 3. The Word of light, direction, and conſolation to the holy patriarchs. 4. The Word of promiſe, in the darkneſs of the law and prophets: And he is now come to be the Word incarnate, and the publiſher of the Goſpel, which began from John; Mark i. 1. And thus hath the Evangeliſt made the whole Old Teſtament no other than a vailed Goſpel; ſpeaking of Chriſt, tho' ſomewhat obſcurely, from the beginning to the end: As in the creation, ver. 3. in the promiſe, ver. 4. in the expectation of the fathers, ibid. in the darkneſs of the law and prophets, ver. 5. in the neceſſity of a clearer revelation of him by his own coming, ibid. (Lightf.) St. John's miſſion is without miracles, becauſe it is ordinary: and he only preaches repentance to men, in order to fit them to receive the Meſſias, which was alſo the Goſpel of all the prophets. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 1. and xi. 10. and Mark i. 1.

Whoſe name was John.] John the Baptiſt, the fore-runner of our Saviour, was the ſon of Zacharias and Elizabeth, according to the ſcriptures: To which we refer, for the acts of his life, and the circumſtances of his death; the account that ſome prophane authors give of him, being not at all to be relied on.

To bear witneſs of the Light.] The Light, in this and the following verſes, is taken perſonally for Chriſt himſelf; whereas in ver. 4, 5. it was taken virtually only: There, for the light that flowed from Chriſt, and therefore it is ſaid, that "light was in him;" here, for Chriſt, the light itſelf; for ſo is he called, ver. 9. See Iſa. x. 17. xlii. 6 and xlix. 6. and Mic. vii. 8. For, 1. Chriſt revealeth the Father and his will, ver. 18. and chap. xvi. 25. and "whatſoever doth make manifeſt is light," Eph. v. 13. 2. He is "the brightneſs of the glory, and the expreſs image of the Father," Heb. i. 3. "who is light, without any darkneſs at all," 1 John i. 5. 3. He enlighteneth the hearts of his by faith, Eph. v. 14. and, 4. Chriſt, held out in the Goſpel, filled the world full of the light of knowledge, in compariſon of what it was under the law, Pſalm xix. 3. and Iſa. xi. 9. (Lightf.) See here the deſign of the Baptiſt's teſtimony; not only, that ſome few elect, but that "all men might believe in Chriſt." (W.) Where the word all joineth the Gentiles with the Jews, which hitherto had been ſecluded. And in the ſame ſenſe is Chriſt's "lighting every one that cometh into the world," ver. 9. to be underſtood, for his general and univerſal enlightening of the world, with the ſhining of the Goſpel: For there is a compariſon made here, by the Evangeliſt, between the light of the promiſe under the law, and the light of the Goſpel and Chriſt in it. (Lightf.)

He was not that light.] Here the Evangeliſt proceeds in declaring Chriſt to be really God, becauſe he was that original, that eſſential light, which had no beginning, ſuffers no decay, but is ſo diffuſive, as in ſome kind, and in ſome meaſure or other, to enlighten every man that cometh into the world. Some of the Jews had a conceit, that John the Baptiſt was the promiſed Meſſias, as appears by Luke iii. 15. "The people were in expectation, and all men muſed in their hearts of John, whether he were the Chriſt or not." Here therefore, to undeceive the Jews, the Evangeliſt adds, that John was not that light: John was a great light, a burning and a ſhining light, but not ſuch a light as the Meſſias was to be. John was a light inſtrumentally, Chriſt efficiently: John was a light enlightened, Chriſt was a light enlightening: John's light was by derivation and participation, Chriſt's was eſſential and original. John's light was as the light of a candle in a private houſe, in and among the Jews only; but Chriſt's light was as the light of the ſun, ſpreading over the face of the whole earth. "This is the true Light that lightens every man that cometh into the world," that is, he enlightens all mankind with the light of reaſon, and is the author of all ſpiritual illumination in them that receive it. Chriſt is called a Light in regard of his office, which was to manifeſt and declare that ſalvation to his church which lay hid before in the purpoſe of God; and he is called the True Light, not ſo much in oppoſition to all falſe lights, but as oppoſed to the types and ſhadows of the Moſaical diſpenſation. Learn, 1. That every man and woman that comes into the world is enlighten'd by Chriſt in ſome kind and meaſure or other. All are enlighten'd with the light of reaſon and natural conſcience: Some with the light of grace and ſupernatural illumination. Learn, 2. That Chriſt being the eſſential, original, and eternal light, enlightning and enlivening the whole creation, is an evident and undeniable demonſtration that he is truly and really God. (B.) And thus may we alſo reconcile the ſeeming contradiction between this paſſage, and that other, where the apoſtles are called "the light of the world," Matt. v. 14. For, 1. We muſt diſtinguiſh between the doubtful meanings of the word light: Becauſe there is a light which is ſelf-exiſtent, and a light which is derived from another; a light which is eſſentially ſo, and a light by participation; a light which is ſubſtantial, original, and radical, and a light only accidental and borrowed; a light independent, and a light dependent; a light which is perfect, intenſively and extenſively, and a light imperfect, a light which breaketh through all darkneſs, and a light obſcured with darkneſs; a light which ſhineth and illuminateth, and a light which only ſeemeth to ſhine. In the former ſenſe Chriſt alone is light, in the latter his diſciples are ſo. That prædicate may therefore, in a different reſpect, be affirmed and denied, concerning the diſciples, in like manner as other prædicates may be. Thus it may, in a different ſenſe, be affirmed and denied, that men are juſt, good, and ſuch like. Hence alſo Chriſt adds, in the words there following, what ſort of light he aſcribeth to his diſciples; to wit, that of a candle. 2. It is not here abſolutely denied, that John the Baptiſt was a light, but only 'tis denied, that he was that light, properly, of which the apoſtle here ſpeaketh, to wit, a ſelf-exiſtent, independent, eſſential, and perfect light; "the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." 3. Elſewhere John himſelf is called "a burning and a ſhining light," and the Jews are ſaid to have "rejoiced in his light," chap. v. 35. Yea, all Chriſtians are, proportionably, a light, and ought to ſhine as the children of light, full of the light of grace on earth, and appointed to the light of glory in heaven. Thus, they are commanded to "ſhine as lights in the world," Phil. ii. 15. as being "the children of light, and the children of the day." And, tho' John had obtained a greater light than the prophets, and other ſaints, of the Old Teſtament, as having the honour to point out the perſon of the Meſſiah, yet "he that is leaſt in the kingdom of heaven is pronounced to be greater than he," Matt. xi. 11. and Luke vii. 28. under the Goſpel diſpenſation, by reaſon of the greater light which accompanieth it. Hence the former œconomy is called "a time of ignorance," Acts xvii. 30. comparatively, in order to the latter. In the former, the lamps only were lighted in the houſe of God; under the latter, "the day-ſpring from on high," Luke i. 78. (anatolee, oriens, he whoſe name is the Eaſt, Zech. iii. 8. and vi. 12.) "hath viſited us," with fulneſs of light and grace: In the former, God revealed himſelf under a cloud, and covered with a cloud; but in the latter, "we all, with open face, behold as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord;" 2 Cor. iii. 18. hereafter to behold the ſame ſtill more clearly and fully, in the light of the Father. (Spanhem.)

Lighteth every man that cometh.] This may be either read, which coming into the world, lighteth every man; or, as our Engliſh hath it, "which lighteth every man that cometh:" but the latter is approved the true; 1. By the very place where the word erchomenon lieth: for it followeth not immediately the word phoos, but anthropon; and ſo being joined with it, reaſon and the cuſtom of grammar tell us, that it ſhould be conſtrued with it. and 2. It is ordinary with the Jews to call men by this peraphraſis, ſuch as "come into the world;" which idiom of the Hebrews the Evangeliſt followeth here. The Syriac alſo reads it as we do. (Lightf. and W.) See the notes on Matt. xi. 3.

He was in the world.] That is, he that was God from eternity, made himſelf viſible to the world in the fulneſs of time. The Evangeliſt repeats it again, That "the world was made by him," to ſhew his omnipotency and divinity; and then adds, that "the world knew him not," as an evidence of the world's blindneſs and ingratitude. Notwithſtanding the eternal Son of God appeared in the world, and the world was made and created by him; yet the generality of the world did not know him; that is, did not own and acknowledge him, did not receive and obey him. They neither knew him as Creator, nor accepted of him as Mediator: yea, "he came to his own;" that is, his own kindred and country, the church and people of the Jews; but the generality of them gave him cold entertainment. It was the ſin of the Jewiſh nation, that though they were Chriſt's own peculiar people; his own by choice, his own by purchaſe, his own by covenant, by kindred, yet the generality of them did reject him, and would not own him for the true and promiſed Meſſias. (B.) Chriſt rejected by his own, is the conſolation of all ſuch as ſuffer at the hands of their near relations. (Q.)

As many as received him.] In ver. 11. it is parelabon, but in ver. 12. it is elabon: which words, though they ſignify the ſame thing, yet may admit of ſome diſtinction in the ſenſe. For Chriſt came among the Jews bodily, yet they would not ſo much as receive him bodily, nor acknowledge him for Meſſias at all: but, coming among the Gentiles, by his word and ſpirit, they received him ſpiritually. (Lightf.) Now this receiving of Chriſt implies theſe three things. 1. The aſſent of the underſtanding to that divine teſtimony which the ſcripture gives of Chriſt. 2. The conſent of the will to ſubmit to this Jeſus as Lord and King. 3. The affiance and truſt of the heart in Chriſt alone for ſalvation; for faith is not a bare credence, but a divine affiance, and ſuch an affiance in Chriſt, and reliance upon him, as is the parent and principle of obedience to him. It is the high and honourable privilege of all ſuch as receive Chriſt by faith, to become the ſons of God by adoption. This is a precious privilege, a free privilege, an honourable privilege, an abiding privilege, and calls for all poſſible returns of gratitude and thankfulneſs, of love and ſervice, of duty and obedience, of ſubmiſſion and ſelf-reſignation. (B.)

Power to become the ſons of God.] Exouſia here ſignifies the right, privilege, dignity and prerogative; as 1 Cor. viii. 9. and ix. 5, 6. This privilege to be the "ſons of God," is as Grotius well notes, a right to the inheritance of the ſaints, Rom. viii. 17. a right to a bleſſed reſurrection, Luke xx. 36. a right to abide always in our father's houſe, John viii. 35. a right to a ſtate of immortality and incorruption, Rom. viii. 23. (W.) The people of the church are called the "ſons of God," Gen vi. 2. And, after the diſperſion at Babel, where the heathens became the "children of men," ch. xi. 5. this title was appropriated only to the Jews, Exod. iv. 22. Hoſ. xi. 1. But now, when the Jews, Chriſt's own people, ſhould not receive him when he ſo came among them, this privilege ſhould be conferred upon what heathen or Gentiles ſoever ſhould receive him; that they ſhould be henceforward, as the Jews had been hitherto, "the ſons of God," or the church of Chriſt. (Lightf.) The true nobility, and that which alone ought to be eſteemed and valued by a Chriſtian, conſiſts in being a child of God. This quality comprehends every thing: but alas! Few underſtand it, few preſerve it, few live like children of God. A gentleman of the loweſt rank values himſelf upon his not degenerating from his birth: and yet a Chriſtian, by leading a carnal life, degenerates from a birth which is altogether holy, ſpiritual and divine. (Q.)

Believe on his name.] That is, in, or on him. For the name of God in ſcripture doth often ſtand for God himſelf; as Pſal. lxxv. 1, Mic. vi. 9. Acts iii. 16, &c. For, as R. Menahem ſays, upon Exod. vi. 3. God is without any mixture or compoſition, but a moſt pure and ſimple eſſence; and therefore his name and himſelf are not two ſeveral things, as they be in the creatures, but one and the ſame. (Lightf.)

Which were born.] To be born of any thing, ſignifies to receive his beginning or principle of life and motion from any thing: and ſo here, to be "born of God," is to have received ſome ſpecial influence from him; and proportionably, to be a "ſon of God," is that ſtate which is anſwerable to ſuch a principle; a life proportionable to ſuch a beginning; that higher pitch of Chriſtian-living now under the Goſpel. And in oppoſition to that, 1. Thoſe who are "born of blood," (which is the livelieſt expreſſion of our corrupt birth, or natural ſtates) are thoſe who live the natural, heathen, firſt life, ſaith Clem. Alexandrinus; the life of the natural man. 2. Thoſe who are "born of the will of the fleſh," are carnal men, thoſe who follow their own vicious, carnal will: and 3. Thoſe who are "born of the will of man," (though literally that may note thoſe who are adopted by man, yet) by way of accommodation, and ſo as may be agreeable to the former phraſes, ſeem to be thoſe, who, by the influence of that higher rational principle, live according to the rule of rational nature, that is, of unregenerate morality; to which the rules of Chriſt's law ſuperadding much of light and perfection, the believers, and receivers of Chriſt are here defined to be thoſe who live according to thoſe rules of that higher principle, (and ſo are ſaid to be "born of God,") and not according to any of theſe lower ſtates. (H.) "Not of bloods," in the plural number; that is, not of the kindred, deſcent, or continued pedigree, from the patriarchal line, or the blood of Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, &c. ſucceſſively. (Lightf.) Some, obſerving that the Apoſtle ſaith, "God made all men ex henos haimatos, "of one blood," Acts xvii. 26. refers this birth of bloods to our natural production, and our being born of the "will of the fleſh," to the birth of the Jews, by that circumciſion which was made in the fleſh. But I prefer the former expoſition, becauſe though circumciſion be made in the fleſh, it proceeds not ek thelematos ſarkos, from "the will," deſire, or luſting "of the fleſh," but was done by them in obedience to the command of God. (W.) Jeſus Chriſt is the only "ſon of God" by nature and generation; and through him only it is, that we are made the "ſons of God" by grace and adoption, ver 12. If we be the ſons of God, we are made ſo; but he is the ſon of God, "not made, nor created, but begotten." "I go to my father, and to your father," ſaith he himſelf, ch. xx. 17. mine firſt; and then, and therefore, yours alſo. He is medium unionis; like the corner-ſtone, wherein both ſides of the building unite; or like the ladder, whereon Jacob ſaw "angels aſcending and deſcending:" All intercourſe between heaven and earth, God and man, is in and through him. (Sanderſon.) It is by the choice of the "will of God," and by his love, that we are made partakers of his divine nature, and appointed to enjoy his heavenly inheritance: It is this will therefore, and this love, which we muſt take for the rule of our life; and not the "will of the fleſh," nor the "will of man," namely, a human or carnal love. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 9. and Luke iii. 23.

The Word was made fleſh.] In the deſcription of this great myſtery of the incarnation, we may obſerve, 1. The two terms, the word, and fleſh; expreſſing Chriſt's two natures; and the word was made, or became, their hypoſtatical union. 2. The word fleſh is rather uſed by the Evangeliſt than the word man; (though they oftentimes ſignify but the ſame thing; as Gen. vi. 12. Pſal. lxv. 2. Iſa. xl. 5, 6.) 1. To make the diſtinction of the two natures in Chriſt the more conſpicuous; and that, according to the common ſpeech of the Jews, who ſet "fleſh and blood" in oppoſition to God; as Matt. xvi. 17. Gal. i. 16. 2. To magnify the mercy of God in Chriſt's incarnation the more; in that fleſh, being in its own nature ſo far diſtant from the nature of God, yet that he thus brought theſe two natures together, as of them to make but one perſon for the reconciling of man and himſelf together. 3. To confirm the truth of Chriſt's humanity againſt future hereſies; which have held, that he had not a true and real human body, but only fantaſtical, or of the air. 4. To explain what he ſaid before, that believers became the "ſons of God;" that is, not by any change of their bodily ſubſtances, but by participation of divine grace: For Chriſt, on the contrary, became the "ſon of man," by aſſuming of fleſh, and not by changing into it. 5. To ſhew the plaiſter fitly applied unto the ſore, and the phyſick to the diſeaſe: For whereas in us, that is, in "our fleſh," there dwelleth no good, but ſin, death, and corruption; he took upon him this very nature, which we have ſo corrupted; ſequeſtring only the corruption from it, that in the nature he might heal the corruption. And 6. He ſaith, he "was made," or became, fleſh, and not he "was made man;" leſt it ſhould be conceived, that Chriſt aſſumed a perſon: For he took not the perſon of any man in particular, but the nature of man in general. (Lightf.) Chriſt, "the Word" was "made fleſh," 1. Not by changing his divinity into humanity, but by aſſuming the humanity into the divinity. 2. Not by confounding the divine with the human nature, but by uniting the human nature with the divine perſon. (Bever.) Here are five degrees of abaſement, oppoſed to the glories above-mentioned: God became man; the ſon of the father, the ſon of man: the word, a child; the life, a mortal man; and the light, by dwelling among men, ſhone in the midſt of darkneſs. (Q.)

And dwelt among us.] That is, among us his diſciples; for ſo the next clauſe, "we beheld his glory," importeth; and this Evangeliſt ſpeaketh the ſame thing more at large, 1 John i. 1. (Lightf.) eskenoſe, he dwelt, or pitched his tabernacle, with us. (Uſher.) Which word has an apparent affinity, both in ſound and ſenſe, with the Hebrew ſhacan, uſed in the Old Teſtament, when mention is made of the ſchechinah, or God's preſence in the tabernacle. (W.) The tabernacle was a type of Chriſt's human nature; 1. As the outſide of the tabernacle was mean, made of ordinary materials, but its inſide glorious; ſo was the Son of God. 2. God's ſpecial preſence was in the tabernacle; there he dwelt, for he had a delight therein: In like manner dwelt all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily in Chriſt; and the glory of his divinity ſhined forth to the eye and view of his diſciples: For they "beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father;" that is, while Chriſt appeared as a man among us, he gave great teſtimonies of his being the Son of God; The divinity of his perſon did ſhine forth, through the veil of his fleſh, and was ſeen by all them that had a ſpiritual eye to behold it, and a mind diſpoſed to conſider it. (B.) Though this incarnation of Chriſt was the greateſt humbling of him, yet was it nevertheleſs the greateſt manifeſtation of his glory; never ſo much of the divine power and glory was ſeen upon earth, as in this. (H.)

The glory, as of the only-begotten.] That is, the very glory of the only begotten; as Numb. xi. 1. Prov. x. 20. (Lightf.) For the particle as, is not here a note of ſimilitude or compariſon, but of confirmation and unqueſtionable definition: As if (ſays St. Chryſoſtome) the Evangeliſt had ſaid, "we ſaw his glory," ſuch as became, and was fit for the only begotten, and true natural ſon of God, the king of all. (Beza, H. and W.)

Full of grace and truth.] Here pleres, the nominative caſe, is put for the genitive. So Eph. iii. 17, 18. and Rev. i. 5. See examples of the like conſtruction in prophane authors, produced by Grotius, on Mark vi. 40. and by Schmidius. Note alſo, that it appeareth from the following words, ver. 17. "for the law came by Moſes, but grace and truth by Jeſus Chriſt," that this ſon of God is ſaid to be "full of grace and truth," in oppoſition to the law of Moſes. Now grace, in the New-Teſtament, implies two things; both which are declared to be wanting in the law of Moſes: 1. The mercy of God, in the free pardon of our ſins, or our juſtification or freedom from the guilt of ſin; from which we "could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes," Acts xiii. 38, 39. "For by the law," ſaith the apoſtle, "can no man be juſtified," Gal. iii. 11. Rom. iii. 20. We "being juſtified freely by his grace, through the Redemption which is in Jeſus," ver. 24. Whence it is ſaid to them, who ſeek to be juſtified by the law of Moſes, that they are "fallen from grace," Gal. v. 4. 2. Grace doth in ſcripture ſignify "the gifts of the holy ſpirit" freely conferred upon believers, who is therefore ſtiled "the gift by grace," Rom. v. 15. and his gifts are repreſented by the word grace; as when St. Peter ſaith, "as every man hath received the gift, ſo let him miniſter, as good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God," 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11. and St. Paul, Rom. xii. 6. "having therefore gifts, differing according to the grace given us, whether prophecy," &c. See Gal. ii. 8. 9. Eph. iii. 7. Now this promiſe of the ſpirit was the conſequence of faith in Chriſt, Gal. iii. 14. Hence are theſe two aſſigned as the great differences betwixt the law and the Goſpel; that the firſt was the "adminiſtration of the letter only," the other "of the ſpirit;" the firſt the adminiſtration of condemnation, the ſecond of juſtification, 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8. Again, the law is ſaid to have been only "a ſhadow of things to come," and an image of thoſe things of which Chriſt exhibited the body, truth, and ſubſtance, Col. ii. 17. Heb. viii. 5. and x. 1. and hence truth is here ſaid to come by Chriſt; and he is here repreſented as full of truth. (W.)

John bare witneſs.] Martyrei, witneſſeth, in the preſent tenſe; becauſe the authority of his teſtimony endureth for ever. (G.) This is cenſur'd by Eraſmus, as an innovation in the Evangeliſt: But it is uſed by the oldeſt and beſt authors. (Blackw.) Here we have the Baptiſt's firſt teſtimony concerning Chriſt the promiſed Meſſiah: And it conſiſts of four parts. 1. He prefers Chriſt before himſelf, as being ſurpaſſingly above him; ver. 15. 2. Before all believers, in point of fulneſs and ſufficiency of divine grace; ver. 16. 3. Before Moſes, whom the Jews doated ſo much upon, ver. 17. And 4. Even before all perſons whatſoever, in point of knowledge, and revealing the mind of God; ver. 18. (B.)

Before me, for he was before me.] What is the notion of protos, firſt, in the New-Teſtament, may here be fitly defined; 1. It ſignifies, in many places (being ſpoken of a perſon or perſons, eſpecially when it hath a genitive caſe annex'd to it) "a ruler," or "principal perſon." So Mark vi. 21. Luke xix. 47. Acts xiii. 50. xxviii. 7. and ver. 17. In this ſenſe, the phraſe prootos mou, cannot be taken here, ſo as to be rendred, my lord, my prince, or my captain: for that is certainly the meaning of the phraſe precedent emprosthen mou gegonen, "he was preferred before me;" as will appear by ver. 27. compared with Matt. iii 11. Mark. i. 7. Luke iii. 16. There by the mention of the ſhoe, &c. 'tis plain, that thoſe four places are parallel, and that which is emprosthen mou gegonen, "was preferred before me" in this, is by all the other Evangeliſts rendred iſchuroteros mou eſtin, "is ſtronger than I." And therefore St. Chryſoſtome here interprets emprosthen mou, "before me," by lamproteros, entimoteros, more excellent, more honourable. From this clear notion of emprosthen, precedent, for propriety of dignity, will depend the juſt notion of prootos mou, annex'd thereto by the cauſal oti, for, as the proof of the former, and ſo ſomewhat different from it; or elſe it would be the proving of idem per idem, the ſame by its ſelf. Thence it follows, that emprosthen, noting Chriſt's dignity above John's prootos mou, muſt not be rendred in that ſenſe; and ſo it remains, that it be referred to priority of time, hoti prootos mou en; for (although he was born after me, and not yet entred on his office, yet) "he was before me;" he had a being long, even infinitely before me. The only exception againſt this rendring of prootos is, that the word is of the ſuperlative degree, not of the comparative. But that is eaſily anſwered, by remembring, that in the New-Teſtament the degrees of compariſon are promiſcuouſly uſed, taken one for another; and that on occaſion of the Hebrew idiom, which hath not thoſe degrees of compariſon, which other languages have. Thus is mia, one, uſed for proote, firſt, Luke xxiv. 1. and others the like. And thus is prootos, firſt, in the ſuperlative, uſed for the comparative, proteros, former. So 'tis evidently in this Goſpel, chap. xv. 18. eme procton humoon memiſoken, "the world hated me before you:" chap. xx. 8. ho elthoon prootos, "he that came firſt," ſignifies him that came before Peter, ver. 3. and ſo is taken for the comparative proteros. And ſo when Chriſt is called the prootokos paſes ktiſeoos, Col. i. 15. literally "the firſt-born of all the creation," it muſt be interpreted, as it is in the Nicene creed, according to this notion of prootos, "begotten of his father before" the whole creation; or as it follows, ver. 17. pro pantoon, "he is before all things." Thus is the word uſed ſometimes in human Greek authors alſo; as prooton Dareiou in Ariſtophanes, before Darius: And that it muſt be ſo here, appears by the conjunction of mou to it, which (as by being in the genitive caſe, it is fit to be joined with a word of the comparative degree, ſo) by being of a ſingle perſon, uncapable of diſtribution or plurality, cannot belong to a ſuperlative. (H.) "He that cometh after me is preferred (that is, to be preferred) before me, for he was before me," (ſays John) meaning, with reſpect to the dignity of his perſon, and the eminency of his office, as being the eternal God. Now, "among them that are born of women there hath not riſen a greater than John the Baptiſt;" Matt. xi. 2. Luke vii. 28. If Chriſt then was greater than John, it was in regard of his being God; and God from all eternity. (B.)

Of his fulneſs.] The full ſenſe of this verſe ſeems to be, "of his fulneſs have all we receiv'd (fulneſs) and grace for (or, in proportion to, his) grace. There is in Chriſt Jeſus an infinite fulneſs of divine perfections: The ſpirit was given to him without meaſure; and from him are derived to us wiſdom, knowledge, virtue, aſſiſtance, &c. in ſuch proportions and degrees as we are capable of receiving them. (Fox.) Our fulneſs, how great ſoever, is but like that of a veſſel; Chriſt's is that of a fountain: Ours is derivative; his is original and inexhauſtible. (B.) "In him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily;" that is to ſay, by ſuch a perſonal and real union, as doth, inſeparably and everlaſtingly, conjoin that infinite Godhead with his infinite manhood, in the unity of the ſelf-ſame individual perſon. He in whom that fulneſs dwelleth, is the perſon; that fulneſs, which ſo doth dwell in him, is the nature. Now, there dwelleth in him not only the fulneſs of the Godhead, but the fulneſs of the manhood alſo. For, we believe him to be both "perfect God, begotten of the ſubſtance of his father before all worlds; and perfect man, made of the ſubſtance of his mother, in the fulneſs of time." And therefore, we muſt hold, that there are two diſtinct natures in him; and two ſo diſtinct, that they do not make one compounded nature, but ſtill remain uncompounded, and unconfounded together. But he, in whom the fulneſs of the manhood dwelleth, is not one, and he, in whom the fulneſs of the Godhead, another: But he, in whom the fulneſs of both thoſe natures dwelleth, is one and the ſame Immanuel; and conſequently but one perſon. (Uſher.) In him are, 1. All the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; Col. ii. 3. 2. The fulneſs of grace; Pſal. xlv. 2. the very "ſtature of fulneſs;" Eph. iv. 13. 3. "The fulneſs of truth," ver. 14. and chap. xiv. 6. and 2 Cor. i. 20. 4. The fulneſs of the ſpirit; chap. iii. 34. and xv. 26. 5. The fulneſs of riches; Eph. iii. 8. And 6. The fulneſs of glory; ver. 14. (Frank.)

Grace for grace.] There is no doubt, but this is to be underſtood of the law and the Goſpel; though the latter indeed is more full of it: For "thoſe whom the law brings only to the gate, the Goſpel introduceth into the temple;" as an ancient writer elegantly expreſſes it. (D. Heinſ.) God's gracious deſign, to help, aſſiſt, and pardon penitent and returning ſinners, of every nation and country, and to beſtow eternal life upon them, was not made known in the law of Moſes, as it is diſcover'd in the Goſpel of Chriſt; who is the truth and ſubſtance, and was ſignified and prefigured by the typical obſervances in the law. (Fox.) "Grace for grace" is put to ſignify abundance of graces; as Job ii. 4. "Skin for skin;" that is, skin after skin, one thing after another, will a man "give for his life:" And "grace for grace;" that is, grace after grace, will God give us; one after another; never leave giving; will not only give us one or two graces, but a full tide of them: "All ſpiritual bleſſings;" Eph. i. 3. "Redemption, and forgiveneſs of ſins;" ver. 7. "the knowledge of the myſtery of his will;" ver. 9. "the ſeal of the holy ſpirit of promiſe;" ver. 13. (Frank.) Whatever we receive of that nature, is no other than a gift of his bounty, and an emanation from his fulneſs. (Q.) Not for any merit in us, but from his own mere goodneſs. (G.)

The law was given by Moſes.] Not as the author, but as the diſpenſer of it: He was God's miniſter, by whom the law, which reveals wrath, was given to the Jews: "But grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt:" grace, in oppoſition to the condemnatory curſe and ſentence of the law; and truth, in oppoſition to the types, ſhadows, and ceremonies of the legal adminiſtration; Chriſt being both the diſpenſer and the author of it. (G. and B.) The law was given, to awaken, admoniſh, and enlighten the ſinner, and to cauſe him to ſeek after grace: Grace is given, to perfect and fulfil the law by charity; and truth, to diſperſe the darkneſs of Idolatry, the ſhadows of Judaiſm, and the hypocriſy of wicked Chriſtians. (Q.)

No man hath ſeen God at any time.] God is a ſpirit, and cannot be ſeen with mortal eyes. Our knowledge of him in this life is but imperfect. It is in the other ſtate we are to expect to ſee him as he is. Jacob is indeed ſaid to "have ſeen God face to face," Gen. xxxii. 30. and Moſes to have ſeen and talked with him. But theſe expreſſions are not to be underſtood literally, but as ſpoken after the manner of men: For they only ſignify God's revealing and diſcovering himſelf to them, in a more full and clear manner than to others; they do not imply that they ſaw his eſſence; for no man can ſee him, as he is in himſelf, and live. By the coming of the Son of God into the world, who "is in the boſom of the father," and is the image of the inviſible God, we Chriſtians have a more diſtinct knowledge of the will and attributes of God, than thoſe who lived before, though favoured with immediate revelations by God. (Fox.) See the notes on Matt. xi. 27.

In the boſom of the Father.] Eis ton kolpon is here put for en too kolpoo; as in Matt. ii. 23. Mark i. 39. ii. 1. v. 34. Luke i. 20. viii. 48. ix. 61. xi. 7. xvi. 8. Acts vii. 4, 53. viii. 23. xiii. 42. Eph. i. 10. Heb. xi. 9. (W.) This uſe of eis for en is among thoſe which Dr. Mill cenſures, as falſe Greek and ſoleciſms, with an air of aſſurance, in my humble opinion, not becoming. This learned gentleman might be led into this miſtake by the authority of Grotius, who, on Acts vii. 45. ſays, 'tis frequent with the Helleniſts to exchange en and eis; becauſe the Hebrews, for both theſe particles, put the prefix beth. But 'tis very common with the old Greeks, who knew nothing of Hebraiſms, or Helleniſtical language, to put eis for en, and en for eis; as in Herodotus, Thucydides, and Xenophon: And as to Thucydides in particular, the judicious Dr. Hudſon truly ſays, 'tis a way of expreſſion frequently uſed by this author. (Blackw.) " The boſom of the Father" is the ſource, from whence all truth is derived, and where at the ſame time it reſides: And, as the Son alone, the eternal Truth, is in that adorable boſom, it is by him alone, that all truth muſt be conveyed to us; ſome by the natural channel of reaſon, ſome by the ſupernatural means of revelation. (Q.) This expreſſion implies three things: 1. Unity of natures; the boſom is the child's place, who is part of ourſelves, and of the ſame nature with ourſelves. 2. Dearneſs of affection; none lie in the boſom but the perſon who is dear to us. And, 3. Communication of ſecrets: Chriſt's lying in his Father's boſom intimates his being conſcious to all his Father's ſecrets, to know all his counſels, and to underſtand his whole will and pleaſure. (B.)

Who art thou?] Here we have a ſecond teſtimony, which John the Baptiſt gave of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. " The Jews ſent prieſts and Levites from Jeruſalem, ſaying, Who art thou? That is, the Sanhedrim, or great council at Jeruſalem, to whom it belonged to judge who were true prophets, ſent meſſengers to the Baptiſt to know, Whether he was the Meſſias or not? John refuſes to take this honour to himſelf, but tells them plainly, He was his harbinger and forerunner; and that the Meſſias himſelf was juſt at hand. From hence note, how very cautious, and exceeding careful this meſſenger of Chriſt was, and all the miniſters of Chriſt ought to be, that they do not aſſume or arrogate to themſelves any part of that honour which is due to Chriſt; but ſet the crown of praiſe upon Chriſt's own head, acknowledging him to be all in all. 1 Cor. iii. 5. " Who then is Paul? and who is Apollos? but miniſters by whom ye believed." Obſerve farther, in this teſtimony of John the Baptiſt, theſe two things: 1. A negative declaration, who he was not; " I am not (ſays he) the Meſſiah whom ye look for, nor Elias, nor that prophet " ye expect: Not Elias, that is, in your ſenſe, not Elias the Tiſhbite; not Elias, for identity of perſon, but Elias, for ſimilitude of gifts, office and calling. John came, tho' not in the perſon, yet in the power and ſpirit of Elias. He denies farther, that he was that prophet, that prophet which Moſes ſpake of, Deut. xviii. 15. nor any of the old prophets riſen from the dead; nay, ſtrictly ſpeaking, he was not any prophet at all, but " more than a prophet:" The Old Teſtament prophets propheſied of Chriſt to come: but John pointed at, ſhewed, and declared a Chriſt already come; and in this ſenſe he was no mere prophet, but more than a prophet. 2. We have here the Baptiſt's poſitive affirmation who he was; namely, Chriſt's herald in the wilderneſs, his uſher, his forerunner, to prepare the people for the receiving of the Meſſias, and to make them ready for the entertainment of the Goſpel, by preaching the doctrine of repentance to them. From hence learn, that the preaching of the doctrine of repentance is indiſpenſably neceſſary, in order to the preparing of the hearts of ſinners for the receiving of Jeſus Chriſt. Obſerve laſtly, the great and exemplary humility of the holy Baptiſt, the mean and lowly opinion he had of himſelf. Altho' John was the greateſt among them that were born of a woman, and ſo much eſteemed by the Jews, and had the honour to go before Chriſt in the exerciſe of his office and miniſtry, yet he judges himſelf unworthy to carry Chriſt's ſhoes after him. " He that cometh after me, is preferred before me, whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to unlooſe." Learn hence, that the more eminent gifts the miniſters of the Goſpel have, and the more ready men are to honour and eſteem them, the more will they abaſe themſelves, if they be truly gracious, and account themſelves highly honoured in doing the meaneſt offices of love and ſervice for Jeſus Chriſt. (Idem.) There was, at that time, an univerſal expectation of the Meſſias appearing. Now John having baptized great multitudes of people who had reſorted to him, and thereby gained a mighty reputation, the Sanhedrim ſent ſome deputies, men of note for knowledge and authority, to examine, whether he was that eminent perſon, or who he was. (Stanh.) What ſhall we be able to anſwer, when God himſelf ſhall aſk us, and that perhaps very ſoon, Who art thou? a Chriſtian? a prieſt? a biſhop? Where is the life of one? where are the proper works? Let us prevent this dreadful queſtion, and frequently aſk ourſelves, " Who we are!" And let our hearts anſwer us as ſincerely, as they will be one day forced to anſwer God. (Q.)

He confeſſed, and denied not; but confeſſed.] Such pleonaſms are frequent in the ſcriptures; as 2 Kings xviii. 38. Iſa. xxxviii. 1. Ezek. vii. 6. and eſpecially in the writings of this Evangeliſt; as ver. 3. (where ſee the notes) 1 John i. 1. and ii. 27. (W.) So St. Paul ſays, " I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt; I lye not," 1 Tim. ii. 7. which is a ſolemn and ſeaſonable repetition, proper to convince St. Timothy of the pious zeal and authority of St. Paul. Beza, on that place, allows it to have great emphaſis, and ſays it is an Hebrew pleonaſm: To which Caſaubon replies, " And why an Hebrew pleonaſm, (i. e. ſo as to exclude it from being claſſical Greek) when the beſt authors of Greece frequently uſe it?" (Bl.)

Art thou Elias? And he ſaith, I am not.] This queſtion is founded on two paſſages in the prophecy of Mal. iii. 1. and iv. 5, 6. The Jews univerſally believed, that Elias ſhould appear before the Meſſiah: And our Lord allows the opinion ſo far, as to anſwer his diſciples, when objecting it, that John was the Elias, meant in that prophet, Matt. xvii. 12. But the Jews imagined, either that the body of Elijah was preſerv'd in paradiſe, and ſhould again appear upon earth at this ſeaſon appointed for it; or that, this body being diſſolved, God would infuſe the ſpirit of Elijah into a new one; ſo that, either way, the very perſon of Elijah ſhould appear before this day of the Lord: But Chriſtian interpreters think the paſſage intended of one, ſo very like to Elijah, in temper, in office, and other circumſtances, that this reſemblance might be a ſufficient ground for calling him by that name. And for ſuch figures of ſpeech, as we have inſtances in heathen authors; ſo the ſcriptures particularly call the Meſſiah by the name of David, who was a type of him; though David had been then long dead, and there was no expectation of his appearing, which could countenance the interpreting that expreſſion of his own perſon; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. and xxxvii. 24, 25. and Hoſ. iii. 5. This is ſo reaſonable an expoſition of Malachi's words here, that, beſides the inconteſtable authority of our Lord, who thus explains it, we have the confeſſion of ſome learned Jews, that it need not be rigorouſly confined to Elias in perſon; but may mean ſome other called by his name, for the mutual and great reſemblance which ſhould be between them. See Pocock on Mal. iv. 5. (St.) John's anſwer to the queſtion was therefore no more than if he had ſaid, I am not that Elias in perſon whom ye expect: And expoſitors tell us, he choſe to anſwer thus out of modeſty, that he might not commend, or bear witneſs of himſelf; thinking it more convenient, that Chriſt ſhould thus bear witneſs of him than that he ſhould aſcribe ſo great a dignity to himſelf. (W.) For the compoſing of ſuch differences, as appear in the letter of the ſcripture, it is neceſſary that we obſerve the known conditions of right oppoſition. There is no oppoſition betwixt propoſitions, unleſs the ſame thing be ſpoken of; as well as in the ſame reſpect, and at the ſame time. So that there is no difference betwixt this text and Matt. xi. 14. becauſe the ſame perſon is not ſpoken of: For John ſpeaks of Elias the prophet whom the Jews expected to come; but Chriſt of that Elias promiſed, Mal. iv. 5. that is, one who ſhould be like Elias, coming in his " power and ſpirit, Luke i. 17. (Lukin.)

The voice of one crying.] Here John the Baptiſt clearly declares himſelf to be the perſon propheſied of, Iſa. xl. 3 For as the Elias, in Mal. iv. 5, 6. appears to be the very ſame with the meſſenger in chap. iii. 1. by our Lord's applying thoſe two ſcriptures together, to the Baptiſt; ſo Malachi's meſſenger, and Iſaiah's voice, appear to be no leſs evidently to be meant of the ſame perſon, by St. Mark's application of them both to the ſame Baptiſt, Mark i. 1. &c. If then that prophecy of Iſaiah did, and were acknowledged to point at the ſame perſon with the other in Malachi; it follows, that the Baptiſt, by returning anſwer to thoſe great oracles of the Sanhedrim, that he was Iſaiah's " voice crying in the wilderneſs," did, in effect, and by neceſſary conſequence, affirm himſelf to be Malachi's Elias; though not the Elias whom they erroneouſly expected: And thus, St. John's anſwer to the Jews is ſo far from contradicting what our Lord aſſerts concerning him, that it is in truth the very ſame thing; the perſons in Iſaiah and Malachi the ſame, and the buſineſs they came about alſo the ſame. (St.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 3.

Why baptizeſt thou then?] Baptiſm was no new or ſtrange thing with the Jews. It was acknowledged and practiſed, as an emblem of purification from paſt guilt, and a rite of entring ſolemnly into covenant with God. The expoſitors of their law agree, that this ceremony paſſed upon the whole congregation of Iſrael, juſt before the law was given at mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 10. and they underſtood that command of God, " to ſanctify them," which we render " waſhing their cloaths," of a baptiſmal immerſion of their bodies. Their cuſtom, in all ſucceeding ages, hath been, to receive their Heathen proſelytes by baptiſm, as well as by ſacrifice, and (if males) circumciſion; grounding that practice on Numb. xv. 15. That therefore which gave ſurpriſe and offence on this occaſion was, that John adminiſtred baptiſm to thoſe native Jews, who were preſumed to have no need of it; an indignity done to the ſuppoſed holy ſeed; ſuch as implied a reproach of uncleanneſs, and brought them down to the level of the deſpiſed Gentiles: A diſparaging innovation, in their judgment, which nothing leſs than a divine authority could juſtify. (Idem.)

I

I baptize with water.] That is, I am the meſſenger, of which Malachi ſpeaks, who am ſent before the Lord, to "prepare his way," by bringing you to repentance and amendment of life: and therefore baptize you with water, to mind you of that purity of heart, which is requiſite to the reception of him: So that, by my baptizing you with water to produce in you that purity, will be fulfilled the promiſe of God, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. and by his baptiſm will be fulfilled the words there following, in ver. 27. (W.)

Whoſe ſhoes latchet.] Whoſe diſciple I am not worthy to be. (H.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 11. Let us learn to put a vaſt difference betwixt the honour we pay to Jeſus Chriſt, and that reſpect which we pay to the memory of the greateſt among the ſaints; and even to that of the mother of the moſt holy Jeſus. This is one of the firſt inſtructions which God thought fit to give us by St. John (the Baptiſt;) and we cannot act contrary thereto, without overturning every thing in religion. (Q.)

In Bethabara beyond Jordan.] That is, according to the import of the word, Beth-abara, about the place where the Jews paſſed over Jordan, to go into the land of Canaan. It is ſituated, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, beyond Jordan, in the Scythopolitan country, where the Jews dwelt among the Scyrophœnicians. (W.) A word, in appearance altogether inſignificant, is ſometimes full of myſteries. St. John made choice of this place, 1. Becauſe it was the paſſage of Jordan, over which the people, about that time, began to travel, in their way to Jeruſalem, to keep the feaſt of the paſſover. 2. It was likewiſe that very place, (as before is obſerv'd) by which Jeſus or Joſuah, led the people of God, by a ſecond miraculous paſſage, through the midſt of the water; which was a kind of ſecond baptiſm, followed ſoon after by a ſecond circumciſion, and a ſecond paſſover. And 3. It was the place, where the manna ceaſed. All which prefigured that which Jeſus was come to perform in truth and reality, by waſhing his people from their ſins, in order to put them into poſſeſſion of heaven; where the perfect adoption is completed, the ſecond circumciſion of the whole old man; where all types and figures ceaſe, and where he himſelf is the true Lamb, and the eternal paſſover. (Q.)

The next day.] He Epaurion ſignifies here the day immediately following, not (according to the latitude of the Hebrew) "the morrow," that is, any part of the following time: For thus, I conceive, the whole ſeries and courſe of this ſtory in St. John is to be made up. As in the other Evangeliſts, Matt. iii. 11. Mar. i. 4. Luke iii. 16. the teſtimonies of John Baptiſt concerning Chriſt are ſet down, before Chriſt was particularly made known unto him; ſo now, the ſpirit having viſibly deſcended on him at his baptiſm (as the ſame Evangeliſts agree in relating) this Evangeliſt farther mentions John Baptiſt's ſubſequent teſtimonies of him, founded in that demonſtration of the ſpirit then deſcending on him. Such is that mention'd ver. 15. where the Baptiſt ſaith, "This was he that I ſpake of;" this perſon on whom the ſpirit ſo viſibly deſcended after my baptizing of him, was he to whom my former obſcurer teſtimonies belonged. And this ſeems to have been delivered by the Baptiſt, at the time of Chriſt's abſence in the wilderneſs forty days, (ſet down by the other Evangeliſts:) and ſo all that ſecond teſtimony, mention'd ver. 19. &c. whereof him he ſaith, ver. 26. "There ſtood among you one whom ye knew not," referring again to that time of Chriſt's being baptized of John; at which time he ſaw (that is, I conceive, John Baptiſt ſaw) "the ſpirit deſcend upon him," Mat. iii. 16. and ſo again Mar. i. 10. John, coming out of the water, with him, from baptizing him, "ſaw the heavens open'd," &c. noting the deſcent of the ſpirit upon him to have been particularly ſeen by this Baptiſt; by which he was enabled thus to teſtify of him. The ſecond teſtimony of John's was cauſed by the Jews ſending to him from Jeruſalem, to know whether John were the Meſſias or no; and this ſtill in the time of Chriſt's abſence: And then 'tis added, Te epaurion; "the day after" the return of thoſe meſſengers, the day after this teſtimony, and anſwer of his to the Jews, Jeſus came back from the deſart to Jordan, where John was; and there John ſees him, and teſtifies again of him at large. And the next day after this is the beginning of a new account, ver. 35. and again, Te epaurion, ver. 43. "the next day", is the ſecond day of that new account, and then 'tis added diſtinctly, Te hemera te trite, chap. ii. 1. "on the third day." (H.)

Behold the Lamb of God.] It is no ſmall matter in ſcripture, that hath an Ecce, Behold, prefixed to it: And nothing can better deſerve it, than thoſe paſſages which relate to our Lord's wonderful incarnation &c. Iſaiah had his Ecce; "Behold, a virgin ſhall conceive!" Zachary had his Ecce; "Behold, thy king cometh!" But John's is more emphatical than theirs. John was more than a prophet; They ſhew'd him to the eye of faith; he to the eye of ſenſe; ſo proving himſelf not only an harbinger, but an herald: As he prepared his way, before he came; ſo now doth he declare his preſence, being come: "Behold the Lamb of God!" (Grenville.) The perſon ſent from God, as a Lamb prepared for the ſlaughter; in whom are ſumm'd up and completed, all the typical Moſaical preſcriptions of lambs to be ſacrificed. (H.) St. John here gives him the appellation of a Lamb, rather than that of any other kind of victim; becauſe the lamb was the proper victim for the deliverance of God's people; and becauſe the Jews were perhaps, at that very time, going up to the paſchal ſacrifice. (Q.) In Revel. v. 5. our Evangeliſt calls him a Lion. Chriſt is as a Lamb in patience; as a Lion in his power: As a Lamb in his paſſion; as a Lion in his reſurrection. In this metaphor of a Lamb, we may note three properties of Chriſt; his innocence, meekneſs, and profitableneſs. (Grenv.) This is John the Baptiſt's third teſtimony concerning Chriſt; in which he points out Chriſt as the true ſacrifice for the expiation of ſin. "Behold the Lamb of God:" The Lamb of God's appointing to be an expiatory ſacrifice; the Lamb of God's election; the Lamb of God's affection; the Lamb of God's acceptation; the Lamb of God's exaltation; who by the ſacrifice of his death, "has taken away the ſin of the world." The ſin, not the ſins, in the plural number; to denote original ſin, as ſome think; or, as others, to ſhew, that Chriſt hath univerſally taken upon himſelf the whole burthen of our ſin and guilt And there ſeems to be a ſecret antitheſis in the word world. In the Levitical ſacrifices, only the ſins of the Jews were laid upon the ſacrificed beaſt; but this lamb takes away the ſin both of Jew and Gentile. "The Lord hath cauſed to meet on him the iniquity of us all." And the words, taketh away, being in the preſent tenſe, denotes a continued act, and intimate to us thus much, viz. That it is the daily office of Chriſt to take away our ſin, by preſenting to the father the memorials of his death. Chriſt takes away from all believers the guilt and puniſhment of their ſins, the filth and pollution of them; the power and dominion that is in them: And as St. John called upon the Jews, to behold the Lamb of God with an eye of obſervation; ſo it is our duty to behold him now with an eye of admiration, with an eye of gratulation; but eſpecially with an eye of faith and dependance, improving the fruit of his death to our own conſolation and ſalvation, Iſa. xlv. 22. "Look unto me and be ſaved," &c. (B.) This, Grotius refers to the reformation of mens lives; whereas it plainly reſpects the "Lamb ſlain, as a piacular victim, 1 Pet. i. 19. to "redeem us to God by his blood," Rev. v. 9. or to procure for us redemption, that is, "the remiſſion of ſins," Eph. i. 7. Col. i. 14. and to exempt all that believed in him from that ſentence of death which came upon the world for the ſin of Adam. To illuſtrate this, let it be noted, 1. That when a ſacrifice was offered for Sin, he that brought it, laid "his hand upon the head" of the victim, according to the command of God, Lev. i. 4. and iii 2. and iv. 4. and by that rite transferr'd his ſins upon the victim, who is ſaid to "take them upon him, and to carry them away." Accordingly, in the daily ſacrifice of the lamb, the ſtationary men, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, who were the repreſentatives of the people, laid their hands upon the lambs thus offered for them; and theſe two lambs offered for the daily ſacrifice, were bought with that half ſhekel, which all the Jews yearly paid, "as the price of redemption of their lives, to make an atonement for them," Exod. xxx. 12, 14, 16. This Lamb was therefore offered to take away the guilt of their ſin, as this phraſe ſignifies when it relates to ſacrifices. When therefore the Baptiſt had ſaid, he baptized them for the remiſſion of ſins, he here ſhews them by what means that remiſſion was to be obtained. (W.)

And I knew him not.] Obſerve here, 1. That tho' John the Baptiſt was a near kinſman of Chriſt, according to the fleſh, yet the providence of God ſo order'd it, that for thirty years together they did not know one another, nor converſe with each other, nor probably ever ſaw the faces of each other; to be ſure he did not know him to be the Meſſiah. This, no doubt, was over-ruled by the wiſdom of God, to prevent all ſuſpicion, as if John and Chriſt had compacted together to give one another credit: That the world might ſuſpect nothing of the truth of John's teſtimony concerning Chriſt, or have the leaſt Jealouſy, that what he ſaid of Chriſt, was from any byaſs of mind to his perſon; therefore he repeats it a ſecond time, "I knew him not." Hence we may learn, that a corporal ſight of Chriſt, and an outward perſonal acquaintance with him, is not ſimply needful, and abſolutely neceſſary for enabling a miniſter to ſet him forth and repreſent him ſavingly to the world. 2. The means declared by which John came to know Chriſt to be the true Meſſiah: It was by a ſign from heaven, namely, the Holy Ghoſt deſcending like a dove upon our Saviour: "He that ſent me to baptize with water, the ſame ſaid unto me, upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending and remaining, the ſame is he." Learn hence, 1. That Chriſt, taking upon him our nature, did ſo cover his glory with the veil of our fleſh and common infirmities, that he could not be known by bodily ſight from another man. Till John had a divine revelation, and an evident ſign from heaven, that Chriſt was the Son of God, he "knew him not." 2. That Chriſt in his ſolemn entry upon his office, as Mediator, was ſealed unto the work by the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt upon him; He was ſealed by the Holy Ghoſt's deſcending, and the father's teſtifying, that this was his beloved Son, in whom he was well-pleaſed. Now it was, that God gave of the ſpirit to Chriſt by meaſure, for the effectual adminiſtration of his mediatorial office: now "it pleaſed the father, that in Chriſt ſhould all fulneſs dwell."

He was filled extenſively with all kinds of grace, and filled intenſively with all degrees of grace, in the day of his inauguration, when the holy ſpirit deſcended upon him. (W. and B.)

I ſaw the ſpirit deſcending. See the notes on Matt. iii. 16. and Mark. i. 10.

Baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt.] Not only uſing the known rite in the receiving of his proſelytes, but moreover ſending down the holy ſpirit upon them. (H.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 11.

This is the Son of God.] From theſe premiſes it follows, that John's teſtimony of Chriſt, that he "is the Son of God," is no more than what he plainly ſaw with his eyes, and heard diſtinctly affirmed, by a voice from heaven. (H.) Wonderful is the divine wiſdom! It obviates the perverſeneſs of the Jews, by the teſtimony of St. John; who calls Jeſus Chriſt "the Son of God," before Chriſt himſelf declares that he is ſo. (Q.)

And two of his diſciples.] John's diſciples were ſomewhat backward to acknowledge Jeſus for the Meſſiah; and the rather becauſe, they thought, he did eclipſe the glory of their maſter; as appears from that complaint they made, chap. iii. 26. See therefore the ſincerity of the holy Baptiſt: He takes every opportunity to draw off the eyes of his own diſciples from himſelf, and to fix them upon Chriſt. (B. and Nelſ.)

Ver. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. And the two diſciples heard him ſpeak, and they followed Jeſus. Then Jeſus turned, and ſaw them following, and ſaith unto them, What ſeek ye? They ſaid unto him, Rabbi, (which is to ſay, being interpreted, Maſter) where dwelleſt thou? He ſaith unto them, Come and ſee. They came and ſaw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: For it was about the tenth hour. One of the two which heard John ſpeak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother. He firſt findeth his own brother Simon, and ſaith unto him, We have found the Meſſias, which is, being interpreted, the Chriſt. And he brought him to Jeſus. And when Jeſus beheld him, he ſaid, Thou art Simon, the ſon of Jona: Thou ſhalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, a ſtone.

They followed him.] The "two diſciples," who heard John's teſtimony of Jeſus, followed him. One of them is here named, viz. Andrew: And the other is thought to have been St. John the Evangeliſt himſelf; who uſually conceals his own name: Which is the more probable, becauſe he does ſo particularly relate the circumſtances of theſe tranſactions, which the other Evangeliſts had omitted. (H. W. and Howel.)

Rabbi.] About the time of our Saviour's nativity, titles began to be multiplied; and among the reſt, theſe of Rab, Ribbi, Rabbi, and Rabban; ſignifying a perſon of much, or great learning. They uſed a certain form of diſcipline in their ſchools. The ſcholar was termed Talmid, a diſciple, in reſpect of his learning; Katan, a junior, in reſpect of his minority; Bachur, that is, one choſen, or elected, in reſpect of his election or co-optation into the number of the diſciples: After he was found to be a proficient, he was, by impoſition of hands, made a graduate and aſſociate; Chaber, a companion to a Rabbi; which ceremony, called Semicah, was in imitation of that of Moſes to Joſhuah, Numb. xxvii 18. At length, when he was thought worthy to teach others, then was he called Rabbi. And whereas in his minority, he was only call'd the ſon of ſuch a one; (as for example, Ben Maimon:) when he was graduate, he was call'd by his own name, prefix'd to the other; (as Moſes, Ben Maimon:) and at laſt, he was honour'd with the additional title of Rabbi; as Rabbi Moſes, Ben Maimon: All which they joined together, in one technical word, compoſed of thoſe four initial letters; calling him, by way of abbreviature, RaMBaM. Thus Rabbi Levi, Ben Gerſom was called, in like manner, RaLBaG; and ſo of the reſt. The chief Rabbies, in their publick aſſemblies, ſat advanced in high chairs, affecting the chief ſeats, Matt. xxiii. 6. and their companions ſat, or rather leaned, upon benches, or lower forms; while the diſciples, their ſcholars, lay on the ground at the feet of their teachers. Thus St. Paul was "brought up at the feet of Gamaliel," Acts xxii. 3. and "Mary ſat at Jeſus feet, and heard his word," Luke x. 39. Some have obſerved, that Rab was the the title of honour for thoſe who were received to be doctors in Chaldæa; Rabbi proper to the judges or ſenators in the holy land; and that Rabboni was not given to any, but to the wiſe men of the houſe of David. (Bp. Ailey, Selden, Godw.) See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 8.

About the tenth hour.] That is, about four o' clock in the evening; and ſo they abode with him all night. (Tayl. and W.)

He firſt findeth his own brother.] When Andrew had found the Meſſias, he call'd his brother Simon to be partaker of his joys; which as it happens in accidents of greateſt pleaſure, cannot be contained within the limits of the poſſeſſor's thoughts. (Tayl. and B.) On this account St. Andrew is generally, by the fathers, ſtiled, the protoclete, or firſt-called diſciple: But, in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe he was not ſo; tho' he is named the firſt of the diſciples who came to Jeſus, yet he was not called till afterwards. Andrew, and (as it is ſuppoſed) John, firſt followed Chriſt to his abode: And theſe two, being convinced he was the Meſſiah, Andrew, at their return, imparted it to Peter, and "he brought him to Jeſus." Yet neither did Andrew, John, or Peter, at that time, join themſelves to our Saviour, ſo as to accompany him; nor were they as yet called by him: But they all returned to their imployment of fiſhermen; from which they were not called by Chriſt to follow him, till about a year afterwards, (as is partly noted already on Matt. iv. 18.) In the mean time had intervened all that is related in the three firſt, and part of the fourth chapters of this Evangeliſt; and particularly the calling of Philip and Nathanael. Thus it will clearly appear, how little ground there is for aſſerting the privilege of the firſt call (from whence they infer the ſupremacy) to belong to Peter. All that can be ſaid of him in that particular is, his coming to Chriſt with Andrew, when Chriſt told him, his name ſhould be changed into Cephas, &c. But, at that time, Chriſt did not bid him follow him; and after that 'tis clear he parted from him, and followed his trade ſome time, till Chriſt's ſecond coming into Galilee, and till after John's impriſonment. And if that which Chriſt then ſaid to him, joyned with his coming to, but not ſtaying with him, ſhould be thought ſufficient to date his calling from thence; yet then are Andrew, and that other diſciple, in all reaſon to be reſolved on, as "the firſt call'd," having gone to Chriſt's abode, and continued that evening with him. But if this be not ſufficient to ſettle the protocleſia in either of theſe; becauſe they and St. Peter return'd to their trades till after John's impriſonment, then ſure it muſt be placed ſomewhere elſe: For 'tis clear, Chriſt had his diſciples before that, who baptized many; and 'tis clear of Philip, that he followed Chriſt, as his inſeparable attendant: And there is little reaſon to doubt it of Nathanael; and ſo in no reſpect can it be ſettled in St Peter, who, yet farther, when he did "forſake all and follow Chriſt," had three more, Andrew and James and John, which accompanied him in ſo doing. (H. Spanhem. and Stanh.)

Thou art Simon.] Woltzogenius notes, that Chriſt here gives Peter a ſpecimen of his divine virtue, (as he afterwards does to Philip, ver. 47.) ſhewing, that he was able, by the holy ſpirit, to ſearch into and diſcover the moſt ſecret receſſes of the heart. (W.) His proper name was Simon, which ſignifieth, in the Hebrew, hearing or obeying; being derived of the radical Shamah. Chriſt gave him the name of Cephas; not with alluſion to Cephale, which in Greek ſignifieth a head (as the papiſts would have it, to make St. Peter the head of the church:) But in a proper Syrian word, Cephas; which always ſignifieth a rock or ſtone, and is never tranſlated to any other ſignification. (Bp. Ailey.) See the notes on Matt. xvi. 18.

Ver. 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51. The day following Jeſus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and ſaith unto him, Follow me. Now Philip was of Bethſaida, the city of Andrew and Peter. Philip findeth Nathanael, and ſaith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moſes in the law, and the prophets did write, Jeſus of Nazareth, the ſon of Joſeph. And Nathanael ſaid unto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip ſaith unto him, Come and ſee. Jeſus ſaw Nathanael coming to him, and ſaith of him, Behold an Iſraelite indeed, in whom is no guile. Nathanael ſaith unto him, Whence knoweſt thou me? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou waſt under the fig-tree, I ſaw thee. Nathanael anſwered and ſaith unto him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the king of Iſrael. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Becauſe I ſaid unto thee, I ſaw thee under the fig-tree, believeſt thou? thou ſhalt ſee greater things than theſe. And he ſaith unto him, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Hereafter you ſhall ſee heaven open, and the angels of God aſcending and deſcending upon the Son of man.

Jeſus would go forth into Galilee.] That out of an ignoble country he might gather diſciples who were alſo ignoble; therewith to confound the wiſdom of this world, 1 Cor. i. 27, 28. and, by the ſucceſs of ſuch contemptible means, to atteſt the divinity of the doctrine they preached. (G. and Nelſ.)

Findeth Philip.] This Philip had now the honour of being the firſt called, to be a diſciple of our Saviour; whom he commanded to follow him; that being the conſtant form he uſed in chuſing his diſciples: And he immediately engaged in his ſervice, tho' he had not ſeen any miracle. But 'tis reaſonable to believe, that he was acquainted with Moſes and the prophets, and that he was awakened with the general expectation then among the Jews, that the Meſſias would immediately appear: Beſides, we are to ſuppoſe, the divine grace did particularly accompany the command of Chriſt, and diſpoſe thoſe whom he called, to believe him to be the Meſſias. (Neſſ. and Howel.) And tho' Clemens of Alexandria intimates, that he was the diſciple, who, when he was called, deſired leave "firſt to go and bury his father," (as is noted on Matt. viii. 21.) it does not appear by what authority he makes Philip to be the perſon. (Stanh.) There are three ſorts of calls to the knowledge of the truth. 1. That of thoſe, who ſeek it by the advice of their paſtor; as St. Andrew did. 2. Of ſuch as are brought to it by the advice and example of ſome pious relation; as St. Peter was. And 3. Of thoſe whom God calls to it in an extraordinary manner; as he called St. Philip. But in which ſoever of theſe ways it happens, the call comes from God. (Q.)

Of Beth-ſaida the city of Andrew and Peter.] i. e. Where they dwelt. This ſeems to be added, to ſhew the reaſon why Philip followed Jeſus before he knew any thing of his doctrine, becauſe what he had heard from them who dwelt near him, had prepared his mind ſo to do; and from the following words of Philip and Nathanael, "We have found him," &c. we learn, that not only Peter and Andrew, but Chriſt himſelf had diſcourſed to Philip of the predictions of the law and the prophets concerning him. Note alſo, that hon, ver. 46. is put for peri hou, of whom, as ver. 15. (W.)

Philip findeth Nathanael.] Here it may be obſerved, that ſome people think it a matter of wonder, that our Saviour, ſhewing ſuch particular marks of eſteem (as in the following verſes he expreſſes) for Nathanael, did not chuſe him into the college of apoſtles: To which St. Auguſtin gives this for anſwer, That he was a doctor of the law, which profeſſion, at that time, was grown very ſcandalous, by reaſon of the many and vile corruptions crept into it; which ſoon after was the occaſion of the many woes proclaim'd againſt the profeſſors of it by our Saviour. (Howel.) But many, both of ancient and modern times, have ſuppoſed him to be in the apoſtolical college, and the ſame perſon with Bartholomew; becauſe, 1. As no other Evangeliſt makes mention of Nathanael; ſo neither does St. John, who mentions him, ever once make mention of Bartholomew. 2. In the catalogue of the apoſtles, the giving of which is the only occaſion of naming St. Bartholomew in the reſt, Philip and he are conſtantly coupled together; and thoſe pairs are thought to join the perſons, as ſent together, two by two, upon the power of miracles firſt committed to them: Very fit companions, ſuppoſing Nathanael the man; whom Philip, 'tis plain, had intimacy with, and was the firſt inſtrument of bringing to Jeſus. 3. He is, by St. John, named in company with ſeveral other apoſtles; and ſo, that we have reaſon to conclude him one of the twelve, chap. xxi. 2. for it is upon our Lord's ſhewing himſelf at the ſea of Tiberias, after his reſurrection. This the Evangeliſt declares to be "the third time" of his doing ſo, ver. 14. But the two former appearances are expreſly recorded to be made to the eleven, chap. xx. 24, 28. and the reſt named here being of that number, the word diſciples muſt in all reaſon be ſo reſtrained, as to ſignify the ſame perſons here, as in the former accounts. Conſequently, 'tis highly probable, I had almoſt ſaid evident, that Nathanael was one of the twelve: Which will be hard to account for, otherwiſe than by taking the ſame perſon to be meant by St. John, under his proper name Nathanael, and in the other Goſpels, under his patronymical name Bartholomew. And this is ſtill the more probable, becauſe 4. The name Bar-Tholomew imports only the ſon or ſcholar of Tholomew, or Tolmai; and that, among the Jews, there were perſons ſo called, is evident from Joſephus. (Stanh. Cave, Neſſ. and How.)

Good thing come out of Nazareth?] See the notes on Matt. ii. 23. He did not object againſt the meanneſs of Chriſt's original, the low condition of his parents, or the narrowneſs of their fortunes: But only againſt the place of his birth; which could not be Nazareth; the prophets having foretold, that he ſhould be born in Bethlehem. And yet he was not ſo far carried away with this popular prejudice, as not to enquire farther concerning our Saviour; and when he was ſatisfied he was the Meſſiah, he preſently own'd him for ſuch (N.)

Behold an Iſraelite indeed.] That no ſort of men which dwelt among the Iſraelites were more fraudulent than the Gibeonites, is plain even from Joſh. ix. Part of whom, the Nathanim, or Nethinims, were condemned to be "hewers of wood, and drawers of water, for the congregation," ver. 27. for the fraud wherewith they had beguiled them. To which our Lord might here probably allude; declaring, that Nathanael was far from being like one of thoſe Nathanim; but, on the contrary, a true Iſraelite, "in whom is no guile." (D. Heinſ.) By this character, in one of the firſt of his diſciples, our Saviour hallows ſimplicity of ſpirit, and receives it into his diſcipline, that it might now become a duty evangelical. That which Chriſtian ſimplicity prohibits, is the mixing arts and unhandſome means for the purchaſe of our ends; witty counſels that are underminings of our neighbour, deſtroying his juſt intereſt to ſerve our own; ſtratagems to deceive; indefinite and inſignificant anſwers; unjuſt and unlawful concealment of our purpoſes; fallacious promiſes, and falſe pretences; flattery, and unjuſt and unreaſonable praiſe; ſaying one thing, and meaning the contrary; pretending religion to ſecular deſigns; breaking faith; taking falſe oaths; and ſuch other inſtruments of human purpoſes, framed by the devil, and ſent into the world to be perfected by man: Chriſtian ſimplicity ſpeaks nothing but its thoughts; and when it concerns prudence, that a thought or purpoſe ſhould be concealed, it concerns ſimplicity, that ſilence be its cover, and not a falſe vizor: It rather ſuffers inconvenience than a lye: It deſtroys no man's right, tho' it be inconſiſtent with our own advantage: It reproves freely and palliates no man's wickedneſs: It intends what it ought, and does what is bidden, and uſes courſes regular and juſt; ſneaks not in corners, but walks always in the eye of God, and the face of the world. (Tayl. and Smalridge.)

Thou art the Son of God, thou art the king of Iſrael.] Theſe ſeem to be the two titles of the Meſſiah, in the Jewiſh phraſe, ſignifying the ſame thing; for tho' the Jews acknowledged the Meſſiah ſhould be "the Son of God," yet not in that high ſenſe in which Chriſt was the proper and peculiar Son of God; for this they look upon as blaſphemy, chap. v. 18. but in that ſenſe in which they ſtile themſelves his ſons, chap. viii. 41. (W.)

Thou ſhalt ſee greater.] When a man has once opened his heart to faith, his faith continually grows ſtronger by means of new proofs. God at firſt makes faith depend upon very ſmall things, to ſubject and humble the minds of men, and to convince them, that it is a gift of God: he afterwards comforts and encourages them, by giving them a ſight of the greater wonders of religion, to manifeſt his goodneſs and munificence towards thoſe, who reſign themſelves up intirely to him. (Q.)

See heaven open.] Chriſt here ſeems to allude to Jacob's ladder, Gen. xxviii. 12, 13 on the top of which was the Divine Majeſty, and the angels aſcending (ſaith Maimonides) to receive his commands, and deſcending to execute them. Chriſt therefore, by theſe words, ſeems to inform them, that the miracles, which they ſhould ſee performed by him, ſhould declare the Divine Majeſty preſent with him; and giving him thoſe commands he was to execute by his prophetick office, as clearly as if they had ſeen the angels of God aſcending and deſcending on him. They who refer this to the day of judgment, did not conſider this was to happen aparti, within a little while: and they who refer it to Chriſt's paſſion and reſurrection, muſt ſhew how the angels then aſcended and deſcended on Chriſt in the ſight of the apoſtles. (W.)

CHAP. II.

Chriſt honoureth a marriage feaſt with his preſence; and turneth water into wine. He goeth to Capernaum: And from thence to Jeruſalem; where he driveth the buyers and ſellers out of the temple. He foretelleth his own death and reſurrection. Many pretend to believe in him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AND the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee; and the mother of Jeſus was there. And both Jeſus was called, and his diſciples, to the marriage. And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jeſus ſaith unto him, They have no wine. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come. His mother ſaith unto the ſervants, Whatſoever he ſaith unto you, do it. And there were ſet there ſix water-pots of ſtone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim. And he ſaith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governour of the feaſt. And they bare it. When the ruler of the feaſt had taſted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was (but the ſervants which drew the water knew,) the governour of the feaſt called the bridegroom, And ſaith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth ſet forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worſe: but thou haſt kept the good wine until now. This beginning of miracles did Jeſus in Cana of Galilee, and manifeſted forth his glory; and his diſciples believed on him.

In Cana of Galilee.] This is to diſtinguiſh it from another Cana, which was in the tribe of Ephraim. (W.)

Jeſus was called.] Here we may obſerve, 1. That whenever our Saviour was invited to a publick entertainment, he never refuſed the invitation, but conſtantly went; not ſo much for the pleaſure of eating, as for the opportunity of converſing and doing good, which was meat and drink unto him. 2. What honour Chriſt put upon the ordinance of marriage: he honours it with his preſence and firſt miracle. Some think it was St. John that was now the bridegroom; others, that it was ſome near relation of the Virgin-mother: But whoever it might be, doubtleſs Chriſt's deſign was rather to put honour upon the ordinance, than upon the perſon How bold is the church of Rome in ſpitting upon the face of this ordinance, by denying its lawfulneſs to the miniſters of religion? when the apoſtle, Heb. xiii. 4. affirms, That "Marriage is honourable among all." Neither the prophets of the Old Teſtament, nor the apoſtles of the New (St. Peter himſelf not excepted) did abhor the marriage-bed, or judge themſelves too pure for an inſtitution of their Maker. 3. That it is an ancient and laudable inſtitution, that the rites of marriage ſhould not want a ſolemn celebration. Feaſting and friends upon ſuch an occaſion is both lawful and commendable, provided the rules of ſobriety and charity, modeſty and decency, be obſerved, and no ſinful liberty aſſumed: But it muſt be ſaid, that feaſting in general, and marriage feaſts in particular, are ſome of thoſe lawful things which are difficultly managed without ſin. 4. That our Saviour's working a miracle, when he was at the marriage-feaſt, ſhould teach us, by his example, that in our chearful and free times, when we indulge a little more than ordinary to mirth amongſt our friends, we ſhould ſtill be mindful of God's honour and glory, and lay hold upon an occaſion of doing all the good we can. 5. As Chriſt was perſonally invited to, and bodily preſent at this marriage-feaſt, when here on earth, ſo he will not refuſe now in heaven to be ſpiritually preſent at his people's marriage: they want his preſence with them upon that great occaſion, they deſire and ſeek it; he is acquainted with it, and invited to it, whoever is neglected: And where Chriſt is made acquainted with the match, he will certainly make one at the marriage. Happy is that wedding, where Chriſt and his friends (as here) are the invited, expected, and enjoyed gueſts. (B.)

Woman, what have I to do with thee?] Chriſt here, and in other places, calls her not mother, but woman; thereby to ſignify, that he was more and greater than only the ſon of Mary: And he thus expreſſes himſelf to her, to teach this common and laſting doctrine to all future ages, not to obſcure his divine glory by giving immoderate honours to his mother. (Beza.) As alſo to prevent her being thought more than a woman, above or beyond a woman, becauſe ſhe had brought forth the Son of God. (B.) And it is the opinion of ſome other learned men, that the holy Jeſus, the moſt tender and dutiful ſon that ever was born, when he called his mother plainly woman, declared againſt thoſe idolatrous honours, which he foreſaw would be done her in latter ages; which is no improbable gueſs. But, in the more plain and unceremonious times, it was a title applied to ladies of the greateſt quality and merit, by people of the greateſt humanity and exactneſs of behaviour. So Cyrus the Great ſpeaks to the queen of the Armenians, in Xenophon; and ſervants addreſſed queens, and their miſtreſſes, in the ſame language, in Sophocles. (Blackw.) The Papiſts here contend, that theſe words are not to be deemed a reprehenſion of his mother, but only an inſtruction to his diſciples, that in the things of God, they ought not to have reſpect to the ſolicitations of earthly parents. But, 1. The word gunai, woman, plainly ſhews, theſe words were directed not to his diſciples, but to his mother. 2. We never find this phraſe uſed in ſcripture, otherwiſe than by way of objurgation or reprehenſion; as Judges xi. 12. 2 Sam. xvi. 10. and xix. 22. 1 Kings xvii. 18. 2 Kings iii. 13. 2 Chron. xxxv 21. &c. And, 3. Maldonate confeſſeth, that moſt of the ancient fathers do openly or obſcurely intimate, what Irenæus plainly ſaith, that ſhe was guilty of ſome fault or error, in inciting her ſon to this miracle unſeaſonably. So Chryſoſtom, Eutychius, and Theophylact, upon the place. (W.) How fooliſh then, as well as impious, is it to think, that ſhe, who had not ſo much power as to direct the working of one miracle on earth, ſhould have now lodged in her hands all the power in heaven! (B.) However, it is not eaſy to reſolve, what is the importance of this ſpeech of Chriſt to his mother, Ti emoi kai ſoi, What have I to do with thee? yet by the next verſe, which tells us what Mary did upon it, (viz. ſpake to the attendants, that they "ſhould do whatſoever Chriſt bade them") 'tis clear that ſhe did not conclude from his ſpeech, that he would not make uſe of his power to help them to wine; but directly the contrary; that ſhe believed he would: And 'tis clear by ver. 7. that Chriſt immediately goes about it; bids them "fill the water-pots with water," and immediately turns it into wine. By this 'tis manifeſt, that the meaning of Chriſt's ſpeech muſt not be, that his time of working miracles was "not yet come;" but either that it was not yet the fitteſt point of time to do this particular miracle, but it would be more fit, becauſe more beneficial, when the wine was quite ſpent; or elſe that 'twas not yet his time to do his miracles ſo openly and publickly, as Mary ſeemed to believe, and his kindred after inſiſt on, c. vii. 4. but Chriſt frequently provides againſt. To this latter the circumſtances of the context conſidered all together do moſt incline: And accordingly the reſult is, that tho' he meant to work this miracle, yet he would do it more privately, ſo as it ſhould appear to none of the gueſts, or to the bridegroom, or to the ruler of the feaſt; but only to the waiters, and his own diſciples and mother, that came along with him. This is manifeſt by the event; for, ver. 9. "the ruler of the feaſt knew it not, but only they that drew the water;" that is, the waiters: nor is there any farther publick notice taken of the miracle, but only that the Evangeliſt mentions it, as a beginning, or præludium, of his ſigns or wonders, ver. 11. by which, by little and little, he made himſelf known to the world, and "manifeſted his glory;" that is, made it appear, that the Godhead dwelt in him; but this not to all, but to his diſciples, of whom peculiarly 'tis added, that they "believed on him." As for that form of ſpeech, ti emoi kai ſoi, it is only a form of repreſſing (as much as ea, let alone, with which 'tis joined, Mark i. 24.) and ſo is uſed Matt. viii. 29. Mark v. 7. Luke viii. 28. (and in other places herein before cited) to expreſs diſlike to the propoſal, or to deſire him to let them alone, not to meddle with them. And accordingly, it here ſignifies Chriſt's diſlike of Mary's propoſal, which was, without any care of ſecrecy, publickly to ſupply them with wine, now it was wanting: Which manner of doing it Chriſt diſlikes, and gives his reaſon for it; "It was not yet fit" to do his miracles ſo publickly. The truth of this interpretation, by which 'tis granted that Chriſt did not ſay that it was not his ſeaſon to do the miracle, but only not to do it ſo publickly, is ſo convincing, that Gregory Nyſſene, rather than he would grant the meaning of it to be, that his time of doing any miracle was not yet come, thought himſelf obliged to read the latter part of the verſe by way of interrogation alſo, "Is not my hour yet come?" and to interpret it thus, "Am not I yet of age to be maſter of my own actions? Wilt thou rule me now at this age ſtill?" But there is no need of this altering the punctation. Juſtin Martyr, or the "Author of the Queſt. and Anſw. ad Ortho." would have it render'd thus literally, "What is it to me and thee?" that is, "the care of providing wine belongs not to thee and me. But the firſt interpretation is moſt ſatisfactory, and beyond exception. (H.)

Mine hour is not yet come.] The proper opportunity to work a miracle will be, when they ſhall all plainly ſee, that "they have no wine" left; leſt otherwiſe they ſhould think the water was mixed with wine. (G.) Some from the propriety of the Greek words, hyſtereſantos oinou, have ſuppoſed his mother to ſpeak before the wine was out; and when it grew ſo low, that ſhe ſaw there would not be enough.. Now, the cuſtom of our Saviour's miracles is, to come into mens ſuccour, when human helps are either paſt and ineffectual, or not to be had at all: The neceſſity therefore of that ſupernatural ſupply intended them, was firſt to be felt and manifeſt; in order to recommend the benefit itſelf, and to give the manner of their attaining it, a power of making a deeper impreſſion upon their minds. (St.)

After the manner of the purifying.] See the notes on Mark vii. 2 &c. and Luke xi. 38.

Fill the water-pots with water.] There were uſually, in their dining-rooms, greater veſſels, from which they poured out into leſſer, according as they needed; of which ſort it is not improbably thought, (Stukius, in lib. conviv.) that theſe ſix water-pots were, containing two or three firkins apiece. (Godw.) Now theſe being deſigned for a holy uſe, it was reckoned a ſin, and heinous prophanation, to put any thing but water into thoſe veſſels: So that here was no room for ſuſpecting any thing of wine, in thoſe pots of ſtone before. (Stanh.) Here then we may obſerve, 1. The reality of the miracle, and the ſincerity of Chriſt in the working of it. To evidence there was no deceit in the miracle, not wine-casks, but water-pots are called for; wine-veſſels, in which ſome lees were remaining, might have given both a vinous colour and taſte to the water; but ſtone-pots could contribute nothing of this nature; and being open pots, there was no ſtealing wine into them without obſervation. Again, Our Saviour's employing the ſervants, and not his diſciples, takes off any ſuſpicion of colluſion; and his ſending it to the ruler or governour of the feaſt, was an evidence that the miracle would bear examination. Our Saviour's miracles were real and beneficial; they were obvious to ſenſe; not lying wonders, nor fictitious miracles, which juglers cheat the people with. 2. Tho' he wrought a real miracle, yet he would not work more of miracle than needed; he would not create wine out of nothing, but turned water into wine. 3. The liberality and bounty of Chriſt in the miracle here wrought: Six water pots are filled with wine: Had he turned but one of thoſe large veſſels into wine, it had been a ſufficient proof of his power; but to fill ſo many was an inſtance both of his power and mercy And, as his bounty appeared in the quantity, ſo in the excellency of the wine; "Thou haſt kept the good wine until now." (B.)

The governour of the feaſt.] There were two principal parties in the feaſts of the Jews, 1. The maſter of the houſe, who was in Hebrew called baalhabeth, and in Greek oicodeſpotes. 2. The maſter (governour or ruler) of the feaſt, called in Hebrew baal-miſchte, and in Greek architrichlinos. To which two ſome have added a third, whom they would have to be præfectus morum. That there were ſuch in the court of Ahaſuerus, appears Eſth. i. 8. and ſo there were among the Athenians; by whom they were called oinoptai and ophthalmoi, as having the inſpection of the wine and the gueſts, to prevent any intemperance or diſorder. But whether any ſuch belonged unto the Jews is juſtly doubted. (Godw.) To this governour of the feaſt it belonged to bleſs what was prepared; and having drank of the cup thus bleſſed, to ſend it about to the whole company: Whence Chriſt ſaith to the ſervants, "Draw out now, and bear unto the governour of the feaſt." (W.)

When men have well drunk.] The great Caſaubon, who had a good notion of the purity and propriety of the New Teſtament Greek, and has illuſtrated many paſſages by parallel claſſical expreſſions, ſometimes too unadviſedly pronounces thoſe to be mere Hebraiſms, which are found Greciſms, and proved ſo by the beſt authors. Methuein, ſays this learned critic, according to the uſage of the Hebrew, does not ſignify here to be drunk, but only chearful drinking, within the bounds of temperance. But, that it has the ſame ſignification alſo in the Grecian Claſſics, is plain from Herodotus; who ſays of the Perſians, that, when they have drank chearfully and freely, then they debate about the moſt ſerious and important affairs: The word is methuſcomenoi, which often expreſſes the debauchery and crime of drunkenneſs, but muſt here be limited to an allowable indulgence. (Blackw.) And in the ſame ſenſe it is alſo to be underſtood, Gen. xliii. 34. Pſalm xxiii. 5. Cant. v. 1. Jer. xxxi. 14, 25. Hoſea xiv. 7. Haggai i. 6. &c. Moreover, theſe are not the words of Chriſt, but of the ruler of the feaſt; declaring, not how it was with the gueſts there preſent, but only that it was the uſual cuſtom to bring the beſt wine firſt, and when men had well drank, then the meaner ſort, and that this cuſtom was not then obſerved. And, admit ſome perſons might exceed in drinking of this very wine miraculouſly made, which yet is more than can be gathered from the text, our Lord cannot be charged with miniſtring to that exceſs by making this proviſion of it, unleſs we alſo charge the providence of God as being inſtrumental to all that gluttony and drunkenneſs which is committed in the world, becauſe it doth afford that meat and drink, which by the glutton and drunkard are abuſed to exceſs. (W.)

This beginning of miracles.] For all thoſe miracles, which are reported to be done by Chriſt in his infancy, and the interval of his younger years, are apocryphal and ſpurious. (Tayl.)

Manifeſted forth his glory.] That is, his power of working miracles; which is ſtiled his glory, chap. xvii. 22. and 2 Cor. iii. 18. and for which he was "glorified of all," Luke iv. 15. And this was opportunely done, to confirm the faith of his diſciples, who were newly come to him; and therefore 'tis added, that they "believed on him." (W.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. After this, he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his diſciples, and they continued there not many days. And the Jews paſſover was at hand, and Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem, And found in the temple thoſe that ſold oxen, and ſheep, and doves, and the changers of money, ſitting: And when he had made a ſcourge of ſmall cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the ſheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers money, and overthrew the tables: And ſaid unto them that ſold doves, Take theſe things hence; make not my Father's houſe an houſe of merchandiſe. And his diſciples remember'd that it was written, The zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up. Then anſwered the Jews, and ſaid unto him, What ſign ſheweſt thou unto us, ſeeing that thou doeſt theſe things? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Deſtroy this temple, and in three days I will raiſe it up. Then ſaid the Jews, Forty and ſix years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? But he ſpake of the temple of his body, When therefore he was riſen from the dead, his diſciples remember'd that he had ſaid this unto them: and they believed the ſcripture, and the word which Jeſus had ſaid.

His mother and his brethren.] They follow Chriſt's example: To ſhew, that his miniſters ought rather to draw their relations after them, by their good example, than to ſuffer themſelves to be drawn aſide by their carnal affection; and that, in things pertaining to their miniſtry, they ſhould rather govern their relations, than be governed by them. (Q.)

Not many days.] Becauſe of the approach of the great feaſt of the paſſover at Jeruſalem. (G. and Tayl.)

Jeſus went up.] Obſerve here, how obedient in all things Chriſt was to the ceremonial law. He was not naturally ſubject to the law; but, to fulfill all righteouſneſs, he kept the paſſover yearly, according to the command of God, Exod. xxiii. 17. (B.) See the notes on Luke ii. 42.

A ſcourge of ſmall cords.] Or rather of ruſhes: For ſo the word ſchoinion properly ſignifies. (W.)

He drove them all out.] Here 'tis remarkable, that both the firſt and the laſt time that our bleſſed Lord was in the temple after his baptiſm, he ſignalized his zeal againſt the irreverence and prophanation, which the Jews were guilty of therein; reformation being the beginning as well as the concluſion of his prophetical office. (G. and Q.) His firſt work was to purge and reform the temple from abuſes; not to ruin and deſtroy it, becauſe it had been abuſed: Places dedicated to the worſhip and ſervice of God, if idolatrouſly abuſed, muſt not be pulled down, but purged; not ruined, but reformed. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxi. 12. Mark xi. 15. and Luke xix. 45.

Overthrew the tables.] The Greek word trapeza, table, here is that from which thoſe who dealt in returning money, or in bills of exchange, and made advantage or gain by ſo doing, are called trapezitæ ordinarily among authors. But here the trapezitæ ſeems to ſignify that ſort of men, who (as merchants among us) return money for others to ſome other place, by which they received ſome themſelves. Hence it was, that the Iſraelites, being obliged by the law to come up to Jeruſalem, how far ſoever they dwelt from it, and there to ſacrifice, and to offer the half ſhekel for the uſe of the temple, Exod. xxx. 13. which by reaſon of the length of their journey, ſometimes they could not do, theſe trapezitæ ſet up their tables in the very temple, that ſo they might traffick with all that had need of them; in like manner as others bought "oxen and ſheep and doves," to ſell there to them who had not brought their ſacrifices with them. (How.)

Remember'd that it was written.] viz. Pſal. lxix. 9. Where, under the perſon of David, the Meſſiah is plainly deſcribed. (G. and (B.)

The zeal of thine houſe.] Here we may obſerve, 1. The grace deſcribed, zeal, which is the ardour of the affections, carrying forth a man to the utmoſt for God's glory, and his church's good: Zeal is not ſo much one affection, as the intenſe degree of all the affections. 2. The object about which our Saviour's zeal was converſant; God's houſe, that is, all things relating to the worſhip of God, temple, tabernacle, ark, &c. which were the pledges of God's preſence. 3. The effect of this, it "hath eaten me up," like fire that eats up and devours that whereon it lights. What was ſaid of St. Peter, that he was a man made up all of fire; and of St. Paul in reſpect of his ſufferings, that he was a ſpark of fire burning in the midſt of the ſea, may much more truly be ſaid of Chriſt, when he was engaged in the wotk of church reformation. Learn, that as Chriſt was, ſo Chriſtians ought to be, very zealous for the glory of God, the honour of his houſe, and the purity of his worſhip. "The zeal of thine houſe," that is, for the honour of thine houſe, "hath eaten me up. (B.)

Then anſwered the Jews.] See the notes on Luke xiv. 3.

What ſign ſheweſt thou?] To reform abuſes in publick places, belongs to none but thoſe who have either a publick human authority, or elſe a divine. Now this buying and ſelling in the temple was tolerated by the Sanhedrim, as well as by the prieſts: And therefore our Saviour muſt neceſſarily ſhew himſelf to be a prophet: But prophets muſt prove themſelves to be ſo, either by working miracles, or by foretelling of ſomewhat that is to come. (G. and W.) The Jews require a ſign, and call for a miracle to juſtify Chriſt's commiſſion. And had they not a miracle here before their eyes? Was it not a very great one, that Chriſt ſhould, without any viſible authority, make men obey him ſo readily, and ſtrike ſuch a terror into them, only with "a ſcourge of ſmall cords?" Was not this enough to manifeſt the preſence of the Divinity? (B. and Q.) St. Jerome (on Matt. xxi.) ſays, that certain fiery rays or beams, darting from Chriſt's eyes, drove out theſe merchants from this place. I dare not avouch this: But he drove them out, unarmed with any weapons that might carry dread and terror with them. Behold then the weakneſs of the means on the one ſide, and conſider the greatneſs of the oppoſition on the other. Here was a confluence of people to oppoſe Chriſt; this being the moſt ſolemn mart of the paſſover: And here were merchant-men, whoſe hearts were ſet upon gain (the world's God,) to oppoſe him; a parcel of ſturdy fellows: And yet Chriſt no ſooner ſpeaks to them, and ſhakes his whip at them, but, like a company of fearful hares, they run before him. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 38. Mark viii. 11. and Luke xi. 16, 29

Deſtroy this temple.] When elſewhere they required a ſign, he remitted them to that of Jonas the prophet, Matt. xii. 39, 40. And here he alſo ſeems in effect to do the ſame thing: Saying, that by raiſing of "the temple of his body," after they had deſtroyed it, or, by his reſurrection from the dead, he would afford them a convincing demonſtration, that he had good authority for what he ſaid and did; and that he was that prophet which was to come. (W.) But here we muſt obſerve, that theſe words are not imperative; but only predictive and permiſſive: Chriſt did not command or bid them to deſtroy his body; but only foretold what he knew they would do, and what himſelf would do, when they had deſtroyed or put him to death. Examples of the like way of ſpeaking we have alſo, in Gen. xx. 7. and xlii. 18. Deut. xxxii. 50. Iſa. viii. 9, 10. and liv. 1. Matt. xii. 33. John xiii. 27. Eph. iv. 26. (W. B. and F.)

This temple.] Some think, that when our Lord ſpake theſe words, he by ſome geſture, as pointing, or the like, ſignified that he meant his own body. (F.)

I will raiſe it up again.] Note, that Chriſt aſſerts his own power in raiſing his own body from the dead. True! the father is often ſaid to raiſe him; and it is neceſſary that it be ſo ſaid, that it might appear that divine juſtice was fully ſatisfied for our ſins; in that he was by him delivered from that death which he underwent for us: But yet it is often aſſerted, That Chriſt raiſed himſelf, and that he was quicken'd by the ſpirit, which was as well the ſpirit of the Son, as of the Father, dwelling eſſentially in him. (W. and B.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 51.

Forty and ſix years.] Thus the text ought to be read, "Forty and ſix years hath this temple been in building." (Prideaux.) Mr. Whiſton, ſays, the words ſhould be render'd, "forty-ſix years hath this temple been built." But our tranſlation is juſtified, 1. By the uſe of the ſame word, in the Segtuagint, in the ſame caſe, Ezra v. 16. And 2. By the force of the argument of the Jews, viz. that it could not reaſonably be thought, that Chriſt himſelf, or with his ſmall retinue, ſhould do that "in three days," which had coſt many thouſand labourers forty-ſix years to build. (W.) It is greatly queſtion'd, of which temple this ſpeech is to be underſtood. Many interpret it of the ſecond temple, which was begun in the ſecond year of king Cyrus, Ezra iii. 8. and finiſhed in the ninth of Darius Hyſtaſpis, which were "forty and ſix years." But it ſeems more probable, to be underſtood of Herod's temple; which at the time when theſe words were ſpoken, had ſtood preciſely "forty and ſix years;" all which time it was, more and more, adorned, beautified, and perfected; in which reſpect it may be ſaid to be ſo long in building. (Godw.) But whether this computation of the Jews be true or falſe, neither Chriſt, nor the Evangeliſt, are concern'd in the matter; ſince St. John only relates what the Jews ſaid to Chriſt: For if they ſaid any thing that was not true, he who relateth truly what they ſaid, can loſe no credit by it. (W.)

Riſen from the dead.] From among the dead; according to the French phraſe, D'entre les morts. (Trem.)

They believed the ſcripture.] That is, they believed with underſtanding (G.) The completion of myſteries opens the underſtanding, to the knowledge of the ſcripture, and ſtrengthens faith. (Q.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25. Now when he was in Jeruſalem at the paſſover, in the feaſt-day, many believed in his name, when they ſaw the miracles which he did. But Jeſus did not commit himſelf unto them, becauſe he knew all men, and needed not that any ſhould teſtify of man: For he knew what was in man.

When they ſaw the miracles.] They were convinced by the works which our Saviour wrought, that he came from God, and what he ſaid and did was really true, and no impoſture. (B.)

Did not commit himſelf unto them.] Ouk epiſteuen; he did not truſt them. Our Saviour did not, and would not truſt them, who yet believed on his name. Thence note, That a naked aſſent to the hiſtory of the Goſpel, is not ſufficient to entitle us to ſaving faith. We may aſſent to the truth of all that we find there, and yet be far from the kingdom of God. Saving faith implies more than the aſſent of the underſtanding to the truths of the Goſpel. We cannot believe or disbelieve what we pleaſe, but muſt needs aſſent to what is evident to our underſtanding: So that it is poſſible for a man to aſſent to the truths of Chriſtianity, and yet temain in a ſtate of damnation. If he doth not embrace it as good, as well as aſſent to it as true: If our faith be not the parent and principle of obedience; if our belief doth not influence our practice, tho' we paſs for believers among men, we are no better than unbelievers in the account of Chriſt. If we believe Jeſus to be the true Meſſias, and do not receive him in all his offices: If we commit ourſelves to his ſaving mercy, but do not ſubmit our ſelves to his ruling power: If we deſire him for our Saviour, but diſown him for our Sovereign: If we expect ſalvation by him and do not yield ſubjection to him, we put a cheat upon ourſelves; for he only believes as he ſhould, that lives as he does believe. (Idem.)

He knew what was in man.] St. John's deſign in writing of this Goſpel, being to aſſert the divinity of Chriſt, he ſcatters evidences of it in almoſt every chapter. Here he declares his omniſcience, "He knew what was in man;" that is, being God bleſſed for ever, he had an exact knowledge of the hearts of men; not by any revelation of mens hearts from God, but by immediate intuition from himſelf. He knows all men, and all that is in men. See here an ample teſtimony of the Divinity of Chriſt; his knowledge of the ſecrets of the hearts of all men, which is declared to be the undoubted property of God alone, 1 Kings viii. 39. (Idem.)

CHAP. III.

Chriſt teacheth Nicodemus the neceſſity of regeneration, and faith. John's baptiſm, teſtimony, and doctrine, concerning him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. THERE was a man of the Phariſees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: The ſame came to Jeſus by night, and ſaid unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: For no man can do theſe miracles that thou doſt, except God be with him. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God. Nicodemus ſaith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the ſecond time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jeſus anſwered, Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh; and that which is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit. Marvel not that I ſaid unto thee, Ye muſt be born again. The wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: So is every one that is born of the ſpirit. Nicodemus anſwered and ſaid unto him, How can theſe things be? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Art thou a maſter of Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things? Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, We ſpeak that we do know, and teſtify that we have ſeen; and ye receive not our witneſs. If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how ſhall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things? And no man hath aſcended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven.

Nicodemus a ruler.] That is, one of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim. See the notes on Luke xiv. 1.

Came to Jeſus by night.] Partly out of ſhame, leſt the world ſhould think, that ſuch a knowing man as he was, wanted inſtruction: And partly out of fear; for he had ſomething to loſe, and therefore durſt not own Chriſt publickly. (B.)

We know, that thou art.] This could not be ſaid of his brethren, the Phariſees, and rulers of the Sanhedrim; for none of them believed on him, chap. vii 48. Oidamen therefore here may relate chiefly to Nicodemus himſelf, and only ſignify I know, as it often doth: Or elſe it may ſignify, it is, or may be, known; as when the blind man ſaith, "We know, that God heareth not ſinners," chap. ix. 31.

Except a man be born again.] It is here needleſs to enquire whether the word anothen ſhould be render'd from above; or again, as our tranſlation doth, and as Nicodemus underſtood Chriſt's words: ſince 1. Every one who is born again, is alſo born from above, Jam.

iii. 17. as being born of that ſpirit which cometh from above. 2. To "ſee the kingdom of God" here, and to enter into it, ver. 5. is the ſame thing: And both theſe phraſes ſignify to be a real member of that kingdom, and to enjoy the bleſſings belonging to them who are ſo. Thus, to "ſee good," Eccleſ. vi. 6. to "ſee good days," Pſal. xxxiv. 12. and to "ſee life," ver. 36. is to enjoy them; and "to ſee God," Job. xix. 26. Matt. v. 8. and to "ſee the Lord," Heb. xii. 14 is to enjoy him. 3. Chriſt ſeems to ſpeak this, not primarily of that heavenly kingdom, into which the bleſſed ſhall enter at the day of Judgment; but of that ſpiritual kingdom which was to be erected by the Meſſiah; and into which men enter'd by baptiſm: Whence it muſt follow, that no man is indeed a member of Chriſt's kingdom, who is not truly regenerate. "If ye continue in my word, (ſaith Chriſt,) then are ye my diſciples indeed," chap. viii. 31. and "if any man hath not the ſpirit of Chriſt, he is none of his," Rom. viii. 9. And 4. This ſeems to be directed againſt the falſe and pernicious conceptions of the Jewiſh doctors, the Scribes and Phariſees; who thought they had a title to the kingdom of God, and the bleſſings of it, as being the "ſeed of Abraham according to the fleſh," and promiſed to all Iſraelites on that account a portion in the world to come; declaring, ſaith Juſtin Martyr, that to all who were of the ſeed of Abraham, tho' they were ſinners and diſobedient to God's laws, ſhould be given an eternal kingdom. (W.)

Verily, verily.] I am not ſo quick-ſighted, or ſo eagle-eyed, as ſome men are: I cannot find an oath here, as they have done. A proteſtation, an aſſeveration, I ſee; and ſuch as doth command attention and belief. I ſhall only paſs by it with the words of Bernard. "Amen, Amen: Verbum confirmationis præmittitur; magnum eſſe noveris quod ſequitur." Where ſuch an emphatical and ſignificant word, as "verily, verily," doth go before, there is without doubt ſome great matter following after. There is indeed: For water and ſpirit muſt go before, or heaven and happineſs will not follow after. (Byam.)

Born of the ſpirit.] The nature of proſelytes among the Jews, and the difference of them, hath been ſpoken of already, (in the notes on Matt. xxiii. 15.) Thoſe of them, who, being not born of Jewiſh but heathen parents, receiv'd the Jewiſh religion, and ſubmitted to their whole law, were admitted, not only by circumciſion and (while the temple ſtood) ſacrifice, but alſo with the ceremony or ſolemnity of waſhing the whole body, in a river or other great receptacle of water. Now theſe ſo initiated did put off all their former relations, not only of worſhip and manners but even of kindred; and came forth, as if they had been new born, of a new mother, as the Talmud oft expreſſes it: So that he who was of kin to him before, ſhould from thence forth ceaſe to be ſo accounted. To this, I ſuppoſe, our Saviour refers, when he ſpeaks of "leaving father and mother, and wife and children," &c. Mark x. 29. and Luke xviii. 29. as well as here of being "born again of water." For from hence it is, that, at the receiving of Chriſtian religion, which is the nobler proſelytiſm, and hath in the ceremony of initiation, not only the waſhing in water, but alſo the baptiſm of the ſpirit too, that is, the communication of that ſpirit of Chriſt, in ſome meaſure, that deſcended on the apoſtles, Acts ii. 2. a man is here ſaid by Chriſt to "be born anew of water and the Holy Ghoſt;" and when Nicodemus, a learned Jew, and a maſter among them, ſeems to be ignorant, and wonders how this can be, and asks this groſs queſtion to that firſt part of it, how one that is of age "can be born again," Chriſt wonders at him, ver. 10. intimating, that this is the very doctrine of proſelytiſm, which no knowing Jew can be ignorant of; to wit, that he is to be waſh'd and circumcis'd, and being ſo, is by the Jews counted as one new born. This "waſhing of regeneration," Tit. iii. v. is in effect a being new born, and he that ſo "follows Chriſt in this regeneration," or new birth, Mat. xix. 28. if that be the right punctation) "leaves brothers and ſiſters, father and mother, wife and children." And to the ſame purpoſe belongs that which here follows, ver. 11, 12. intimating that ſpeech of Chriſt, which Nicodemus ſo little underſtood, of "being born anew of water," to have been a thing ordinarily ſeen and known among the Jews, an ordinary, inferior, "earthly thing," in compariſon with thoſe higher, celeſtial doctrines (ſo much more contrary to the Jewiſh cuſtoms and laws) that ſhould be revealed, and to the "baptizing with the Holy Ghoſt," of which alſo he here ſpeaks; referring ſtill to this cuſtom of proſelytes among the Jews, which is here accommodated to the receiving of Chriſtian religion, entring into his diſcipleſhip. (H.) For that our Lord here ſpeaks of baptiſmal regeneration, the [illegible] Chriſtian church, from the beginning, hath always taught; [illegible] that with very good reaſon. For, 1. Tho' water is ſometimes put to ſignify or repreſent the purifying operations of the holy ſpirit: yet, to "be born of water" is a phraſe never uſed in ſcripture for being born of the ſpirit: But very properly is it uſed of that baptiſm which is the laver of regeneration, and was, by all the antients, ſtiled palingeneſia, or regeneration. 2. To be "baptized with the holy Ghoſt and with fire," Matt. iii. 11. and Luke iii. 16. is to be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, deſcending on the apoſtles, in the ſymbol of fire, as the event declared, Acts ii. 2, 3. And therefore, in like manner, to be "baptized with water and the Holy Ghoſt," moſt likely ſignifies to be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, and with the ſymbol of water. 3. The queſtion betwixt Chriſt and Nicodemus, was about that which was requiſite to fit a man to enter into the kingdom, that is, the church of God, and make him partaker of the bleſſings of the Goſpel. Now 'tis certain, that baptiſm by water is by our Lord declared to be the ordinary means of entring into his kingdom, Matt. xxviii. 19 Mark xvi. 16. and John iv. 1. and therefore he muſt here ſpeak of that! And hence, even when the Holy Ghoſt was actually fallen upon Cornelius and his friends, St. Peter "commands them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus;" i. e. to be admitted to be Chriſt's diſciples by that rite, and looks upon it as a neceſſary conſequent of that higher baptiſm, Acts x. 47, 48. Chriſt therefore here declares it to be a rite neceſſary for the entrance of adult perſons into his kingdom; and it ſeems highly reaſonable to eſteem ſo of it: For, what ſalvation can be expected by them, who, after he hath told them, they muſt be baptized with water, that they may enter into his kingdom, do, by refuſing that ſacrament, too plainly ſhew, that they refuſe that way of entring, and becoming his diſciples, which he had appointed for that end? But then here muſt be excepted from this neceſſity, 1. Infants; as being incapable of knowing, and therefore of tranſgreſſing, this command: They therefore ſhall not ſuffer in their eternal intereſts, for the miſtake or neglect of their parents 2. Thoſe who want that baptiſm they deſire, not out of contempt but neceſſity; as dying before they can procure it. For ſince it is not the waſhing of the body, but the ſtipulation or "anſwer of a good conſcience," that renders baptiſm ſaving, 1 Pet. iii. 21. it cannot be purely the want, but the contempt of that, which muſt condemn us. And 3. Whatever ignorance of the precept, or miſtake about the nature of it, renders not men incapable of baptiſm by the Holy Ghoſt, can never render them incapable of the ſalvation promiſed to the baptized. (W.)

That which is born of fleſh is fleſh.] That is, fleſh only; our parents being only the fathers of the fleſh," Heb. xii. 9. Whence it is, that it cannot be ſufficient to entitle infants to the bleſſings of this kingdom without baptiſm, that they are born of Chriſtian parents according to the fleſh; but that ſome operation of the ſpirit is neceſſary to fit them for the kingdom of heaven. Some infer from theſe words, that man, in his natural ſtate, can do nothing but what is carnal, and therefore ſinful; and only can begin to do what is truly good when he is born again of the ſpirit: Whereas, 1. This expoſition renders it impoſſible for a man to do any thing towards his own converſion; and ſo renders all God's commands and exhortations to the wicked to turn themſelves from their iniquity, all his promiſes of pardon to them who do ſo, all his threats of death if they neglect to do ſo, and all his complaints againſt them that they would not do ſo, vain and abſurd, and (as Cyril of Alexandria ſays) a vain rhapſody; they being then only commands and exhortations to others to perform that which, if it ever be done, he muſt do himſelf. And 2. This expoſition makes the word, fleſh and fleſhly birth, ſignify one corrupted by his fleſhly appetite, and ſo led and governed by the motions of the fleſh: Whereas Tolet well obſerves, that to be "born of the fleſh" here only ſignifies that natural generation, by which a man is born into the world, of the will of the fleſh; this being the only birth Nicodemus ſpake of, as of a thing incredible, becauſe then a man muſt enter twice into his mother's womb. This therefore is the plain meaning of our Lord, that, beſides that natural birth, by which we receive only our fleſh and body from our parents, there is need of a ſpiritual birth, to fit us for the kingdom of God: But he ſays nothing of any neceſſity lying upon us, till we are thus born again, to do only evil, or of our incapacity to do any thing which may contribute to this new birth. (Idem.)

The wind bloweth.] Nicodemus making an exception againſt our Saviour's notion of regeneration from the abſurdity and impoſſibility of it, as he thought; our Saviour therefore proceeds to clear the matter by a ſimilitude taken from the wind; which at once declares the author, and deſcribes the manner of ſpiritual regeneration. The author of it is the holy Spirit of God, compared to the wind; 1. For the quality of its motion; It "bloweth when, and where it liſteth." 2. From the ſenſibleneſs of its effects; "Thou heareſt the ſound thereof." 3. From the intricacy or myſteriouſneſs of its proceedings; Thou "canſt not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth." As the natural wind is not under the power of man, either to ſend it out or to reſtrain it; it bloweth "where it liſteth" for all us, tho' not where it liſteth in regard of God: In like manner, the holy ſpirit is as wind, in the freeneſs of its motion, and in the variableneſs of it alſo. It is various as to the time; ſome are wrought upon in youth, others in old age: Various in the methods of working; ſome are wrought upon by the corroſives of the law, others by the lenitives of the Goſpel: Various in the means and manner of his working; upon ſome by a powerful ordinance, upon others by an awakening providence. (B.) As we know not the original cauſe of the wind, or why it blows now ſtronger and then gentler, now from this quarter and then from that; yet, by the ſound thereof, and other effects, we are ſenſible that it is: So, tho' the renewed perſon knows not the manner or degrees of the operation of the holy ſpirit, which produced the change in him, yet the change is preceptible by its fruits and effects, tho' he is not always able to diſtinguiſh the motions of the ſpirit from the inward workings of his own mind. (H. and Fox.) They who ſay, the word pneuma, ſignifies here not the wind, but the Holy Spirit, do 1. Deſtroy the compariſon intimated in the word So: And 2. Make Chriſt ſay, that Nicodemus heard the voice of the ſpirit; which is not very probable. (W.)

So is every one.] Two ſpecial effects the wind has; to purify, and to refreſh: And theſe are the prime effects of the ſpirit too. For, 1. When the Holy Spirit enters into the heart, it purifies and cleanſes it from all pollution; Pſal. li. 10. For the ſpirit is compar'd to fire, Acts ii. 3. and that purifies; To water, John iv. 10. and that cleanſes; and here to wind, which blows away all the chaff and duſt that is either in us or about us. 2. This ſpirit refreſhes too; Pſal. li. 12. civ. 30, Iſa. lxiii. 14. John xiv. 26. Rom. viii. 15. Nay, 3. It revives us, even when we are dead; John vi. 63. Rom. viii. 2. like that wind the naturaliſts ſpeak of, which in the ſpring time quickens the dull dead earth into herbs and flowers. (Frank.)

How can theſe things be?] Here we may obſerve, how Nicodemus, conſulting only with carnal reaſon, perſiſts in his apprehenſion concerning the abſurdity and impoſſibility of our Saviour's notion of regeneration, or being born of the Spirit. "Nicodemus ſaid, How can theſe things be?" Learn hence, that the great cauſe of mens ignorance in matters of ſalvation, and the myſteries of religion, is, conſulting their own natural reaſon, without ſubmitting their underſtandings to the authority of divine revelation. Till they can give a reaſon for every thing they believe, they cry out with Nicodemus, "How can theſe things be? Whereas, tho' we cannot give a reaſon for all Goſpel-myſteries which we believe, we can give a good reaſon why we believe them; namely, becauſe God hath revealed them. No man can be a Chriſtian, who refuſes to ſubmit his underſtanding to the authority of divine revelation. (B.)

A maſter of Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things] Hence we may learn, 1. That a man may be very knowing himſelf, and take upon him to teach and inſtruct others, and yet be very ignorant of the nature, and much unacquainted with the work of regeneration upon his own ſoul: A man may be very ſharp-ſighted, as the eagle, in the myſteries of art and nature, and yet blind as a mole in the things of God. 2. That ignorance in the fundamentals of religion eſpecially, is very culpable and ſhameful in them that enjoy the means of knowledge, but eſpecially in thoſe that undertake to inſtruct and teach others. "Art thou a teacher, thou a maſter in Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things?" (Idem.) Our Saviour might well admire, that a teacher of Iſrael ſhould have no notion of a new birth by water, or a birth from above. (W.) For it was cuſtomary with the Jews to make proſelytes by baptiſm, and to call them new men, when thus enter'd into the Jewiſh church. (St.) See the notes on ver. 5.

No man hath aſcended.] Here our Saviour declares to Nicodemus, That none ever "aſcended up into heaven," to fetch down from thence the knowledge of divine myſteries, and to reveal the way of life and ſalvation to mankind by a Mediator, but only Chriſt himſelf; who, tho' he took upon him the human nature, and was then man upon earth, yet was he at the ſame time in his divine nature actually in heaven as God. This text evidently proves two diſtinct natures in Chriſt; namely, a divine nature as he was God, and an human nature as man. In his human nature, he was then upon earth, when he ſpake theſe words; in his divine nature, he was at that inſtant in heaven. Here obſerve, That the Son of God hath taken the human nature into ſo cloſe and intimate an union with his Godhead, that what is proper to either nature is aſcribed unto the perſon of our Saviour. The ſame perſon who was on earth as the Son of man, was then in heaven as God, and yet but one perſon ſtill. (B.) "He that came down from heaven" is here called "the Son of man," by the ſame figure that his blood is called "the blood of God;" the apoſtle aſcribing that to one nature which is proper to the other. (Fox.) What the Jews ſay of Moſes, that he aſcended into the high heavens, (Targum, in Cant. i.) is not true; as appears from theſe words of Chriſt, as well as from the hiſtory of Moſes, which ſhews that he only aſcended to mount Sinai. But it is moſt true of Chriſt, who "in the beginning" was with the Father, and who "came down from heaven," to do and to declare his Father's will, chap. vi. 38. But then 1. He is ſaid, as to his divine nature, to deſcend from heaven: not by a local deſcent, or by quitting heaven, but only by a manifeſtation of himſelf on earth: In which ſenſe God himſelf is ſaid in the Old Teſtament to deſcend to ſee the tower of Babel, Gen. xi. 5. and to confound the lips of them that built it, ver. 7. and to ſee the iniquity of Sodom, Gen. xviii. 21. and to deliver his people from the hand of the Egyptians, Exod. iii. 8. and to give them the law, Exod. xix. 18. And thus, ſaith St. Auſtin, he is ſaid to deſcend, not when he from heaven obſerves what is done on earth, for that is metaphorically "to look down from heaven;" but when he doeth ſomething upon earth beyond the uſual courſe of nature, which therefore ſeemeth to require his more than ordinary preſence there; and then he is uſually ſaid to appear either attended by his holy angels, or in a flame, or cloud of glory, the ſymbol of his majeſtick preſence. 2 That thoſe things are frequently aſcribed by this Evangeliſt to Chriſt, which neither do, nor can agree, and which elſewhere are not aſcribed to any creature, viz. that he is he who "in the beginning was with God, chap. i. 1. "that is in the boſom of the Father," ver. 18. "that is with God," chap. vi. 46. and here, "who is in heaven." Now, this never was or could be ſaid of a mere creature; for, as Woltzogenius confeſſeth, no creature can be in heaven and on the earth at the ſame time. The Gloſs of Grotius here is this, "Singulari Dei dono nobis conceſſus eſt," he is given to us by the ſpecial gift of God; but this anſwers not the fulneſs of the phraſe, "he came from heaven;" for all the prophets were ſent to the Jews, and the apoſtles both to Jews and Gentiles, by the eſpecial gift and kindneſs of God, and yet none of them are ſaid to "come down from heaven:" Chriſt is ſtiled "the Lord from heaven," 1 Cor. xv. 47. as coming down from thence to judge the world, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. the new Jeruſalem is ſaid to "come down from heaven," Rev. iii. 12. and xxi. 2, 10. becauſe 'twas repreſented ſo in a viſion to St. John: the baptiſm of John is ſaid to be "from heaven;" but neither he nor his doctrine to deſcend from heaven. In vain do ſome Socinians produce, as parallel expreſſions, thoſe words of St. Paul, "he hath ſeated us in the heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus," Eph. ii. 6. and our city "is in heaven," Phil. iii. 20. for the laſt only ſignifies, that heaven is the place where we are to dwell for ever; the firſt, that Chriſt hath exalted the human nature thither. Their Strength conſiſts in their ſecond anſwer, viz. that ho oon is to be render'd, who was with God, and, who was in heaven; and this, ſay they, is here apparent, becauſe Chriſt ſpeaks of himſelf as "the Son of man," both here and chap. vi. 62. To which it might be anſwer'd, that Chriſt in theſe places ſaith, "the Son of man is in heaven," as St. Peter ſaith, "the Prince of life was crucified," Acts iii. 15. St. Paul, that "the Lord of glory ſuffered," 1 Cor. ii. 8. and that "God purchaſed a church with his own blood," Acts xx. 28. viz. the Son of man is in heaven, not as the Son of man, but as the Son of God. But that which fundamentally deſtroys this anſwer, is this conſideration, that it is not true that Chriſt, as to his human nature, "in the beginning was with God, or was in heaven." Yes, ſay they, after his baptiſm, he was taken up into heaven, there to be made acquainted with the will of God. But (as before was obſerved on chap. i. 1.) 1. This ſophiſm is ſufficiently confuted by the profound ſilence of all the Evangeliſts concerning it: for they tell us very particularly of very many things concerning Chriſt, which are comparatively of little moment; of his circumciſion, of the flight with him into Egypt, of his ſtay in the temple, of his being carried by the tempter unto a very high mountain, and his being placed by him on a pinnacle of the temple: Can we then reaſonably think, the wiſdom of the Holy Spirit would neglect to record that aſcent of Chriſt into heaven, on which his divine wiſdom, and the truth of his whole prophetick office did ſo much depend? 'Tis true, the argument is negative; but then, in matters of great moment to the eſtabliſhment of our faith, in what this our great prophet taught, and to advance him above all other prophets, as this aſcent muſt be, even Sclichtingius allows ſuch arguments; it being not reaſonable, ſaith he, to ſuppoſe the wiſdom of the Holy Ghoſt, in matters of this nature and importance, ſhould be wholly ſilent. 2. To what end ſhould our Saviour be thus ſnatched up into heaven; or what neceſſity was there of it? Could not the Father declare his will to him, as to other prophets, while he was on earth? Sure, an Almighty and all-preſent God could as well do this out of heaven as in it. Or was it becauſe he would not do this to him upon earth? This cannot truly be affirmed, ſeeing Chriſt was anointed, and filled with that Spirit by which he performed his prophetick office, not in heaven, but on earth. There it was that "the Spirit deſcended on him as a dove," Matt. iii. 16. and by virtue of this Spirit he received at Jordan, "he taught in the ſynagogues, and was glorified of all," Luke iv. 15. By this Spirit he was ſanctified for his office, and "ſent into the world," John x. 36. By this unction the Father ſent him to preach "remiſſion of ſins, and the acceptable year of the Lord," Luke iv. 18, 19. On this account he ſpake the words of God, becauſe "the Father had given him the Spirit, not by meaſure," here ver. 34. Whence it appears that Chriſt was fitted for this prophetick office by that Spirit he received on earth. Well then, either our Lord was taken up into heaven, to be thus inſtructed, before this unction he received on earth, or afterwards. If before, this unction of the Spirit muſt be needleſs; unleſs God did his work imperfectly in heaven, and gave him there no full and perfect knowledge of his will: If after this unction, this aſcent was needleſs; he being by it filled with the ſpirit of wiſdom, counſel and power, above meaſure: What therefore could be wanting to him, who from this Spirit had received all the treaſures of wiſdom, and power to perform the greateſt miracles for the diſcharge of his prophetick function?" (W.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And as Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſs, even ſo muſt the Son of man be lifted up: That whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life. For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. For God ſent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be ſaved. He that believeth on him, is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved. But he that doeth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought in God.

As Moſes lifted up.] Chriſt having inſtructed Nicodemus in the doctrine of regeneration in the former verſes, he now inſtructs him in that of the death of the Meſſiah, and the neceſſity of faith in his death: "The Son of man muſt be lifted up:" that is, upon the croſs, and die; "that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh." (B.)

The ſerpent in the wilderneſs.] Here we are to obſerve, 1. An Old Teſtament type, which our Saviour refers to: And that is the brazen ſerpent in the wilderneſs; the hiſtory of which is recorded, Numb. xxi. 6. &c. 2. The anti-type, or the ſubſtance of what that type did ſhadow forth, that is, Chriſt. (B.) Nicodemus being a Phariſee, and a great doctor in Iſrael, and conſequently well ſkill'd in the law of Moſes, therefore our Saviour foretells him of his paſſion, as prefigured by the brazen ſerpent, under which Nicodemus himſelf could not but imagine ſome great myſtery to be concealed.

Even ſo muſt the Son of man.] Here we learn, that Chriſt Jeſus is of the ſame uſe and office to a ſoul ſtung with ſin, which the ſerpent was of to the Iſraelites, who were ſtung with ſerpents. Thus far they agree, 1. In the occaſion of their inſtitution; being both appointed for cure and healing. 2. That they muſt both be "lifted up," before cure could be obtained; the one upon the pole, the other upon the croſs. 3. That they both muſt be look'd upon before cure could be obtained: The looking up of the Iſraelites was as neceſſary unto healing, as the lifting up of the ſerpent. Faith is as neceſſary to ſalvation, as the death of Chriſt: The one renders God reconcileable unto ſinners, the other renders him actually reconciled. Again, 4. Did the brazen ſerpent heal all that looked upon it, and looked up unto it, tho' all had not eyes alike, ſome with a weak, others with a ſtronger eye? In like manner doth Chriſt juſtify and ſave all, that with a ſincere faith, tho' weak, do rely upon him for ſalvation; "Whoſoever believeth in him ſhall not periſh." Further, the brazen ſerpent was effectual for Iſrael's cure after many ſtingings; if after they were healed, they were ſtung afreſh, and did look up to it, they were healed by it. Thus the merit of Chriſt's death is not only effectual for our cure and healing at our firſt converſion, but after involuntary relapſes and backſlidings, if by faith we have recourſe to the blood of Chriſt, we ſhall find it efficacious for our farther benefit and future healing. In a word, as the brazen ſerpent had the likeneſs of a ſerpent, the form, the figure, the name, the colour of a ſerpent, but nothing of the venom and poiſon of it; ſo Chriſt did take upon him our nature; but ſin, the venom and poiſon of our nature, he had nothing to do with; tho' Chriſt loved ſouls with an inſuperable love, yet he would not ſin to ſave a ſoul. This was the ſimilitude and reſemblance between Chriſt and the brazen ſerpent. The diſparity or diſſimilitude follows: 1. The brazen ſerpent had no power in itſelf, or of itſelf, to heal and cure; but Chriſt has a power, inherent in himſelf, for the curing and healing of all that do believe in him. 2. The brazen ſerpent cured only one particular nation and people, Jews only; Chriſt is for the healing of all nations, and his ſalvation is to the end of the earth. 3. The brazen ſerpent cured only one particular diſeaſe; namely, the ſtinging of the fiery ſerpents; but Chriſt pardons all the iniquities, and "heals all the diſeaſes" of the people, Pſalm ciii. 3. 4. Tho' the brazen ſerpent healed all that looked up unto it, yet it did not give an eye to any; whereas Chriſt doth not only heal thoſe who look up to him, but beſtows the eye of faith, to enable them to look unto him that they may be ſaved. 5. The brazen ſerpent did not always retain its healing virtue, but in time loſt it, and was itſelf deſtroyed, 2 Kings xviii. 4. but the healing virtue and efficacy of Chriſt's blood is eternal. And, 6. The Iſraelites, who were cured by looking up to the brazen ſerpent, died afterwards: But the ſoul of the believer, who is healed by Chriſt, ſhall never die more; "Whoſoever believeth in him ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life." (B.) He does not here ſay, as the Socinians do, that the death of Chriſt was neceſſary for the confirmation of the Goſpel; but, as the fathers do, that it was neceſſary to procure to us life eternal, by removing that death which ſin had brought upon us. Note alſo, that as hypſouſthai, here, and in chap. viii. 28. and xii. 32. is to "be lifted up" upon the croſs; ſo R. Solomo interprets the poll, on which the ſerpent was lifted up, a fork: And Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian and Barnabas ſay, this was a figure of the croſs; and that it was a ſymbol of ſalvation; he who turned to it being preſerved from death, not by what he ſaw, but by the Saviour of all men. (W.) See the notes on chap. i. 12. and Luke xiii. 23.

God ſo loved the world.] Thoſe words are one of thoſe four moſt comfortable ſentences, which the church hath ſelected out of the New Teſtament, as the moſt befitting our meditations, when we come to receive the bleſſed Euchariſt; and they contain, as Mathuſius obſerves, all the cauſes of our ſalvation: As 1. The impulſive cauſe, that moved God to ſave us; which was his mercy and meer love to us: "God ſo loved the world;" and ſo the apoſtle ſhews, Tit. iii. 4. 2. The meritorious cauſe, that deſerved ſo much good for us: Not our own works, but the merits of Jeſus Chriſt; "He gave his only begotten ſon." 3. The material cauſe that was to receive all this good; "the world:" For "God ſo loved the world." 4. The inſtrumental cauſe, on our part, that apprehendeth all this good; which is faith: "That whoſoever believeth in him." And 5. The final cauſe; that is, the benefit we reap from God's love: Our deliverance from hell, and the inheritance of eternal life; "That whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life." (Bp. Griff. Williams.) Learn hence, that faith is the way which God hath appointed, and the condition which God hath required, in order to our obtaining ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt. This faith conſiſts in the aſſent of the underſtanding, that Jeſus is the Saviour of the world; in the conſent of the will, to accept of Jeſus freely and voluntarily, deliberately, adviſedly and reſervedly, for our Saviour; in accepting the merit of his blood, and ſubmitting to the authority of his laws; it being in vain to expect ſalvation by Chriſt, if we do not yield ſubjection to him, (B.) Here Woltzogenius objects againſt Chriſt's ſatisfaction thus; Since God ſhewed the higheſt love to men in ſending thus his ſon to die for them, he could not then be angry with them, and therefore could require no atonement to be made to him for them; and Chriſt therefore could not die to reconcile this kind and loving God to the world. To this I anſwer, that we are taught, by plain examples of holy ſcripture, that love of benevolence in God towards ſinners is well conſiſtent with his diſpleaſure againſt them for their ſins: As in the caſe of Job's three friends. For, "the Lord ſaid to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled againſt thee and againſt thy two friends; for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right," Job xlii. 7. In which words there is a declaration of God's anger againſt them for their ſin, exactly parallel to that of God ſuppoſed by us in this caſe: And yet we find a like expreſſion of his love, in the enſuing words, "Therefore take unto you now ſeven bullocks and ſeven rams, and go to my ſervant Job, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering; for him will I accept; leſt I deal with you after your folly;" ver. 8. God's love is viſible in directing them to that ſacrifice which would obtain his favour: But it was only after the oblation offered, and the prayer of Job, that he forgave their ſins; ver. 9. Again, Did not God ſhew his kindneſs to his people Iſrael, in admitting a Beaſt to ſuffer in their ſtead, and appointing his blood to make atonement for them? And yet, did not he himſelf require this atonement to be made, that ſo their ſins might be forgiven? Did he not appoint this blood to be offered to him as a propitiation for their ſins? And did not then the victim die? And was not his blood offered, to reconcile this loving God to ſinners? And is it not hence evident, that God's love to ſinners is well conſiſtent with his diſpleaſure againſt them for their ſins? (W.)

For God ſent not.] Obſerve here, 1. That the ſalvation of ſinners was the intentional end, and the condemnation of them only the accidental event of Chriſt coming into the world: The deſign of Chriſt's firſt coming into the world was to ſave it; the end of his ſecond coming will be to judge the unbelieving part of it. 2. That unbelief is the formal cauſe of the ſinner's damnation: It is that ſin which doth bind all other ſins upon the ſinner, and conſigns him over to damnation: It is that ſin which doth not only procure damnation, but no damnation like it; which is intimated in the next verſe. (B.) The Jews imagined, that God firſt "made the world only for their ſakes," 2 Eſd. vi. 55, 59. and that the redemption of it was only deſigned for their good, and alſo that their Meſſiah would come to ſubdue and condemn the nations whom he hated. Chriſt, on the contrary, here declares, that God was ſo far from hating or condemning them, that he ſent the Meſſiah into the world to ſave them, and conſequently to die for them. Vain here is their imagination, who by the world underſtand only the elect out of the world: For then, Chriſt here muſt only ſay, that he was ſent that the elect, who believed in him, ſhould not periſh; as if any who were abſolutely elected to ſalvation by faith in him, could either periſh, or not believe! No, 'tis apparent from theſe words, That of this world thus beloved by God, ſome would not believe, and ſo would periſh. And this is more apparent from the words immediately following; in which the world, which he was ſent to ſave, is divided into believers and unbelievers, and into thoſe that will be ſaved and condemned; for thus they run, "He (of this world) who believeth in him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is now condemned;" which muſt be falſe, if you reſtrain this world to ſuch elect as cannot periſh, and cannot but believe to life eternal. And, laſtly, He that believeth not, ſaith Chriſt, ſhall therefore be condemn'd, "becauſe he believeth not in the name of the only Son of God." Now, is it not abſurd to ſay, Men ſhall eternally be condemned for not believing in him, who died not for them, and was not ſent for their ſalvation? Since then, Chriſt frequently declares, that all to whom the Goſpel is propounded, ſhall be condemned, if, and becauſe, they believe not in him, ver. 18. and chap. xii. 47. 'tis certain that he died for the ſalvation of them alſo. (W.)

This is the condemnation.] Here we may obſerve, 1. The worth and dignity of a choice and invaluable privilege declared, "Light is come into the world." A perſonal light, Chriſt; a doctrinal light, the Goſpel. 2. The unworthineſs, abuſe, and great indignity, which the world, through infidelity, offers to this benefit; they reject it, and "love darkneſs rather than light." 3. The dreadful ſentence of wrath which the rejection of this benefit, and the abuſe of Chriſt, brings upon the impenitent and unbelieving world. It terminates in its full and final condemnation; "This is the condemnation:" that is, 'tis a juſt and righteous condemnation, an inevitable and unavoidable condemnation, an heightened and aggravated, an accelerated and haſtened, an irrevocable and eternal condemnation. Learn hence, that the greater and clearer the light is, under which the unregenerate and impenitent do live in this world, ſo much the heavier will their condemnation and miſery be in the world to come, if they wilfully and finally reject it. (B.) This is it that will aggravate our ſin and puniſhment; that when God made ſuch proviſion for us, when Chriſt came to enlighten and take us off from all our former evil courſes, we are ſo beſotted to our own ſinful ways, that we chuſe rather to continue in them, than to be reformed and purified by Chriſt, or but ſo much as to be taught our duty by him. (Hall, H. and W.) See the notes on chap. i. 4, 10, 11.

Loved darkneſs rather than light.] Here the criticks note, that mallon e, is not a comparative, as if the workers of iniquity did in ſome meaſure love the light; for, ver. 20. they are ſaid to hate it; but, as in other places, is a negative: So chap. xii. 43. "They loved the praiſe of men (mallon eper,) more than the praiſe of God. So 1 Tim. i. 4. 2 Tim. iii. 4. Heb. xi. 25. in which places mallon e may be render'd as here "and not light." "And this they did, not only in "thoſe times of ignorance, at which God winked," Acts xvii. 30. but after the clear light had ſhined upon them; by which it appeared, that the deeds of darkneſs were ſo pleaſing to them, that when they were diſcovered to them ſo to be, they ſtill bore that affection to them, which render'd the light diſpleaſing to them, becauſe it did reprove them: Whereas, they who had hearts diſpoſed to obey that light, which would direct them in the way to happineſs, "came to it," that they might be the more aſſured they were doing the works of God, i. e. thoſe works, which were performed according to his will, which tended to his glory, and chiefly did reſpect him as the end and object of them. (W.) By darkneſs, in theſe words, we are not to underſtand mere ignorance, but error likewiſe: Not only a bare privation or abſence of truth and knowledge, but the preſence of its contrary falſhood: Indeed, any thing that ſtands in oppoſition to light, that wholſome metaphor, under which the doctrine of our bleſſed Saviour and his Goſpel are here repreſented. The reaſon of that reluctance men have, and that reſiſtance they make, againſt the laws and doctrines of Chriſtianity, is from their own vicious luſts and inclinations; which would either keep them in utter ignorance of their faith and duty, or diſpoſe them, if that might not be done, to corrupt and pervert the doctrines of the Goſpel, in order to render them more compliant and leſs offenſive to their looſe and ſinful practices; 1. Becauſe the light of truth would diſcover to an ill man the baſeneſs and deformity of ſin and vice, and make him a terror to himſelf, by repreſenting him in his true colours, under all the corruptions and filthineſs of his preſent ſtate; and this he deſires not to ſee. 2. 'Twould convince him of the great danger of his preſent courſe, and, by conſequence, of the neceſſity of reforming it; which cannot be done, he imagines, without great trouble, and therefore deſires not to think of it. And 3. It would take off the edge of his reliſh, and abate the eagerneſs of his inclination to his preſent intereſts and pleaſures; and theſe he cannot endure to part with. 'Tis for theſe reaſons, that ſome men renounce the very articles of their faith, venture to blaſpheme God himſelf and our bleſſed Saviour, to droll upon his miracles, and to expoſe and ridicule the prieſthood, without which no religion ever yet did, or ever can, ſubſiſt. And is it not from hence likewiſe, becauſe men give up conſcience to intereſt, and ſacrifice to ambition, pride, or covetouſneſs, that we ſee them thus run in with the corrupt ſtream of the times, deſert and change their old honeſt principles, and contradict or null the doctrines of the church, to which they have ſubſcribed? And which will ſtand good, in their old ſenſe, for ever, notwithſtanding all the knavery and malice of theſe men againſt them; and tho' all the powers of earth or hell combine to overthrow them. 'Tis for the ſame reaſons, that ſuch men as theſe I have mention'd, are wink'd at, are ſupported, are encouraged, by others, as bad as themſelves, and whoſe intereſt they ſerve by ſuch proceedings. 'Tis for theſe reaſons, in this prophane and degenerate age, in this perverſe and crooked generation, that even to blaſpheme Chriſt and his religion, ſhall, among ſome men, meet with applauſe, amongſt others come off with more impunity, and leſs ill-treatment at their hands, than an honeſt man, for ſteadily doing his duty, if he ſhall happen at the ſame time to croſs theſe mens factious humour, or diſcountenance their reprobate principles. (Tilly.)

Every one that doeth evil.] There are three degrees of blindneſs; 1. When paſſion cauſes men to prefer the darkneſs of ſin before the light of truth. 2. When the love of ſin renders truth itſelf diſagreeable and odious to us. And 3. When men keep at a diſtance, flie from it, perſecute, ſuppreſs, and ſtifle it, as a dangerous evil. (Q.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. After theſe things came Jeſus and his diſciples into the land of Judea, and there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John alſo was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, becauſe there was much water there: And they came, and were baptized. For John was not yet caſt into priſon. Then there aroſe a queſtion between ſome of John's diſciples and the Jews about purifying. And they came unto John, and ſaid unto him, Rabbi, He that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bareſt witneſs, behold, the ſame baptizeth, and all men come to him. John anſwered and ſaid, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven. Ye your ſelves bear me witneſs, that I ſaid, I am not the Chriſt, but that I am ſent before him. He that hath the bride, is the bridegroom: But the friend of the bridegroom, which ſtandeth and heareth him, rejoyceth greatly becauſe of the bridegroom's voice: This my joy therefore is fulfilled. He muſt increaſe, but I muſt decreaſe. He that cometh from above, is above all: He that is of the earth, is earthly, and ſpeaketh of the earth: He that cometh from heaven, is above all. And what he hath ſeen and heard, that he teſtifieth; and no man receiveth his teſtimony. He that hath received his teſtimony, hath ſet to his ſeal, that God is true. For he whom God hath ſent, ſpeaketh the words of God: For God giveth not the ſpirit by meaſure unto him. The father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand. He that believeth on the Son hath everlaſting life: And he that believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

He tarried with them and baptized.] That is, by his diſciples; as the Evangeliſt interprets himſelf, chap. iv. 2. By the compariſon of which texts, it will appear, that our Lord had given his diſciples a commiſſion to baptize. What therefore they did in this matter, being done by his authority and appointment, it is agreeable to the uſual forms of ſpeaking, to ſay, that it was done by him. (Fox.) Not, as moſt interpreters conceive, into his own name, or ſo as to exact from them a belief that he was the Chriſt; for, this he forbids his diſciples to divulge till he was riſen from the dead, Matt. xvi. 20. and xvii. 9. He therefore only did baptize as John had done, into the faith of the Meſſiah which was to come, and with that baptiſm of repentance which prepared the Jews for the reception of his kingdom. (W)

John alſo was baptizing in Enon.] For, as the text tells us, "there was much water there." A place the more convenient, becauſe therein their whole bodies might be dipped. For in this manner only was the Jewiſh baptiſm performed; by a deſcent into the water, Acts viii. 38. and an aſcent out of it, ver. 39. and a burial in it, Rom. vi. 3, 4. Col. ii. 12. Some here enquire, why Chriſt ſhould thus baptize when John had not deſiſted ſo to do? But, ſince both by their baptiſm intended the ſame thing, I ſee no reaſon why our Saviour might not as well baptize, as "preach repentance," Matt. iv. 17. whilſt the Baptiſt was doing the ſame thing. (Idem.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 6.

John was not yet caſt into priſon.] See the notes on Matt. xiv. 3.

There aroſe a queſtion.] It being without example to baptize a Jew, and they being ſtiled the pure ſervants of God, Neh. ii. 20. and thought to be born in holineſs, the Phariſees might ask, what need there was of any baptiſm to purify them? And, if John's baptiſm was ſufficient for this end, why did Chriſt ſet up another after it, which ſeemed to argue him greater than John, and that his baptiſm muſt confer ſome higher degree of purity? (Idem.)

He that was with thee.] Obſerve here, what a ſpirit of envy there was in John's diſciples againſt Chriſt, upon account of the multitude of his followers: "He that was with thee beyond Jordan, baptizeth, and all men come to him." Where note, 1. How meanly John's diſciples think and ſpeak of our Saviour, compared with John their maſter. They do not ſo much as allow him a name, or give him any title, but "He that was with thee beyond Jordan." 2. How they intimate, as if Chriſt had received all his credit and reputation from their maſter John: "He to whom thou bareſt witneſs baptizeth;" as if they had ſaid, This man, whom the people flock after, neglecting thee and thy diſciples, is much inferior to thee; for he came to thee, thou did'ſt not go to him; thou baptized'ſt him, he did not baptize thee; thou gaveſt teſtimony to him, he did not give teſtimony to thee. (B.)

John anſwered, and ſaid.] Obſerve here, How holily and wiſely John the Baptiſt corrects the envy and jealouſy of his own diſciples, and endeavours to root out all prejudice out of their minds againſt Chriſt; in order to which, he ſhews them a five-fold difference betwixt Chriſt and himſelf. 1. He tells them Chriſt was the maſter, John but his miniſter; and that he had told them ſo from the beginning, "Ye yourſelves bear me witneſs, that I ſaid, I am not the Chriſt; but that I am ſent before him." The faithful miniſters of Chriſt think it honour enough to be ſervants to him, and would not have their followers attribute the leaſt part of that honour and glory to them, which is due to Jeſus Chriſt. 2. John acquaints his diſciples, that Chriſt was the bridegroom of his church, to whom the Chriſtian church was to be ſolemnly eſpouſed and married; and that he had honour enough in being one of the bridegroom's friends and ſervants; and accordingly, inſtead of envying, he rejoiced at the ſucceſs which the bridegroom had, and took great pleaſure in it. 3. "He muſt increaſe, but I muſt decreaſe." He muſt increaſe; that is, in honour and dignity, in eſteem and reputation, in diſcovery and manifeſtation. He ſhall ſhine forth as the riſing ſun, and I muſt diſappear as the morning ſtar. Not that John's light was diminiſhed, but by a greater light obſcured only; as all the ſtars diſappear at the appearance of the ſun. Yet obſerve what matter of joy it was with John to ſee himſelf outſhined by Chriſt: Let him increaſe, tho' I decreaſe. 4. In the divine original of his perſon, ver. 51. "He that cometh from above is above all," ſays John. Now Chriſt is from above, his original from heaven; I am from the earth, tho' I had my commiſſion from heaven, and accordingly my words and actions are earthly. My Maſter therefore infinitely ſurpaſſes and excells me in the dignity of his perſon, and in the ſublimity of his knowledge 5. To the intent that he might remove the prejudice which was upon the diſciples minds againſt the Meſſiah, he ſhews them, that his own teſtimony, which they ſo much admired, was by revelation only; Chriſt's by immediate intuition. John teſtified only what he received; but Chriſt what he had ſeen, lying in the boſom of the Father. "What he hath ſeen and heard, that he teſtifieth" Obſerve how ſadly and ſorrowfully the holy Baptiſt reſents it, that Chriſt's teſtimony was no better received and entertained by the world. "He teſtifieth, but no man receiveth his teſtimony." John's diſciples murmured, that "all men came unto Chriſt;" but John mourns that there came not more; and complains, that none, that is, very few "received his teſtimony." Learn hence, that it ought and will be matter of great regret and ſorrow to all the friends of Jeſus Chriſt, but eſpecially to his faithful miniſters and ſervants, that his doctrine is ſo ill received and entertained in the world. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. i. 20.

I am ſent before him.] See the notes on Matt. xi. 10.

He that hath the bride.] Among the Jews, in their rites of eſpouſals, there is frequent mention of chuppah, a place where, under a covering, it was uſual for the bridegroom to diſcourſe familiarly, but privately, with his ſpouſe, whereby their affections might be more knit one to another, in order to marriage, which were not ſuppoſed to be ſo, till the bridegroom came chearfully out of that chuppah. To this doth David refer, Pſalm xix. 5. ſpeaking of "the ſun, which, as a bridegroom, comes forth, rejoicing, from the chuppah." This cuſtom is now ſtill obſerved among the Jews in Germany, (as 'tis affirmed) either before the ſynagogue, in a ſquare place covered over, or, where there is no ſynagogue, they throw a garment over the bridegroom and the bride, and that ſerves the turn. See Paulus Fagius Exeg. in Gen. 4. Whilſt now the bridegroom thus talks with the bride, the bridegroom's friends uſe to ſtand at the door, and hearken whether all do ſucceed well or no: and when they hear the voice of joy, which is an intimation from the bridegroom that all is well, then they rejoice, and ſo celebrate this news Of theſe paranymphoi, or pronubi, it is farther obſervable out of the Greek Liturgies, in the Euchologie, that they are uſed as mediators between the bridegroom and his bride, and help to make the league between them; and therefore in the office of marriage, one of thoſe takes the man's ring, and gives it to the woman, and the woman's in like manner to the man. (H.) There can be no greater joy to a faithful paſtor, than to ſee, by the edification of his flock, that Chriſt, the bridegroom, ſpeaks to the hearts thereof, and that it is really his, in quality of his ſpouſe. (Q.)

Is above all.] See the notes on chap. i. 15, 27.

No man receiveth his teſtimony.] The words no and none, in the ſcripture, are frequently to be underſtood by way of compariſon, and not in the moſt general ſenſe. For inſtance, "There is none righteous, no, not one: there is none that underſtandeth; there is none that ſeeketh after God;" Pſalm xiv. 3. liii. 3. and Rom. iii. 10. &c. Now, to underſtand theſe places in the moſt general ſenſe, would be to contradict the deſign of the Holy Spirit; becauſe the ſcriptures themſelves record ſeveral righteous perſons. So Jer. viii. 6. "No man repented;" that is, few, or almoſt none, in compariſon with thoſe who did not repent: And thus here, "No man receiveth his teſtimony," that is, they who receive it, in compariſon of thoſe who do not receive it, are but few, or almoſt none. (Fox.)

God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure unto him.] To give a thing by meaſure, in the ſcripture phraſe, is to do it ſparingly: As when it is ſaid, "They ſhall drink water by meaſure," Ezek. iv. 16. and to "correct in meaſure," Jer. xxx. 11. and xlvi. 28. it is to do it ſparingly, or in ſuch a proportion: In which ſenſe we read of the "meaſure of faith," Rom. xii. 3. and "the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt," Eph. iv. 7. So that to give the Spirit without meaſure, is to give him in the greateſt affluence, and without reſtraint. (W.) Obſerve here the excellency of Chriſt's miſſion, and how it differed from that of the prophets. 1. God ſpake to them by intervals; whereas he ſpeaks continually in his Son, becauſe this Son is God. 2. The prophets ſpake by an inſpiration which was borrowed, tranſient, and "given by meaſure;" whereas Chriſt ſpake by the Holy Ghoſt, who is his own Spirit, who inſeparably dwells in him, and by the poſſeſſion of whoſe fulneſs he receives his unction and conſecration. 3. God loved the prophets as his ſervants; but he loves Chriſt as his only Son, and communicates himſelf to him in proportion to his love. 4. The prophets had only particular commiſſions, limitted to a certain time and to certain purpoſes; but Chriſt has full power given him, as the general diſpoſer of all his Father's works, the executor of his deſigns, the head of his church, the univerſal high-prieſt of his good things to come, the ſteward and diſpenſer of all his graces, the Saviour of his people, and the only way which leads to truth and life. (Q.) See the notes on chap. i. 16.

Hath given all things into his hand.] See the notes on Matt. xi. 27.

He that believeth.] See the notes on ver. 15, 16. and chap. i. 4.

CHAP. IV.

Chriſt, paſſing through the country of the Samaritans, diſcourſeth with, and revealeth himſelf unto a woman at Jacob's well. His diſciples wonder at the converſation. The woman calleth her neighbours to ſee Chriſt. He declareth to his diſciples the great zeal for God's glory. Many Samaritans believe in him. He returns into Galilee: And there healeth a certain ruler's ſon, who lay ſick at Capernaum.

*Ver.*1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9,10,11,12,13,14,15,16,17,18,19,20,21,22,23,24,25,26. WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Phariſees had heard that Jeſus made and baptized more diſciples than John, (Tho' Jeſus himſelf baptized not, but his diſciples) He left Judea, and departed again into Galilee. And he muſt needs go through Samaria. Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his ſon Joſeph. Now Jacob's well was there. Jeſus therefore being wearied with his journey, ſat thus on the well: and it was about the ſixth hour. There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jeſus ſaith unto her, Give me to drink. For his diſciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat. Then ſaith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askeſt drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, If thou kneweſt the gift of God, and who it is that ſaith to thee, Give me to drink, thou would'ſt have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, thou haſt nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then haſt thou that living water? Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himſelf, and his children, and his cattle? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, Whoſoever drinketh of this water ſhall thirſt again. But whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt: but the water that I ſhall give him ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing up into everlaſting life. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirſt not, neither come hither to draw. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither. The woman anſwered and ſaid, I have no husband. Jeſus ſaid unto her, Thou haſt well ſaid, I have no husband: For thou haſt had five husbands, and he whom thou now haſt is not thy husband: in that ſaidſt thou truly. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet. Our fathers worſhipped in this mountain; and ye ſay, that in Jeruſalem is the place where men ought to worſhip. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye ſhall neither in this mountain, nor yet in Jeruſalem worſhip the Father. Ye worſhip ye know not what: we know what we worſhip: for ſalvation is of the Jews. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and in truth: for the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him. God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit, and in truth. The woman ſaith unto him, I know that Meſſias cometh which is called Chriſt; when he is come, he will tell us all things. Jeſus ſaith unto her, I that ſpeak unto thee am he.

Jeſus himſelf baptized not.] Euodius, biſhop of Antioch, reports, that Jeſus baptized the bleſſed Virgin his mother, and Peter only; and that Peter baptized Andrew, James and John; and they others. (Tayl.) But how that tradition is reconcileable with this text, let the reader judge. See the notes on chap. iii. 22.

He left Judea, and departed.] In proſpect of the danger this might bring upon him, from the envy and malice of the Phariſees, and their power in the Sanhedrim, of which many of them were members. (W.) For it was not yet the fit ſeaſon for him to leave the world, till he had farther diſſeminated his doctrine. (H.) Hence we learn, 1. That when the faithful miniſters of Chriſt do meet with eminent ſucceſs in their maſter's ſervice, they muſt expect to meet with a mighty ſhock of malice and envy from Satan and his wicked inſtruments; Chriſt himſelf experienced it; let his miniſters expect and prepare for it. 2. That it is neither unlawful nor unbecoming, for the miniſters of Chriſt to flee, when perſecution threatens them; their Lord and Maſter having fled before them, and commanded alſo, "When they perſecute you in one city, flee into another," Matt. x. 23. (B.) (See the notes there.) There is a time to give way to the enemies of the truth, and a time to render it triumphant over them. It is a very great grace, not to miſtake in this matter, and to do nothing out of ſeaſon. (Q.) The method to be obſerved is, neither to be afraid to proceed in the diſcharge of our neceſſary duty, nor otherwiſe too raſh, to bring ourſelves into unneceſſary dangers. (Beza.)

A city of Samaria, which is called Sichar.] 'Tis certain, from Ecclus. l. 26. and from Joſephus, Antiq. l. xi. c. 8. that the name of the city was Sichem. This therefore is either a corrupt pronunciation, like that of Beliar for Belial; or elſe a name of reproach put upon it by the Jews, from Sichar, as if it were a city of drunkards, as Achan, Joſh. vii. 25. is called Achar, 1 Chron. ii. 7. as being a troubler of Iſrael. (W.)

Being wearied with his journey.] Our Lord, in his journeying from place to place, did travel uſually on foot: And the weakneſs of his body upon travelling ſhews him to be truly and really man, and "in all things like unto us, ſin only excepted." (B.)

Sate thus on the well.] That is, thus weary and thirſty as he was: Or houtoos; as it happened, without any proviſion of a ſeat to reſt upon. (G. H. W.)

About the ſixth hour.] That is, ſaith one, ſix a-clock in the evening; St. John counting by the Roman hours: But this miſtake is evident from chap. i. 39. (W.) Here the Evangeliſt ſhews the cauſe of our Saviour's thirſt, viz. that it was now full noon, and the heat of the day. (G.)

There cometh a woman.] Obſerve here, 1. How all our motions and actions are under the direction of God; and how divine providence doth ſometimes diſpoſe of ſmall matters to become occaſions of great good: This poor woman's coming to the well, "to draw water," became the means of her converſion. 2. That Chriſt ſeeks after, and ſpeaks to her, before ſhe takes any notice of him. 3. The great poverty of our Lord's outward condition; he wanted a draught of water for his refreſhment, and a meal's meat now at dinner time, to refreſh his wearied nature. But, 4. That tho' Chriſt had neither houſe nor land, nor money of his own, yet he lived not by begging, or upon alms: "The diſciples were gone into the city to buy (not to beg) meat." 5. How bitter is the enmity which differences in religion, and diverſity of opinions do occaſion: They do not only alienate affections, but even violate the bands of civil ſociety and common converſation: "The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans;" would neither eat nor drink with them. (B.)

The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.] By the traditions of the Phariſees they might buy of them; and therefore Chriſt's diſciples do not ſcruple at this, ver. 8. But they were not to borrow any thing of them, or receive any kindneſs from them, or drink of their water, or eat of their morſels; for they bound them under an anathema, not to eat of the fruit or morſel of a cuthæan, and held the eating of their fleſh to be as bad as eating ſwine's fleſh. (R. Eliez. c. 38.) But Chriſt, deſpiſing ſuch traditions as had no foundation, either in the law of God or equity, and tended to the impairing the laws of common friendſhip or humanity, asks drink of this Samaritan woman, and eateth with them. (W.) The ground of the quarrel was this. In the ſixth year of Hezekiah, Salmanaſſar, king of Aſſyria, ſack'd Samaria, tranſported the Iſraelites into Aſſyria, and planted a colony of Aſſyrians in Samaria: Which colony being deſtroy'd by divine vengeance, the king thought the cauſe was their not ſerving the God of Iſrael; and therefore ſent a Jewiſh captive prieſt to inſtruct the remaining Aſſyrians in the Jewiſh religion. Notwithſtanding, they ſtill retained the Gentile ſuperſtitions; till Manaſſes, the brother of Jaddi the high-prieſt at Jeruſalem, married the daughter of Sanballat. Manaſſes, being reproved for marrying the daughter of an uncircumciſed Gentile, and admoniſhed to diſmiſs her, flies to Samaria, perſuades his father-in-law to build a temple in mount Gerizim, introduces the rites of daily ſacrifice, and makes himſelf high-prieſt; pretends to be the true ſucceſſor of Aaron, and commences a ſchiſm in the time of Alexander. Hence the queſtion of religion grew ſo high, that wherever a Jew and Samaritan met, it occaſioned great animoſities, which often terminated in bloodſhed or murder. (Tayl. Prid. and Howel.) See the notes on Luke ix. 53.

If thou kneweſt the gift of God.] Obſerve here, 1. The mercy which Chriſt had for, and was ſo deſirous to beſtow upon this poor woman. It was "the gift of God;" that is, himſelf, his Holy Spirit, in the ſanctifying gifts, and ſaving graces of it: All which are compared to water, in regard of their effects and operations, which are to purify the unclean, and to ſatisfy the thirſty. 2. The way and courſe which this woman, and every loſt ſinner ought to take, in order to the obtaining of this ineſtimable gift; and that is, by asking it: "Thou would'ſt have asked, and he would have given thee living water." Learn hence, that Chriſt himſelf, his Holy Spirit, with all the ſanctifying graces of it, muſt be earneſtly ſought of God: and ſuch as do unfeignedly ſeek them, ſhall certainly obtain them. 3. The true cauſe and reaſon aſſigned, why ſinners ask not for, and ſeek not after, Jeſus Chriſt, and the graces of the Holy Spirit; and that is, ignorance of the worth and want of them: "If thou kneweſt the gift of God, thou would'ſt have asked." Learn hence, that it is ignorance of the worth of Chriſt, and inſenſibleneſs of the want of him, that makes perſons ſo indifferent in their deſires after him, and ſo remiſs in their endeavours for the obtaining of him. (B.) By "the gift of God," and "living water," Chriſt ſeems here to underſtand the Holy Spirit, repreſented in the Old Teſtament by "clean water," Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 27. and in the New by "living water," as here, and in chap. vii. 38. or "the water of life," Rev. xxi 6. and xxii. 1. For, 1. Spring water is, in the Hebrew idiom, called "living water," in oppoſition to that which ſtagnates: For life conſiſting in continual motion, by reaſon of the continual ebullition of this water, it is ſaid to live; ſee Lev. xiv. 5, 50. xv. 13. and Numb. xix. 17. And hence it is here ſaid to be "water ſpringing up," ver. 14. And, 2. This Holy Spirit, to be communicated to believers, is ſtiled "the gift of God," Acts viii. 20. "the heavenly gift," Heb. vi. 4. and "the gift," Acts xi. 17. (H. and W.)

Whence then haſt thou that living water?] Obſerve here, 1. How ignorant perſons are of ſpiritual things, till enlighten'd by the holy Spirit of God. This poor woman's queſtion looks much like that of Nicodemus, chap. iii. 9. "How can theſe things be?" A natural perſon cannot perceive the mind of Chriſt, when ſpeaking to him about ſpiritual things. Spiritual objects muſt have a ſpiritual eye to diſcern and behold them, 1 Cor. ii. 14. "The natural man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit." 2. With what great humility and condeſcenſion our holy Lord treats this poor woman, pitying her ignorance, and pardoning her infidelity; he tells her, That the water of that well which ſhe was about to draw, could not give an abiding ſatisfaction; but the thirſt quenched for the preſent, would certainly return again: But he that ſhould drink of the water which he had to give, that is, be made partaker of the graces of his Spirit, ſhall find ſuch refreſhing ſatisfaction therefrom, that all inordinate deſires after earthly things will be quenched and extinguiſhed, and will be like "a well of water ſpringing up," till they come to eternal glory. Learn hence, 1. That as the body of man is ſubject to a natural, ſo is the ſoul of man ſubject to a ſpiritual kind of thirſt. 2. That no creature-comfort, or earthly enjoyment, can quench this thirſt which the ſoul of man is ſubject unto. 3. That the ſpirit of grace, which our Saviour here calls the "water of life," is able fully and perfectly to quench the thirſt of the ſoul; and where it is once ſavingly received, ſhall never be totally or finally loſt. "It ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life;" that is, the graces of the Spirit ſhall be in believers as permanent habits, as fixed principles that ſhall not decay. Hence St. Peter calls it "incorruptible ſeed, which liveth and abideth for ever," 1 Pet. i. 23. (B.)

Our father Jacob.] The Samaritans themſelves will not own their original from the Eaſtern colonies of Eſarhaddon, but claim to be deſcended from the ſons of Joſeph; and therefore call Jacob their father. But Joſephus tells us, they uſed to do this, only when the Jews were in proſperity: but if, at any time, they fell under difficulties or oppreſſions, they then diſclaimed all relation to them; ſaying, they were of another nation; as was notoriouſly done by them in the time of Antiochus's perſecution. (Prideaux.)

Shall never thirſt.] Here is ſignified the baptiſm of the water of ſalvation; which is but once to be received, but never more to be repeated. (G.)

Go, call thy husband.] Jeſus ſaid this, to take occaſion to prepare the woman to receive his doctrine, by convincing her that he was a prophet. (W.)

Well ſaid.] When our Saviour had bid the woman of Samaria to "call her husband," ſhe anſwered, "I have no husband:" And the tranſlations make our Saviour approve her anſwer, by replying, "Thou haſt well ſaid, I have no husband." But Eraſmus, and others, have very judiciouſly obſerved, that this is an ironical way of ſpeaking; which is ſo far from approving what one ſays, that, on the contrary, it repreſents it abſurd and ridiculous. The words then muſt be render'd, "Finely anſwer'd indeed! I have no husband." (Howel.)

Not thy husband.] "For thou haſt had five husbands," from whom thou haſt been divorced for thy adulteries; "and he whom thou now haſt," or cohabiteſt with, "is not thy husband;" thou living with him in fornication. Others think, ſhe had divorced herſelf from her former husbands, contrary to the law, which permitted not women to begin the divorce; and ſo was really the wife of ſome former husband then living. (G. and W.) See the notes on mark x. 12. Theſe words import, 1. What manner of perſon this woman was: Beſides that ſhe was an idolater, as being a Samaritan, ſhe was alſo an adultereſs, and lived now in the ſin of uncleanneſs with one that was "not her husband," after ſhe had "had five husbands before. Whence we learn, that the ice of old age will not quench the fire of luſt: Such is the pollution of our nature, that luſt will be inſatiable, if grace doth not reſtrain it. This woman, after five marriages, yet lives in the ſin of uncleanneſs. 2. The method and means our Lord uſes, in order to her converſion. 1. He deals very tenderly and gently with her; he uſes no roughneſs or tartneſs of ſpeech with her; he doth not upbraid her for her impudent lewdneſs, in living with a man that was none of her husband; but only gives her to underſtand that he knew the ſin ſhe lived in: Yet this he did likewiſe with all imaginable privacy, whilſt his diſciples were away, and no body by but they two only. Hence learn, 1. That private ſins are not to be reproved publickly. 2. That in reproving ſin, all ſharpneſs and bitterneſs of expreſſion muſt be avoided: The pill of reproof muſt be wrapped up in ſugar; for if they to whom it is given taſte the bitterneſs of gall and paſſion mixed with it, they will certainly ſpit it out before, it may be upon, our faces. Our Lord's practice here inſtructs us, that ſin is to be ſo reproved, as that the credit and eſtimation of the ſinner may be preſerved as much as may be. Note, That as Chriſt dealt with this woman tenderly and gently, ſo he diſcovers her ſin to her particularly; and ſets her ſecret ſin before the face of her conſcience diſtinctly. If ever the miniſtry of the word works upon the minds of men to their converſion, it muſt be by a particular and cloſe application of the word to every man's conſcience: Generals will not affect. 3. What the particular ſin is, which Chriſt charges home upon the conſcience of this woman; it is the ſin of uncleanneſs, that the man ſhe kept with, was not her husband. Learn hence, That amongſt all ſins, the ſin of uncleanneſs will lie heavieſt upon the conſcience, and wound the ſoul moſt deeply, when the ſpirit of God once effectually diſcovers it, and charges it home upon the conſcience: For there is no ſin ſo directly oppoſite to ſanctification and holineſs as this ſin; no ſin that quenches the holy ſpirit of God like this (B.)

Thou art a prophet.] Becauſe he ſo exactly knew the ſecrets of her life, which ſhe thought were known to God alone. (W.) And here the Evangeliſt declares a threefold effect and fruit of the grace of converſion that appeared in this woman. 1. She neither denied, nor excuſed, nor extenuated this ſin, which Chriſt had charg'd her with, But tacitly owns, and implicitly confeſſes it. 2. She doth not only own and confeſs what ſhe was charg'd with, but ſhe doth profeſs reverence to our Saviour's perſon, and pays honour to him as an extraordinary prophet; "Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet." 3. She deſireth inſtruction and reſolution from him, concerning the worſhip and ſervice of the true God; how ſhe might ſeek him, and where ſhe might ſerve him moſt acceptably. (Idem.)

Our fathers worſhipped in this mountain.] The Samaritans contended, that mount Gerizim was the moſt ancient place of worſhip, becauſe Abram (they ſay) built there an altar to God, Gen. xii. 6, 7. and ſo did Jacob, Gen. xxxiii. 20. And therefore that was the place where ſacrifices were to be offered, before the temple at Jeruſalem was built. But the Jews anſwer'd, that the temple was built on the mountain of Moriah, in the place where Abraham offer'd up Iſaac, Joſ. antiq. l. 7. c. 10. And that that was the place of worſhip throughout all generations; Targ. in 2 Chron. iii. 1. & Maimon de edific. templi. tr. 1. c. ii. (W.) See the notes on ver. 9. Nay, ſo were the Samaritans poſſeſs'd with a belief of the antiquity of their temple, that, in the time of Ptolomy Philometer, about a hundred and ſixty years before Chriſt, they undertook, with the hazard of their lives, to prove it before that of Jeruſalem, even out of the laws of Moſes. (Oliver.) And the Samaritan advocates, failing of that proof, which they pretended to, were put to death, for their ſedition at Alexandria. (Prid.) Here we may obſerve, how ready and forward perſons of a falſe religion are, to aſcribe too much to antiquity, and to the example and cuſtom of their forefathers: Whereas it is not the continuance of a thouſand or two thouſand years, that can make any thing truly ancient in religion, except it has been from the beginning; nothing is truly ancient, in matters of religion, but that which can derive its original from him, who is truly called "The ancient of days." (B.)

Believe me.] Since you are convinc'd that I am a prophet. (G.)

Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem.] Here our Saviour tacitly foretells her of the deſtruction of both. (Idem.) This controverſy, ſaith Chriſt, will ſhortly be decided, by removing the occaſion of it, viz. this way of worſhipping God by ſacrifices; and by giving liberty to worſhip God with ſpiritual ſacrifices "in every place," as the prophet Malachi foretold, chap. i. 11. (W.) His anſwer conſiſts of two parts, 1 Concerning the place of worſhip: 2. Concerning the worſhip itſelf. As to the place of worſhip, our Saviour tells her, that tho' the Jews had heretofore, by warrant of God's word, regularly worſhipped at Jeruſalem, and the Samaritans, ſuperſtitiouſly, at mount Gerizim, yet "the hour was coming," namely, at his death, when all difference of places for God's worſhip ſhould be taken away; and therefore ſhe need not trouble herſelf, to know which of the two was holier, and the better place to ſerve him in. 2. Our Saviour reſolves her, concerning the worſhip itſelf, namely, That the ceremonial worſhip, which the Jews and Samaritans uſed, ſhould ſhortly be aboliſhed, and inſtead thereof a more ſpiritual form of worſhip ſhould be eſtabliſh'd, more ſuitable to the ſpiritual nature of the great and Holy God, and containing in it the truth and ſubſtance of all that which the Jewiſh ceremonies prefigured and ſhadowed forth. (B.) See the notes on ver. 9.

Ye worſhip ye know not what.] This many think is ſpoken with relation to ſome falſe objects of their worſhip, or ſome idolatrous way of worſhip which obtained among them. The Jews gave it out that they worſhipped God in the image of a dove; but this ſeems plainly fabulous, and invented by the Jewiſh rabbins out of hatred to them. For, 1. Among the idols which they worſhipped, when they came from Aſſyria to Samaria, there is not the leaſt hint of any image of a dove worſhipped by them. 2. Joſephus, tho' he in ſeveral places inveighs againſt them ſharply upon other accounts, doth never charge them with this crime; which ſhews it to be a later invention of their rabbins: And, 3. It is a thing wholly inconſiſtent with that law of Moſes which they then owned: For as all images are forbidden by it, ſo it did require them to ſacrifice the dove to God; and it was always judged an abſurd thing to worſhip that which they did ſacrifice. See Bochart, Hieroz. part 2. l. 1. c. p 6, 8. Others ſay, they worſhipped God only as the topical God of that country: But tho' this might be true of them, when they firſt came into Samaria, and retained their heathen ſentiments, yet could it not be true of them after, that, rejecting all their heatheniſh ſuperſtitions, they had embraced that law in which Jehovah is continually ſtiled the maker of heaven and earth, and the God of all the earth; and when, as Epiphanius ſaith, they endeavoured to renounce all idolatry, and to own one God. 3. Whereas Epiphanius, and many of the Jews, pronounce them guilty of latent idolatry, for worſhipping God in that mountain where Jacob hid the idols of the nations, according to theſe words, Gen. xxxv. 4. "And they gave to Jacob all the ſtrange Gods that were in their hands, and Jacob buried them under the oak which was by Sychem;" it is not probable that Chriſt ſhould accuſe them of falſe worſhip, on the account of idols under ground, which they knew nothing of, and which they never did intend to worſhip. Obſerve then, 1. That the enquiry of the woman, and the diſpute was, ſaith Joſephus, only about the place of worſhip, and therefore it is very probable Chriſt's anſwer chiefly doth reſpect the place. 2. That Chriſt, by ſaying to the Samaritan woman, That ſhortly they ſhould not worſhip the Father in that mountain, does tacitly own that the Samaritans did worſhip the Father; nor doth he inſtruct her who was the true object of her worſhip, but only how ſhe was to worſhip the true God. 3. When they came firſt to Samaria, it is obſerved, that "they knew not Miſhtap, the manner of worſhipping the God of Iſrael," 2 Kings xvii. 26. In this, ſaith Chriſt, ye are ſtill deficient; as not worſhipping the God of Iſrael, according to his preſcription in the law, but according to your own inventions. Ye therefore may be truly ſaid not to know him, whoſe will ye obſerve not; neither worſhipping him according to his nature, in the ſpirit, nor according to that law which is the rule of his worſhip, and according to which alone ye can do him acceptable ſervice. If then ye would obtain ſalvation by the worſhip of him, ye muſt do it according to the revelation made to the Jews: To whom, as the promiſe of a Saviour was given, ſo from them is ſalvation to come to the world, according to the promiſe made to their father Abraham, "In thee ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed." (W.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 47.

Worſhip him in ſpirit, and in truth.] This is an abuſed text, being commonly alledged, to prove, that God, now in the Goſpel, either requires not, or regards not, external worſhip, but that of the ſpirit only: And this to be a characteriſtical difference between the worſhip of the Old Teſtament and the New. If at any time we talk of external decency in rites, and bodily expreſſions, as fit to be uſed in the ſervice of God; this is the uſual buckler to repel whatſoever may be ſaid in that kind. It is true indeed, that the worſhip of the Goſpel is much more ſpiritual, than that of the law: But that the worſhip of the Goſpel ſhould be only ſpiritual, and no external worſhip required therein (as the text, according to ſome mens ſenſe, and allegation thereof, would imply) is repugnant, not only to the practice and experience of the Chriſtian religion in all ages; but alſo to the expreſs ordinances of the Goſpel itſelf. For what are the ſacraments of the New Teſtament? Are they not rites, wherein and wherewith God is ſerved and worſhipped? The conſideration of the holy Euchariſt alone, will confute this gloſs. For is not the commemoration of the ſacrifice of Chriſt's death upon the croſs, unto his Father, in the ſymbols of bread and wine, an external worſhip? And yet with this rite hath the church, in all ages, uſed to make her ſolemn addreſs of prayer, and ſupplication, unto the Divine Majeſty; as the Jews in the Old Teſtament did by ſacrifice. When I ſay, in all ages, I include that of the apoſtles: For ſo much St. Luke teſtifieth of that firſt Chriſtian ſociety, Acts ii. 46. "They continued in breaking of bread, and in prayers." As for bodily expreſſions, by geſtures and poſtures, as ſtanding, kneeling, bowing, and the like; our bleſſed Saviour himſelf "lift up his ſacred eyes" to heaven when he prayed for Lazarus, John xi. 41. "fell on his face·" when he prayed in his agony, Mat. xxvi. 39. St. Paul (as himſelf ſaith) Eph iii. 14. "bowed his knees to the father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:" He and St. Peter, and the reſt of the believers, do the like more than once, in the Acts of the apoſtles: What was impoſition of hands, but an external geſture, in an act of invocation for conferring a bleſſing? And that perhaps ſometimes without any vocal expreſſion joyned therewith. Beſides, I cannot conceive any reaſon, why in this point of evangelical worſhip, geſture ſhould be more ſcrupled at, than voice. Is not confeſſing, praiſing, praying, and glorifying God by voice, an external and bodily worſhip, as well as that of geſture? Why ſhould then the one derogate from the worſhip of the father, "in ſpirit and truth," and not the other? To conclude, there was never any ſociety of men in the world, that worſhipped the father in ſuch a manner, as this interpretation would imply: And therefore this cannot be our Saviour's meaning; but ſome other. Let us ſee if we can find out what it is. There may be two ſenſes given of theſe words; both of them agreeable to reaſon, and the analogy of ſcripture; let us make our choice. The one is, That to worſhip God "in ſpirit and truth," is to worſhip him, not with types and ſhadows of things to come, Hebr. x 1. as in the Old Teſtament; but according to the verity of the things exhibited in Chriſt, according to that; "the law was given by Moſes, but grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt." John i. 17. Whence the myſtery of the Goſpel, is elſewhere by our Saviour in this Evangeliſt, termed truth, as cap. xvii. 17. and the doctrine thereof by St. Paul, "the word of truth," Epheſ. i. 13. Rom. xv. 8. "The time therefore is now at hand, ſaid our Saviour, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the father," no longer with bloody ſacrifices, and the rites and ordinances depending thereon; but in, and according to the verity of that which theſe ordinances figured: For all theſe were types of Chriſt, in whom being now exhibited, the true worſhippers ſhall henceforth worſhip the father. This ſenſe hath good warrant from the ſtate of the queſtion between the Jews and Samaritans, to which our Saviour here makes anſwer: Which was not about worſhip in general, but about the kind of worſhip in ſpecial; which was confeſſed by both ſides, to be tied to one certain place only; that is, of worſhip by ſacrifice, and the appendages; in a word, of the typical worſhip, proper to the firſt covenant; of which ſee a deſcription, Heb. 9. This Joſephus expreſly teſtifies, lib. antiq. cap. i. ſpeaking of the Jews and Samaritans, which dwelt together at Alexandria: "They lived, (ſaith he,) in perpetual diſcord one with the other; whilſt each laboured to maintain their country cuſtoms; thoſe of Jeruſalem affirming their temple to be the ſacred place, whither ſacrifices were to be ſent; the Samaritans, on the other ſide, contending they ought to be ſent to mount Garizim. For otherwiſe, who knows not, that both Jews and Samaritans had other places of worſhip, beſides either of theſe? Namely their proſeucha's and ſynagogues, wherein they worſhipped God, not with internal only, but external worſhip; though not with ſacrifice, which might be offered in one place only. And this alſo may ſeem to have been a type of Chriſt, as well as the reſt; namely, that he was to be that one, and only mediator of the church; in the temple of whoſe ſacred body, we have acceſs unto the father, and in whom he accepts our ſervice and devotions: according to that, "Deſtroy this temple, and I will rear it up again in three days: He ſpake, (ſaith the text) of the temple of his body." Chap. ii. 19, 21. This ſenſe divers of the ancients hit upon: Not that in the New Teſtament men ſhould worſhip God, without all external ſervices; (for the New Teſtament was to have external and viſible ſervices, as well as the old;) but with ſuch as ſhould imply the verity of the promiſes already exhibited; not by types and ſhadows of them yet to come. We know, the Holy Ghoſt is wont to call the figured face of the law, "the letter," and the verity thereby ſignified, "the ſpirit." As for ſpirit and truth, both together, they are but once found in holy writ; to wit, only in this place: And ſo, no light can be borrowed by comparing of the like expreſſions any where elſe, to expound them: Beſides, nothing hinders, but they may be taken one for the expoſition of the other; that to worſhip the Father "in the ſpirit," is the ſame with to worſhip him "in truth." But howſoever this expoſition be fair and plauſible, yet, me-thinks, the reaſon which our Saviour gives in the words following, ſhould argue another meaning: "God (ſaith he) is a ſpirit, therefore they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and truth:" But, God was a Spirit from the beginning: If therefore, for this reaſon, he muſt be worſhipped in "ſpirit and truth," he was ſo to be worſhipped in the Old Teſtament, as well as in the New. Let us therefore ſeek another meaning; for the finding whereof, let us take notice of the condition of the Samaritan ſchiſm, here mentioned in the notes on ver. 9. and what our Saviour here ſays, at ver. 22. and we ſhall find, at leaſt, that the genuine meaning of theſe words is not againſt external worſhip; which I think this demonſtration will evince. To "worſhip what we know," as the Jews are ſaid to do, and to "worſhip in ſpirit and truth," are taken by our Saviour for equivalents; elſe the whole ſenſe will be inconſequent: But the Jews worſhipped not God without rites and ceremonies, who yet are ſuppoſed to worſhip him "in ſpirit and truth:" Ergo, To worſhip God without rites and ceremonies, is not to worſhip him "in ſpirit and truth," according to the meaning here intended. (Mede.) Now, that we may thus worſhip God in ſpirit, 1. We muſt lay, as the foundation, not only purity of body from all uncleanneſs, but of the ſoul alſo, from all ſpiritual defilements, all pride and haughtineſs of mind, all malice, envy, bitterneſs of ſpirit, all impure thoughts, and evil concupiſcence, for theſe are ſtiled "works of the fleſh," Gal. v. 19, &c. Now "they that are in the fleſh (ſaith the apoſtle) cannot pleaſe God," Rom. viii. 8. nor can they mind "the things of the Lord," who are not pure "in body and in ſpirit," 1 Cor. vii. 34. 2 Cor. vii. 1. And with this the very heathens were ſo well acquainted, that they often taught, that God was, pura mente colendus, to be worſhipped with a pure mind; this was the beſt offering we could give, and the beſt habitation we could build him. 2. We muſt have juſt and awful thoughts of the Divine Majeſty, oft repreſenting him to our thoughts, as a God of infinite purity and Juſtice, as well as power and wiſdom; one who is always preſent with, and beholds all our ſecret thoughts and actions in order to a future recompence: For, by theſe apprehenſions fixed in our hearts, we ſhall be naturally induced to "glorify him in our ſpirits," 1 Cor. vi. 20. Having laid this foundation, we muſt endeavour to walk humbly with God, ſubjecting ourſelves wholly to his providence, being contented with all conditions in which he doth think fit to place us, and ſubmitting our own wills to his good pleaſure; which is in ſcripture ſtiled "poverty of ſpirit," Matt. v. 3. and the wiſdom of the ſpirit, Rom. viii. 6. 3. We muſt endeavour to reſemble him as much as may be in holineſs and righteouſneſs, in truth, in goodneſs, and in mercy; for even the heathens ſay, We then worſhip God beſt, when we are moſt like to him. And, 4. We muſt worſhip God, from ſpiritual principles, a ſincere love and filial reverence of him; to ſpiritual ends, that we may promote his glory, and do what is well pleaſing to him; and after a ſpiritual manner, ſerving him with the whole heart, ſoul and mind, and with a fervency of ſpirit. (W.)

I that ſpeak unto thee am he.] Here we may obſerve, 1. What a general expectation there was, at that time, of the Meſſiah's coming: This woman, tho' a Samaritan, yet ſaith, "I know, that Meſſias cometh." 2. What his work and office was expected to be, viz. to reveal and "tell us all things," needful to be known for our ſalvation. 3. How freely and fully Chriſt reveals himſelf to this poor woman, "I that ſpeak unto thee am he:" whereas, when the Jews asked him, "If thou be the Chriſt, tell us plainly," chap. x. 24. he did not in plain terms tell them who he was; nor even when John the Baptiſt ſent two of his diſciples to ask him, "Art thou he that ſhall come?" Matt. xi. 3. Hence we learn, that the Lord delights to reveal himſelf, and his will, to ſuch as, with an humble mind and honeſt heart, deſire to know him and to underſtand their duty. (B)

Ver. 27. And upon this came his diſciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man ſaid, What ſeekeſt thou? or, Why talkeſt thou with her?

Upon this came his diſciples.] The providence of God ſo order'd it, that the diſciples, who were gone to the city to buy meat, ver. 8. did not return to interrupt this conference, till Chriſt had finiſhed his diſcourſe, and made himſelf known to be the Meſſias. (B.)

Marvelled, that he talked with the woman.] For to talk with women was one of the ſix things, which the rabbins ſay, do render a diſciple impure. (W.) It was alſo unuſual for Chriſt to do ſo: And, as he was wont to talk of nothing but heavenly things, they wonder'd what could be the ſubject of that diſcourſe, becauſe they did not imagine that a Samaritan woman was ſo deſirous to be inſtructed by him in thoſe matters. (G.) This affords an example of great weight. We muſt not immediately cenſure good men, tho' they ſeem to us to do ſomething contrary to decency. We run no riſque at all, in ſuſpending our judgment, and waiting till ſome farther diſcovery may be made: But we hazard a great deal, when we expoſe ourſelves to the violation of juſtice and charity, by a raſh and precipitate judgment. (Q.) When the cedars of Libanus have been obſerved to fall, when David and Solomon have been diſhonour'd, he is a bold man, who will venture farther than he is ſent in errand by neceſſity, or invited by charity, or warranted by prudence. I deny not, but ſome perſons have made holy friendſhips with women: St. Athanaſius with a devout and religious virgin; St. Chryſoſtome with Olympia; St. Jerome with Paula Romana; St. John with the elect lady; St. Peter and St. Paul with Petronilla and Tecla: And therefore it were a jealouſy beyond the ſuſpicion of monks and eunuchs, to think it impoſſible to have a chaſt converſation with a diſtinct ſex. 1. A pure and right intention. 2. An intercourſe not extended beyond neceſſity or holy ends. 3. A ſhort ſtay. 4. Great modeſty. And, 5. The buſineſs of religion, will, by God's grace, hallow the viſit, and preſerve the friendſhip in its being ſpiritual, that it may not degenerate into carnal affection. And yet theſe are only advices uſeful, when there is danger in either of the perſons, or ſome ſcandal incident to the profeſſion, that, to ſome perſons, and in the conjunction of many circumſtances, are oftentimes not conſiderable. (Taylor.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30. The woman then left her water-pot, and went her way into the city, and ſaith to the men, Come, ſee a man which told me all things that ever I did: Is not this the Chriſt? Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

Left her water-pot, and went.] Here is ſhewn a mind inflamed with the love of divine things, ſo as to make her forget what ſhe came about. When once a ſoul has taſted the ſweetneſs and excellency that is in Jeſus Chriſt, thoſe things that were highly eſteemed before, will be little regarded then. (G. and B.)

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. In the mean while his diſciples prayed him, ſaying, Maſter, eat. But he ſaid unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of. Therefore ſaid the diſciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat? Jeſus ſaith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that ſent me, and to finiſh his work. Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harveſt? behold, I ſay unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harveſt. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that ſoweth, and he that reapeth, may rejoice together. And herein is that ſaying true, One ſoweth, and another reapeth. I ſent you to reap that whereon ye beſtowed no labour: other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours. And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him, for the ſaying of the woman, which teſtified, He told me all that ever I did. So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they beſought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days. And many more believed becauſe of his own word: And ſaid unto the woman, Now we believe, not becauſe of thy ſaying: for we have heard him ourſelves, and know that this is indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world.

I have meat to eat.] I have ſomewhat to do, more valuable and pleaſant to me, than eating and drinking. (H. and W.) Not that our Saviour did not want meat at this time; for he was both hungry and thirſty, as appears by his asking water of the woman to drink, and by his ſending his diſciples into the city to buy meat: But he was more intent upon doing his Father's work, than upon ſatisfying his own hunger. (B.)

My meat is to do.] This phraſe is uſed by the ancients, concerning things which are done by them with pleaſure: As in Ariſtophanes, Plautus, and others. (W.)

Say not ye ?] Is not this proverbial among you, to ſay, for the encouragement of yourſelves in ſowing ? (G. and W.) Our Saviour, having given a plain evidence of his fervent deſire to bring ſouls to God, doth here labour to ſtir up the like affections in his diſciples: And this he doth by three very effectual arguments. 1. From the ripeneſs of the people, and their willingneſs to hear, and their readineſs to be reaped and gather'd by the Goſpel,(whereof there was a preſent inſtance in the Samaritans, who were now coming forth in multitudes to Chriſt) which opportunity was therefore to be improved, " Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already for harveſt." Learn hence, That as a people is ſometimes ripe for the miniſtry of the word, as corn is ripe and ready for the reaper's hand, ſo it is the duty of the miniſters of Chriſt to lay hold upon ſuch opportunities with as much deſire and delight, as the harveſt-man doth upon a reaping ſeaſon. 2. From the great reward they ſhould receive for this their work. " He that reapeth receiveth wages." The harveſt-man's wages is double to what other labourers receive. The miniſters of God ſhall receive good wages at his hand, how ill ſoever they are requited and rewarded by an unkind world. And as a farther encouragement, it follows, " He that ſoweth, and he that reapeth, ſhall rejoice together ;" that is, the prophets who took ſo much pains in ſowing the ſeed of the Goſpel, and particularly John the Baptiſt, and you my apoſtles which ſucceed them, and reap the fruit of what they did ſow, ſhall have the ſame reward in glory, and rejoice together. Learn hence, That not only the ſucceſsful, but the faithful labourer in God's harveſt ſhall be rewarded : Not only thoſe which ſee the fruit of their miniſtry in the converſion of ſinners, but ſuch as are faithful ſeeds-men. Tho' the ſeed does not come up till we are in our graves, nay, tho' it rots under the clods, and does not come up at all, yet ſhall the faithful ſeedsman be rewarded according to his labour, not according to his ſucceſs. 3. From the eaſineſs and facility of that labour which God required of them ; " Others have laboured, and ye are enter'd into their labours ;" that is, the prophets and John the Baptiſt have prepared the ground, and ſown the ſeed, and made ready a people for the Lord, and now you enter into their labours, performing and gathering them into a Goſpel-church. Yet this muſt not be underſtood abſolutely, but comparatively : Not as if the prophets reaped nothing, converted none ; but that their fruit was ſmall in compariſon of the ſucceſs which the apoſtles found : Nor is it to be underſtood as if the apoſtles took no pains at all ; but that the prophets greater pains render'd the apoſtles labours ſucceſsful, who took leſs pains. Learn hence, That the wiſdom of God ſees it fit that all his ſervants in the work of the miniſtry do not meet with the ſame difficulties, nor enjoy the ſame ſucceſs : Some are laborious ſowers, others are joyful reapers ; ſome labour all their days with little viſible ſucceſs, others bring in many to Chriſt, perhaps by a ſingle ſermon ; ſome labour even with wearineſs, and reap little, others enter into their labours, and reap much. (B.)

He abode there two days.] Tho' he forbad his apoſtles, Matt. x. 5. to enter into any city of the Samaritans, that he might make the Jews ſee they were his peculiar care at that time ; yet, to ſhew that the Goſpel was not their incloſure, he now himſelf ſtays with the Samaritans two days, preaching the Goſpel to them. (H.) He abode there ſo long, that he might not contemn perſons ſo deſirous to learn of him : And he ſtay'd no longer, that he might not neglect the Jews, or ſeem to prefer the Samaritans before them. (G. and W.)

The Chriſt, the Saviour of the world.] That is, ſaith Mr. Cl. the Saviour of the Jews ; for 'tis not likely the Samaritans thought of the ſalvation of the Gentiles. But, why might not they think ſo, who knew, that " in the ſeed of Abraham were the families of the earth to be bleſſed ?" And, ſince the Samaritans were not Jews, had they uſed theſe words in that reſtrained ſenſe, they had excluded themſelves from this ſalvation. " The world " doth ſometimes ſignify the multitude, or the publick ; as when Chriſt's brethren ſay to him, " Shew thyſelf to the world," chap. vii. 4. and the Phariſees ſay, " The world is gone after him," chap. xii. 19. but never the Jews, in oppoſition to the Gentiles. (W.)

Ver. 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54. Now after two days, he departed thence, and went into Galilee : For Jeſus himſelf teſtified, that a prophet hath no honour in his own country. Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galileans received him, having ſeen all the things that he did at Jeruſalem at the feaſt : for they alſo went unto the feaſt. So Jeſus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine. And there was a certain nobleman, whoſe ſon was ſick at Capernaum. When he heard that Jeſus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him, and beſought him that he would come down and heal his ſon : for he was at the point of death. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, Except ye ſee ſigns and wonders, ye will not believe. The nobleman ſaith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Go thy way ; thy ſon liveth. And the man believed the word that Jeſus had ſpoken unto him, and he went his way. And as he was now going down, his ſervants met him, and told him, ſaying, Thy ſon liveth. Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend : and they ſaid unto him, Yeſterday at the ſeventh hour the fever left him. So the father knew that it was at the ſame hour, in the which Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thy ſon liveth, ; and himſelf believed, and his whole houſe. This is again the ſecond miracle that Jeſus did, when he was come out of Judea into Galilee.

A prophet hath no honour.] See the notes on Matt. xiii. 57. and Luke iv. 24.

Having ſeen all the things.] To believe without miracles, is the excellency of the faith of the Samaritans : To believe on the account of miracles, is at leaſt to do more than the generality of the Jews, and to yield to the authority of God, as the Galileans did. Theſe miracles are for us, as well as for thoſe who ſaw them, ſince the Goſpel renders them preſent to us. (Q.) See the notes on chap. ii. 23.

A certain nobleman.] The Greek word baſilicos, in this place, undoubtedly ſignifies an officer of the king ; one who had ſome place at the court of Herod Antipas, who was then tetrarch of Galilee (Howel.) We do not find Chriſt often attended with nobility. " Have any of the rulers believed on him ?" chap. vii. 48. yes ; here is one. The ſoveraign grace of God is free : He has his numbers amongſt all orders, ranks, and degrees of men ; and tho' " not many noble are called," 1 Cor. i. 26. yet ſome are. (B.) See the notes on Matt. viii. 6. and Luke vii. 2.

Except ye ſee ſigns and wonders.] Ye Jews and Herodians " will not believe," on the account of the excellency and goodneſs of my doctrine, as the Samaritans did ; nor unleſs ye ſee miracles wrought before your eyes. (W.)

Sir, come down ere my child die.] As if Chriſt could not have cured him abſent ! Lord heal my ſon, had been a proper ſuit to him who was the great phyſician : But, " Come down and heal him," was to teach Chriſt how to work. He who doeth whatſoever he will, muſt do it how he will, and when he will : It is for us to crave and receive, not to preſcribe and appoint. (B.) When a centurion, whoſe ſervant lay ſick, at Capernaum too, ſolicited his help, the meſſage met with this encouraging reply, " I will come and heal him." That centurion was duly ſenſible both of our Lord's power, and of his own unworthineſs, Luke vii. 6. &c. To him therefore the kindeſt advances were made. But the nobleman here ſeems rather to look for attendance and reſpect ; and to have thought, that nothing leſs than our Lord's own preſence could do any ſervice ; nay, and that even this, if not quickly granted, would come too late. He therefore was to be treated in another way : To be taught, that the Meſſiah is no reſpecter of perſons ; that the outward ſtate and dignity is of far leſs regard with him, than the inward diſpoſition and virtue of the man : To be convinced, that God is a God afar off, as well as near at hand ; and that one ſingle word at a diſtance ſhould be as effectual to the patient, as a ſight of him, or a touch, or any corporal application whatſoever. (Stanh.)

CHAP. V.

Chriſt goeth up to the feſtival at Jeruſalem; and there, on the ſabbath, cureth the man who had been diſeaſed eight and thirty years. The Jews, enraged, perſecute him for it. He anſwereth for himſelf, and reproveth them; aſſerting his authority, by the teſtimony of his Father; of John the Baptiſt; of his own works; and of the holy ſcriptures.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AFTER this there was a feaſt of the Jews, and Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem. Now there is at Jeruſalem, by the ſheep market, a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Betheſda, having five porches. In theſe lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water. For an angel went down at a certain ſeaſon into the pool, and troubled the water: whoſoever then firſt after the troubling of the water ſtepped in, was made whole of whatſoever diſeaſe he had. And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years. When Jeſus ſaw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that caſe, he ſaith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole? The impotent man anſwer'd him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another ſteppeth down before me. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Riſe, take up thy bed, and walk. And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the ſame day was the ſabbath.

By the ſheep-market.] Probatikee. Some here underſtand agora, and ſo call it the ſheep-market. Others think pulee rather to be underſtood, and ſo call it the ſheep-gate; which latter is the more probable, becauſe we read of ſuch a gate, Neh. iii. 1. It was on the eaſt ſide of the city, near the temple; and through that gate were the ſheep brought in which were to be ſacrificed. Near unto which, and within the gate, was this pool; being the ſame with the pool of Siloam. See the notes on Luke xiii. 4.

Betheſda.] This pool had the name of probatikee in Greek, becauſe the entrails of the ſheep, and other ſacrifices, are ſaid to have been waſhed therein: And St. Jerome reports, that in his time there was yet a lake there, whoſe waters were very red, as if mixed with blood; giving teſtimony of what was done there of old. (W.) But the Hebrew name Beth-heſdah, which ſignifies "the houſe of mercy," ſeems to imply, that there was a houſe built epi te probatike colymbethra, upon or adjoining to this ſheep-pool; which ſerved as an hoſpital for the ſick and diſeaſed; and in the porches of which they "waited for the moving of the water." (H.)

For an angel went down.] Some think, the cures here ſpoken of were effected in a natural way, and that the entrails of the ſacrificed beaſts, being waſhed in this pool, an healing virtue was communicated for curing the palſy, and ſuch cold diſeaſes; as perſons that have lame and withered hands are at this day directed to put them into the belly of a beaſt newly opened. But others look upon the healing virtue of this pool to be ſupernatural and miraculous, becauſe it cured all diſeaſes, how great and deſperate ſoever, and this in a moment, or very quickly; and but one at a time; and that one, the firſt that ſtepped in only, after an angel had deſcended and troubled the waters: All which ſhew, that the healing virtue came not from the goodneſs of the waters, but that it was a ſupernatural work. Some think that the miracle of this pool was granted to the Jews, partly to ſtrengthen them in the true worſhip of God, and to confirm them in their religious courſe of ſacrificing, againſt the ſcoffs of the Romans, who were now their lords; ſuch a virtue being given to that water wherein their ſacrifices were wont to be waſhed. Learn thence, That means of God's appointment, how improbable and unlikely ſoever, muſt not be deſpiſed, but awfully admired, and thankfully uſed, altho' the way and manner of their working be not underſtood or comprehended by us. (B.) The former opinion ſeems to be favoured by Dr. Hammond, for theſe reaſons; 1. Becauſe thoſe who waited here for cure were not men of all ſorts of diſeaſes, but only the "blind, halt, withered," ver. 3. and perhaps the paralytical: and therefore he ſuppoſes, the "whatſoever diſeaſe," ver. 4. may not denote an unlimited univerſality, but reſtrained to whatſoever diſeaſes of thoſe here mentioned. 2. Becauſe a medicinal force and virtue may well be ſuppoſed to have naturally come to theſe waters, by the waſhing of the entrails of ſo many thouſand ſacrifices, as were kill'd at the feaſt of the paſſover; 255600 having been teſtified at one paſſover, in Nero's time. 3. Becauſe theſe waters had no medicinal power, but when they were warm with the freſh waſhings, and immediately after they were moved or ſtirred up, he ſuppoſes ſome officer appointed to "go down, at a certain ſeaſon, into the pool," to ſtir it about; that ſo the groſſer parts, and congelations of blood, which went to the bottom, might be made to infuſe themſelves more ſtrongly into the water: Which officer, being ſo ſent, might therefore properly be called angelos, meaning a meſſenger, and not an angel of the Lord. But Dr. Whitby obſerves, that all the circumſtances of this hiſtory ſhew, that this conjecture, tho' it ſeems to be ſupported by the authority of St. Chryſoſtom and Theophylact, is highly improbable. For, 1. How unlikely is it, that this ſhould be a natural means of curing all ſorts of diſeaſes without exception, the blind, the halt, and the withered. And, 2. That it ſhould only cure the perſon that "firſt ſtepped in," tho' he might be follow'd by others the ſame inſtant? For how ſhould the natural virtue of this pool, impregnated with the warm entrails of ſo many ſacrifices, extend itſelf only to one man? And, 3. How unlikely is it, that it ſhould do this only at one time of the year, viz. at the paſſover? For this was done, not at ſeveral times, but only "at a certain time," ver. 4. And, 4. The very foundation of this conjecture is taken away, by that obſervation of Dr. Lightfoot, that there was a laver in the temple, for the waſhing of thoſe entrails; and ſo they were not likely to be waſhed in this pool. It is farther to be noted, that theſe waters of Siloam were a type of the kingdom of David, and of Chriſt. 1. Of the kingdom of David, according to Iſa. viii. 6. "This people refuſeth the waters of Siloah that go ſoftly;" that is, ſaith the Targum, the kingdom of David, that rules them quietly. And, 2. Of Chriſt, according to thoſe words of the ſame prophet, chap. xii. 3. "With joy ſhall ye draw water out of the wells of ſalvation;" whence Siloah is interpreted ſent. To this type of the Meſſiah God might therefore give this virtue about that time, to prepare the Jews to receive his advent who was ſent to them; and, when "a fountain was to be opened for ſin and for uncleanneſs," Zach. xiii. 1 (viz. that of the blood of Chriſt) might communicate this virtue to this pool, as a prefiguration of it: Whence, as Tertullian (adv. Jud. c. 13.) notes, The virtue of this pool then ceaſed, when they, perſevering in their infidelity, rejected our Saviour. And this might be one reaſon, why the Jewiſh writers are ſo ſilent as to the virtue of this pool; becauſe, by its ſignification, it related to Chriſt, and by this miracle confirmed his doctrine.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. The Jews therefore ſaid unto him that was cured, It is the ſabbath-day; it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed. He anſwered them, He that made me whole, the ſame ſaid unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk. Then asked they him, What man is that which ſaid unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk? And he that was healed wiſt not who it was: for Jeſus had conveyed himſelf away, a multitude being in that place. Afterward Jeſus findeth him in the temple, and ſaid unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: ſin no more, leſt a worſt thing come unto thee. The man departed, and told the Jews, that it was Jeſus which had made him whole. And therefore did the Jews perſecute Jeſus, and ſought to ſlay him, becauſe he had done theſe things on the ſabbath-day.

The ſame ſaid unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.] The time when Chriſt wrought this miracle was on the ſabbath-day: And, as an evidence of the certainty of the cure, Chriſt bids him, "Take up his bed, and walk." Our Saviour's miracles were real and beneficial: They were obvious to ſenſe, and would bear the examination of all perſons: And his working this, and many more on the ſabbath-day, was for the teſtification of the miracles to all that would take notice of them. Obſerve here, How unjuſtly the Jews tax the cripple that was healed, with the breach of the ſabbath, for taking up his bed, and walking on the ſabbath-day; whereas the law only forbids carrying burdens on the ſabbath-day, for profit, in way of trade: But this man carrying his bed, was a teſtimony of God's goodneſs and mercy towards him, and his gratitude and thankfulneſs towards God. Hypocritical and ſuperſtitious perſons oft-times pretend much zeal for obſerving the letter of the law, little reſpecting the moral ſenſe and ſignification of it.

Beſides, our Saviour has a mind to let the Jews know, that he was Lord of the ſabbath; that he had a power over it, and could diſpenſe with it as he thought good. (B.) See the note on Mark ii. 24.

What man is that?] They do not aſk him, Who was it that made him whole; but who bade him take up his bed and walk? They ſeek not an occaſion to admire him, but to calumniate and accuſe him. (G.)

Conveyed himſelf away.] Here we may obſerve the great modeſty and humility of our bleſſed Saviour, and how hateful all oſtentation and vain-glory was unto him: For, having wrought this famous miracle before the people, at a publick time, to ſhun all applauſe from the multitude, he conveys himſelf privately away from them. (Idem and B.)

In the temple.] There to offer up his thanks to God, for his being healed. (G. and B.)

Sin no more.] The main deſign of this caution is to convince us, that thoſe evils and calamities which we ſuffer, are, ſome way or other, occaſioned by our ſin. And indeed, if we impartially ſurvey thoſe numerous calamities, which oppreſs the world, we ſhall find them generally reducible to one of theſe three heads: Either, 1. They are the natural effects of ſin: Or, 2. The juſt retribution of it: Or, 3. The neceſſary antidotes againſt it. (Scott.) Let us learn from theſe words, 1. That diſeaſes and afflictions are puniſhments of ſin; and conſequently, that the beſt remedy we can apply to them is repentance and converſion. 2. That theſe puniſhments ought to ſerve as inſtructions; and that, after the cure either of our bodies or our ſouls, we are obliged to manifeſt a very great humility, and a profound gratitude towards God. 3. That relapſes are more dangerous, and more ſeverely puniſhed. 4. That one of the chief cares of a ſpiritual guide or director, who has laboured in the converſion of a ſoul, and been bleſſed with ſucceſs, is, to remind it, from time to time, of the great favour it has received, of the ſad condition out of which it has been recover'd, and to ſecure it againſt relapſes. 5. That a ſpiritual director ought not to loſe ſight of a ſoul which he has converted; but that he ought even to ſeek it out, to improve the beginnings of its new life. And, 6. That it is "in the temple," and at the foot of the altar, that a penitent ſoul ought to be found, in prayer, in performing the duties of religion, in the preſence of God, and in recollection. It is there that it will find Jeſus Chriſt, and receive new graces and inſtructions. (Q.)

Told the Jews, that it was Jeſus.] Not to accuſe him to them, nor with any evil deſign to inform againſt him, and ſtir up the Jews to perſecute him; but, partly out of gratitude, to own the author of his cure, and publiſh it to his honour; partly to direct others to apply to him, and partly to excuſe himſelf, as only doing this at the command of ſo great a prophet. (G. W. and B.)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. But Jeſus anſwered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. Therefore the Jews ſought the more to kill him, becauſe he not only had broken the ſabbath, but ſaid alſo, that God was his father, making himſelf equal with God. Then anſwer'd Jeſus, and ſaid unto them, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, The Son can do nothing of himſelf, but what he ſeeth the Father do: for what things ſoever he doth, theſe alſo doth the Son likewiſe. For the Father loveth the Son, and ſheweth him all things that himſelf doth: and he will ſhew him greater works than theſe, that ye may marvel. For as the Father raiſeth up the dead, and quickneth them; even ſo the Son quickneth whom he will. For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: That all men ſhould honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath ſent him. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come into condemnation; but is paſſed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear, ſhall live. For as the Father hath life in himſelf; ſo hath he given to the Son to have life in himſelf; And hath given him authority to execute judgment alſo, becauſe he is the Son of man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice. And ſhall come forth, they that have done good, unto the reſurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the reſurrection of damnation. I can of mine own ſelf do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is juſt; becauſe I ſeek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath ſent me. If I bear witneſs of myſelf, my witneſs is not true.

My Father worketh.] Here our Saviour begins his apology or juſtification of himſelf. And his firſt argument is drawn from his unity and equality in operation with the Father. Here he ſpeaks of himſelf, not as a ſervant or inſtrument, but as the fellow-worker with the Father, both in the works of creation, and in the works of providence and preſervation alſo. (B.) God, "my Father," ſays he, from whoſe reſt ye take the celebration of the ſabbath, did not ſo reſt from all work on the ſabbath-day, but that, ever ſince, he hath done works of providence, and of preſervation, and mercy, every day: And why may not I, his Son, do ſo without exception; my Father's actions and mine being the ſame? (H. and W.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 10. Luke vi. 7. and xiii. 15.

That God was his Father.] Here note, 1. That he is here ſaid to ſtile "God his Father," after a manner proper and peculiar to himſelf, as being "his own ſon," Rom. viii. 32. not as Adam and the angels were, by creation, nor as good men are, by adoption only; in which ſenſe the Jews pretended to have God for their father, chap. viii. 41. and both Philo and the Jewiſh writers ſpeak of him as the father of Iſrael, and of thoſe who had a true knowledge of him: For, in this ſenſe, to call himſelf the Son of God, could neither be worthy of death, nor worſe than the violation of the ſabbath. 'Tis therefore evident, the Jews thought Chriſt, by "ſaying God was his Father," made himſelf his Son, in ſuch a manner, as render'd him "equal with God," in nature, as a ſon is to his father; and yet they thought he did this, not as the Socinians ſay, by ſaying he did the works of his Father; but, as their words teſtify, by calling God his Father, in a ſenſe peculiar to himſelf: and hence they accuſe him of blaſphemy, for ſaying that he was the Son of God, Matt xxvi. 65. John x. 33. which they never do, for ſaying he was the Meſſiah, or that he did the works of God. 2. That the Jews did not then think, that their Meſſiah was to be God; or, in the ſublime ſenſe, "the Son of God." Hence Origen declares, that having diſcourſed with many wiſe men of the Jews, he could find none of them who allowed, that he was God, or the Son of God. And Jerom on thoſe words, Jer. xvii. 5. "Curſed be he who putteth his truſt in "man," ſaith, the Jews are accurſed, who truſt in a Man, viz. in their Meſſiah, whom they expect to come as a mere man, and not as the Son of God. (W.)

The Son can do nothing of himſelf.] The Jews concluding Chriſt to be a falſe prophet, becauſe he, in this peculiar manner, ſtiled "God his Father," Chriſt here undertakes to ſhew, 1. That he exerciſed his prophetick office according to the will of the Father: 2. That he confirmed it by miracles, done by the power of God reſiding in him. Chriſt therefore here ſeems not to ſpeak of his eſſential power, but of his prophetick office, and of the doctrine which he taught, and confirmed by miracles. 1. Becauſe, as to his eſſential power, the action of the Father and the Son being one and the ſame, both as to power and time, he cannot properly be ſaid to "do nothing of himſelf," or to "do nothing but what he ſees the Father do." 2. Becauſe, as to "ſpeak nothing of himſelf," is to ſpeak nothing of his own inſtinct and will, without commiſſion from God; ſo "to do nothing of himſelf," is to do nothing without commiſſion from, and knowledge of the will of God that he ſhould do it: and ſo reſpecteth his prophetick office, and the things done in confirmation of it. And then the words following, "unleſs he ſee the Father doing" them, muſt bear this ſenſe, Unleſs he, by the Spirit of the Father reſiding in him, ſee that the Father would have them done by him; for what the Father poiee, would have done, he doeth according to his will, or as he would have them to be done. And this import of the words ſeems to be confirmed, 1. From the following words, "for the Father loveth the Son, and ſheweth him all things which he (the Son) doeth; and he will ſhew him greater works than theſe;" which are to be done by him, even that of raiſing the dead, ver. 21. For, becauſe we receive all our knowledge from our eyes or ears, therefore Chriſt, ſpeaking of the execution of his prophetick office, uſeth theſe metaphors, declaring, that he "ſpake and teſtified what he had ſeen," chap. iii. 11. "what he had ſeen with the Father," chap. viii. 38. And again, that he "ſpake what he had heard from the Father," chap. viii. 26, 40. xv. 15. And becauſe they who teach or declare things, do by that ſhew them to us; therefore Chriſt uſes this metaphor here, and chap. viii. 28. and again, chap. xii 49, 50. Now, that he ſpake this with reſpect to the ſpirit of prophecy, with which he was anointed, and by the Father ſent "to preach the Goſpel to the poor," &c. Luke iv. 18.

the Baptiſt teacheth in chap. iii. 33, 34. And he himſelf intimates, chap. xiv. 10. 2. That he ſaid truly, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," he proves, from the divine works God the Father had given him power to do; tho' he was to do them after his reſurrection and advancement to his kingdom, viz. the reſurrection of the dead, and the future judgment. (Idem.) The Arians of old, and the Socinians at this day, are wide, when they produce this text, to prove that Chriſt is not equal with God the Father. They forget, or neglect, to diſtinguiſh betwixt his divine nature, which could do all things, and his mediatorial office, which could not do, but what the Father that ſent him had appointed him to do. (B.)

The Father loveth the Son.] See the notes on chap. iii. 35.

Even ſo the Son quickneth whom he will.] This is more than ever was ſaid of any prophet or apoſtle, that he did ſuch works at his will; and here chiefly reſpects Chriſt, not acting as a prophet, but as a king ſitting at the right-hand of power: and this being an action repreſented as proper to God, who ſaith, "I am, and there is none beſides me; I kill, and make alive," Deut. xxxii. 39. 1 Sam. ii. 6. a work to be performed by his ſole power, Matt. xxii. 29. Acts xxvi. 8. and by "the ſtrength of his power," Eph. i. 19. who is a "God quickning the dead," Rom. iv. 17. Hence it is evident, That Chriſt, who will not only "raiſe our mortal bodies," but alſo make them "like unto his glorious body," by that power "whereby he is able even to ſubdue all things unto himſelf," Phil. iii. 21. muſt be God; and that the Father, by giving him to "have life in himſelf, as he hath it in himſelf," ver. 26. muſt have given him the fulneſs of the deity, from which this power is inſeparable. (W. and B.) See the notes on Luke vii. 14, 15.

Hath committed all judgment unto the Son.] Seeing this judgment is committed to him, 'tis evident, ſaith Woltzogenius, that he cannot be God the higheſt; becauſe He reigns and judges by his own power, derived from none: And yet, he owns, that in this judgment is comprehended an entire government, and divine empire over the whole world, and eſpecially over the whole church of God; from whence it is demonſtrable, that he muſt be God. For this government muſt be attended with a power of raiſing all them from the dead, whom he ſhall place before his judgment-ſeat, and with the perfect knowledge, not only of the actions of all men from the beginning of the world, but alſo of their ſecret thoughts; ſince otherwiſe he cannot bring every ſecret thought and work into judgment, nor "bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, or manifeſt the ſecret counſels of the heart," 1 Cor. iv. 5. or judge every man according to his works, 2 Cor. v. 10. He alſo muſt be omnipreſent and omniſcient, even the ſearcher of all hearts; that he may know, and anſwer the prayers of all his ſervants in all corners of the earth, as the Socinians grant he doth: and almighty, that he may be able to ſupply all their wants; aſſiſt and enable them to do every-where the greateſt miracles in his name; defend and preſerve them againſt all the powers on earth, and even "the gates of hell;" raiſe and condemn their enemies, with the devil and his angels, to eternal deſtruction from his preſence; and alſo crown his ſervants with everlaſting glory. Now, how all theſe things can be done by a mere creature, is as difficult to conceive, as any myſtery of the bleſſed Trinity. I anſwer therefore, in that diſtinction of the ſchools, that the principium quod, or the perſon thus judging, "is the Son of man," ver. 27. this judgment being to be exerciſed by the man Chriſt Jeſus, Acts xvii. 31. But the principium quo, that is, the power, or principle, by which he does it, is the whole fulneſs of the deity, individually united to his human nature, or, "the word made fleſh," Chap. i. 14. This therefore hinders not, but he, to whom this judgment is thus given, may be "God of God." (W.)

All men ſhould honour the ſon, even as they honour the father.] That is, ſaith Woltzogenius, That they, owning this dignity and power, by which he is equal to God, may give him that obedience, honour, and worſhip, which is due to a divine and heavenly king; for that the honour and worſhip due to Chriſt is divine honour, is evident from this, That it is ſuch as is due to the father; to whom, by the conſent of all men, belongs divine worſhip. And hence he proves, that Chriſt is to be worſhipped with invocation, becauſe he who refuſes to pray to him, doth not honour him as he honours the Father: In this, ſaith he, conſiſts the higheſt honour we give to the Father, that we own him for the chief monarch, and Lord of all things, in whoſe power is our ſalvation and deſtruction; and therefore, by prayer, endeavour to obtain from him the enjoyment of good things, and deliverance from evil. He that owns theſe things to belong to Chriſt, and doth thus worſhip him, he honoureth the Son as he doth the Father. So he: But now, can he be equal to God, who is only a Creature; or be worthy of divine worſhip, who is no God? The precept being plain, and own'd by Chriſt himſelf, "The Lord our God is one Lord; Deut. vi. 4. And therefore, "Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve," Matt. iv. 10. Can he, who ſaid, "Thou ſhalt worſhip no other God" but me, Exod. xxxiv. 14. and "My glory will I not give to another," Iſa. xlii. 8. himſelf appoint, that any creature ſhould be worſhipped as God, or have that honour, worſhip, and obedience, in which his glory doth conſiſt? It is therefore no unjuſt imputation, to call them idolaters, who give this worſhip to one, who, they ſay, is by nature only man; ſeeing they do the very thing charged on the heathen idolaters; that is, they worſhip "them which by nature are no gods," Gal. iv. 8. and do that to a creature, which God requires to be done to himſelf; viz. that they ſhould, "glorify him as God," Rom. i. 21. and do that with which God upbraided his own people, viz. the worſhipping a "new God, whom their fathers knew not," Deut. xxxii. 17. If you ſay here, They give him the ſame worſhip, but not as the firſt, but only as the intermediate cauſe of our ſalvation; it may be eaſily replied, That then they cannot "honour him as they honour the father;" and, much leſs, as the chief monarch and Lord of all things. Moreover, I inquire, whether this middle cauſe be created or uncreated? If uncreated, he is by nature God; and, ſince there is but one God, of the ſame eſſence with the father: But if created, they muſt be guilty of idolatry, who give him the ſame worſhip with the father, and therefore give the creature the ſame worſhip with the Creator. (Idem.)

He that heareth my word, and believeth.] Obſerve here the chief points neceſſary to ſalvation; 1 To hear the word of the Goſpel. 2. To believe, and truſt in God. 3. To believe the doctrine of the Trinity; a God who ſends, a God who is ſent, and a God who is the ſpirit and love of both; one only God in three perſons. 4. To believe the incarnation of the Son ſent by the father. 5. To believe the fall of Adam; his condemnation to the death of body and ſoul; and original ſin, which renders his fall and condemnation common to all his poſterity. 6. To believe the neceſſity of a redeemer, in order to our "paſſing from death unto life." 7. To hope for "everlaſting life." And, 8. To believe the reſurrection of the body, and the immortality of the ſoul (Q.)

The dead ſhall hear the voice.] That Chriſt here ſpeaks not only of a ſpiritual reſurrection from the death of ſin, is evident, 1. Becauſe he ſpeaks of it as a thing ſhortly future; whereas the ſpiritual reſurrection was in ſome already paſt. 2. Becauſe he promiſes this reſurrection not to them that ſhould hear his word, but phoneen, his voice: And that he ſpeaks of a proper reſurrection, appears, 1. From the gradation he here makes from the reſurrection of ſome, to the reſurrection of all, ver. 28. 2. Becauſe he adds, That "they who hear, ſhall live;" and that becauſe the Son, whoſe voice they hear, hath life in himſelf," ver. 26. I therefore think, that our Lord ſpeaks of that hour, when, he riſing from the dead, "many bodies of the ſaints aroſe with him," Matt. xxvii. 52, 53. (W.)

Becauſe he is the Son of man] That is, the Meſſias, to whom all power and dominion is given, Dan. vii. 14. and of whom the Jews ſaid, that he ſhould raiſe the dead, R. Eliezer, c. xxxiv. p. 38. or becauſe he took the human nature upon him, he ſuffer'd in it, and by that paſſion "became the author of eternal ſalvation unto all them that obey him." Hebr. v. 9. and laſtly, in that nature only could be a viſible judge. (Idem.) The authority of Jeſus Chriſt, as head of the Church, and envoy of his father, is compriſed in theſe two qualities of Saviour and judge. As Saviour, he delivers from death and beſtows life; and he beſtows it, as being eſſential life, and the fountain of all life, in quality of Son of God: As judge, he puniſhes and condemns to death; and will alone exerciſe this power of judging the world in a plain and ſenſible manner; becauſe he alone render'd himſelf inviſible by the incarnation, and he alone is Son of God and Son of man together. (Q.)

The reſurrection of damnation] This ſeems to be ſpoken in oppoſition to the doctrine of the Phariſees, who (as Joſephus writeth) thought the reſurrection pertained only to the juſt, and that the wicked, and the antediluvian ſinners were to be excluded from it. A late author hath endeavour'd to avoid the clear evidence of this text. Tho' he is obliged, from the force of theſe words, "All that are in the graves ſhall come forth," to own, that all mankind ſhall ariſe: Yet he will not own, that this diſtribution of them, into thoſe "that have done good, and thoſe that have done evil," contains all, but only ſome of them; viz. ſuch as have had the Goſpel made known to them. But what inſtance can be given, through the ſcriptures, of an univerſal propoſition, diſtributed into two parts, in which the oppoſite members do not contain the whole general? The abſurdity of this may be demonſtrated in ſome ſcripture inſtances. Matt. xxv. 31, 32, 33. "The Son of man ſhall ſit upon the throne of his glory, and all nations ſhall be gathered before him; and he ſhall ſet the ſheep on his right hand, and the goats on his left." Now, muſt not the ſheep and the goats be equal to all nations? So again, Rom. ii. 6. &c. the apoſtle ſaith, "God will render to every man according to his deeds: To them, who, by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life; but unto them that are contentious and do not obey the truth, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh." Now, doth not this diſtribution into the obedient and diſobedient contain all that are comprehended in the general words, Every man? And doth not the apoſtle himſelf interpret the words ſo? ver. 9, 10. (W.)

As I hear, I judge.] That is, I pronounce ſentence, according to the will of my father. For krima and kriſis, is a ſentence. See the notes on Luke xxiv. 20.

If I bear witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true.] That is, as moſt interpreters ſay, If I only do it, it is not valid; the law requiring two or three witneſſes: For if there were not two at leaſt, tho' what a man depoſed might be true in fact; yet it was not allow'd to be true in law: And by this diſtinction interpreters reconcile what our Lord here ſays, with what we read, chap. viii. 14. But a more likely ſenſe of theſe words ſeems to be this; "If I bear witneſs of my ſelf," affirming myſelf to be a prophet, and ſent by God, without doing thoſe works which are ſufficient to juſtify ſuch pretenſions, "my witneſs would not be true;" and ye would have reaſon to think me a bold and confident pretender, and a falſe prophet: Becauſe God never ſends prophets to men, without giving them ſufficient credentials, to induce men to believe that they come from him. See chap. x. 25, 37, 38. (W. and F.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35. There is another that beareth witneſs of me, and I know that the witneſs which he witneſſeth of me is true Ye ſent unto John, and he bare witneſs unto the truth. But I receive not teſtimony from man: but theſe things I ſay, that ye might be ſaved. He was a burning and a ſhining light: and ye were willing for a ſeaſon to rejoyce in his light.

Another that beareth witneſs.] That is, John the baptiſt, whom they themſelves "counted as a prophet," Matt. xiv. 5. and xxi. 26. and on that account received his baptiſm. Now, according to their own rules, he is to be received as a prophet, to whom a prophet gives his teſtimony. (W.)

Ye ſent unto John.] There are ſeveral circumſtances in St. John, which render his teſtimony unexceptionable. 1. He was conſulted, by the very enemies of Chriſt, as a holy and extraordinary perſon. 2. He was perfectly free from all ſelf-intereſt, having declined making the leaſt advantage by his own reputation. 3. He was ſincere, undaunted, and ſo averſe to all kind of flattery, that he reproved Herod at the hazard of his liberty and life. And 4. He was ſo far from having been ſolicited or courted by Chriſt, that he had not yet ſo much as ſeen him. (Q.) See the notes on chap. i. 15, &c. and iii. 29.

I receive not teſtimony.] Our Lord does not here ſay, that ſuch men as John the Baptiſt, and his apoſtles, might not be witneſſes to men, of his being the Meſſiah; for they were choſen witneſſes, and abundantly qualified to give teſtimony of him to the world: But he did not appeal to his teſtimony, on his own account, or for his own ſake; but for theirs, that they believing the teſtimony of ſuch a competent and ſufficient witneſs, might be ſaved. (F.) Hence it is evident, that Chriſt ſeriouſly willed, and intended, the ſalvation of them who yet "would not come to him, that they might have life," ver 40. and therefore were not actually ſaved. (W.)

A burning and a ſhining light.] "His word burned as a lamp," ſaith the Son of Sirac, Ecclus, xlviii. 1. And yet "in this light they rejoiced but for a ſeaſon:" For, when he had freely given teſtimony to Chriſt, and reproved their vices, they blaſphemed him, and ſaid, "he had a devil," Luke vii. 33. (H. W. and B.) See the notes on chap. i. 8.

Ver. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47. But I have greater witneſs than that of John: for the works which the father hath given me to finiſh, the ſame works that I do, bear witneſs of me, that the father hath ſent me. And the father himſelf which hath ſent me, hath born witneſs of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor ſeen his ſhape. And ye have not his word abiding in you: for whom he hath ſent, him ye believe not. Search the ſcriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which teſtify of me. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life. I receive not honour from men. But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you. I am come in my father's name, and ye receive me not: if another ſhall come in his own name, him ye will receive. How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and ſeek not the honour that cometh from God only? Do not think that I will accuſe you to the father: there is one that accuſeth you, even Moſes, in whom ye truſt. For had ye believed Moſes, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how ſhall ye believe my words?

I have greater witneſs.] Chriſt's miracles were ſpeaking teſtimonies of his unity with the father, and of the divinity of his perſon. Not ſo as the miracles of his apoſtles: For he wrought his miracles in his own name, and by his own power and authority; but the apoſtles expreſly declare the contrary, Acts iii. 12. 16 And this was a much greater demonſtration of his being ſent by God, than the teſtimony of John the Baptiſt, or any other of the beſt of men. (H. and B.)

The father himſelf.] See the notes on Matt. iii. 17. and xvii. 5.

Search the ſcriptures.] Ereunate, the greek word here uſed, is metaphorical, taken from ſuch as uſe to ſearch in mines for ſilver and gold: They will dig deep; they will break the ſeveral clods of earth all to pieces to find out the golden ore: And thus muſt we deal with the ſcripture; ſearch, as we would for gold, or ſome precious thing which we would fain find, Prov. ii. 4. ſearch; that is, ſhake and ſift them, as the word ſignifies, ſearch narrowly, till the true force and meaning of every ſentence, yea, of every word and ſyllable, nay, of every letter and jod therein, be known and underſtood: compare place with place, the ſcope of one place with another, things going before with things coming after; yea, compare word with word, letter with letter, and ſearch it thoroughly. (Whitaker and Perkins.) This phraſe intimates, 1. That there is an ineſtimable treaſure lying hid in the holy ſcriptures, which we ſhall never fathom by a ſlight ſuperficial ſearch. 2. That this inexhauſtible treaſure may be found out by the painful ſearcher; and it is the duty of all the members of the viſible church to read and ſearch the ſcriptures, which point the way to eternal life. (B.) "Search the ſcriptures;" Look into and examine the writings of the Old Teſtament, whereon ye depend, and believe, that through performance of the Moſaical precepts ye ſhall have eternal life: And on examination ye ſhall find, that all thoſe prophecies are types, and fulfilled in me; and that all the promiſes of life there made, have an aſpect on me, the giver of life. (H.) See the notes on Luke xvi. 29. and xxiv. 27, 44, &c.

Ye will not come to me.] Notwithſtanding ſo many clear teſtimonies that I am the Meſſias, ye will not believe in me; which ſhews, your infidelity is the reſult, not of ſimple ignorance, but of wilfulneſs and obſtinacy. (H. W. and B.) See the notes on chap. i. 11. iii. 19. and vi. 44.

If ye believe not his writings.] Their pretences for not believing in Chriſt were theſe two; Their love to God, and reverence for the law of Moſes: But Chriſt here proves, That they could have no true love of God, ver. 42. nor faith in Moſes, ver. 46. for this very reaſon, that they believed not in him. (W.) See the notes on Luke xvi. 31.

CHAP. VI.

Chriſt feedeth five thouſand men with five loaves and two fiſhes: Upon which the people would have made him king; but he withdrew himſelf. He walketh upon the ſea to his diſciples: Reproveth all the carnal hearers, who followed him only for the loaves and fiſhes: Declareth himſelf to be the bread of life to believers. Whereupon many of his followers deſert him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. AFTER theſe things Jeſus went over the ſea of Galilee, which is the ſea of Tiberias. And a great multitude followed him, becauſe they ſaw his miracles which he did on them that were diſeaſed. And Jeſus went up into a mountain, and there he ſat with his diſciples. And the paſſover, a feaſt of the Jews, was nigh. When Jeſus then lift up his eyes, and ſaw a great company come unto him, he ſaith unto Philip, Whence ſhall we buy bread that theſe may eat? (And this he ſaid to prove him: for he himſelf knew what he would do.) Philip anſwered him, Two hundred penny-worth of bread is not ſufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little. One of his diſciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, ſaith unto him, There is a lad here, which hath five barley-loaves, and two ſmall fiſhes; but what are they among ſo many?

And Jeſus ſaid, Make the men ſit down. Now there was much graſs in the place. So the men ſat down, in number about five thouſand. And Jeſus took the loaves, and when he had given thanks, he diſtributed to the diſciples, and the diſciples to them that were ſet down; and likewiſe of the fiſhes as much as they would. When they were filled, he ſaid unto his diſciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be loſt. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten. Then thoſe men, when they had ſeen the miracle that Jeſus did, ſaid, This is of a truth that prophet that ſhould come into the world. When Jeſus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himſelf alone.

After theſe things.] That is, the year following. For he healed the man at the pool of Betheſda, as is related in the former chapter, at the paſſover, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, and fed the five thouſand here, ver. 4. at the paſſover following. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xiv. 13.

The ſea.] He went in a boat with his diſciples, over that part of the lake of Geneſareth in Galilee, which waſheth the city Tiberias. (Beza, H. and Claget.) Our verſions do expreſs too generally, by the name of ſea, all the waters which are gathered together into one place, tho' oftentimes they are nothing more than ponds or lakes. See the notes on Matt. iv. 18.

When he had given thanks.] In St. Mark vi. 41. it is ſaid, "He looked up to heaven, and bleſſed, and brake the loaves," &c. where, by bleſſing, ſome interpreters underſtand the multiplying virtue which he then commanded down upon the ſuſtenance they were about to take; and that marvellous increaſe in the hands of the diſtributers, whereby it became a repaſt ſufficient for ſo vaſt a multitude: Others, that he thus gave thanks to his Father for, and begg'd his bleſſing upon it, for the wholeſome nouriſhment of thoſe bodies which were to be fed with it: And theſe notions ſeem abſolutely neceſſary to that paſſage of St. Mark; who, after the mention of his giving thanks, adds, that "he bleſſed a few ſmall fiſhes, and commanded to ſet them alſo before" the people. It is enough to warrant the indifferent uſe of theſe two words, that the forms of addreſs to Almighty God, upon the uſe of his gifts for our refreſhment, have uſually been mixed; and conſiſt partly of praiſes, and partly of petitions. Accordingly, we expreſly call this action, "giving thanks, ſaying grace, bleſſing the table, craving a bleſſing," and the like: Becauſe the end of ſuch devotions is manifeſtly two-fold. They are deſigned to render our acknowledgments to God for his liberality; and alſo to beg, that it may be ſanctified to us, by tending to promote all thoſe good purpoſes, which ſuch bounty is intended to ſerve and advance. The whole indeed of this ſervice ſeems to have been exactly deſcribed by St. Paul, when, condemning the erroneous ſuperſtition of ſome, who preached up the diſtinction of meats, he declares the lawfulneſs of all; and that the danger lay not ſo much in the kinds eaten, as in the manner of eating, 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5. Hence it ſeems evident, that a ſecret ſenſe of God's goodneſs, upon ſuch occaſions, is by no means enough; but that it is expected, men ſhould make ſolemn and outward expreſſions of it, when they receive his creatures for their ſupport. This is a ſervice and homage not only due to him, but profitable to themſelves: The creatures are his, and therefore to be "received with thankſgiving." But the ſanctifying thoſe creatures to man's uſe, and rendering that which is good in its own nature, ſerviceable and advantageous to the party receiving it, this depends upon the Word, or the particular bleſſing of the Creator; and therefore it is our part to draw down that Word by prayer. This is to eat and drink like men and Chriſtians, when we perform an act of worſhip, which appears to have had a place even in natural religion, and the practice of heathens themſelves. (Stanh.) See the notes on Matt. xiv. 19.

They filled twelve baskets.] See the notes on Mark vi, 43.

The miracle that Jeſus did.] Semeion properly ſignifies a ſign or token, tho' we tranſlate it a miracle; and miracles are the proper ſigns or tokens whereby a prophet is to be known. See the notes on chap vii. 31.

This is of a truth that prophet that ſhould come.] That is, the Meſſias, commonly called Ho erchomenos, he that cometh; alluding to the ſeveral prophecies concerning him. See the notes on Matt. xi. 3. The Jews look'd for a prophet to come about that time; and that he ſhould make himſelf known to them by miracles: They had heard a great fame of Chriſt; and now they ſaw him do a great miracle: Therefore they believed, that he muſt be "that prophet." And, having entertained a falſe notion, that the Meſſiah was to be a temporal prince, they were now minded (as by the divine Spirit he knew) to Take him by force, to make him a king.] Had this been the end of Chriſt's coming, he needed not any election, or other act of the people, "to make him a king." For he had a much better title inherent in him, being ho techtheis baſileus, born king of the Jews; Matt. ii. 2. that is, the natural-born heir to the crown, according to hereditary right. But, as he diſclaimed all earthly dominion, and declared, that "his kingdom was not of this world," John xviii. 36. ſo he diſdained all popular elections and promotions; and therefore withdrew himſelf from them, and "departed again into a mountain himſelf alone;" having firſt ſent away his own diſciples, to whom he knew ſuch a motion would not be unacceptable.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And when even was now come, his diſciples went down unto the ſea, And enter'd into a ſhip, and went over the ſea towards Capernaum: and it was now dark, and Jeſus was not come to them. And the ſea aroſe, by reaſon of a great wind that blew. So when they had rowed about five and twenty, or thirty furlongs, they ſaw Jeſus walking on the ſea, and drawing nigh unto the ſhip: and they were afraid. But he ſaith unto them, It is I, be not afraid. Then they willingly received him into the ſhip, and immediately the ſhip was at the land whither they went.

Even was now come.] See the notes on Matt. xiv 23.

About five and twenty, or thirty furlongs.] In matters of ſo ſmall importance, the Spirit of God did not think it neceſſary to ſuggeſt the exact meaſure. (W.) But this ſhews, what a ſmall progreſs they had made in their paſſage, from the evening, when they imbarked, till "the fourth watch of the night," when Jeſus came up to them, Matt. xiv. 25. and Mark vi. 48 whereas the whole courſe of a night and a day in navigation is computed at a thouſand furlongs. (G.) See the notes on Matt. xiv. 25.

They were afraid.] "Suppoſing it had been a Spirit," Mark vi. 49. (where ſee the note.) But Chriſt may be coming to ſave his people, and they not able at preſent to diſcern and apprehend him; their fears may be higheſt, when their deliverer and deliverance is neareſt. (B.)

Immediately the ſhip was at the land.] Tho' they had made ſo little progreſs before, yet now the ſhip came preſently to the place whither it was bound. (Claget.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51. The day following, when the people, which ſtood on the other ſide of the ſea, ſaw that there was none other boat there, ſave that one whereinto his diſciples were enter'd, and that Jeſus went not with his diſciples into the boat, but that his diſciples were gone away alone: (Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias, nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks) When the people therefore ſaw that Jeſus was not there, neither his diſciples, they alſo took ſhipping, and came to Capernaum, ſeeking for Jeſus. And when they had found him on the other ſide of the ſea, they ſaid unto him, Rabbi, when cameſt thou hither? Jeſus anſwered them and ſaid, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Ye ſeek me, not becauſe ye ſaw the miracles, but becauſe ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled. Labour not for the meat which periſheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlaſting life, which the Son of man ſhall give unto you: for him hath God the Father ſealed. Then ſaid they unto him, What ſhall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent. They ſaid therefore unto him, What ſign ſheweſt thou then, that we may ſee and believe thee? What doſt thou work? Our fathers did eat manna in the deſert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Moſes gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. Then ſaid they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me, ſhall never hunger: and he that believeth on me, ſhall never thirſt. But I ſaid unto you, that ye alſo have ſeen me, and believe not. All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to me; and him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out. For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that ſent me. And this is the Father's will which hath ſent me, that of all which he hath given me I ſhould loſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it up again at the laſt day. And this is the will of him that ſent me, that every one which ſeeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlaſting life: and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day. The Jews then murmur'd at him, becauſe he ſaid, I am the bread which came down from heaven. And they ſaid, Is not this Jeſus the ſon of Joſeph, whoſe father and mother we know? how is it then that he ſaith, I came down from heaven? Jeſus therefore anſwered and ſaid unto them, Murmur not among yourſelves. No man can come to me, except the Father, which hath ſent me, draw him: and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day. It is written in the prophets, And they ſhall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learn'd of the Father, cometh unto me. Not that any man hath ſeen the Father, ſave he which is of God, he hath ſeen the Father. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlaſting life. I am that bread of life. Your fathers did eat Manna in the wilderneſs, and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. I am the living bread, which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he ſhall live for ever: and the bread that I will give, is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world.

Rabbi, when cameſt thou?] It was uſual with Chriſt to give no anſwer to queſtions not tending to edification, but to divert from them to more profitable ſubjects; as is noted on Luke xiii. 23. (W.)

Labour not.] This prohibition muſt not be underſtood abſolutely, but comparatively: Not as if Chriſt intended to take them off from their lawful labours and callings; but as if he had ſaid, Do not, chiefly and primarily, labour for earthly things, which are all periſhing, but let your regard "for that meat which endureth," and nouriſheth to eternal life, be ſo great, as that your concern for the periſhing enjoyments of this life may be comparatively as nothing. (H. W. and B.) Here is, Firſt, a prohibition againſt anxious concern for all temporal enjoyments, as 1. carnal pleaſures, 2. popular applauſe, and eſpecially, 3. earthly riches: Secondly, an affirmative command, to labour for Chriſt himſelf, and his moſt holy religion; which he preſſes under this notion of meat, 1. becauſe they were now ſeeking for food, 2. to ſhew our need of him, for our ſpiritual life, ver. 53. and, 3. to ſhew the near conjunction and union betwixt Chriſt and ſuch as become his ſincere diſciples, chap. xvii. 21, 23. (Bever.) And whereas Chriſt, in this whole chapter, ſpeaks of believing in him, and in his ſalutary paſſion, and of receiving his doctrine, under the metaphor of meat and drink; he doth this by a metaphor very familiar to the Eaſtern nations, and frequent in the Jewiſh writings. Thus Wiſdom crieth in the ſtreets, "Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled," Prov. ix. 5. that is, "Go in the way of underſtanding," ver. 6. "Eat ye that which is good, and let your ſoul delight itſelf in fatneſs," Iſa. lv. 2. that is, "Hear, and your ſoul ſhall live;" ver. 3. Thus doth the ſon of Sirac introduce Wiſdom, ſaying, "They that eat me ſhall yet be hungry, and they that drink me ſhall yet be thirſty," Ecclus. xxiv. 21. that is, They that obey me, ver. 22. Hence Philo often ſpeaks of prudence, wiſdom, virtue, as the food of the ſoul, or that ſpiritual meat and drink, which nouriſheth to eternal life. So that the ſenſe of theſe words is this, Labour by faith in me, and embracing my doctrine, to obtain that eternal life, which the Son of God will give you: For he is to be lifted up upon the croſs, "that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life," chap. iii. 16. And "him hath God the father ſealed:" That is, he hath, by his authority, commiſſioned, and, by his teſtimony owned, him to be "that prophet," and Meſſiah, from whom all bleſſings are to be expected; and, by anointing him with his Spirit above meaſure, hath, as it were, ſet his ſeal, in confirmation of his meſſage; ſo that ye may be ſure, the life he promiſes, in his father's name, ſhall be given you. So Chriſt expounds himſelf, ver. 29. Saying, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent;" that is, this is that which he commands, and which is highly acceptable to him: So "the ſacrifices of God are a broken and a contrite heart," Pſal. li. 17. that is, theſe are the moſt acceptable ſacrifices to him: And "the righteouſneſs of God," Rom. i 17. and 2 Cor. v. 21. is that righteouſneſs which he alone accepts. (W.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 17. Mark i. 11. and ix. 7. Luke iii. 22. and ix. 35. John i. 33. and v. 37.

What ſign ſheweſt thou then?] Here the Jews tell our Saviour, That before they will believe in him, they muſt ſee ſome ſign from him, to confirm his doctrine, and prove him to be the Meſſias: They acknowledge Chriſt had wrought a great miracle in feeding five thouſand perſons with five barley loaves; but Moſes fed their fathers in the wilderneſs, who were no leſs then ſix hundred thouſand perſons, with excellent manna from heaven; and this for forty years together: From whence they would ſeem to conclude, that they had more reaſon to believe Moſes than Chriſt: Not conſidering, that Moſes was but an Inſtrument, to obtain by prayer the manna at the hands of God; but Chriſt was an agent, and that by a creating power inherent in himſelf, he multiplied the five loaves to the feeding of five thouſand. Note, 1. That he who publiſhes a new doctrine to the world, ought to confirm his miſſion by ſome miraculous operation. 2. That God honoured Moſes, his meſſenger, very much, and Chriſt his miniſter much more; in that both of them wrought great and ſpecial miracles for the confirmation of their miſſion. 3. That the Jews, not believing Chriſt to be the true Meſſias, upon ſo many atteſtations, and after his divine miſſion was confirmed by ſuch miraculous operations, render'd their Infidelity inexcuſable, and their obſtinacy invincible (B.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 38. and xvi. 1. This ſudden turn of theirs was ſo ſtrange, that Grotius does not allow thoſe who now ſaid this, to have been the ſame perſons who were fed in the wilderneſs the day before. But I can ſee no reaſon for his opinion. For, the Evangeliſt plainly ſeems to continue the relation, as of the ſame perſons: And it is no unuſual thing, for men either to keep or alter their perſuaſions, as they are led by their prejudices and intereſts. And our Saviour told thoſe that had been fed in the wilderneſs, that they follow'd him for worldly advantages, and not for inſtruction in ſpiritual and heavenly matters, ver. 26. So that finding themſelves diſappointed, it was not unlikely, that they would fail in their opinion of him. To which we may add, that one main deſign of the following diſcourſe was to ſhew, that external evidence was not ſufficient to create faith, without the inward preparation of a ſincere and honeſt mind: Which was very pertinent to the caſe of thoſe men, who were made confident, that Jeſus was "that prophet," by the late miracle, till they found that his doctrine was contrary to their worldly affections. (Clag.)

Moſes gave you not that bread.] Upon the Jews mentioning manna to our bleſſed Saviour, he takes occaſion to make a compariſon betwixt himſelf, "the bread of life;" and manna, the bread of Moſes; and that in three particulars. 1. It was not Moſes that gave the Iſraelites that manna; it was God at the prayer of Moſes: but it was God that now offered them "the bread of life;" were they willing to accept it. 2. The manna was not "given from heaven," that is, from the celeſtial heaven, but only from the air and clouds, which frequently in ſcripture is called heaven: But Chriſt "the bread of life" was given, and ſent by the father from the higheſt heaven, even the heaven of glory. 3. Manna was not true ſpiritual food effectively and of itſelf, but bodily food only; but Chriſt is real and ſpiritual bread, which gives life to loſt and dead men; which manna did not, could not do. And whereas manna was peculiar to Iſrael only, Chriſt gives life to all ſorts of perſons, Gentiles as well as Jews; "The bread of God giveth life unto the world." Learn hence, That as Chriſt is the truth and ſubſtance of all types in the Old Teſtament, ſo particularly, the manna was an illuſtrious type of Chriſt. In many things they agree; and in ſome they differ. They agree in their original; manna came down from above, ſo did Chriſt; manna was freely given, ſo is Jeſus Chriſt the free gift of God; manna was not fit to be eaten as it lay in the field, but muſt be ground in a mill, or beaten in a mortar, and baked in an oven, before it was fit for food; Chriſt was ground by ſufferings, bruiſed on the croſs, ſcorched in the fiery oven of his father's wrath, that he might become a fit Saviour for us. Again, as the manna was gathered by the Iſraelites daily and equally; it was rained down about their tents, and every man had his omer:

Thus is Chriſt in the miniſtry of the word daily offered to a loſt world, and all that believe in him ſhall ſhare alike in the benefit of the juſtification, ſanctification, and glorification from him. But now the manna and Chriſt differ in this; and the truth excells the type thus: There is a quickening, inlivening virtue, a life-giving, and a life-upholding power in Chriſt the bread of life, which was never found in manna, the bread of Iſrael: And whereas manna only fed the body of an Iſraelite, and this only for a little time in the wilderneſs; Chriſt nouriſhes the ſoul, the ſouls of all believers, be they Jew or Gentile, bond or free; and this not for a time, but for eternity; "the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." (H. W. and B.)

He that cometh to me ſhall never hunger.] See the notes on chap. iv. 14.

All that the father giveth me, ſhall come to me.] Here we are to note, 1. That to believe in Chriſt, and to come to him, is the ſame thing. So chap. v. 30. "Whom the father hath ſent, him ye believe not." is in ver. 40. "ye will not come to me, that ye may have life." So chap. vii. 37. "If any man thirſt, let him come to me, and drink;" and, to encourage them to embrace this invitation, he adds, "He that believeth on me, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water, " ver. 38. So ver. 35. of this chapter, "He that cometh to me ſhall never hunger," is the ſame with the following words, "He that believeth on me ſhall never thirſt." So when Chriſt had ſaid, "Ye have ſeen me, and have not believed, " he adds this reaſon of their incredulity, Ye come not to me, becauſe ye are not given of the father; and ſaith, "Him that cometh to me I will not caſt forth; for this is the will of my father, that he who hath ſeen the Son, and believed in him, ſhould have eternal life." 2. That to be "given of the father," cannot here ſignify, to be abſolutely choſen by him to eternal life; for then, 1. The Jews could not be reaſonably accuſed for not coming to Chriſt, or not believing in him; much leſs that they would not believe, or come to him, ſeeing, upon this ſuppoſition, that only they whom God had abſolutely choſen to eternal life could come to him, it was impoſſible they ſhould believe who were not thus elected; and ſo it could not be imputed as their crime, that they did not that thing which 'twas impoſſible for them to do: Whereas 'tis certain, that our Saviour repreſents it as their great ſin, that "in him whom the father had ſent they believed not," chap. v. 38. and that they "would not come unto him that they might have life," ver. 40. telling them, that the ſpirit would convince them "of ſin, becauſe they believed not in him," chap. xvi. 9. and that they had "no excuſe for that ſin," chap. xv. 22, 24. Whereas, what better excuſe could be made for them than this, that they could not come to him, as being not elected by God to that life he offered, to induce them ſo to do? 2. Hence it muſt follow, that Chriſt could not rationally have invited them to come to him, or called them to believe in him, who were not given him by the father; for this was to invite them to come to him, that they might live, whom he well knew could never come, as being never choſen to obtain that life; much leſs could he have told them, that this was the work, which God required them to do, or that the father had "given them this bread from heaven;" this being to require them, according to this ſuppoſition, to believe a lye, viz. that Chriſt was ſent to be "the bread of life," and a Saviour to them, for whom the Father never did intend ſalvation by him. And yet Chriſt manifeſtly ſays to them, who ſeeing him did not believe, and therefore were not given to him by the father, "Labour for that meat which nouriſheth to life eternal, which the Son of man ſhall give to you," ver. 27. and that "this is the work of God, that ye believe in him that he hath ſent," ver. 29. and my "father giveth you the true bread from heaven, even him that cometh down from heaven, and giveth life (not to the elect only, but) to the world," ver. 32. 33. I therefore here enquire thus, Was our Lord truly willing that thoſe he ſpeaks to ſhould have life? If not, why doth he ſay, "Theſe things I ſpeak unto you, that ye might be ſaved," chap. v. 34. but "ye will not come unto me that ye might have life?" ver. 40. If ſo, why did he ſay, that he "did always thoſe things which pleaſed him?" chap. viii. 29. and "could do nothing but what he ſaw his father doing," chap. v. 19. ſeeing 'twas not the father's will that they ſhould be ſaved, or come unto him that they might have life, whom he had not given to him, that is, had not elected to ſalvation. Note 3. That Chriſt here gives a reaſon why they believed not, viz. "Ye have ſeen, and yet believe not, becauſe ye are not given to me of my father;" Now, it is reaſonable to conceive this reaſon ſhould agree with all his other reaſons aſſigned of their infidelity; which yet are manifeſtly founded not on any thing wanting on the part of God, but on ſomething wanting in themſelves that they might do ſo, viz. 1. That they came not to the light "becauſe their works were evil," and being ſo they "hated the light, and would not come to it," chap. iii. 19, 20. that they believed not in him, "becauſe he ſpake the truth," which was diſtaſteful to them, chap. viii. 45. 2. Becauſe they "had not the word of God abiding in them," nor believed God bearing witneſs to him, nor Moſes ſpeaking of him, chap. v. 38, 46. and ſo being taught of God they would not learn. 3. Becauſe they were not of God; "Ye therefore do not hear his word, becauſe ye are not of God," chap. viii. 47. and becauſe they "had not the love of God in them," chap. v. 42. 4. Becauſe they preferred the praiſe of men before the praiſe of God, "not ſeeking that glory which cometh of God only," ver. 44. 5. Becauſe they were not of his ſheep, i, e. not docile, nor diſpoſed to hear his voice; "Ye therefore believe not, becauſe ye are not of my ſheep," chap. x. 26. 6. Becauſe, through the perverſeneſs of their hearts, they could not hear his words; "Why do ye not know my ſpeech, even becauſe ye cannot hear my words?" chap. viii. 43. and this they could not do, becauſe they were "of their father the devil, and his works they would do," ver. 44. and therefore, 4. To be "given of the father," is, 1. To be convinced, by the miracles which God hath wrought by him to teſtify the truth of his miſſion, and thereby to ſet his ſeal unto him, that he was the Meſſiah, and the ſon of God; and to be willing upon theſe teſtimonies to own him as ſuch; laying aſide all thoſe unreaſonable prejudices, and carnal affections which obſtructed their coming to him. This appears, 1. From the deſcription which Chriſt gives of thoſe whom God had given him, viz. "They were thine, and thou gaveſt them to me, and they know, that I came from thee, and they have believed that thou haſt ſent me," chap. xvii. 6, 8. For this is ſpoken of Chriſt's diſciples; of whom it is ſo often ſaid, they "ſaw his miracles, and believed on him," chap. ii. 11. By them they therefore knew, that he came forth from God, and ſo are ſaid to be given him of God, who by theſe miracles convinced them of this truth, and ſo they believed that he had ſent him. 2. This appears farther from theſe words, "There are ſome of you that believe not; for Jeſus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not" (ſincerely;) and ſaith, "Therefore I ſaid to you, No man can come unto me except it were given him of my Father," ver. 64, 65. For theſe men had not laid aſide their prejudices againſt his words; they could not believe that he came down from heaven, who was the Son of Joſeph, ver. 42. They murmur at his words, and were ſcandalized, ver. 61. they "went away from him, and walked no more after him;" ver. 66. and therefore, thro' their prejudices againſt his perſon and his doctrine, they could not prevail with themſelves to think, that he came forth from God; and upon that account Chriſt here informs us, that he ſaid, No man could come unto him, unleſs it were given him of the father. And, 3. This we may learn from a like expreſſion in the book of Deuteronomy, chap. xxix. 2, 3, 4. "Ye have ſeen all the Lord did before your eyes in the land of Egypt, the great temptations, ſigns and miracles which there he wrought; yet the Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear unto this day." The Lord hath not given, or rather, Hath not the Lord given you? So 2 Sam. xiii. 26. 2 Kings v. 26. Job ii. 10. and Mal. ii. 15. For here 'tis manifeſt, that the way of God's giving them an heart to perceive, was by working thoſe ſigns and miracles before their eyes which might induce them ſo to do; and yet, for want of this improvement of them to this end, it is admired that the Lord hath not given them this heart; or is imputed as their great fault that he had not given it; i. e. that after all he had done to produce it in them they had it not. 2. Chriſt, being ſent by God the father, that the world through him might be ſaved, and he having ſent his Son to propound to them that eternal life, which "was with the Father, and was manifeſted to us by his Son," and to propoſe to us the terms on which this life might be obtained (as Chriſt doth throughout this chapter;) he is ſaid to have "given us eternal life, and that this life is in his Son," 1 John v. 11. and that "this is his record" concerning him; and here, that "the Father had given them the true bread from heaven, that giveth life unto the world," ver. 32, 33. And they who were ſo convinced of the truth of this promiſe, by our Saviour's miracles, as to expect to receive it by faith in him, and obedience to his doctrine; and ſo affected with this promiſe of eternal life, as to eſteem it above all other things, and ſo were willing to apply themſelves to the performance of thoſe duties which he required to obtain it, and to reject and quit thoſe things which might obſtruct them in the proſecution of it, are ſaid to be "given to him of the father," becauſe he wrought thoſe miracles which gave them this conviction; on which account, when Peter had confeſſed that he was the Chriſt, Chriſt anſwered, "Fleſh and blood hath not revealed this, to thee, but my Father which is in heaven," Matt. xvi. 17. (See the note there;) and becauſe he gave this promiſe of eternal life, and ſent his Son to reveal it to the world; and therefore, when he ſaith here to his apoſtles, whom the Father had given him, "Will ye alſo go away?" Simon Peter anſwers, ver. 67, 68, 69. Lord, to whom ſhould we go; ſeeing thou haſt the words of eternal life? And we believe, and know, that thou art the Chriſt the Son of the living God." Now 'tis evident, that all who have this ſtrong conviction that our Saviour came from God, and this concernment for that eternal life which he promiſed as the encouragement to come to him, will believe on him: Becauſe ſuch perſons can neither want aſſurance that they ought to do ſo, nor the moſt prevalent engagements ſo to do; as having that eternal life before their eyes, which they more value than all wordly things, and for which they are willing and prepared to quit all their lower intereſts. (W. H. and Fox.) The phraſe "All that my Father giveth me, ſhall come to me, is an alluſion to what is often ſeen among us, viz. To a Father's committing the care of educating a hopeful and promiſing child, to a wiſe and ſkilful maſter, with the expectation of having a good account of him at laſt. Not but that theſe expreſſions alſo imply the preparations of the heart to be from the Lord: Neither does this hinder, but that our Lord muſt be underſtood to have done what was fit to prepare thoſe whom he found ſo averſe as theſe men were. See the notes on ver. 45. (Clag.)

Not to do mine own will, but] That is not ſo much my own will as my father's: or not my own will only, but his who ſent me. For thus are negatives frequently put for comparatives; as Gen. xlv. 8. Exod. xvi. 8. 1 Sam. viii. 7. 2 Chron. xix. 6. Prov. viii. 10. Jer. vii. 22. and xxxi. 34. Matt. vi. 19. and xii. 7. Mark xiii. 11. and elſewhere. See the notes on Luke xiv. 12. Chriſt's will, as he is God, is no way different from the father's: But as man, his will was diſtinct from the father's, tho' ſtill ſubordinate to it; and therefore, tho' he had a will of his own as man, yet he came not to fulfil that. But our ſaviour ſpeaks not here of himſelf, either as God or man, but as God-man, as mediator, as one ſent from the father, and therefore was obliged to do his will; wherefore he ſaith not the will of my Father, but "the will of him that ſent me." (Bev. and B.) See the notes on chap. iv. 34. and v. 30. and Luke xxii. 42.

Every one which ſeeth.] To ſee Jeſus, ſignifies the ſame that it does, ver. 36. That is, ſeeing his miracles, and all other teſtimonies of a divine authority that were diſcernable in him. Only theoroon ſeems to note an attentive conſideration of them, which is proper to ingenuous and honeſt men, and will certainly produce faith: Whereas heoracate, ver. 36. may ſignify that careleſs and ſuperficial ſight of his works, proper to thoſe men, in whom prejudice ſo prevailed, that they ſaw, and yet believed not. (Clag.) From theſe general words ſome infer, that every true believer muſt perſevere unto the end; ſince otherwiſe he cannot "have everlaſting life." But to this, and to all other promiſes and declarations of a like nature, which engage that God will give eternal life to the believer, I anſwer, That nothing is more evident, than that they can be only underſtood of ſuch a faith as doth "endure to the end," Matt. xxiv. 13. and ſo includeth perſeverance in it. For, either theſe promiſes are made to temporary believers, and ſo to thoſe which after fall away, which is contrary to the tenor of the ſcripture, and makes the promiſes of eternal life, and the threats of perdition belong to the ſame perſons, viz. to them who "having lived by faith, draw back," Hebr. x. 38, 39. Or elſe they depend on this condition, that ſuch men do continue in the faith, according to thoſe expreſs words, Col. i. 21. 23. and Hebr. iii. 6, 14. And then it is demonſtratively certain, that perſeverance is included in them, and made the condition on which the bleſſing promiſed doth depend, and therefore cannot be proved from them. (W.)

I will raiſe him up.] That perſon who can, by his own almighty power raiſe the dead, muſt certainly be God. And this power Chriſt had. He raiſed others from the dead, and his own dead body from the grave alſo, by his own power. And therefore Chriſt ſays, "Iam the reſurrection and the life;" and, I will raiſe him up at the laſt day." Doubtleſs, he who ſpake theſe words, and made theſe promiſes, knew his own power to perform them: And that power muſt be omnipotent; and that act of omnipotence doth prove him to be God. 'Tis true, the diſciples raiſed the dead, who yet were not God: But with this difference; They raiſing the dead by Chriſt's power, he raiſing himſelf and others by his own power. (B.)

The Son of Joſeph.] See the notes on Matt. xiii. 55.

Draw him.] Here our Lord ſays, "No man can come to me, except the father, which ſent me, draw him:" And chap. v. 40. he complains, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." Which places explain each other. May we not therefore conclude, that God draws many to come to Chriſt? That he invites them to accept of the ſalvation offer'd by him? And that the reaſon why ſo few come and are ſaved, is, becauſe they will not cloſe with the invitation, but refuſe to come when they are drawn by the Father? Almighty God deſires the ſalvation and happineſs of all men, and offers them grace and ſtrength ſufficient for that end: But if, when they are drawn by the motions of his ſpirit, they refuſe to come, he will not, generally ſpeaking, uſe force and violence to them, but leave them to "eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices," Prov. i. 31. For it is clear, from the Old and New Teſtament, that God endeavours the ſalvation of many who are not ſaved. What elſe can be the meaning of that ſolemn appeal, Iſa. v. 4? Or of that lamentation of our redeemer, Matt. xxiii. 37? (H. W. B. and F.) See the notes on ver. 35, and 37.

It is written.] The prophets here referr'd to, are Iſa. liv. 13. and Jerem. xxxi. 34. In the former of which the words are, "All thy children ſhall be taught of the Lord." And thus we are taught, 1. By his example, particularly to "love one another," 1 Theſſ. iv. 9. 2. By his ſpirit; that unction which taught the primitive Chriſtians all things needful to be known, 1 John ii. 27. 3. By his word; for ſo, ſaith Clemens of Alexandria, are we taught of God. And, laſtly, By his Son; delivering the mind of God to us as his prophet; and ſo giving us the knowledge of what he requires us to believe and do, in order to ſalvation; and confirming the truth of what he thus delivered in his name, by miracles done by the finger of God; and ſo ſetting his ſeal to the doctrine taught. And of this teaching by God are theſe words to be underſtood; 1. Becauſe the prophet Iſaiah is there ſpeaking of the ſetting up the kingdom of Chriſt, and of the teaching then promiſed. 2. Thus is it that the Father draws men to Chriſt; of which theſe words are made the proof. (See note on ver. 37.) 3. From the argument following, ver. 46. That they were not to expect to be taught immediately by the Father, as a ſcholar is by his maſter, ſeeing him preſent, and hearing him ſpeak, but only "by him that had ſeen the Father," and ſo ſpake, and did thoſe things which he had ſeen of the Father, chap. iii. 11. viii. 28. and xii. 50. So that "he who had ſeen him had ſeen the Father," chap. xiv. 9. (W. and Fox) The meaning of the whole is, as if our Lord had ſaid, Ye muſt have God for your maſter, before ye can be the diſciples of the Son; ye muſt be prepared by thoſe qualities, which there is no need of a new revelation to teach you, before ye are fit to receive that doctrine which the Son brings. And now it is plain, that theſe very ſpeeches and reaſonings of our Saviour tended to prepare them for conviction and faith. For, by ſhewing them the great need of a teachable ſpirit, in hearing and learning of God, and what bleſſings the want of this diſpoſition would bereave them of, and by repeating and inculcating upon them that great concernment of the reſurrection, he did what was moſt proper in itſelf to diſpoſe them to a better mind, to weaken their prejudices, and to make them attend to thoſe teſtimonies of his coming from God, which they had already ſeen, inſtead of deſiring more ſigns, which, in the temper they were in at preſent, would have done them no good, if they had been granted. (Clag.)

Hath ſeen the Father.] See the notes on Matt. xi. 27. and John i. 18.

He that believeth.] This explains all that is ſaid about the neceſſity of eating, &c. ſhewing clearly, that our Saviour meant the believing of his doctrine, and being conformed to it in heart and life. For, if "he that believeth ſhall have everlaſting life," then he that believeth in him, eateth Chriſt, according to his meaning in this chapter. (Clag.) See the notes on chap. iii. 16, 18, 36.

I am that bread of life.] In theſe verſes our bleſſed Saviour reſumes his former doctrine, namely, that he is the object of ſaving faith, and the bread of life, which he compares with the manna, the bread of Iſrael: "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderneſs;" which manna was an illuſtrious type of Chriſt. Thus both "came down from heaven;" both were freely given of God, without any merit or deſert of men; both in a miraculous manner; both at firſt unknown what they were, and whence they came; both equally belonging to all; both ſufficient for all, poor and rich. The manna, white in colour, ſo clear is our Lord's innocence; pleaſant like honey, ſo ſweet are his benefits; beaten and broken before eaten, Chriſt on his croſs bleeding and dying; given only in the wilderneſs, and ceaſing aſſoon as they came into the land of promiſe; as ſacraments ſhall vaniſh, when we enjoy the ſubſtance in heaven. But tho' manna was thus excellent, the eaters of it were dead; but ſuch as feed upon Chriſt, the bread of life, ſhall live eternally in bliſs and glory. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: If any man eat of this bread he ſhall live for ever." Here we learn, 1. What a miſerable creature man naturally is, in a pining and ſtarved condition, under the want of ſoul-food. 2. That Jeſus Chriſt is the food of ſouls, which quickens them that are dead, and is unto the needy ſoul all that it can need; ſuch ſpiritual food as will prove a remedy and preſervative againſt death, both ſpiritual and eternal. "I am the living bread." (B.) Here our Lord calleth himſelf again bread, as before in ver. 35. thereby implying, what he afterwards expreſſeth, that he is to be eaten. Now, moſt certainly, we are to eat Chriſt only in ſuch a ſenſe as that is wherein he is bread. But no man will ſay, that Jeſus was, or can be properly bread: Therefore it is not eating him literally and properly, that can be here meant, but only believing on him; which is by the ſame figure called eating, whereby he called himſelf bread. (Clag.)

Eat thereof, and not die.] This is the firſt place, where our Saviour, in purſuance of that figure, expreſſeth believing in him, ver. 35, 47. by eating him. In ver. 35, where he alſo calls himſelf "the bread of life," he did not purſue the figure throughout, by ſaying, he that eateth me, but "he that cometh to me (i. e. who is my diſciple) ſhall never hunger; and he that believeth on me (not he that drinketh me) ſhall never thirſt." Which makes it very plain, that by eating here we are to underſtand believing; not a corporeal, but a ſpiritual action: And, becauſe it does not yet appear, that he limits the object of believing, we are therefore to underſtand him as ſpeaking of the neceſſity of receiving his whole doctrine, and ſubmitting to it in heart and life; which whoſoever does, ſhall not die, but live eternally. (Idem.)

The bread that I will give, is my fleſh] Without doing great violence to our Saviour's words in this place, they cannot be ſo underſtood, as if he promiſed to turn bread into his fleſh, for the life of the world; as they muſt ſuppoſe, who will ground the Roman doctrine of tranſubſtantiation upon this place. For, if ſome ſuch change were here to be underſtood, it muſt be quite contrary, viz. a change of his fleſh into bread; inaſmuch as he calls himſelf "the living bread," and ſays, "The bread that he would give was his fleſh, which he would give for the life of the world." If therefore it be inſiſted upon, that the words are to be properly underſtood, and that therefore a change muſt be ſuppoſed, of one ſubſtance into another, it muſt not be of bread into the ſubſtance of Chriſt's fleſh, but of Chriſt's fleſh into the ſubſtance of bread; which interpretation, I think, no-body has ever yet been ſo unreaſonable as to contend for. What account therefore is to be given of theſe words, but this? That our Saviour, having hitherto purſued a figurative way of ſpeaking, upon the occaſion ſo often mentioned, went on in the ſame way of expreſſion, to lay before them that principal doctrine of the Goſpel, that Chriſt was to die for the ſalvation of mankind; which is the plain ſenſe of giving his fleſh to be bread for us: For he "gave his fleſh for the life of the world," when he gave himſelf to the death for us all; and his fleſh, ſo given, is bread to us, becauſe his death is the means of our living for ever. And, whereas Chriſt mentioned the giving of his "fleſh for the life of the world," as a future thing, and likewiſe the giving of his fleſh to be bread, it does not follow, that becauſe the former was to be performed on the croſs only, therefore the latter was to be performed only in the Euchariſt. This, I ſay, does not follow, unleſs it could be proved, that he promiſed, in thoſe words, to give us his natural fleſh to be eaten properly in the Euchariſt; which I have ſhewn, is impoſſible to be proved from hence Still therefore we are to underſtand, not a corporal, but a ſpiritual eating. And whereas our Saviour ſaid, "The bread that I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world," the meaning is this, that his fleſh ſhall be given for the life of the world, "once for all:" But the ſpiritual food or nouriſhment, which his fleſh ſo given ſhould afford, would be given evermore, not only in the Euchariſt, but in the whole miniſtration of the Goſpel; which holds forth the death of Chriſt to be believed, and offers the bleſſed fruits and advantages thereof to all that are diſpoſed to partake of them. Againſt this interpretation it is alſo objected, That if the doctrine of our Lord's paſſion, and the believing of it, be here meant, no reaſon can be given, why our Saviour ſhould ſpeak in the future tenſe, "The bread that I will give is my fleſh;" ſince this ſpiritual food was no leſs given before the incarnation and paſſion of Chriſt than afterward; for the patriarchs lived and were nouriſhed by faith: And therefore, if ſpiritual eating be only intended, Chriſt ſeemed to promiſe a new thing, which yet he had given of old; ſo that his promiſe is to be underſtood of giving his natural fleſh to be eaten, which was never done before the Euchariſt. This is the objection: And a very ſtrange one it muſt needs be to him who ſhall conſider, 1. That our Saviour ſpeaketh in the future tenſe to the woman of Samaria, where yet the expreſſion is acknowledged to be figurative, and the meaning of it to be believing. "Whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him ſhall never thirſt; but the water that I ſhall give him (doſo) ſhall be in him a well," &c. Now, would not this be rare arguing? Our Lord ſays, "I will give water:" Therefore he promiſed ſomething that he had never given before! Therefore ſpiritual drinking, or believing, is not meant, becauſe the patriarchs believed of old! Therefore the promiſe is to be taken literally and properly! And yet this is that very argument to prove the literal ſenſe in this verſe. But then, 2. Our Lord ſpeaks of the neceſſity of preſent eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, in the 53d and 54th verſes: And therefore the argument from the future tenſe, to prove that he ſpake properly of the Euchariſt, is inſufficient. 3. Suppoſing that all had been future, and that ſomething was promiſed more than had been formerly given; yet it follows not, that Chriſt ſpake properly of the Euchariſt, much leſs of giving his fleſh properly to be eaten there. For, tho' the fathers believed of old, yet the doctrine of the paſſion was never clearly underſtood by the faithful before our Saviour's time; no, nor as yet by his own diſciples. Our Saviour did now and then mention it; and here he gave them ſome intimations of it, which they underſtood not then, ſo well as they did afterwards. (See the notes on ver. 53.) Himſelf ſaid to them, "Many prophets and righteous men have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them; and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them," Matt. xiii. 17. And yet his diſciples hitherto had attained to a very imperfect knowledge of Chriſtianity. Tho' therefore the good men of old were juſtified by faith, and ſaw the promiſes afar off, and had ſome general intimations of the Goſpel: yet, whether the particular objects of our faith were not a new thing, worthy of Chriſt's promiſe, I leave indifferent men to judge. Laſtly, It has been ſaid, that the natural fleſh of Chriſt was to be given, or offer'd upon the croſs, ſubſtantially or properly, "for the life of the world:" And therefore the ſame fleſh was to be given, with the ſame propriety, to be bread for us, and to be eaten by us; viz. in the Euchariſt. To which I anſwer, 1. As before, That this arguing will conclude more than they deſire who urge it: For if the former clauſe is to be underſtood in the ſame ſtrictneſs and propriety of words with the latter, then the fleſh of Chriſt was to become bread properly; for he ſaid, "The bread which I will give is my fleſh." But, 2. It is much more reaſonable to underſtand the giving of his fleſh to be bread, according to the meaning of this kind of expreſſions throughout the whole diſcourſe: And our adverſaries do acknowledge, that thoſe paſſages, "I am the bread of life;" "He that eateth of this bread ſhall live for ever;" (that is, all of this kind, from ver. 32. to this very clauſe in ver. 51.) are to be underſtood of ſpiritual eating, i. e. of believing. Since therefore our Saviour gave no manner of intimation that he changed his ſtyle, there is more reaſon to interpret thoſe words, of giving his fleſh to be bread, and of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, in a ſenſe agreeable to that wherein eating him is to be underſtood all along before, than to underſtand them properly, that is to ſay, of bodily eating; tho' it is the fleſh of Chriſt which is given to be eaten, that fleſh which was ſubſtantially and properly given "for the life of the world." (Idem.)

Ver. 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65. The Jews therefore ſtrove among themſelves, ſaying, How can this man give us his fleſh to eat? Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day. For my fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath ſent me, and I live by the Father; ſo, he that eateth me, even he ſhall live by me. This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread ſhall live for ever. Theſe things ſaid he in the ſynagogue, as he taught in Capernaum. Many therefore of his diſciples, when they had heard this, ſaid, This is an hard ſaying, who can hear it? When Jeſus knew in himſelf, that his diſciples murmured at it, he ſaid unto them, Doth this offend you? What and if ye ſhall ſee the Son of man aſcend up where he was before? It is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing: the words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life. But there are ſome of you that believe not. For Jeſus knew from the beginning, who they were that believed not, and who ſhould betray him. And he ſaid, Therefore ſaid I unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father.

Strove among themſelves.] Obſerve here, how the Jews, underſtanding Chriſt after a carnal manner, were offended at what he had ſaid; for they thought it was inhuman to eat man's fleſh, and could not underſtand how the body of Chriſt could in ſuch a ſenſe be food to all the world. Hence note, that carnal perſons put a carnal ſenſe upon Chriſt's ſpiritual words, and ſo occaſion their own ſtumbling. But yet notwithſtanding the Jews ſtumbling at our Saviour's expreſſion, he doth not alter his words, but preſſeth more and more the neceſſity of feeding upon him by faith, in order to eternal life; "Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Learn from hence, 1. That the Lord Jeſus Chriſt is the true ſpiritual food of all believers. 2. That thoſe, and only thoſe who do by faith feed upon him, ſhall obtain a life of grace and glory from him; if we do not by faith feed upon him, we can have no evidence for a life of grace, nor title to a life of glory. This place ſome Papiſts produce to countenance the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation, and a bodily eating and drinking of Chriſt's fleſh and blood in the Sacrament. But it is evident that Chriſt treats not of the ſacrament in this chapter, for the ſacrament was not now inſtituted; therefore it is not a ſacramental, but a ſpiritual feeding upon Chriſt by faith is here meant. For this eating gives life to the eater; all that eat are ſaved, and all that do not eat are damned; but this is not true of a ſacramental eating: Beſides, this eating which Chriſt ſpeaks of, he makes abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation; but ſome are ſaved that never fed upon Chriſt in the ſacrament, as John the Baptiſt, and the thief on the croſs. Laſtly, If it be underſtood of a ſacramental eating and drinking, woe be to the church of Rome, for denying the cup to the laity; becauſe drinking of Chriſt's blood is here made as neceſſary, as eating of his fleſh, in order to eternal life. Obſerve farther the cloſe and intimate union which is betwixt Chriſt himſelf, and thoſe that feed upon him; "He that eateth me, dwelleth in me, and I in him." As meat is turned into the eater's ſubſtance, ſo believers and Chriſt become one; and by feeding on him, that is, by believing in him, there followeth a mutual inhabitation; Chriſt dwelling in them, and they in him; this is true of a ſpiritual feeding upon Chriſt, but not of a ſacramental eating. Nay, Chriſt carries it higher ſtill, and tells us, That as there is a real union between the father and him, and as the Father lives who ſent him, having an eternal fountain of life in himſelf, and the Son lives by the Father, having the ſame life communicated to him with his eſſence from the father; in like manner (ſays Chriſt) he that eateth me, the ſame ſhall live by me. All which is certainly true of our ſpiritual feeding upon Chriſt by faith; but cannot be applied to a corporal feeding on him in the ſacrament, as the papiſts would have it. (B.)

Except ye eat the fleſh.] What is meant here by "the fleſh and blood of the Son of man," muſt be explain'd, 1. By taking notice of the figure, or idiom, frequent in ſcripture; whereby the parts ſet down ſeparately do ſignify the whole which conſiſts of thoſe parts. Thus "the heavens and the earth" ſignify the whole compages of the ſublunary world, 2 Pet. iii. 7. and many the like. And ſo "Chriſt's body and fleſh and bones," Eph. v. 30. and here, "the fleſh and blood of the Son of man," is the ſon of man, or Chriſt himſelf. 2. By obſerving the notion of "fleſh and blood," frequently uſed, not only to ſignify our mortal condition, which our fleſh and blood is ſubject to, (whereupon, when St. Paul ſaith, that "fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," he adds, "neither can corruption inherit incorruption;" 1 Cor. xv. 50. but alſo this mortal nature, as it is ſubject to much weakneſs, and afflictions, &c. as Iſa. xxxi. 3. "The Egyptians are men and not God, and their horſes fleſh, and not ſpirit;" that is, weak helpers, unfit to be truſted in: So when St. Paul ſaith, that "through the infirmity of the fleſh," that is, in many afflictions, and perſecutions, he "preached unto them." Gal. iv. 13. And ſo it notes Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation, quite contrary to that which the Jews expected their Meſſias ſhould come in; that Chriſt which was look'd on now ſo meanly, and was afterwards crucified by them. 3. By obſerving the occaſion of Chriſt's diſcourſe here, (for it is ordinary with Chriſt to accommodate his ſpeeches to the occaſions; as Mat. iv. 19. when he calls the fiſhermen, he tells them he "will make them fiſhers of men," ſo John iv. 10, 14, and 32. and here, ver. 27. and many the like,) which was thus begun; They followed him for his loaves, ver 26. He reprehended that in them, and bids them ſeek, and deſire "that meat which endureth to everlaſting life," ver. 27. that is, that doctrine of his which is food for their ſouls; and being received, and digeſted and turn'd into increaſe of good life in them, would bring them to immortality: They aſk him the way for them to do this; He tells them plainly, by believing on him, ver. 29. They thereupon call for a ſign, a miracle to be wrought by him, or elſe they will not believe, ver. 30. And they inſtance in Moſes who brought them Manna from heaven; and they would have him do ſome ſuch thing, that they may believe on him, ver. 31. Upon this occaſion he begins, and compares himſelf with that manna, and ſhews how much he ſurpaſſes that; and ſo continues that compariſon betwixt himſelf and bread: As that is a means to preſerve this ſhort life which deſerves not to be call'd life; but he is the author and donor, and publiſher of eternal life, ver. 33. Upon this ſpeech of his, "the Jews murmur," ver. 41. that he ſhould call himſelf "the bread that came down from heaven:" Chriſt reſumes that ſpeech, and ſpeaks it with all confidence, "I am that bread of life," ver. 48. that is, that ſpiritual food, that will bring men to everlaſting life; and "this bread, ſaith he, is his fleſh, which he will give for the life of the world," ver. 51. that is, he will dye for this end, to bring men to immortal life; and that is it which he means by his being "the bread of life." Upon this, as if they underſtood nothing all this while (tho' he had firſt ſpoken to them in plain terms, and expreſs'd all by believing on him, ver. 29, and 35. and only took up this more obſcure figurative ſpeech by way of anſwer to their propoſals) they aſk, in a ſenſleſs perverſe manner, "how can this man give us his fleſh to eat?" ver. 52. To which this verſe is a confident anſwer," "Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, except ye eat," &c. ſtill meaning, what all this while he had meant in oppoſition to their manna, that his doctrine, for the preaching of which he was ſent down from heaven, and that grace, which ſhould he purchaſed for them by his death, was the moſt excellent food for their ſouls; which would eſtabliſh, or comfort, or ſuſtain their hearts, that is, maintain ſpiritual life in them, and that which would become eternal, ver 54. All which being put together makes up this compleat ſenſe of the words, that Chriſt, this mortal, deſpiſed, crucified Chriſt, that took our fleſh on him, came down from heaven, here lived and died, to reveal his Father's will unto us, and work belief in us, is the food of our ſouls, the believing, and obeying of whom will, as food ſuſtains corporal life, beget and maintain ſpiritual life in us, and bring us to eternity. By which alſo appears what faith it is, which is look'd on by Chriſt as ſo highly neceſſary; even that which is here expreſs'd by feeding on this ſpiritual food, not only eating, but digeſting, and turning it into the nouriſhment of our ſouls; ſuch a believing the doctrine of Chriſt as hath preſent influence on our lives, obeying, not only underſtanding, his commands, embracing his promiſes upon the terms on which they are made, undertaking the performance of the condition of them, and not only aſſenting to the truth of them, and ſo for the humility of his life, and the charity and zeal to the good of mens ſouls, and the conſtancy and courage of his death, and the charity ſo great as to lay down his life even for enemies, to tranſcribe, and practiſe that alſo. This is to "eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and to drink his blood; and without this we "have no life" in us. (H.) To prove that Chriſt in this chapter ſpeaks not of oral and ſacramental eating, but only of doing this ſpiritually, by faith in his blood, I premiſe, 1. That nothing was more common among the eaſtern nations, than to uſe the metaphor of eating and drinking, when they ſpake not of corporeal meat or drink, which was to go into the mouth, but only of ſpiritual, to be fed on by the ſoul; as hath been fully prov'd already, on ver. 27. 2. That it is the ſame thing in this chapter, to "eat of the bread which came down from heaven," and to "believe in Chriſt," breaking "the bread of life" to us by his doctrine, and offering himſelf a ſacrifice and oblation for us to obtain that life: For, when he had exhorted them to "labour for the meat that did not periſh," he tells them, ver. 29. That "this was to believe on him whom God had ſent:" When he had told them, ver. 35. That he was "the bread from heaven," he immediately adds, "He that cometh to me ſhall never hunger, and he that believeth in me ſhall never thirſt:" Having ſaid that he was "the bread which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world," ver. 33. he confirms this expreſſion, ver. 40. by theſe words, "This is the will of my Father, that every one that ſeeth the Son, and believeth on him, ſhould have eternal life." And again, ver. 47, 48. "Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, He that believeth on me, hath everlaſting life; I am that bread of life." 3. Obſerve, that from theſe metaphors our Lord proceeds to that contained in theſe words, objected by the Roman doctors, ver. 51. "The bread which I will give, is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world; that is, it is my body which I will give up unto death, that by it the world may have life. The Jews, taking theſe words in a groſs ſenſe, as if our Lord had promiſed to give his real fleſh to be ſwallowed down their throats, and eaten by them as they had eaten bread the day before, and as their forefathers had eaten manna in the wilderneſs, exclaiming againſt him, as promiſing a thing abſurd, inhuman, and impoſſible, ſaying, "How can this man give us his fleſh to eat?" To this our Saviour anſwers, ver. 53. in words ſtill more expreſſive, of his violent and bloody death for the ſalvation of mankind, viz. "Except ye eat my fleſh and drink my blood," &c. Now theſe words are by ſome conceived to import thus much; Unleſs ye, with the mouth of your bodies, do eat my real and corporeal fleſh, and drink my proper blood, ye cannot have eternal life. Againſt this ſenſe, I argue, 1. From ver. 51. thus, The fleſh which Chriſt here promiſed to "give for the life of the world," is the ſame with the "bread that cometh down from heaven;" "If any man eat of this bread, he ſhall live for ever (ſaith Chriſt;) and the bread which I will give is my fleſh, that I will give for the life of the world." And again, having ſaid, "Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life," ver. 54. and "He that eateth me ſhall live by me," ver. 57. he adds immediately, "This is that bread which came down from heaven;" and "He that eateth of this bread ſhall live for ever," ver. 58. Now, our Lord hath expreſly taught us, that the eating of this bread of life imported only our believing on him, as hath already been made evident: Therefore, the eating of his fleſh doth certainly import the ſame ſpiritual action. Moreover, we are only to eat of Chriſt as fleſh, in that importance of the phraſe in which we are to eat of Chriſt as bread: For as he ſaith, He "will give fleſh to eat;" ſo doth he ſay, He "will give bread to eat:" As he ſaith, "He that eateth my fleſh ſhall live for ever;" ſo he ſaith, "He that eateth of this bread ſhall live for ever." But none could ſay, that Chriſt was, or could properly be, bread, or eaten by the mouth, as ſuch: Wherefore, he being only figuratively and ſpiritually bread, could only figuratively and ſpiritually be eaten as ſuch: If therefore in the ſame importance only we are to eat his fleſh, that alſo is to be eaten in a ſpiritual ſenſe. 2. From theſe words, ver. 52. “ How can this man give us his fleſh to eat?” ’tis evident, the Jews conceived, that our Lord promiſed to give them his proper fleſh to eat and ſwallow down their throats, as they had done the bread with which he fed them: And it is on all hands agreed, that they miſtook the ſenſe of Chriſt’s words, and fanſied ſuch a meaning of them as he did not intend. But had our Lord intended the corporeal eating of his fleſh, and drinking of his blood, ’tis certain that it muſt be ſwallowed down their throats, as properly as the bread which they had eaten: And therefore, no man who maintaineth this corporeal eating of Chriſt’s fleſh to be intended here, can, ſuitably to his opinion, ſay, that they impoſed a falſe ſenſe upon our Saviour’s words; ſince, from this ſenſe it doth inevitably follow, that Chriſt intended that his human fleſh ſhould properly be eaten; and their words ſignify no more. Add to this, that when ’twas objected to the fathers of the three firſt centuries, that they did eat man’s fleſh, (viz. in the Euchariſt,) they conſtantly, in their apologies, rejected that accuſation, as the vileſt calumny, and as a moſt abominable thing, ſufficient to diſcover the author of it to be ſome wicked dæmon: Whereas, had they received this as an article of faith, that they did daily eat the fleſh of the man Chriſt, and thought his word obliged them to do this, with what ſincerity could they, without all limitation or diſtinction, not only have denied, but even deteſted the doing ſo? 3. This verſe affords two farther arguments, in refutation of the corporeal ſenſe of theſe expreſſions; 1. That it follows plainly from it, That the thief upon the croſs and all the pious and believing Jews, who heard theſe words, and died before our Saviour’s paſſion, muſt of neceſſity be damned; for our Lord ſaith, with an aſſeveration to them, “ Except ye eat the fleſh,” &c. Now, this was ſaid at the paſſover then inſtant, ver. 4. and ſo at leaſt above a year before our Saviour’s paſſion; and ſo before the inſtitution of that ſacrament, in which alone his fleſh could be corporally eaten: And therefore, had it been intended of corporeal and ſacramental eating, it was impoſſible that any perſon of thoſe hearers could be ſaved, who died in the enſuing year. 2. Theſe words, interpreted in the corporeal ſenſe, do plainly and inevitably infer, That they who do deprive the laity, all their whole lives, of drinking of this blood, expoſe them to inevitable damnation; Chriſt having ſaid, “ Except ye drink the blood of the Son of man, ye have no life in you:” For tho’ eating and drinking, being taken figuratively, do ſignify the ſame thing, viz. believing in a crucified Saviour; yet, being taken properly, they cannot be reputed the ſame thing: For albeit, they who receive the body only, may be well ſaid to “ eat the fleſh” of Chriſt, becauſe they take ſomething by way of meat into their mouths, yet cannot they be ſaid to “ drink his blood,” if they take nothing into their mouths by way of drink. Since therefore eating and drinking are two diſtinct actions, ſo that he cannot properly be ſaid to drink who only eats; ſince the privation of life is here connected with not drinking of Chriſt’s blood, as much as with not eating of his fleſh, according to the corporeal interpretation of theſe words; he muſt certainly be deprived of the life here promiſed who doth not receive the cup, becauſe he is deprived of drinking of the blood of Chriſt, 4. From ver. 54, 56. the Argument runs thus; Whoſoever eateth the fleſh and drinketh the blood of Chriſt, in the ſenſe here ſpoken of, “ dwelleth in Chriſt, and Chriſt in him;” and therefore is a true and living member of Chriſt’s body, and he ſhall have eternal life, and be partaker of an happy reſurrection; and ſo no perſon can either be wicked here, or deprived of everlaſting life hereafter, who in this ſenſe here mentioned, eats of the fleſh and drinketh of the blood of Chriſt. Now this is very true, of eating ſpiritually, and by faith, as it imports believing on Chriſt: For, “ this, (ſaith Chriſt) is the will of him that ſent me, that every one who believeth on the Son may have everlaſting life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day,” ver. 40. but then of ſacramental eating of Chriſt’s fleſh, it is as falſe; for this was eaten by a Judas, and continually is eaten by millions, who are both wicked here, and will be damned hereafter: This therefore cannot be the import of our Saviour’s words. And here obſerve, 1. That our Lord ſpeaks in the general, “ Whoſoever eats.” 2. That he ſpeaks thus, not by way of promiſe, which might be conditional, but by way of plain aſſertion, and declaration of a thing moſt certain. And, 3. That the text ſhews the eating mentioned here can never be performed unprofitably, no not without the greateſt benefit; for ’tis oppoſed to eating manna in the wilderneſs, on this account, that whereas that gave only temporal life, this would aſſuredly confer eternal; whereas that was not able to preſerve from temporal, this would preſerve from death eternal. 5. Moreover, ver. 61, and 62. our Lord ſpeaks thus, “ Doth this offend you? What if ye ſhould ſee the Son of man aſcend up where he was before?” i. e. Are ye offended that I thus ſpeak of giving you my fleſh to eat? Do ye look on this expreſſion now as ſo abſurd and unintelligible? What then will ye think of it, when this body ſhall be removed hence to heaven? i. e. How will ye then be ſcandalized, and think it ſtill more difficult and more impoſſible to apprehend, how ye ſhall eat my fleſh and drink my blood, provided ye go on to underſtand my words in the groſs carnal ſenſe? For Athanaſius ſaith well, that Chriſt here mentioneth his aſcent into heaven, that he might divert them from the corporeal ſenſe; and therefore argued thus, Seeing it will be then impoſſible, that ye ſhould corporally eat my fleſh, when it is ſo far removed from you; by this ye may diſcern, I ſpeak of a ſpiritual eating of it. Whence, by the way, we learn, that Chriſt thought his aſcenſion into heaven ſufficient demonſtration to the Jews, that his fleſh could not be eaten upon earth; and why it ſhould not be ſo to the Chriſtian, I am yet to learn. 6. The 63d verſe affords us a more plain and certain expoſition of our Saviour’s meaning in the precedent words; for thus it runs, “ It is the ſpirit that quickneth; the fleſh profiteth nothing: The words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life.” For the import of theſe words is to this effect; to that eating and drinking, of which in this diſcourſe I have ſtill ſpoken, I have annex’d the promiſe of life, ſaying expreſly, “ He that eateth me, ſhall live by me;” he ſhall by me be quickned, i. e. be raiſed up to life eternal; and that he abideth in me by that “ Spirit which quickneth our mortal bodies,” Rom. viii. 11. ſo that “ my words are ſpirit and life,” as being the means of obtaining the ſpirit, and by him this life; to which effects my fleſh, if ye could eat it, would profit you nothing. Had our Lord ſaid, it is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing, therefore the fleſh which I will give ſhall be joined to my divinity, and by the virtue of it give you life, he had ſaid ſomewhat like the ſenſe which others put upon this text; but ſaying only, “ The words which I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit;” we cannot doubt, but he ſpeaks of eating and of drinking of his fleſh and blood ſpiritually. And another argument to the ſame purpoſe will be noted hereafter, upon ver. 68, 69. (W. and Clag.) See the notes on ver. 27. and chap. iv. 14.

Meat indeed.] One principal notion of alethees hath been formerly explained (ſee note on Luke xvi. 8.) to ſignify truly valuable, or durable; or truly valuable, becauſe it is durable; and ſo here true meat, or truly meat, is explained to be the “ bread of life,” ver. 48. that, on which he that feeds ſhall “ live for ever;” ſo the food “ that endures for ever,” ver. 27. and oppoſite to manna, on which they that feed, die, ver. 49. And this, 1. as the word truly noteth ſome ſpecial eminency, wherein any attribute belongs to the ſubject, and when it is applyed to reſemblances, it then ſignifies that, which is ſpoken of, to be more eminently that, by which ’tis reſembled, than that itſelf is, As, “ I am the true vine,” that is, a vine by bearing grapes, (which yield wine, which “ makes glad the heart of man”) is not near ſo able, and proper to refreſh a thirſty perſon, as I am; as my commands and promiſes are. So St. John of Chriſt, c. i. 9. that “ he is the true light;” that is the moſt excellent. So Heb. viii. 2. Heaven is, “ the true tabernacle,” that of which the tabernacle was but a dark and poor reſemblance; and ſo this is called “ true bread,” ver. 32. and “ truly meat” here; that is, more nutritive, and ſtrengthning, and comforting than meat and bread is. 2. In reſpect of the particular matter, to which ’tis here applied, viz. food, that which feeds one for an hour, or a day, (and enlargeth his life, but ſo long) being not truly food, not worthy to be ſo called, at leaſt not ſo, in compariſon with that which keeps him alive, ſo as life is adequately oppoſite to death, that is, “ for ever.” And ſo with us the word falſe ſignifies fading, tranſitory, that which will fail us, when it were moſt of advantage for us to receive benefit by it (H. and W.)

What and if.] When ye ſhall ſee me aſcend up to heaven, it will not ſeem ſtrange that I came down from thence: And, becauſe, even then, it will remain neceſſary, that ye ſhould eat my fleſh, and drink my blood, ye may be ſure, I do not mean that groſs feeding upon my fleſh, and drinking my blood, in which ye underſtand what I have ſaid; for my body will then be too far removed from the converſation of mortal men, to be capable of being ſo uſed. (Clag.) See the notes on ver. 53. and chap. iii. 13.

It is the ſpirit.] See the notes on ver. 53.

Jeſus knew.] See the notes on chap. ii. 24, 25.

Ver. 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71. From that time many of his diſciples went back, and walked no more with him. Then ſaid Jeſus unto the twelve, Will ye alſo go away? Then Simon Peter anſwered him, Lord, to whom ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of eternal life. And we believe, and are ſure that thou art the Chriſt, the Son of the living God. Jeſus anſwered them, Have not I choſen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He ſpake of Judas Iſcariot the Son of Simon: for he it was that ſhould betray him, being one of the twelve.

From that time.] While Chriſt fed his followers with the loaves, and while they hoped he would be a temporal king, and that they (as being the firſt that had declared for him,) ſhould be preferred to great places and dignities under him; ſo long he could not get rid of their company. But when once he came to tell them plainly of their faults, and to diſſuade them from minding ſo much as they did the intereſts of this world; when he had acquainted them that his kingdom was a ſpiritual kingdom, and that the only way for them to be made partakers of it, was by carefully obſerving thoſe ſtrict rules of holineſs and virtue which he taught; at this they were greatly offended, and it was as hard to keep them together, as it was before to diſmiſs them. (Blackall.)

Many of his diſciples went back.] Probably not fewer than five thouſand at once; and as far as appears by the hiſtory, there were only twelve that remained with him: And yet there can be no doubt, but theſe were the true church, and they which went away were ſchiſmaticks. Sometimes a multitude may be in the right, and ſometimes (probably much oftner) they are in the wrong; and whether they be in the right or wrong is a thing to be inquired into, not to be taken for granted: For truth and goodneſs are always the ſame; but the fancies and opinions of men are infinitely various and uncertain. And therefore, ſeeing God hath not left it to us to determine among ourſelves by moſt votes, which is the true religion and the right worſhip, but hath himſelf clearly ſtated and determined this matter in the ſcripture, that determination of his is, and will ever be, moſt undoubtedly true; 'tis that therefore that we muſt ſtick to, and abide by, let the crowd, or the multitude, go which way it will. (Idem.) Amongſt all theſe who now went back, St. Mark the Evangeliſt is ſaid to have been one, and that he was happily recover'd by St. Peter. (Tayl)

Will ye alſo go away?] Theſe words are not ſo much a queſtion put to them, to know whether they would ſtay or go, as an option given them; a leaving it to their will and choice, whether they would do the one or the other: From whence we may obſerve, 1. That it is not agreeable to the nature of the Goſpel, to force or compel men to the profeſſion of it; (See the notes on Luke xiv. 23.) And, 2. That no licence given, no toleration granted, no exemption from temporal penalties, in caſe of ſeparation allow'd by men, is ſufficient to excuſe from the guilt of ſchiſm thoſe who ſeparate from the true chriſtian church, whereof they were members, or to render their ſchiſm no ſin. For, ſeeing church-communion is a duty laid upon us by God, it plainly follows, that no human authority can releaſe us from our obligation to it: And conſequently, that theſe words, "Will ye go away?" Or, ye may go away if ye will, by what man ſoever they are pronounced, cannot make it lawful for us to forſake the aſſemblies of the faithful; (that is to ſay) ſo long as the terms of communion there are lawful. (Blackall.)

Thou haſt the words of eternal life.] Theſe words confirm the interpretation of the former verſes (See the notes on ver. 53.) Upon which we may obſerve, 1. That Peter doth, as it were, repeat the words of Chriſt; "My words are life," ſaith Chriſt, ver. 63. "Thou haſt the words of life eternal," ſaith St. Peter: Whereas, if he had underſtood our Saviour to have ſpoken here of oral manducation, his anſwer would in all probability have been to this effect, Whatſoever appearance there may be of inhumanity, abſurdneſs and impoſſibility, of eating thy natural fleſh, and drinking of thy blood; yet we believe it, becauſe thou haſt ſaid it, who art truth itſelf, and who art able to make good thy words. We therefore hearing nothing of this tendency from him, may conclude that he knew nothing of this import of them. And, 2. That he thought it ſufficient to ſay, "We believe thou art the Chriſt;" which, if our Lord ſpake here of oral manducation, was nothing to the purpoſe: But if he only ſpake of ſpiritually eating of him, 'twas the very thing which was deſigned by our Lord in this diſcourſe, and which he ſpake of in thoſe words which ſo much offended others. We therefore conclude, with Clemens of Alexandria, That when our Lord ſaid, "Eat my fleſh and drink my blood," he allegorically meant the drinking of faith and of the promiſes; and that our Lord is by way of allegory to thoſe that believe in him, meat and fleſh, and nouriſhment, and bread, and blood: With Tertullian, That our Lord all along urged his intent by allegory, calling his word fleſh, as being to be hunger'd after, that we might have life; to be devoured by the ear, ruminated upon by the mind, and by faith digeſted: With Origen, That we are ſaid to "drink his blood," when we receive his words, in which life conſiſts; that his "fleſh is meat indeed," and his blood drink "indeed," becauſe he feedeth all mankind with the fleſh and blood of his word, as with pure meat and drink: With Euſebius, That his words and doctrines are fleſh and blood: With Athanaſius, That the words which Chriſt ſpake, were not carnal, but ſpiritual; for how could his body have ſufficed for meat, that it ſhould be made the food of the whole world? With St. Auſtin, Why provideſt thou teeth and a belly? Believe, and thou haſt eaten; for to believe in him, is to eat the living bread: And, laſtly, with Jerom, In the trueſt ſenſe, the body and blood of Chriſt is the word and doctrine of the ſcripture; the fleſh and blood of Chriſt is poured into our ears. We ſay, in the language of Origen, If ye are the ſons of the church, own theſe things to be figures; for if ye follow the letter, this very ſaying "Except ye eat the fleſh," is a killing letter: In the words of Euſebius, pronounced in the name of Chriſt, Do not think, that I ſpeak of that fleſh with which I am compaſſed, as if you muſt eat of that; neither imagine, that I command you to drink of my ſenſible and bodily blood; but underſtand well, that the words that I have ſpoken to you, they are "ſpirit and life:" For as St. Auſtin ſaith, touching the expoſition of ſcripture phraſes, If the ſaying be preceptive, either forbidding a wicked action, or commanding that which is good, it is no figurative ſpeech; but if it ſeems to command any wickedneſs, or to forbid what is profitable and good, it is figurative. This ſaying "Except ye eat," &c. ſeems to command a wicked thing; it is therefore a figure, enjoining to communicate in the paſſion of our Lord; and ſweetly and profitably remember, that his fleſh was wounded and crucified for us. (W. and Clag.)

One of you is a Devil.] Small was the number of thoſe who confeſſed Chriſt; and yet even among them was an hypocrite, who was therefore one of the worſt of men. (Beza.) "The devil put it into the heart of Judas, to betray" his maſter, chap. xiii. 2. And the infuſion of that ſpirit of Satan was ſo ſtrong in him, that it did, after a ſort, transform him into the ſame image, inſomuch that he is here called by his name, "a devil." Whence all Judas-like traytors may know, to whom they owe their wiſdom. (Sanderſon.)

CHAP VII.

Chriſt reproveth the unreaſonable forwardneſs of his kinſmen. Goeth up privately to Jeruſalem; but appeareth publickly in the temple, teaching, and maintaining his doctrine and authority. The chief prieſts and phariſees ſend officers to apprehend him. The people divided in their opinions about him. The Phariſees, enraged, rebuke their officers for not taking him; and Nicodemus for ſpeaking in his behalf.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. AFTER theſe things, Jeſus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk in Jewry, becauſe the Jews ſought to kill him. Now the Jews feaſt of tabernacles was at hand. His brethren therefore ſaid unto him, depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy diſciples alſo may ſee the works that thou doſt. For there is no man that doth any thing in ſecret, and he himſelf ſeeketh to be known openly: if thou do theſe things, ſhew thy ſelf to the world. For neither did his brethren believe in him. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, My time is not yet come; but your time is alway ready. The world cannot hate you: but me it hateth, becauſe I teſtify of it, that the works thereof are evil. Go ye up unto this feaſt: I go not up yet unto this feaſt, for my time is not yet full come. When he had ſaid theſe words unto them, he abode ſtill in Galilee. But when his brethren were gone up, then went he alſo up unto the feaſt, not openly, but as it were in ſecret.

Would not walk in Jewry.] So long as it was neceſſary for Chriſt to preſerve himſelf from danger, he was pleaſed to uſe the ordinary means for his own preſervation: namely, retirement, and withdrawing himſelf. Chriſt, as God, could have rid himſelf out of the hands of his enemies by a miraculous preſervation; but he uſed the ordinary means when they would ſerve the turn: And, as he would not decline danger when his hour was come, ſo would he not run into it, before it was come, but uſed all prudential means and methods for his own ſafety. (B.) Thus he inſtructed us, by his example, not to irritate men, or run into danger, without neceſſity, upon preſumption of divine protection; but that we are to uſe all lawful means which God hath put into our hands to avoid them. Only note, That, by abiding in Galilee, Chriſt did not decline the end of his coming into the world: Becauſe his doctrine and miracles found more faith there than in Judæa; ſo that he choſe to be moſt there, where his doctrine was like to do moſt good. Note alſo, That to walk, when it relates to places or perſons, ſignifies to tarry there, or with them, for a time; as in chap. vi. 66. and xi. 54. when it relates to actions or things, it ſignifies to be often doing them, or converſant about them; as Rom. vi. 4. viii. 1. xiii. 13. and xiv. 15. Gal. vi. 16. Eph. iv. 17. and Col. iii. 7. (W.)

Feaſt of tabernacles.] There were three great feaſts, which the Jews celebrated every year; namely, the feaſt of the paſſover, the feaſt of Pentecoſt, and the feaſt of tabernacles. This laſt was obſerved in the month of September, after they had gather'd in the fruits of the earth; whence it was alſo called the feaſt of ingathering. At this feaſt they went out of their houſes, and dwelt in booths ſeven days, in remembrance of their living in tents or booths in the wilderneſs, for forty years together, before they came to Canaan. Now, the inſtitution of this feaſt, being to call to the Iſraelites remembrance their former condition in the wilderneſs, teaches us, how prone and ready we are to forget our troubles, and the mercies wherewith our troubles have been ſweetned, when once they are paſt and over. The Jews, when ſettled in Canaan, going out of their houſes yearly, and dwelling in booths, did thereby teſtify, that preſent mercies had not made them forget former trials and troubles. (B.) Concerning theſe booths, the Jews write, That they ought to be made in the open air, not within doors, nor under the ſhelter of a tree: They ought not to be cover'd with cloaths, nor to be made too cloſe with the boughs; but ſo as the ſun and ſtars might be ſeen, and the rain deſcend thorough them. In theſe they ought to dwell thoſe ſeven days, as in their houſes: They ought to furniſh them with houſhold-ſtuff to lay under them, and to ſleep under them; only in rainy weather they had liberty to eat and ſleep in their houſes, till the rain was over; and feeble perſons, who could not endure the ſmell of the earth, were permitted to ſtay at home. In Nehemiah's time, they made their booths, ſome upon the roof of their houſes, which were flat, Deut. xxii. 8. ſome in their courts, ſome in their ſtreets, Nehem. viii. 16. Plutarch ſays, theſe booths were made principally of ivy-boughs: But the ſcripture reckoneth up four diſtinct kinds, which are thought to be the citrine-tree, the palm-tree, the myrtle-tree, and the willow of the brook, Lev. xxiii. 40. The rabbins teach, that every man brought, every morning, his burden of the boughs of theſe four trees, otherwiſe he faſted that day: And this burden they termed Hoſannah. (See the notes on Matt. xxi. 9.) The ſacrifices offer'd on theſe ſeven days, are preſcribed, Numb. xxix. 13, &c. The 22d day of the month was in truth a diſtinct feaſt; as appeareth, Nehem. viii. 18. But yet, becauſe it immediately follow'd the feaſt of tabernacles, it hath always been accounted the laſt day of that feaſt. (Godw.) From the command to begin this feaſt on "the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month," Lev. xxiii. 34, &c. that is, the month Tiſri, (which anſwers to the latter part of our September, and beginning of October,) it is well obſerv'd by the learned Dr. Prideaux, that the epiſtle of the Jews, ſet down in the beginning of the ſecond book of the Maccabees, ſeems to be ſpurious: Becauſe it ſpeaks of "the feaſt of tabernacles in the month Caſleu," 2 Macc. i. 9. which falls in the middle of winter; when they could neither lie abroad in ſuch booths, nor find green boughs enow to make them.

That thy diſciples alſo may ſee.] That is, either that thy diſciples in Judea may ſee the works thou doſt in Galilee: Or that thy diſciples in Galilee, going up to the feaſt, and ſeeing thee doing the like works there, before the Sanhedrim, who can beſt judge of them, may be the more confirmed in the faith; for "the Galileans receiv'd him, having ſeen all the things that he did at Jeruſalem, at the feaſt;" chap. iv. 45. (W.)

Seeketh to be known openly] En parrheſia einai. This greek word, parrheſia, in the New Teſtament hath divers ſignifications. 1. It ſignifies adeian, that is, boldneſs, confidence, or fearleſneſs of danger; as in chap. xi. 54. and ſo likewiſe, Acts xxviii. 31. Phil. i. 20. Hebr. iii. 6. and x. 35. and 1 John iv. 17. and elſewhere. 2 It ſignifies freeneſs, or liberty, of ſpeaking what a man will: As in Acts ii. 29. 2 Cor. vii. 4. Philem. viii. Hebr. iv. 16. 1 John ii. 28. iii. 21. and v. 14. and elſewhere. 3. From this ariſes a third ſenſe of the word, to ſignify perſpicuity of ſpeech, in oppoſition to dark parabolical expreſſions; As in chap. x. 24. xi. 14. xvi. 25. and 29. and 2 Cor. iii. 12, 13. 4. It ſignifies ſpeaking in any aſſembly, in a declamatory way: As in Mark viii. 32. and in this chapter, ver. 13. and 26. and elſewhere. And, 5. It ſignifies authority. Thus, I conceive, it is to be underſtood in theſe books, whenſoever it has the prepoſition en (with, or in,) before it; as in this, and many more places. (H.)

Neither did his brethren believe in him.] His kindred did not as yet believe that he was the Meſſiah, becauſe they ſaw not that pomp and outward ſplendor, which they expected from the Meſſiah: Or, imagining, that he ſought to be, en parrheſia, a publick perſon, they conceived, that he pretended to do more than indeed he could; as appears from theſe words, "If thou doſt theſe things, ſhew," that thou doſt them, where the beſt judges of thy actions are. Yet, that afterwards they believed, we learn from Acts i. 14. where they are number'd among thoſe who cleaved to the Apoſtles. (W.)

My time is not yet come.] See the notes on chap. ii. 4.

The world cannot hate you.] The ſeeming oppoſition between theſe words, and thoſe in chap xv. 19. will be removed, by obſerving, that our Lord ſpeaks to thoſe who did not as yet believe in him, ver. 5. They therefore entertaining the ſame opinion of him at that time with the generality of the world, it is not to be wonder'd at, that they were "not hated" by it on that account. But when they ceaſed to be "of the world," and embraced the ſame ſentiments with the reſt of his followers, then they, not conforming to the world, were hated by it. (Fox.) See the notes on chap. iii. 19.

Go ye up.] Here our Lord tells his kindred, that they might go up ſecurely at any time, for the reaſons newly given: But, for his own part, he ſays, "I go not up yet unto this feaſt; for my time is not yet full come." He would go up, in obedience to the divine command: But he would go as privately as he could; to avoid danger, by human prudence, when there was no neceſſity of doing it by a miraculous power. "I go not up yet to this feaſt." Here Grotius notes, That this particle (oupo) yet, was not originally in the text; becauſe Porphyry accuſes Chriſt of inconſtancy and mutability, (ſaith St. Jerom) as ſaying, I go not up to this feaſt, when afterwards he went; and therefore concludes this particle was after added by the Chriſtians, to avoid the force of his objection. But, this is to accuſe the Chriſtians of adding to, and altering the ſcriptures, to ſave the credit of an heathen, and profeſs'd enemy to chriſtianity! As if Porphyry could not read negligently, or meet with a deficient, or corrupt latin copy! 'Tis certain, that Chryſoſtom reads it nun, or oupo: So did alſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions, the Alexandrian, and moſt other, manuſcripts: And both the words preceding and following do require this reading: For Chriſt ſaith, ver. 6. "My time (of going up) is not yet come;" and here, "I go not up yet unto this feaſt, for my time is not yet come:" Where he reſpects not the time of his death, as ſome imagine; for then he ſhould not have gone up to Jeruſalem, till the time came that he was to ſuffer there; whereas we find him, at this feaſt of tabernacles, ver. 10. and "at the feaſt of the dedication," chap. x. 22. He therefore muſt here ſpeak of his "going up to this feaſt." (W.) This reading of the text is warranted by Tolet, and even by the vulgar Latin: Notwithſtanding which, certain Jeſuits in England have had the confidence, openly and gravely, to produce it, as an authority for their new-invented doctrine of equivocation and mental reſervation; as if our Lord had abſolutely ſaid, "I go not up," with a ſecret reſervation of his intention to go; whereas, by adding the word yet, he does not deny his intention to go, but only delays it till he ſhould ſee the proper time for it. (Abbot prælect. de mendacio.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Then the Jews ſought him at the feaſt, and ſaid, Where is he? And there was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for ſome ſaid, He is a good man: others ſaid, Nay; but he deceiveth the people. Howbeit, no man ſpake openly of him for fear of the Jews. Now about the midſt of the feaſt, Jeſus went up into the temple, and taught. And the Jews marvelled, ſaying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned? Jeſus anſwered them, and ſaid, My doctrine is not mine, but his that ſent me. If any man will do his will, he ſhall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I ſpeak of my ſelf. He that ſpeaketh of himſelf, ſeeketh his own glory: but he that ſeeketh his glory that ſent him, the ſame is true, and no unrighteouſneſs is in him. Did not Moſes give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? The people anſwered and ſaid, Thou haſt a devil: who goeth about to kill thee? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel. Moſes therefore gave unto you circumciſion (not becauſe it is of Moſes, but of the fathers) and ye on the ſabbath-day circumciſe a man. If a man on the ſabbath-day receive circumciſion, that the law of Moſes ſhould not be broken; are ye angry at me, becauſe I have made a man every whit whole on the ſabbath-day? Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment. Then ſaid ſome of them of Jeruſalem, Is not this he whom they ſeek to kill? But lo, he ſpeaketh boldly, and they ſay nothing unto him: do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Chriſt? Howbeit we know this man whence he is: but when Chriſt cometh, no man knoweth whence he is. Then cried Jeſus in the temple as he taught, ſaying, Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of myſelf, but he that ſent me is true, whom ye know not. But I know him, for I am from him, and he hath ſent me. Then they ſought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, becauſe his hour was not yet come. And many of the people believed on him, and ſaid, When Chriſt cometh, will he do more miracles than theſe which this man hath done?

Murmuring among the people.] Obſerve here the different opinion which the Jews at Jeruſalem do expreſs concerning our Saviour; ſome allowing him the charitable character of being a good man; others traducing him as being a deceiver of the people. Our dear Lord, we ſee, when here on earth, paſſed through evil report and good report. Is it any wonder, to find the friends of Chriſt branded with infamy and reproach, when Chriſt himſelf paſſes under the infamous character of a deceiver of the people? Some allowed him to be "a good man; others ſaid, Nay, but he deceiveth the people." (B.) The chief freedom which men have in the world, is to ſpeak ill of Chriſt and his religion! What eſteem then ought we to have for the world? That which Chriſt ſuffer'd in his own perſon, from the Jews, he now ſuffers in his church, his truth, and his ſervants, at the hands of infidels and hereticks, and frequently of wicked livers among the orthodox. A profligate perſon generally finds protection, and ſome perſons to ſpeak in his favour; whereas a good man is abandon'd, and no body dares open his mouth in his behalf. The reaſon is, becauſe the worldly man is more faithful to the world, than Chriſtians are to Chriſt. How deſirable is it then to be thus abandon'd, ſince it gives us ſo great a conformity with our head? (Q.) See the notes on ver. 40. and chap. vi. 14.

No man ſpake openly.] See the notes on ver. 4.

About the midſt of the feaſt.] Dr. Pocock informs us, that the days betwixt thoſe which were ordinary and feſtival, were ſtiled dies medii, intermediate days; becauſe ſome works might be done in them, which were not lawful to be done on their ſolemn feaſt days. And ſuch were the days here ſpoken of, viz. thoſe between the firſt and the laſt days of this feaſt. (G. H. and W.) Here father Queſnel has laid down ſeveral inſtructions for a preacher, who is rightly and duly called to that office. 1. That he ſhould avoid all eagerneſs and forwardneſs to preach; after the example of Chriſt, who lets about half the octave of the feaſt be paſt over before he begins. 2. That he ſhould not exerciſe ſo holy a function at the inſtance of his relations, or upon motives of fleſh and blood. 3. That he ſhould not make the firſt day of his preaching a mere feſtival. 4. That he ſhould ſet apart as much time for prayer as for preaching. 5. That he ſhould not, under pretence of preparing himſelf to preach, excuſe himſelf from keeping the feſtivals in a Chriſtian manner. 6. That his ſermons ought to be inſtructions, and not declamations; teaching, and not trifling away the time in diſplaying fine thoughts, or playing upon words. 7. That he ſhould lay in beforehand a large ſtock of knowledge, as to the truths of religion, by the ſtudy of the ſcriptures. 8. That he ought, by prayer, as well as ſtudy, to endeavour to attain ſuch knowledge. 9. That he ſhould not preach his own doctrine, but only what he can refer to God as the author. 10. That he ſhould ſo preach, that the ſervants of God may know it to be his word in the mouth of the preacher. 11. That he ſhould not ſeek his own glory, but only that of God. 12. That he ſhould not be diſcouraged at the hardneſs of ſinners hearts. 13. That he ſhould not through fear, either of ill uſage, or even of death itſelf, diſſemble ſuch truths as are neceſſary, be they ever ſo diſagreeable to ſinners. 14. That he muſt not expect to ſee himſelf juſtified before the wicked world. 15. That he ſhould ſlight and diſregard perſonal affronts and injuries, but never deſert the cauſe of God. And, 16. That he ſhould not give over inſtructing thoſe whom God has committed to his care, let the world ſay and do what it will to the contrary.

Jeſus went up into the temple, and taught.] Obſerve here, 1. Tho' Chriſt went up to Jeruſalem privately, leſt he ſhould ſtir up the jealouſy of the Phariſees againſt himſelf unſeaſonably; yet went he into the temple, and taught publickly: His example teaches us, that altho' the ſervants of Chriſt may for a time, and in ſome caſes, withdraw themſelves from apprehended danger; yet when God calls them to appear openly, they muſt do it courageouſly, without ſhrinking, tho' the danger be ſtill impending. Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem, enter'd the temple, and taught. 2. So admirable was our holy Lord's doctrine, that the Jews marvelled how he ſhould come to the knowledge of ſuch divine myſteries, conſidering the meanneſs of his education. They were ſtruck with admiration, but they wanted faith; whereas the leaſt degree of ſaving faith is beyond all admiration without it. 3. Our Lord vindicates his doctrine, telling the Jews, That the doctrine he deliver'd was not his own; that is, not of his own inventing and deviſing: it was no contrivance of his, nor taught him by men; but received immediately from the Father, whoſe embaſſador and great prophet he was. Again, When Chriſt ſays, "My doctrine is not mine," that is, not only mine, but my Father's and mine. For as he was God equal with the Father, ſo he naturally knew all his counſels; and as man had knowledge thereof, by communication from his Godhead. Learn hence, That the doctrine of the Goſpel is a doctrine wholly from God; he contrived it, and ſent his own Son into the world to publiſh and reveal it. Chriſt was ſent, and his doctrine was not his own, but his that ſent him. 4. A double rule given by our Saviour, whereby the Jews might know, whether the doctrine he preached were the doctrine of God. 1. If a man walk uprightly, and doeth the will of God, in the beſt manner, according to his knowledge; "If any man will do his will, he ſhall know of my doctrine whether it be of God." There is no ſuch way to find out truth, as by doing the will of God. 2. They might know that his doctrine was from God, becauſe he ſought his Father's glory, and not his own, in the delivery of it. "He that ſeeketh his glory that ſent him, the ſame is true." Hence learn, That the nature and ſcope of that doctrine which Chriſt deliver'd, eminently tending not to promote his own private glory, but the glorifying of his Father, is an undoubted proof and evidence, that his doctrine was of God. (B.)

Not mine, but his that ſent me.] Here Stegman ſays, If Chriſt had any other nature beſides the human, according to which he was the prime author of his doctrine, could he have truly ſaid, "My doctrine is not mine"? Could one who was the true God, deny that he "ſought his own glory"? Since the true God cannot do otherwiſe, ſure he, who thus denies theſe things, which are ſo proper to God, cannot be God moſt high. To which ſome anſwer, 1. That this indeed cannot properly be ſaid of him, Super quem alius non eſt, who has none ſuperior to him; which is the diſtinction put by Juſtin Martyr and Irenæus, betwixt God the Father and the Son, whom they believed to be truly God; viz. That this cannot be ſaid of him who is the original, and the fountain of the Deity, and derived his eſſence from none; but it may be ſaid of him who is "God of God," as deriving his divine eſſence from the Father; eſpecially when, "being in the form of God," he did not covet to appear as God, but "took upon him the form of a ſervant," acting, even when Lord of all things, "to the glory of God the Father," Phil. ii. 6, 7, and 11. For thus he ſpeaks of himſelf, as having an original, according to which the Jews "knew both who he was, and whence he was," ver. 28. of this chapter: That is, ſaith Stegman, of what parents he was according to the fleſh: And yet, chap. viii. 14. he ſaith, "Ye cannot tell whence I come;" and ver. 19. "Ye neither know me, nor my Father:" That is, ſaith the ſame Stegman, Ye know not my divine excellency: And ſo both, ſaith he, are true, but in a diverſe manner; they knowing him, as to his earthly parents, but not as to his divine excellency and deſcent from heaven. Why therefore may we not uſe the like diſtinction here, viz. That his doctrine was not his only, and yet was his; That he came not to do his own will, and yet he did it; that is, he did not do it, as he was man, but yet did do it as he was God as well as man? (See the notes on chap. vi. 38.) Since, from this inſtance it appears, that truly may be aſcribed to him in an higher ſenſe, which he removes from himſelf, when he ſpeaks of himſelf as acting here on earth. Thus he tells his apoſtles, he was to be "no more in the world, but to leave the world, and go to the Father;" and even to "go away" from them, chap. xvi. 7, 28. and xvii. 11. And yet he promiſeth to be "always with them," Matt. xxviii. 20. and to "abide with them for ever," John xiv. 16, 23. See the note on ver. 28. But, 2. I anſwer, That Chriſt, by ſaying theſe and the like words, reſpects himſelf as a prophet, ſent by his Father into the world. Now the very office of a prophet requires, that he ſhould ſpeak nothing of himſelf, nor deliver his own mind and doctrine, nor ſeek his own glory; but ſhould ſpeak all things in the name, and do all things for the glory of him that ſent him: And to this may be referr'd moſt of thoſe paſſages of this Goſpel, which the Socinians urge againſt the deity of Chriſt; they being ſpoken by him, not to declare by what power and wiſdom he acted, as he was the only begotten Son of God, but to demonſtrate, that he was no falſe prophet, that he delivered not a doctrine invented by himſelf, to get a name and reputation to himſelf, but only taught that doctrine he had received from his Father, and which tended to advance his glory. For, 1. To ſpeak of himſelf, in the ſcripture phraſe, is to ſpeak from his own heart and private motion and invention, what he had not received from God, as the falſe prophets did. So Moſes ſays, "Hereby ye ſhall know, that the Lord hath ſent me, to do all theſe works, for I have not done them of my own heart," (or at my own will, ſay all the Targums.) And Balaam ſpeaks thus, "If Balaak would give me his houſe full of ſilver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad, of my own mind, (of my own will, ſaith the Targum;) but what the Lord ſaith, that will I ſpeak." Numb. xxii. 18. xxiv. 13. Hence God complains of the falſe prophets, that "they ſpake from their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord," Jer. xxiii. 16. and "the deceits of their own hearts," ver. 26. Thus, to "ſpeak of (or from) himſelf," here, in ver. 17, 18, is oppoſed to ſpeaking from God, and chap. viii. 28. it ſtands oppoſed to ſpeaking what he was taught by God; in theſe words, I ſpeak "not of myſelf, but as the Father hath taught me, ſo I ſpeak;" and chap. xii. 49. "I ſpeak not of myſelf, but as the Father hath given me commandment." See alſo chap. xiv. 10. When, therefore Chriſt ſaith, "My doctrine is not mine," he ſpeaks not this in reſpect of his own knowledge; he having in him "all the treaſures of wiſdom," Col. ii. 3. nor in reſpect of authority, for he oft ſtiles it "his word, his commandment;" nor in reſpect of his will, which was always one with that of his Father: but he only denies, that he ſpake as a falſe prophet, ſaying things of himſelf, without commiſſion from his Father; or running when he had not ſent him, as they did, but, as the Baptiſt, ſaith of him, "ſpake the words of God." Now, what reaſon can be given, why Chriſt, tho' having in him all "the fulneſs of the Godhead," might not ſay, when upon earth, he ſpake and acted as a prophet ſent from God; that he was no falſe prophet; that he uttered no doctrine of his own invention, nor any thing which he had no commiſſion to ſpeak to them; and that in the delivery of it "he ſought not his own glory," as the falſe prophets did? (W.)

If any man will do his will.] That is, if he hath an honeſt heart, prepared to obey the truth, when he is convinced of it, "he ſhall know of the doctrine;" i. e. ſhall have means ſufficient to convince him that it is of God. [Idem.)

Did not Moſes give you the law?] Obſerve here, 1. That our Lord, having vindicated his doctrine, in the former verſes, comes now to vindicate his practice, in healing the impotent man on the ſabbath-day, for which the Jews ſought his life, as a violation of the fourth commandment given by Moſes. Our Saviour tells them, That, notwithſtanding their pretended zeal for the law of Moſes, they more notoriouſly broke the ſixth commandment, by "going about to kill him," an innocent perſon, than he had broke the fourth, by "making a man whole on the ſabbath-day." Hence learn, That it is damnable hypocriſy, when men pretend great zeal againſt the ſins of others, and do allow and tolerate worſe in themſelves. This is, for their practice to give their profeſſion the lye. The Jews condemn our Saviour, for a ſuppoſed breach of the fourth commandment; whilſt they are guilty themſelves of a real breach of the ſixth. Obſ. 2. The ignominy and reproach which the Jews fix upon our bleſſed Saviour, in the heighth of their rage and fury againſt him. "Thou haſt a devil!" The king of ſaints in heaven, as well as the whole hoſt of ſaints on earth, hath been frequently ſmitten and deeply wounded with reproach. Chriſt was reproached for our ſake, and when we are reproached for his ſake, he takes our reproach as his own. Moſes's reproach was the reproach of Chriſt, Heb. xi. 26. And he eſteemed it a treaſure, which did more enrich him with its worth, than preſs him with its weight. "Eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Egypt." Obſ. 3. The wonderful meekneſs of Chriſt, in paſſing over this reproof and calumny, without one word of reply. Guilt is commonly clamorous and impatient; but innocence is ſilent and regardleſs of miſreports. Our Saviour is not at the pains of a word, to vindicate himſelf from their impotent cenſure; but goes on with his diſcourſe, and juſtifies his own action, in healing a man on the ſabbath-day, from the Jews own practice in circumciſing their children on that day, if it happen to be the eighth day: And the argument runs thus; if circumciſion may be adminiſtred to a child on the ſabbath-day, which is a ſervile kind of work and bodily exerciſe, without blame or cenſure; why muſt I fall under cenſure, for healing a man on the ſabbath-day, thoroughly and perfectly, only by a word ſpeaking? Hence learn, That the law of doing good, and relieving the miſerable at all times, is a more ancient and excellent law, than either that of the ſabbath reſt, or of circumciſion upon the eighth day. A ritual law muſt and ought to give place to the law of nature, which is written in every man's heart. As if our Lord had ſaid, If you may wound a man by circumciſion on the ſabbath-day, may not I heal one? If you may heal on that day one member of the circumciſed, may not I make a man whole every whit? If you be at pains to cure ſuch a one with your hand, may not I without pains cure a man with the word of my mouth? (B.) See the notes on ch. vi. 16, 18

None of you keepeth the law.] That is, none of you who go about to deſtroy an innocent perſon, Exod. xxiii. 7.

Thou haſt a devil.] It did not ſeem credible to the multitude, that any body endeavoured to kill him: And therefore they charge him of being mad, and poſſeſſed with a lying ſpirit. (G. H. and W.) See the notes on Matth. iv. 24. and xvii. 15.

Ye all marvel.] That is, Ye look upon it with anger and offence, ver. 23. So thaumazein ſignifies alſo in Eccleſ. v. 8. Ecclus. xi. 21. (W.)

Moſes therefore gave] 'Tis to be obſerved, that as de in other goſpels, ſo oun in this, is a particle of tranſition, otherwiſe inſignificant, ſerving only for paſſage, not to import any cauſalty. And the ſame is here to be ſaid of dia touto, in the beginning of this verſe, which is only a form of proceeding in the preſent diſcourſe, and might be rendred, To this purpoſe, ye may obſerve; That which follows being an account of the lawfulneſs of working cures on the ſabbath-day, and not the concluding this from the former, as dia touto, for this cauſe, or therefore, literally would import. But, 'tis poſſible, that dia touto, here might be the concluding of the former verſe, and the reading thus, thaumazete dia touto, Ye wonder, or are angry with me, for this. So Theophylact reads it. But this is a conjecture. (H. and W.)

Not becauſe it is.] Not that circumciſion was firſt inſtituted by Moſes; for it came down from the fathers, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob. (G.)

Ye on the ſabbath-day circumciſe] The preſcript time for circumciſion was the eighth day, Gen. xvii. 12. Yea, the eighth day was ſo preciſely obſerved, that if it fell on the ſabbath, yet they circumciſed the child; whence aroſe that ſaying among them, Circumciſio pellit ſabbatum; the ſabbath giveth place to circumciſion. The Jews ſuperſtitiouſly conceiting, that each creature's perfection depended upon the ſanctification of one ſabbath-day at leaſt, ſay that God did therefore injoin the eighth day, that one ſabbath might firſt paſs over each male, before he ſhould be partaker of this ſacrament. But we may more probably ſay, that the reaſons why God would not ſuffer them to anticipate the eighth day were, 1. To ſhew, that God, in the matter of ſalvation, neither was, nor is, ſimply tied to ſacraments; for, if ſo, there had been no leſs cruelty in forbidding circumciſion until the eighth day, than there was love in permitting it on the eighth day. 2. Becauſe in this time of the Moſaical pædagogy, there was a kind of legal uncleanneſs, in which the creatures were thought to be, as remaining in their blood, for the firſt ſeven days after their birth, Lev. xii. 2, 3. and xxii. 27. Notwithſtanding, God thought it not convenient to defer it longer than eight days, for the comfort of the parents, which they received by a mature and ſeaſonable initiation of their children. (Godw.)

That the law of Moſes.] All interpreters do acknowledge, that the Greek particle hina frequently ſignifies yet ſo as: And it cannot well admit of another ſenſe here; where it ſhould be render'd, "If a man on the ſabbath-day receive circumciſion, yet ſo as not to break the law of Moſes, &c." as Heinſius has obſerv'd, and as is evident from our Saviour's deſign in this expreſſion.

Judge not according to appearance] From the foregoing argument, Chriſt draws an inference or concluſion, That there is no making a judgment according to the firſt appearance of things; and that ſuddenneſs or raſhneſs, prejudice or partiality in judging, overthrows righteous judgment. This is the general application of what he had ſaid before; and the particular application of it as to himſelf, comes to this; "Judge not according to appearance, but judge righteous judgment:" As if Chriſt had ſaid, Lay aſide your prejudices againſt my perſon, and compare theſe caſes attentively and impartially with one another; and then ſee whether ye can juſtly condemn me as a ſabbath-breaker, and acquit yourſelves. Such was the perfect innocency of our Saviour's actions, that he could and did ſubmit them to the reaſon and judgment of his very enemies. (B.)

Then ſaid ſome of them.] Obſerve here, 1. Our bleſſed Saviour having vindicated both his doctrine and practice, and appeared publickly in the temple, and ſpeaking boldly there, the People of Jeruſalem, knowing the hatred and enmity of the chief prieſts and rulers againſt him, do wonder that they did not apprehend him. Learn, Almighty God doth and can preſerve his own, in the faithful diſcharge of their duty, in ſuch an admirable manner, that even their enemies themſelves may wonder at it, and be aſtoniſhed with it. Obſerve, 2. The argument which the Jews urged againſt our Saviour's being Chriſt, and the promiſed Meſſias, namely, that they "knew whence he was," whereas "when the Meſſiah cometh, no man ſhall know whence he is." Now herein they aſſert a manifeſt untruth; for tho' Chriſt, in reſpect of his Godhead, was prefigured by Melchiſedec, who was "without father or mother, without deſcent;" (that is, without any that the ſcripture mentions) yet in reſpect of his human nature, the Jews might know whence he was; for the ſcripture plainly pointed out the tribe, the family, the lineage, and the place of his birth. Obſerve, 3. That Chriſt, being grieved at this impudent cavil, doth reply unto it with much boldneſs and zeal; he "cried, ſaying, Ye both know me, and whence I am; but the Father that ſent me ye know not:" That is, Ye know me as a man, where I was born, and of what family I am; but ye know not my divine nature, nor the Father from whom I am by eternal generation, and who hath ſent me into the world. Obſerve, 4. What cauſeleſs rage appeared in theſe men againſt Chriſt, for declaring the truth unto them: they would have taken him by violence, had not the the power and providence of God reſtrained them for the preſent, becauſe his time to ſuffer was not yet come. Hence learn, That violence and perſecution againſt the faithful diſpenſers of the truths of God, have been the lot and portion of ſuch in all ages and generations. Chriſt experienced it; let his miniſters expect it. Obſerve, 5. That altho' the rulers at Jeruſalem were angry and enraged, yet the meaner and inferior ſort of people believed on him, being convinced by the wonderful miracles which he had wrought among them, that he was the true and promiſed Meſſias. For, ſay they, "Whenever the Meſſias comes, he cannot do greater and more evident miracles than this man hath done." Learn hence, That altho' the grace of God be not enſured to, or entailed upon any ſort of people, yet ordinarily it is the meaner ſort of people with whom it prevails moſt. Many of the common people at Jeruſalem were believing, when the rulers there were perſecuting: Men that live in pleaſure and at eaſe, ſee no need of dependance upon God; have little inclination or deſire to farther the Goſpel, and to encourage either the diſpenſers or profeſſors of it; nay, it is well if they do not turn perſecutors. (Idem.) See the notes on ver. 16. and Matt. xi. 17.

He that ſent me is true.] Viz. 1. Becauſe he is the ſource and origin of the eternal and ſubſiſting truth, and as ſuch ſent him by the incarnation. 2. Becauſe he thereby made good the truth of his promiſes. 3. Becauſe he gives teſtimony to the truth of the incarnation of the Word by miracles, which are the ſeal of his divine miſſion. (Q.)

Becauſe his hour was not yet come.] Viz. The time of his paſſion. Till when, their wills, however wicked, were reſtrained from effect, by a certain divine force. (G.)

Will he do more miracles than theſe?] All the learning and ſubtlety of the ſcribes and doctors of the law does not come up to this plain and concluſive argument. Miracles are neceſſary, and withal ſufficient, to authoriſe the miſſion of a prophet: Thoſe which, according to the ſcriptures, are to authoriſe the Meſſias, can be neither greater, nor more in number, than thoſe of Jeſus; therefore Jeſus is the Meſſias, ſince, in working ſuch miracles, he plainly declares and proves himſelf to be ſo. (Q.) As he was a prophet above all other prophets, ſo his miracles were far above all other miracles. Never any one did miracles like him, even his enemies being judges; no, nor all that ever were before him, according to their own computation. For, whereas all the prophets before him, in three or four thouſand years, did but ſeventy-four miracles, beſides Moſes, who did ſeventy-ſix, if their reckoning were true; (Menaſ. Ben Iſrael's Conciliat. par. i. q. 11. in Deut.) our Saviour alone, in three or four years time at moſt, did more than it was poſſible to keep account of; inſomuch that, as St. John ſays, in a proverbial expreſſion, If they were all to be reckoned together, "the world itſelf could not contain the books that ſhould be written," chap. xxi. 25. (Bp. Lloyd.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44. The Phariſees heard that the people murmur'd ſuch things concerning him: and the Phariſees, and the chief prieſts, ſent officers to take him. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that ſent me. Ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come. Then ſaid the Jews among themſelves, Whither will he go, that we ſhall not find him? will he go unto the diſperſed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles? What manner of ſaying is this that he ſaid, Ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come? In the laſt day, that great day of the feaſt, Jeſus ſtood and cried, ſaying, If any man thirſt, let him come unto me, and drink. He that believeth on me, as the ſcripture hath ſaid, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water. (But this ſpake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him ſhould receive: for the Holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe that Jeſus was not yet glorified.) Many of the people therefore, when they heard this ſaying, ſaid, Of a truth this is the prophet. Others ſaid, This is the Chriſt. But ſome ſaid, Shall Chriſt come out of Galilee? Hath not the ſcripture ſaid, That Chriſt cometh of the ſeed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was? So there was a diviſion among the people, becauſe of him. And ſome of them would have taken him; but no man laid hands on him.

The Phariſees heard.] The Phariſees were moved, out of zeal for their traditions, and they of the Sanhedrim out of jealouſy, leſt their power ſhould be diminiſhed. (H.) But the Sadducees did not much regard theſe things, becauſe they deſpiſed traditions, and depended on the Roman intereſt to ſupport their power. (G.) See the notes on ver. 12.

Then ſaid Jeſus unto them.] That is, to the officers who were ſent to apprehend him; to convince them, that they need not trouble themſelves to take him, becauſe he was ſoon to return again to him who had ſent him. (H. and W.) Our Saviour tells them, That as they deſired to be rid of him, ſo ere long they ſhould have their deſire: He would leave them, and go to his Father; and then they would wiſh for his bodily preſence again, but ſhould not have it. Learn hence, That the deſpiſers of Chriſt have little cauſe to be weary of him, and to ſeek to drive him away by violence and perſecution; for their obſtinacy and contempt of him will cauſe him to depart, and finally to forſake them. (B.)

Ye ſhall ſeek me.] To wit, in your diſtreſs, "and ſhall not find me." Thus moſt commentators do interpret it: But the precedent words, and the following, ſeem to require this ſenſe, I go to my Father; and tho' ye ſhould ſeek me, ye cannot then find me; for ye are not fitted to go to heaven where my father is. (W.)

Unto the diſperſed.] The Jews were diſperſed before this time in ſeveral places among the Gentiles, ſome in Europe, others in Aſia: Thoſe in Europe had their chief aſſembly at Alexandria, and there the Septuagint tranſlation of the bible into Greek was in uſe; and thence they are called the diſperſion of the Helleniſts. And of theſe there were many alſo in Jeruſalem which uſed the Septuagint tranſlation, being thus ſkilled in the Greek tongue; and theſe living not in Greece are yet called, Acts vi. 1. Helleniſts, becauſe they uſed the Greek language, and the Septuagint tranſlation; whereas others are called Hebrews. The Aſian diſperſion is mentioned, 1 Pet. i. 1. and had Babylon for their metropolis, and uſed the Targum or Chaldee paraphraſe of Onkelos in their ſynagogues. Of theſe two diſperſions, ſee Rev. xii. 14. (H.) Tho' the word diſperſion is not thought to agree well with the Gentiles being in their native ſoil: Yet there ſeems a neceſſity of underſtanding, by this phraſe, the Gentiles diſperſed, from the time of building the tower of Babel, into divers nations, Gen. x. For, 1. It is not ſaid, will he go to the diſperſion, and teach the Jews? But will he go, "and teach the Gentiles?" which fixes the ſenſe to them. 2. This ſeems here to be ſaid, by way of imputation and reproach, to Chriſt: Whereas it could be no imputation on him, to preach to the Jews, to whom he was ſent; nor could this ſeem ſtrange to them: But they thought it unlawful for a Jew to converſe with the uncircumciſed, Acts x. 28. nor could they patiently hear of one ſent to preach to the Gentiles, Acts xxii. 22. Nor is the phraſe in St. Peter parallel; it being not ſimply the diſperſion, but the ſtrangers of the diſperſion." (W.) They imagin'd, that becauſe his doctrine was leſs conformable to the Jewiſh ceremonial law, he might therefore think it would be the more acceptable to the Gentiles; and that ſo he might hope to ſtrengthen and ſecure himſelf, by their help, againſt all the attempts of the Jews. (G.)

That great day of the feaſt.] This feaſt was the feaſt of tabernacles, the laſt day of which was a great and ſolemn day, as well as the firſt. See the notes on ver. 2. and 14. Now upon this day it was a cuſtom among the Jews to offer up a pot of water unto God, which they drew out of the fountain of Siloam, and carried through the water-gates to the ſacrifice, to denote the bleſſing of rain, which they then prayed for, as of ſpecial uſe againſt the approaching ſeed time; as at the paſſover they offered an omer, to obtain from God his bleſſing on their harveſt; and at Pentecoſt their firſt-fruits, to obtain from God his bleſſing on the fruits of the trees. See Rab. Levi ben Gerſom on 2 Sam. xxiii. 16. Theſe waters which they thus offered, they brought into the temple with the ſound of the trumpet; and offered them with ſinging of voices and inſtruments. And in relation to theſe cuſtoms of the Jews at that feaſt Chriſt here is ſaid to have cried, with a loud voice, ſupplying the ſound of the trumpet, a voice of proclaiming, "ſaying if any man thirſt," &c. taking occaſion from their cuſtom of drawing water out of Siloah, to excite the people to fetch and draw from him, as from a true fountain, all the gifts of the ſpirit, which may tend to the fitting them for a divine heavenly plantation. (Tremel. Godw. G. H. W. and B.)

If any man thirſt.] It was uſual with Chriſt, to take occaſion from ſome obvious thing, to diſcourſe and preach his goſpel; and to make uſe of phraſes metaphorically taken from the matter in hand, Thus here, and to the woman at Jacob's well, he uſes the phraſe of water and thirſt: To the multitude which follow'd him for the loaves, he ſpeaks in the phraſe of bread, &c. See the notes on chap. iv. 10. &c. vi. 26. &c.

Out of his belly ſhall flow.] As Chriſt had, in the foregoing verſe, alluded to that cuſtom of offering the water; ſo he doth here to another, which was at their fountains to build great veſſels of ſtone, and in the midſt or belly of them to have pipes, through which the water paſſed, and came out by cocks. Now, ſays Chriſt, Thus ſhall it be with every one "that believeth on me:" He ſhall be abundantly filled with the ſpirit of God, in all the ſanctifying and ſaving graces of it. Chriſt, and his holy ſpirit are a living fountain, whoſe waters never fail: They are not a water-brook, but a ſpring of waters: We ſhall never miſs of the waters of life, if we ſeek unto and wait upon Chriſt for them; nor of ſuch a quantity, as will be ſufficient for ourſelves, and wherewith alſo to refreſh others. (H. B. and Fox.) For obſerve, 1. That Chriſt ſpeaks here of the internal gifts of the ſpirit; viz. Thoſe of prophecy, tongues, wiſdom, and the knowledge of all myſteries: For he ſpeaks of thoſe "gifts of the Holy Ghoſt," which were "not yet given, becauſe that Jeſus was not yet glorified;" he therefore ſpeaks of the gifts to be received after his aſcenſion; which were theſe internal gifts. 2. That theſe gifts of the ſpirit are promiſed under the metaphor of "waters flowing out of the belly of believers," agreeable to the nature of internal gifts. So Chriſt ſaith to the Samaritan woman, "The water which I will give will be a fountain of water ſpringing up to life eternal," chap. iv. 14. So Iſa. xxxii. 1, 2. "Behold a king ſhall reign in righteouſneſs, and princes ſhall rule in judgment; and a man ſhall be as rivers of water in a dry place." And chap. xliv. 3. "I will pour water upon him that is thirſty, and floods upon the dry grounds; I will pour my Spirit upon thy ſeed, and my Spirit upon thy offſpring;" that is, ſaith the Targum, As waters are given to the thirſty earth, ſo will I give my ſpirit upon thy ſons. And Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 26, 27. "I will pour clean water upon you, and ye ſhall be clean; I will put my Spirit in the midſt of you," (in your bowels, ſaith the Targum.) Whence it is manifeſt, that they muſt be miſtaken who ſay, the words of Chriſt are not to be found in the Old Teſtament, and ſo interpret his words thus, "He that believeth in me," as the ſcriptures require him to believe, "out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water;" whereas that phraſe, "as the ſcripture hath ſaid," is never uſed to expreſs the manner after which a thing is to be done; but always to confirm the truth and the authority of the thing mentioned. See ver. 42. Rom. iv. 3. ix. 17. x. 11. xi. 2. Gal. iv. 30. Jam. ii. 8. 3. Obſerve that Chriſt ſpake thus on "the laſt day of the feaſt of tabernacles." Now, on that day, ſay the Jews, they uſed to compaſs the altar ſeven times with branches in their hand, ſaying ſome prayers, in which they often repeated the words Hoſanna and Hatzlicka, "Save now and proſper us;" whence that day was ſtiled Hoſanna Rabba, or "the great day of the feaſt," as here. And, as they add, by the inſtitution of their prophets Haggai and Zachariah, they then fetch'd water with great joy and pomp from the fountain of Siloah, and brought it to their prieſts, who poured it upon the altar with the wine of their ſacrifice, ſinging theſe words of Iſaiah, chap. xii. 3. "With joy ſhall ye draw water from the fountain of ſalvation;" that is, ſaith the Targum, With joy ſhall ye receive a new doctrine from the elect of the juſt: And whilſt they were thus ſinging, they expected the Holy Spirit ſhould fall upon them; as they ſaid he did on the prophet Jonas, whilſt he was employed in this very action. They farther ſay, that there was a place in the court of the women, whither they carried theſe waters, called Beth-Haſcoavah, the place of drawing, becauſe thence they drew the Holy Spirit. And laſtly, Zachary foretells, that "all the nations ſhould come to Jeruſalem at the feaſt of tabernacles," chap. xiv. 16. and "in that day (ſaith he) living waters ſhall go forth from Jeruſalem," ver. 8. And hence we learn why that day was called "the great day of the feaſt," and how appoſitely our Lord ſpake to them of receiving the Holy Ghoſt, under the metaphor of living, i. e. fountain water. (W.) Tho' the Spirit was in ſome meaſure given by God, from the beginning, to good men; yet the more plentiful effuſion of it was deferred, till the aſcenſion and glorification of Jeſus Chriſt. (B.)

This is the prophet.] See the notes on chap. i. 21. iv. 42. and vi. 7.

Chriſt come out of Galilee.] See the notes on chap. i. 46.

Bethlehem where David was.] See the notes on Matt. ii. 5.

A diviſion among the people.] See the notes on ver. 12.

Some of them.] Some of them that were ſent for that purpoſe, "would have taken him:" But others of them, who were much affected with his doctrine, not conſenting, "no man laid hands on him." (W.)

Ver. 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53. Then came the officers to the chief prieſts and Phariſees; and they ſaid unto them, Why have ye not brought him? The officers anſwered, Never man ſpake like this man. Then anſwered them the Phariſees, Are ye alſo deceived? Have any of the rulers, or of the Phariſees believed on him? But this people who knoweth not the law, are curſed. Nicodemus ſaith unto them (he that came to Jeſus by night, being one of them) Doth our law judge any man before it hear him, and know what he doth? They anſwered and ſaid unto him, Art thou alſo of Galilee? Search, and look: for out of Galilee ariſeth no prophet. And every man went unto his own houſe.

Never man ſpake like this man.] Here are two things obſervable, 1. The power of Chriſt's words, to change the frame and temper of mens ſpirits: For theſe men came with hearts alienated from Chriſt, and with intention to carry him to the chief prieſts; but return with great admiration of his excellency and worth. 2. Here is obſervable the honeſty of theſe men: For they do not return with a pretence, that they feared the multitude, and therefore thought it dangerous to apprehend him; but they ingenuouſly confeſs, they could not prevail with themſelves to apprehend a perſon whoſe diſcourſes were ſo holy and divine. (W. and B.) See the notes on Matt. vii. 29.

Have any of the rulers or of the Phariſees believed on him?] This is plainly the Popiſh argument, by which they attempt to prove, That private men, laicks, and inferior prieſts, are not to be govern'd by their own ſentiments of Chriſt's doctrine; but muſt ſubmit to their general councils, and the majorpart of their church-guides. And it is as ſtrong in the mouth of the Phariſees, againſt Chriſt being the true Meſſias. (W.)

Doth our law judge any man before it hear him.] Obſerve here, how God ſtirs up Nicodemus, tho' he durſt not openly own Chriſt, yet to plead for him, that he might not be condemned unheard. This was a common rule of juſtice; and nothing but what might have been ſaid on behalf of the greateſt malefactor: Yet, tho' he could not well have ſaid leſs, God ſo order'd it, that it was enough to divert the ſtorm from falling upon Chriſt at this time. One word ſhall be ſufficient to blow over a perſecution, when God will have it ſo. (B)

Out of Galilee ariſeth no prophet.] That Galilee was under a reproach among the Jews, appears, chap. i. 46. And as there 'tis ſaid, that "no good could come out of Nazareth;" ſo here that "never any prophet came out of Galilee." But, upon ſearch, it ſeems to appear, that the Phariſees here were too large in their obſervation of reproach; for, though it happened not often, yet of Jonah we find that he was of Gath-Hepher, 2 Kings xiv. 25. that was a town of the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 13. and conſequently in Galilee, Iſa. ix. 1. and this Jonah propheſied in the time of Joaſh (when he was oppreſs'd by the Syrians) that by his ſon Jeroboam the kingdom ſhould be delivered out of their hands, 2 Kings xiv. 25, 26. and was afterwards ſent to Ninive, Jonah i. 1. (H.) It is wonderful, that not only the multitude, who had heard the ſhepherds declaring, from an angel, that Chriſt was born at Bethlehem, Luke ii. 15, 16. and had wonder'd at the words which had been told them by the Shepherds, ver. 18. ſhould make this objection here, ver. 41. but that the chief prieſts and Phariſees, who knew, that the wiſemen went to Bethlehem, to worſhip him "who was born king of the Jews," Matt. ii. 2. ſhould inſiſt upon it. This is an inſtance of the power of prejudice, to ſhut the eyes againſt the cleareſt truth. (W.) But, this tranſlation is ſomewhat like the Jewiſh proverb, viz. That the ſpirit doth not reſt but only upon the rich! Neither the one or other of theſe is agreeable either to charity or truth; for God is no reſpecter either of places or perſons: And perhaps no other circumſtance more plainly ſhews Jeſus to be the Meſſias, than this one, that he was thought to be a Galilean. Nahum, as well as Jonah, was born in Galilee: And 'tis probable alſo, that ſome of thoſe were Galileans, whom Obadiah hid from the cruelty of Jezebel. This could not be unknown to the chief prieſts and Phariſees; neither could they talk thus among themſelves. I therefore would tranſlate it, "Out of Galilee ariſeth not" (or, taking the preter tenſe for the future, according to the Hebrew idiom, will not ariſe) "that, or the prophet"; that is, the Meſſiah; the contrary of which was true. (Maſſey.) See the notes on chap. i. 46.

Every man went unto his own houſe.] They broke up abruptly, without coming to any concluſion. The reaſon of which is ſuppos'd to have been, that the Sadducees concurred in opinion with Nicodemus at that time; tho' they afterwards join'd with the Phariſees, on the accuſation of ſedition, as being greatly devoted to the Romans. (G.) See the notes upon the beginning of the next Chapter.

CHAP VIII.

Chriſt delivereth the woman taken in adultery. He preacheth himſelf the light of the world; and juſtifieth his doctrine. Anſwereth the Jews, who boaſted of their deſcent from Abraham: And conveyeth himſelf away out of their hands, when they were attempting to ſtone him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. JESUS went unto the mount of Olives: And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he ſat down, and taught them. And the Scribes and Phariſees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had ſat her in the midſt, They ſay unto him, Maſter, this woman was taken in the very act. Now Moſes in the law commanded us, that ſuch ſhould be ſtoned: but what ſayeſt thou? This they ſaid, tempting him, that they might have to accuſe him. But Jeſus ſtooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not. So when they continued aſking him, he lift up himſelf, and ſaid unto them, He that is without ſin among you, let him firſt caſt a ſtone at her. And again, he ſtooped down, and wrote on the ground. And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conſcience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldeſt, even unto the laſt: and Jeſus was left alone, and the woman ſtanding in the midſt. When Jeſus had lift up himſelf, and ſaw none but the woman, he ſaid unto her, Woman, where are thoſe thine accuſers? Hath no man condemned thee? She ſaid, No man, Lord. And Jeſus ſaid unto her, Neither do I condemn thee: go, and ſin no more.

Jeſus went.] All theſe eleven verſes, as well as the laſt verſe of the foregoing chapter, are wholly omitted in many ancient copies. St. Chryſoſtome leaves it out; ſo doth Nonnus, and Theophylact, and the Syriac interpreter: And Euthymius ſaith, that none of the ancients have taken notice of it in their expoſitions of the Goſpel. Maldonate, who ſtrives for it, to make good the Trent canon, doth yet confeſs, that of all the manuſcript Greek copies none have it but only one with Leontius's comment; and that in that alſo it is daſh'd out with a pen, and omitted by the commentator; that it is not in the moſt ancient copy of the Vaticane; that none of the twenty-three authors in the Catena mention it. And in the end of the third book of Euſebius Eccl. Hiſt. we have theſe words, ſpeaking of Papias; He hath related another ſtory of a woman accuſed to Chriſt of many ſins, which the Goſpel according to the Hebrews contains; implying it not to be in any of the four Goſpels: Other later Greek copies there are, which have this ſtory in this place; and ſo the Arabic; and moſt of the Latin; ſo the author of the Synopſis, attributed, (but 'tis thought, not truly) to Athanaſius. In this difficulty the reſolution which is given by the learned H. Grotius ſeems to be moſt reaſonable, that this part of the ſtory was, by word of mouth, delivered by the apoſtles, to them that heard them; that Papias and others had it (as is teſtified by Euſeb. l. 3. c. 39.) from the ſcholars and hearers of St. John; that, though others of Papias's pretended traditions were not, yet this was approved and received by the Church, (as ſufficiently teſtified to have come from the apoſtles, and, as St. Jerome affirms, put into that which was called the Goſpel of the Nazarens) and ſo in later times after the Syriac, but before the Arabic and ancient Latin tranſlations, put into this place of his Goſpel, and accordingly read in the church of God. (H.) But ſee the notes on ver. 9.

Unto the mount of olives.] See the notes on Luke xix. 29. and xxi. 37.

Such ſhould be ſtoned.] That all that are guilty of adultery ſhould be ſtoned, we find not in the law of Moſes: But that they ſhould "die the death;" which phraſe, ſay the Talmudiſts, generally ſignifies ſtrangling. This puniſhment of ſtoning belongs particularly to thoſe that are taken in the fact, as here the woman was, ver. 4. So ſaith Philo of ſuch, All men have counted them worthy of many deaths; and ſo of ſtoning, which was a high degree of ſeverity: and ſo Solon in one of his laws, If any man take an adulterer in the fact, he may uſe him how he pleaſe; and in the twelve tables, He that takes him, may kill him lawfully and ſecurely. (Idem.) If ſhe who was taken in adultery was a married woman, the law required that ſhe "ſhould be put to death," Lev. xx. 10. and Deut. xxii. 22. that is, ſay all the Jews, that ſhe ſhould be ſtrangled: But, if ſhe were only a damſel eſpouſed, the law ſaith, ſhe ſhall be ſtoned, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. Whence interpreters conclude this adultereſs was only eſpouſed. (Seld. and W.)

Tempting him.] The Phariſees deſire no better advantage againſt Chriſt, than a contradiction to Moſes their law-giver. It has been an old ſtratagem, to ſet Moſes and Chriſt at variance; but they are faſt friends: They are ſubordinate one to another, not oppoſed one againſt another: Moſes brings us to Chriſt; and Chriſt to glory. (P.)

He that is without ſin among you.] Chriſt ſpeaks here, not to the magiſtrate, who muſt do his office, tho' he himſelf ſhould not be innocent; but to the accuſers of this woman before him, to whom it belonged not to paſs ſentence on her. Moreover, the Jews ſay, The woman was not to be accuſed of her huſband, nor to be tried by the waters of jealouſy, if the huſband was guilty of the ſame crime. Chriſt therefore might ſpeak thus to him in the firſt place; Let him who is to accuſe her, and to begin the execution, if he be free from the like ſin, "caſt the firſt ſtone at her." Nor is it to be wonder'd, that all her accuſers, having heard this, ſhould depart from her, "being convinced by their own conſcience" of like guilt; ſeeing that was "an adulterous generation," Matt. xii. 39. And the Jews own, that the adulterous did multiply under the ſecond temple: And St. Paul ſpeaks thus, even to the doctors of the Jews, "Thou that ſayeſt, A man ſhould not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery?" Rom. ii. 22. And laſtly, Juſtin Martyr ſaith, That Trypho, and other Jews, complied with the ſentiments of their Rabbins, who permitted them to have every one four or five wives, and ſaid, They ſinned not, if, after the example of the patriarchs, ſeeing a beautiful woman, they deſired her; and ſo taught them to commit adultery. (W.)

And the woman ſtanding in the midſt.] That is, without any of her accuſers: For ſhe ſtood ſtill in the midſt of the people, ſaith the text; and the apoſtles were then with their Lord. Now, as to the truth of this hiſtory, which ſome criticks ſuſpect, it appears from the teſtimony of St. Jerom, That this hiſtory was found in many Greek and Latin copies of the Goſpel of St. John; and therefore was wanting but in few of them. The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions acknowledge it, l. ii. c. 24. The Greek code, cited by Cotelerius, ſaith, Theſe words are not to be found in ſome manuſcripts, nor in Apollinares; but they are entire in the ancient manuſcripts; and that all the apoſtles made mention of them, in the Conſtitutions they ſet forth for the edification of the church. St. Athanaſius ſpeaks plainly of it; ſaying, Hither we muſt refer what is ſpoken of the woman accuſed of adultery. St. Ambroſe ſaith, The queſtion and abſolution of the woman, which in the Goſpel of St. John was brought to Chriſt, was always famous in the church. St. Auſtin ſpeaks often of it; and ſaith, They are enemies to the faith, who take theſe words out of the books; perhaps fearing leſt it give impunity to the women. And Proſper owns it. Moreover all the verſions in the Polyglot own this hiſtory. It was found in the ſixteen manuſcripts of Stephanus; and in the ſeventeen manuſcripts of Beza, ſave one. Nor is it to be doubted, ſaith Selden, that it was received from primitive antiquity in the copies of the Eaſt; as appears from the Harmonies of Tatian and Ammonius of Alexandria, and the canons thence made. Now, this Tatian flouriſhed A. D. 160, that is, ſixty years after the death of St. John; and made his Harmonies of the Goſpels out of the copies then in uſe. Ammonius flouriſhed about the year 230, and did the ſame. And Euſebius of Cæſarea, who flouriſhed about the year 320, made his Ten Cantons out of thoſe Harmonies: Whence it may eaſily be diſcerned, what is contained in all the Goſpels; what in three; what in two; and what in one only. Now the number Eighty-ſix in the Canon belonging to St. John, contains this hiſtory; whence we may certainly conclude, that it was in his Codex. That it was wanting in ſome few Greek copies, is not to be wondred, if we conſider that the ſentence of many of the ancients was ſo ſevere, that they would not admit adulterers or adultereſſes into the church after the longeſt penance; and thought that it was no hurt to kill them; for men of theſe ſevere opinions might be unwilling to admit this hiſtory, as St. Auſtin ſaith, as thinking it gave a permiſſion to this ſin, by ſaying, "Neither do I condemn thee." The hiſtory which Papias mentions of a woman accuſed of many ſins before our Lord, or rather by him, ſeems not to be this, but rather that of the woman of Samaria; this being accuſed but of one, ſhe of many ſuch ſins; and ſo no inference can be thence made for or againſt the truth of this hiſtory. See F. Simon's Crit. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 13. and Dr. Mills in locum. (Idem.)

Neither do I condemn thee.] Tho' Chriſt abhorred the ſin, yet he did not condemn the ſinner. He did not excuſe the woman, or connive at her offence; but only declined the office of a civil judge, which was to paſs ſentence on criminals. He therefore does not ſay, No man ought to condemn thee, but "Hath no man condemned thee?" He does not execute the office of a magiſtrate in judging her to death; but of a miniſter, in calling her to repentance and reformation. Neither does he only ſay, Go, and commit adultery no more; but "Go, and ſin no more." It is not a partial repentance, or a turning away from this or that particular ſin, which will denominate us true penitents, or entitle us to the pardoning mercy of God; but a leaving off all ſin, of what kind ſoever. (B.) See the notes on Luke xii. 14. and John v. 14.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. Then ſpake Jeſus again unto them, ſaying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me, ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ſhall have the light of life. The Phariſees therefore ſaid unto him, Thou beareſt record of thyſelf; thy record is not true. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Tho' I bear record of myſelf, yet my record is true: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go. Ye judge after the fleſh, I judge no man. And yet if I judge, my judgment is true: for I am not alone, but I and the Father that ſent me. It is alſo written in your law, that the teſtimony of two men is true. I am one that bear witneſs of myſelf, and the Father that ſent me beareth witneſs of me. Then ſaid they unto him, Where is thy Father? Jeſus anſwered, Ye neither know me, nor my Father: if ye had known me, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo. Theſe words ſpake Jeſus in the treaſury, as he taught in the temple: and no man laid hands on him, for his hour was not yet come. Then ſaid Jeſus again unto them, I go my way, and ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall die in your ſins: whither I go, ye cannot come. Then ſaid the Jews, Will he kill himſelf? becauſe he ſaith, Whither I go, ye cannot come. And he ſaid unto them, Ye are from beneath, I am from above: ye are of this world, I am not of this world. I ſaid therefore unto you, that ye ſhall die in your ſins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye ſhall die in your ſins. Then ſaid they unto him, Who art thou? And Jeſus ſaith unto them, Even the ſame that I ſaid unto you from the beginning. I have many things to ſay, and to judge of you: but he that ſent me is true; and I ſpeak to the world thoſe things which I have heard of him. They underſtood not that he ſpake to them of the Father. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, When ye have lift up the Son of man, then ſhall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myſelf; but as my Father hath taught me, I ſpeak theſe things. And he that ſent me, is with me: the Father hath not left me alone: for I do always thoſe things that pleaſe him.

Then ſpake Jeſus again.] Our bleſſed Saviour having baffled the deſign which the Phariſees had upon him; and ſhewed a ſpirit of divine wiſdom, in delivering himſelf from that ſnare which they had laid for him, he returns to inſtruct the people in the treaſury. And here note, 1. He inſtructs them in the nature of his office, which was, to enlighten all men with the knowledge of divine truth; ſo that they ſhould not "walk in darkneſs," either of ſin or error, but be led to eternal life. Learn hence, That the great end and errand of Chriſt's coming into the world, was to give light unto poor ſouls that ſat in darkneſs. Obſerve, 2. The exception which the Phariſees made againſt our Saviour's teſtimony of himſelf; "Thou beareſt record of thyſelf; thy record is not true." Indeed, ſuch is the corrupt nature of man, which is prone to ſeek itſelf, and hunt after vain-glory, that it may render a perſon's teſtimony of himſelf ſuſpected: But Chriſt being true God, that cannot lye, and coming out of the boſom of his Father, as his ambaſſador, his teſtimony of himſelf is above all exception, and ought to be credited without farther proof. Obſerve, 3. How Chriſt challenges his enemies the Phariſees for judging carnally of him, and according to the meanneſs of his outward appearance, whereas "he judged no man;" that is, 1. No man, as they judged, according to outward ſhew. Or, 2. "I judge no man;" that is, at preſent. My proper work is not to condemn any, but to teach all; and my preſent office is that of a prophet, not of a judge: My coming now is to inſtruct and ſave the world; my next coming will be to judge and condemn it. Obſerve, 4. Chriſt declares that he is "not alone" in the teſtimony given of himſelf, but that "the Father did alſo teſtify and bear witneſs of him;" and that according to their own law, the teſtimony of two was always accounted and eſteemed valid. Now, ſays Chriſt, If ſo much weight is to be laid upon the teſtimony of two men, how much more forcible ſhould the teſtimony of the Father, and of him whom the Father hath ſent, be, to ſatisfy you, that what I ſay of myſelf is true? Learn hence, 1. That the Father and the Son, tho' one in eſſence and operation, yet are diſtinct perſons. 2. That theſe diſtinct perſons did bear joint witneſs concerning Chriſt: God the Father teſtified of him by a voice from heaven; and Chriſt as God, bare witneſs of himſelf as man, and as mediator: Surely out of the mouth of two ſuch witneſſes, the truth of Chriſt's divine miſſion is ſufficiently eſtabliſhed. (B.)

I am the light of the world.] The Jews uſed this ſaying of the firſt Adam (See Buxt. Lex. Talm. p. 1321.) and Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, applies it to himſelf. (W.) There are but two ways; one of which is certainly ours. The firſt is the way of light, which leads to life: The ſecond is the way of darkneſs, which leads to death. The latter is the life wherein men follow their paſſions; a life which is nothing but wandering, darkneſs and death, both in itſelf and in its conſequences. The former is the Chriſtian life, of which Jeſus Chriſt is himſelf the way, the light, and the life: The way, by the merits of his ſacrifice, and by the dignity of the myſteries of his life, and of his death upon the croſs; which comprehend all his actions, privations, and ſufferings: The light, by the truth of his word; which contains his ſaving inſtructions, his edifying virtues, and his internal diſpoſitions: The life, by the holineſs of his ſpirit; from which fountain is derived the infuſion of his love, the operation of his grace, and the communication of his glory. How great comfort muſt it needs be, to one who ſincerely deſires to be ſaved, to find thus in Jeſus Chriſt whatever is neceſſary to ſalvation! But, how dreadful is it, not to follow this only light; and to chuſe rather to follow the darkneſs of our own paſſions! (Q.) See the notes on chap. i. 4, 5, 9. and iii. 19.

Though I bear record of myſelf.] My teſtimony of myſelf doth not invalidate my teſtimony. My coming from heaven on an embaſſy to you, on another's, not my own errand (and that teſtified by the Spirit to John Baptiſt, and by him to you, if ye would believe, but however to myſelf undoubtedly known) gives a validity to my teſtimony, and joins God himſelf in the teſtimony with me: And as the Holy Ghoſt hath teſtified, that I am ſent by God, ſo my aſcenſion to heaven (which will ſufficiently prove my miſſion) being known to me beforehand, tho' not to you, and being diſcoverable by the event to you alſo, eſpecially when ſo many eye-witneſſes ſhall have teſtified it to you; it will follow, that my teſtimony of myſelf, tho' a ſingle one, will be authentick and valid, tho' perhaps, as the one is not already, ſo the other alſo will not be heeded by you. (H. and W.) See the notes on chap. v. 31.

Ye cannot tell whence I come.] See the notes on chap. vii. 28.

I judge no man.] The great deſign of our Lord's coming into the world was for the ſalvation of mankind. This he ſeriouſly endeavoured while he lived in it; and commiſſion'd his apoſtles, &c. to do the like, both then and afterwards. He being indeed appointed judge of the world, will hereafter paſs a ſentence of condemnation on all who ſhall refuſe to accept of the ſalvation he offers, on the juſt and reaſonable terms it is propoſed to them: But he was not to execute this office while he lived in this world; and therefore he ſays, both here and elſewhere, "I judge no man: I came not to judge the world," &c. (Fox.) See the notes on chap iii. 17.

Ye neither know me.] Tho' ye know my perſon, parentage, and country, yet ye know not my divine excellency and deſcent from heaven: And this reconciles the ſeeming difference between theſe words, and thoſe in chap. vii. 28. (Idem.)

I go my way, and ye ſhall ſeek me.] Here are four dreadful truths; which ought to be the cauſe of fear to all, but of deſpair to none; 1. That there are ſome perſons, from whom God withdraws himſelf, in leaving them to themſelves. 2. That then they ſeek God to no purpoſe, becauſe they do not ſeek him as they ought. 3. That they "die in their ſins." And 4. That they ſhall be eternally ſeparated from God. (Q.) The ſins of believers go to the grave before them; ſin dieth while they live: But the ſins of unbelievers go to the grave with them; while they live, they are dead in ſin, and by ſin they fall into death, from whence there is no recovery. (B.) See the notes on chap. vii. 34.

If ye believe not.] Of all ſins, infidelity or unbelief is the grand one under the Goſpel. The devil hath as great an advantage upon men, by making them ſtrong in unbelief, as God hath by making his people ſtrong in the faith; for unbelief renders a ſinner's caſe deſperate and incurable. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. iii. 18. 36. and vi. 47.

Who art thou?] See the notes on chap i. 19.

Even the ſame that I ſaid unto you from the beginning.] As I ſaid, teen archeen, "from the beginning," or before. Thus it is uſed alſo, Gen. xiii. 4. xli. 20. and xliii. 18, 20. So that I would render the whole ſentence thus, I am what I told you before; It being very common, in anſwer to ſuch a queſtion, to omit I am, or ſomewhat of like import; as in Matt. xxvi. 25, 64. and xxvii. 11. But, whereas Dr. Mill cenſures this phraſe, amongſt others, as an impropriety, and bad Greek; the ſame word is often uſed, in the ſame ſignification, by the moſt authentick Greek writers; and particularly by Hippocrates, Herodotus, and Iſocrates. (H. W. and Blackwall.) And the like is to be ſaid of the propriety of that phraſe, in the next verſe, lego eis ton coſmon, "I ſpeak (or ſay) to the world;" which is clear'd from the imputation of a ſoleciſm, by the like expreſſion in Herodotus and Xenophon. (Bl.)

When ye have lift up the Son of man.] That is, upon the croſs; (See the notes on chap. iii. 14.) "then ſhall ye know that I am he:" That is, ye ſhall then have ſuch teſtimonies, by my reſurrection and aſcenſion, and the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon my diſciples, as ſhall be ſufficient to convince you, and ſhall prevail upon many, o believe that I am the Chriſt. (H. and W.) In this verſe we may obſerve three parts of the doctrine of this divine ſchool. 1. Containing the myſteries of the Trinity, and of " the Son of man;" expreſſed by the term I am. 2. Including the actions of Chriſt's life, and his death upon the croſs; denoted by the term I do. 3. Comprehending his doctrine and maxims; ſignified by the term I ſpeak. The three fundamental points or tenets, taught in this ſchool, are, 1. That Jeſus Chriſt is " perfect God, and perfect man," in one ſingle perſon. 2. That his actions are divine, of an infinite merit and dignity. And 3. That his doctrine is truth itſelf, and the infallible rule of their life and converſation. (Q.)

He that ſent me is with me.] That which Chriſt here affirms, is that the preſence of God was always with him. And this is, 1. propounded, " He that ſent me is with me:" 2. amplified, " The Father hath not left me alone:" and then, 3. The reaſon of this is annexed, " For I do always thoſe things that pleaſe him." He did not leave him alone, in all the troubles and difficulties that he met withal, in the finiſhing the great work of man's redemption; ſtill God was with him. It is true, there was a time, when Chriſt was without the ſenſible manifeſtation of his Father's preſence, when he cried out, " My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?" (See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 46, 50.) But yet, even then, in truth and reality, his Father did not leave him: For, tho' he had not the evidences of his Father's preſence, yet he had the influences of it. To inſtance only in this one thing; God's aſſiſting preſence was always with him, both in his active and his paſſive obedience: And indeed he had that work to do, and thoſe miſeries to ſuffer, that if God had left him, if he had not been mightily aſſiſted by the divine nature, Chriſt, as meer man, could neither have done, nor have ſuffer'd, what he did: But the Father was with him, to uphold and ſupport him, Iſa. xlii. 1. And we find, that Chriſt did confide in this, chap. l. 7, 9. and Pſalm xvi. 9. And that it was made good to him, in his greateſt neceſſities, Matt. iv. 11. and Luke xxii. 43. and ſeveral other places. (Jacombe.) One man cannot ſend another, without being ſeparated from him: But God ſends his Son, by uniting the human nature to the divine, in the perſon of the Word; by an union of all the moſt intimate and inſeparable. The Hierarchical miſſion honours and imitates this divine miſſion, which is the ſource and pattern thereof. It unites the ſubordinate miniſter to the biſhop, and by him to Jeſus Chriſt; admits him to a ſhare of the prieſthood, authority, grace and ſpirit of his biſhop; renders him an inſtrument entirely one with the biſhop, in the ſacerdotal operations and ſacred functions; and makes the biſhop, in ſome ſenſe, preſent wherever the miniſter is, who acts by his power and orders, and does what is pleaſing to him, according to the ſpirit of the heavenly high-prieſt. What then do thoſe do, who ſhake off the honourable yoke of the epiſcopal miſſion! (Q.) See the notes on chap. iii. 11. and v. 19.

For I do always thoſe things that pleaſe him.] This Chriſt did, in a double reſpect, 1. His undertaking the work of our redemption was very well-pleaſing to his Father; that poor loſt and undone ſinners ſhould be brought back again unto God, and reſtored unto his love and favour, Iſa. liii. 10. " the pleaſure of the Lord;" that is, the work of our redemption. Therefore, when Chriſt was publickly to enter upon this great work, the Father ſends him out with this witneſs, " This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed," Matt. iii. 17. where he ſpeaks not of his well-pleaſing, only as to his perſon, but alſo as to his undertaking. 2. As the work itſelf was pleaſing unto God, ſo was alſo Chriſt's managing of it; for in all things he kept to his Father's commiſſion and command, doing nothing of himſelf but " as his Father bade him," ver. 28. His eye was ſtill upon his Father's will. Whatever he willed him to do, that he did. Whatever he willed him to ſuffer, that he ſuffered; and thus he " always did the things that pleaſed him." And there is the ſame diſpoſition of heart in all true believers, to pleaſe God; in all things to pleaſe him: They have the ſame ſpirit that Chriſt had, only in a different proportion. (See the notes on chap. i. 16.) And they are to ſhew forth the virtues of Chriſt: Tho' what he actually performed, they can only endeavour; what was perfect in him, may be ſincere, but imperfect in them. Now, thoſe who pleaſe God, and ſincerely endeavour to " do always the things that pleaſe him," God will be with: Such the Father will not leave alone; eſpecially in times of ſuffering and trouble: For that promiſe is exceeding full, Heb. xiii. 5. " I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee." (Jacombe, W. and B.) The Greek word areſton, here uſed, ſignifies, in common uſe, the decree or appointment of any court, or judge, or prince; (coming from areskoo, juſt as dogma, the ordinary word for an ordinance, doth from dokeoo, agreeable to the form, Acts xv. 25.) ſo the principum placita among the Romans, the arreſts of the parliament of Paris, &c. among the French, and the Common Pleas in England (that is, communia placita, or areſta) a phraſe to expreſs a court of judicature among us; the word Pleas denoting judgments in one court, as the King's Bench, a tribunal, in another. So here areſta may poſſibly be God's laws, decrees, determinations, which he, as the judge or prince of all, of his good pleaſure, determines to be done: And becauſe commiſſions are iſſued out of courts, and are a kind of decree of thoſe courts, that ſuch a man ſhould have ſuch a power, therefore areſta may be extended to thoſe. So Acts vi. 2. 'Tis not thought fit, or appointed, or determined, &c. and ver. 5. The thing was reſolv'd on, and agreed on by all, the multitude there having to do in the choice of the men, as follows; and the apoſtles conſecrating and impoſing hands on them, ver. 6. So Acts xii. 3. I ſuppoſe the meaning is, that the Jews had expreſs'd their judgment, paſt their votes in it; that is, either the Sanhedrim of the Jews, or poſſibly the people of the Jews: For ſo, ſince the power of capital puniſhments was taken from the Jews, and was now in the Romans hands, the proceeding was after the Roman faſhion; which was, ut injuſſu populi nihil fiat, that nothing ſhould be done without the command of the people. Thus 'twas before in the caſe of Chriſt, Matt. xxvii. 22. where Pilate asks the multitude, " What ſhall we do with Jeſus? and they all ſaid, Let him be crucified." This was their areſton there; and ver. 24. it ſeems, the judge could not reſiſt this vote of theirs: and the whole matter is laid on this ſentence of theirs, Pilate diſclaiming, and " waſhing his hands" from having any thing to do in it: And ſo, in that of James, the Jews, it ſeems, had given their votes, and Herod ſeeing how forward they were in it, (for ſo Euſebius expreſſes it, they not only conſented, but joined in it) to gratify them farther, he proceeded to apprehend Peter alſo: and of him 'tis added (agreeably to what hath been now ſaid) that Herod meant " after the paſſover to bring him forth to the people," that is, to ask their ſentence, or pleaſure, concerning him; and accordingly, if they ſo voted, to put him to death; and therefore, ver. 11. when he recounteth his deliverance, he calls it not only a reſcue from the " hand of Herod," but from " the people of the Jews, and their expectation." (H.)

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59. As he ſpake theſe words, many believed on him. Then ſaid Jeſus to thoſe Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my diſciples indeed; And ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free. They anſwered him, We be Abraham's ſeed, and were never in bondage to any man: how ſayeſt thou, Ye ſhall be made free? Jeſus anſwered them, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Whoſoever committeth ſin, is the ſervant of ſin. And the ſervant abideth not in the houſe for ever: but the Son abideth ever. If the Son therefore ſhall make you free, ye ſhall be free indeed. I know that ye are Abraham's ſeed; but ye ſeek to kill me, becauſe my word hath no place in you. I ſpeak that which I have ſeen with my Father: and ye do that which ye have ſeen with your father. They anſwered and ſaid unto him, Abraham is our father. Jeſus ſaith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham. But now ye ſeek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham. Ye do the deeds of your father. Then ſaid they to him, We be not born of fornication; we have one Father, even God. Jeſus ſaid unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me: for I proceeded forth, and came from God; neither came I of myſelf, but he ſent me. Why do ye not underſtand my ſpeech? even becauſe ye cannot hear my word. Ye are of your father the devil, and the luſts of your father ye will do: he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, becauſe there is no truth in him. When he ſpeaketh a lye, he ſpeaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it. And becauſe I tell you the truth, ye believe me not. Which of you convinceth me of ſin? And if I ſay the truth, why do ye not believe me? He that is of God, heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, becauſe ye are not of God. Then anſwered the Jews, and ſaid unto him, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and haſt a devil? Jeſus anſwered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father, and ye do diſhonour me. And I ſeek not mine own glory: there is one that ſeeketh and judgeth. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, If a man keep my ſaying, he ſhall never ſee death. Then ſaid the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou haſt a devil. Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou ſayeſt, If a man keep my ſaying, he ſhall never taſte of death. Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makeſt thou thyſelf? Jeſus anſwered, If I honour myſelf, my honour is nothing: it is my Father that honoureth me, of whom ye ſay that he is your God: Yet ye have not known him, but I know him: and if I ſhould ſay, I know him not, I ſhall be a liar like unto you: but I know him, and keep his ſaying. Your father Abraham rejoiced to ſee my day: and he ſaw it, and was glad. Then ſaid the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and haſt thou ſeen Abraham? Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Before Abraham was, I am. Then took they up ſtones to caſt at him: but Jeſus hid himſelf, and went out of the temple, going through the midſt of them, and ſo paſſed by.

Many believed.] That is, many of thoſe who had ſeen the miracles by which he confirmed his doctrine. See the notes on chap. vii. 31. (W.) Obſerve here, 1. The bleſſed fruit and ſucceſs of our Saviour's foregoing diſcourſe, concerning his perſon and office. "As he ſpake theſe words many believed on him:" not by their own natural power and ability, but by Chriſt's omnipotent and efficacious grace. He that ſpake to the ear, cauſed his word to reach the heart: Chriſt himſelf, that planted and watered, gave alſo the increaſe. Obſerve, 2. The love and care of Chriſt, mentioned to theſe new converts; he watereth immediately theſe plants with wholeſome advice and counſel. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my diſciples indeed." Where note, It muſt be Chriſt's word, the true doctrine of the Goſpel, and this abided and continued in, which will evidence our diſcipleſhip. Obſerve, 3. A ſpecial privilege, which ſhall follow upon abiding in the doctrine of Chriſt; they ſhall increaſe in the knowledge of it, and be made free by it. "Ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free." Where note, 1. That man is naturally in bondage and captivity, by blindneſs of mind, by hardneſs of heart, by rebellion of will. 2. That the means appointed by God for ſetting him at liberty from this captivity and bondage, is the word of Chriſt, and the doctrine of the Goſpel. "The truth ſhall make you free. (B.)

Then are ye my diſciples indeed.] They are diſciples, who come to hear the word: But the name of "diſciples indeed" belongs truly to thoſe who receive and obſerve what they are taught, as the rule of their life and actions. (G.) To "continue in his word" is not to have only a tranſient taſte of it, nor to love ſome of its truths, nor to practiſe ſome one part of it, nor to obſerve it only externally, or for ſome days or months; but it is, to love all its truths, to perſevere in the practice of them, throughout the whole courſe of our lives; and that upon a principle of love to God, and to make his law our joy and delight. (Q.)

Ye ſhall know the truth.] The Jews learned nothing but types and ſhadows in the ſchool of Moſes; the Gentiles, only falſhoods and lies in the ſchool of the devil: But Chriſtians, in the ſchool of Chriſt, learn the truth; which confounds falſhood, diſperſes ſhadows, and fulfills the law. We never learn, or "know the truth," perfectly, except when we love it; And we never love it, but only when the love thereof is graven in our hearts by the finger of God, which is his Spirit: And this "makes us free," in delivering us from the heavy yoke of the letter and ceremonies of the law, from criminal inclinations, from deceitful pleaſures and worldly fears, which render us ſlaves to ſin. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. vii 17.

They anſwered him.] That is, the other Jews there preſent; not thoſe who "believed on him," but others who were bloodily diſpoſed. (H.) Obſerve here, how theſe carnal Jews underſtand all that our Saviour ſaid, to be ſpoken in and after a carnal manner. When he ſpake to them before, of "eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood," they underſtood it groſly of his natural body: When he ſpeaks to them here of a ſpiritual freedom from ſin, they underſtand it of a civil freedom from ſervile bondage and ſubjection; alledging, They were "Abraham's ſeed, and never in bondage to any." Which was a manifeſt untruth; having been in bondage, in their anceſtors, to the Egyptians and Babylonians, and in their own perſons to the Romans. But this was not the bondage that Chriſt meant; but a perpetual ſlavery and thraldom under the dominion of ſin, and power of Satan; for he that "committeth ſin, is the ſervant of ſin:" That is, whoſoever doth habitually, wilfully, deliberately, and conſtantly, allow and tolerate himſelf in a ſinful courſe, he is under the ſervitude and thraldom of ſin: Every ſinner is a bond-ſlave; and to live in ſin, is to live in ſlavery. And this every man doth till the Son makes him free: Then, and not till then, he is "free indeed." Learn hence, That intereſt in Chriſt, and continuance in his doctrine, ſets the ſoul at liberty from all that bondage whereunto it was ſubject in its natural and ſinful ſtate. O happy exchange, from being the devil's ſlaves, to become Chriſt's freemen! and alſo freed from the rigorous exactions and terrible maledictions of the law. (B.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 9. and vi. 24.

Ye ſhall be free indeed.] There being dangerous miſtakes concerning Chriſtian liberty, it may be proper here to obſerve, That our Lord, by his coming, did abrogate and ſet aſide the Moſaic law, ſo far as it conſiſted in the outward rites and ceremonies, and typical obſervances, appointed by that inſtitution: But Chriſtian liberty cannot be ſaid to conſiſt in this, becauſe we were never under that law. No, the moſt valuable part of our liberty conſiſts in our being ſet free from the power and dominion of ſin, and the tyranny of the devil; and in our being enabled to practiſe the univerſal laws of righteouſneſs and goodneſs, and becoming thereby the obedient ſubjects of our heavenly Father. Hence the deſign of our Lord's coming is repreſented to be, to "deſtroy the works of the devil, to turn us from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God:" And "that we, being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear, in holineſs and righteouſneſs, all the days of our life." Hence the apoſtle ſpeaks of our being "made free from ſin," and becoming the "ſervants of God." True liberty therefore does not lie in having a power to do what unbridled luſt and ungoverned paſſion prompts men to; but in doing what right reaſon and the laws of God make our duty. God, who is abſolutely free, and acts without controul, is bounded by the intrinſick goodneſs of his own nature; ſo that, notwithſtanding his infinite power, he cannot commit evil, or do any thing unworthy of himſelf How widely therefore are they miſtaken, who fancy that our Lord, by his coming, has diſſolved the obligation men were under, to practiſe the duties of the moral law? For, a ſerious endeavour to conform ourſelves to the whole will of God reſpecting moral duties, by what way ſoever he has diſcovered it to us, is made a condition of our having an intereſt in his merits and death. The very heathens had a juſt ſenſe of this truth, That no man could be a free man, till he had gotten the maſtery over his ſenſual part, and lived agreeable to the dictates of right reaſon and the will of God. (Fox.)

I know, that ye are] The Jews boaſting again, that they were Abraham's ſeed, and bearing themſelves much upon it; our Saviour tells them, He knew they were ſo; his natural children according to the fleſh; but not his genuine children according to the ſpirit. This he proves, becauſe they did not tread in Abraham's ſteps, and do his works; For, if either the temper of their minds, or the actions of their lives, were agreeable to Abraham, they would not ſeek, as they did, to deſtroy and kill him, only for bringing the doctrine of ſalvation to them, which he had heard and learned of the Father. Thence learn, 1. How prone we are to glory in our outward privileges, and to rely upon them: Whereas theſe are arguments of God's goodneſs towards us, but no evidence of our goodneſs towards him. 2. That it is very dangerous and unſafe, to pride ourſelves in, and depend upon any external privileges and prerogatives whatſoever; as our being born within the pale of the viſible Church; our deſcending from pious parents, and holy progenitors: For, unleſs we be followers of their faith, admirers of their piety, and imitate their example, we are none of their children; but belong to another Father, as our Saviour tells the Jews in the other verſes. (B.) See the notes on chap. vii. 19.

That which I have ſeen.] See the notes on chap. v. 19, 30.

Ye would do the works of Abraham.] Chriſt owns, they were Abraham's ſeed according to the fleſh, ver. 37. And therefore only denies them to be ſo, as to their manners, or that reſemblance with the works of Abraham, which would make God own them as his children, viz. his ſteady faith, Rom. iv. 16. and ready obedience, Hebr. xi. 8. 17. by which alone they could obtain the bleſſing of Abraham, Gal. iii. 9, 14.

Ye do the deeds of your Father.] Here our Saviour proceeds by degrees in his reprehenſion. He intimates to the unbelieving Jews, that they have another Father: But as yet he does not name him, to ſee whether they would be brought to repentance by gentler means. (G.) It was a known cuſtom of the Hebrews, to call thoſe Fathers, who were either the authors or firſt examples of any thing; and thoſe their ſons, or children, who obſerv'd their precepts, or imitated their manners. (Spanh.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 27.

We be not born of fornication.] The prophets, repreſenting the idolaters, among the Jews, as fornicators, and their worſhipping other Gods, as their "going a whoring from their own God," Lev. xvii. 7. Ezek. xxiii. 30. Hoſ. iv. 12. and ix. 1. when they had brought themſelves off from that ſin, they repreſented the idolatry of others under that name. So that their very treatiſes of idolatry bore the name of treatiſes of whores, or whoredom: And the book of wiſdom ſaith, "The deviſing of idols was the beginning of ſpiritual fornication," or idolatry, Wiſd. xiv. 12. Hence Philo ſaith, They who introduce many Gods differ nothing from thoſe that are born of whoredom. Hence the Jews here, being free from idolatry, ſay, they were not born of whoredom, but were the children of God; as worſhipping one God only, and thinking, that, on this account, God would not impute to them their other ſins: But againſt this Chriſt here declares, they only are to be owned as the children of God, who do the works of God. (W.)

If God were your Father, ye would love me.] The Jews having, in the foregoing verſes, boaſted, that they were the children of Abraham, and in theſe, that they were the children of God; our Saviour diſproves this, telling them, that "if God were their Father, they would love him," as proceeding from him by eternal generation, and in his office imploy'd by him as mediator: Alſo, if God were their Father, they would underſtand him ſpeaking from God; whereas now they were ſo tranſported with malice, that they could not endure his doctrine with patience, tho' it came from God. (B.)

I proceeded forth.] Others are ſaid to be of God; even all that hear his words, ver. 47. And the prophets are ſtiled "men of God," in the Old Teſtament, and his miniſters in the New, 1 Tim. vi. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 17. But, tho' Moſes, the prophets, and apoſtles, were ſent of God into the world, yet it is ſaid of none of thoſe, that they did come, or "proceed forth from God:" This therefore muſt import ſomething peculiar to Chriſt. It then either muſt reſpect the Socinian gloſs, of Chriſt's aſcent into heaven, to be inſtructed in his prophetick office, and his deſcent again from thence; which gloſs I have confuted, (note on chap. iii. 13.) Or the Jews opinion, that the Soul of the Meſſiah was created at the beginning of the world, and ſo came down from heaven to animate his body; which the Socinians, who deny that Chriſt had any exiſtence before he was born of the virgin, cannot approve of: Or it muſt import his divine original from the Father, by the communication of his eſſence, or the union of the divine Logos to the human nature; which we aſſert. See the note on chap. xiii. 3 (W.)

Becauſe ye cannot hear my word.] That is, ye cannot bear it with patience. (G.) Men of your tempers cannot yield obedience to it. This doubtleſs was the great ſin of the Jews: And ſo they wanted not either natural power, or aſſiſtance neceſſary on God's part, to do this; but only a moral power, or a mind well-diſpoſed to obey his words. (W.) See the notes on chap. vii. 17.

Your father, the devil.] By reſembling him in your actions: For as he is a ſon of Abraham, who does the works of Abraham, ver. 39. ſo is he "a child of the devil," who doth his works, 1 John iii. 8, 10. not only out of ignorance, and human frailty, but from choice and affection to, or good liking of them. "He was a murderer from the beginning," i. e. as ſoon as man was created, for "through the envy of the devil death enter'd into the world," Wiſd. ii. 24. and ſo "came upon all men," Rom. v. 12. ye, by ſeeking my death, in this reſemble him: He "abode not in the truth," but ſeduced Eve by a lye; ye in like manner therefore believe me not, "becauſe I tell you the truth," ver. 45. which ſhews you have hearts alien from the truth, but well affected to falſhood, as it is with him. Oh, how tremendous a thing is it to have the devil for our father! How careful therefore ſhould we be, to avoid thoſe things which will ſubject us to this vile relation? viz. Murder, lying, hatred of the truth here; envy, and enmity to others, Matt. xxvii. 18. "bitter zeal, and ſtrife in the heart," Jam. iii. 14, 15. Pride, 1 Tim. iii. 6. every cuſtomary ſin, 1 John iii. 8. (Idem and B.)

He is a liar, and the father of it.] Ignorance of figurative Grammar, and of the allowable liberties taken by the ſublimeſt authors, has occaſion'd weak people to run into erroneous and heretical opinions. Here we have tou pſeudous a lye, included, and fully compriſed, in the ſenſe of pſeuſtees, a liar; the devil was a liar, and the father of lying. Epiphanius, in his Panærium, has five or ſix times this groundleſs and ridiculous addition, And the father autou, was a liar: Whence ſome unſtable and weak Chriſtians, conſtruing the Greek word (autou) of him, inſtead of of it, imbib'd that ſtupid error, that the devil had a father, who was a liar! Nonnus, the poetical paraphraſt of St. John, follows this abſurd reading. And yet, there are ſeveral parallel phraſes in Thucidides, which fully and unavoidably reach the point, and clear the difficulty. (Dr. Heinſ. W. and Blackw.)

Which of you convinceth me of Sin?] Obſerve here the challenge, which Chriſt gives to the worſt of his enemies. So perfectly pure, innocent and ſpotleſs, was the doctrine and life of Chriſt, that tho' his enemies loaded him with ſlander and falſe accuſation, yet none of them could juſtly convict him of the leaſt known ſin. (B.) Whereas, in a falſe prophet, ſome marks to diſcern him by may eaſily be found; viz. his thirſt after honour and applauſe, covetouſneſs, or falſhood. (W.) It belongs to none but the prince of paſtors (Chriſt himſelf,) to be entirely free from ſin: But his miniſters ought to be at leaſt free from heinous crimes; and ſhould bring to the ſacred miniſtry the innocence of their baptiſm, either wholly preſerv'd, or at leaſt, in ſome meaſure, repaired by a worthy repentance. For, he who ſhews in his manners plain and evident marks of the infidelity of his heart, in reſpect of the truths of the Goſpel, is not a likely perſon to induce others to believe them. (Q.)

He that is of God.] That is, who reſembles him in holineſs and goodneſs, and is diſpoſed to do his will, is ready to receive the doctrine that comes from him: And it is an evidence, that ye do not thus reſemble him, nor bear a filial affection to him, that ye receive not his words. (W.) The diſpoſition with which a man "heareth God's words," and the uſe which he makes thereof, ſhew whether he is the ſervant of God, and how far he is ſo. What can be ſaid of ſo many Chriſtians, who take ſo little care, either to hear or to read the word of God, or who do it only by way of ceremony and for faſhion's ſake; but that they are Chriſtians by way of ceremony, and uſe ſome ſmall endeavours after ſalvation only for faſhion's ſake? We are never tired with hearing a friend ſpeak, or ſpoken of: And ſhall we pretend to be the friends of God, and yet have a negligence, diſguſt, and perhaps a continual forgetfulneſs, of the word and things of God? (Q.)

Thou art a Samaritan.] This title of Samaritan is here, by way of reproach, affix'd on Chriſt; not that they thought him ſo, but becauſe this was an odious name among the Jews: So are idolaters called Aramæi, or Syrians, Lev. xxv. 47. becauſe the Syrians were anciently ſuch: And thus all cruel men we call Turks; and covetous Jews; not that we think they are ſuch naturally, but that they are like unto them: Or elſe, becauſe Chriſt had converſ'd with the Samaritan woman, which was againſt the Jewiſh rule, he might be thought a deſerter of the Jewiſh law, and ſo to be one of them. (H.) See the note on chap iv. 9.

And haſt a devil.] See the notes on chap vii. 20.

I have not a devil.] The reproach of Samaritan was one of the laſt affronts, at that time, capable of being paſs'd upon any man; and yet this is only anſwered by ſilence, as not worthy our Lord's notice: But the other part, of "having a devil," would draw down ſcandal upon his doctrine, and weaken the authority of his preaching; and therefore this was fit, nay neceſſary, to be confuted; and upon that point he condeſcends to reaſon with them. Hence we may learn how to diſtinguiſh injuries, and how we ſhould proportion our reſentments, according to the different ſorts and conſequences of them. Where the provocation is private, and terminates in our ſelves, it is a mark of a great and a Chriſtian mind, to put it up, or ſoftly to reprove it: But where it reaches farther, and wounds deeper, where truth and goodneſs are ſtruck at through our ſide, ſilence is tameneſs there; for then the cauſe ceaſes to be our own. God's glory, and the good of mankind, are concern'd in the reſpect due to virtue and religion: And that which is none of ours, we ought not to recede from; nor can we give it up, without committing a fault. 2. As to the manner, how to proceed in ſuch defence, Chriſt's own words are a pattern ſufficient; wherein he only clears himſelf from their wicked ſuggeſtions, with all the mildneſs that became his character, and the juſtneſs of his cauſe. (Stanh. B. and Q.)

If a man keep my ſaying.] See the notes on chap. v. 24. and vi. 40.

If I honour myſelf.] See the notes on chap. iii. 27. and v. 31.

Ye have not known him.] Obſerve here three duties with reſpect to God, 1. To know him. 2. To confeſs him. 3. To obey him. Since we cannot worſhip and adore God, unleſs we love and obey him, let us not flatter ourſelves, that we know him as our maſter and Father, ſo long as we deſpiſe his law, and do not perform his will. (Q.) See the notes on chap. i. 18. and vii. 28, 29.

Abraham rejoiced to ſee my day.] That is, he was exceeding glad, that he might ſee it. (H.) For the Greek word agalliaomai, being derived from (agan) valde, and (allomai) ſalto, ſignifies ſuch exceeding joy, as is expreſſed by outward actions, as skipping, dancing, &c. Thus David expreſſed his joy by "leaping and dancing," 2 Sam. vi. 14, 16. And in the like ſenſe it is to be underſtood, Matt. v. 12. Luke i. 47. vi. 23. and x. 21. John v. 35. Acts ii. 26. and xvi. 34. 1 Pet. i. 8, and iv. 13. and Rev. xix. 7. (Leigh.) Or it may here be underſtood as a peculiarity, ſignifying that Abraham earneſtly or vehemently deſired and longed to ſee the day, that is, to know the time, when the promiſe made to him, Gen. xii. 3. was to be fulfilled by the coming of Chriſt. (Beza, G. W. and Fox.) And this latter ſenſe affixed to it, which is not ſtrain'd or unnatural, will ſolve what ſeems to be a groſs tautology here in our tranſlation: Whereas, in this ſignification it runs eaſy and clean. The Perſian, Syriac, and Arabic verſions all give it this ſenſe; and the particle hina in the original ſeems to require it. The word ſignifies to rejoice, both in the claſſicks and Greek tranſlators of the Bible: And in the latter it ſignifies to give thanks or joyfully to praiſe; here only to deſire earneſtly: Which is a very natural metonymy, whereby antecedents and conſequents are put for each other; more natural than the uſing aſpairo, to ſignify to contend, or earneſtly ſtrive; which properly ſignifies to pant, or breath hard. And the like peculiarities are frequent in Herodotus, Xenophon, Demoſthenes, Iſocrates, Thucidides, Plato, and others of the moſt authentic Greek claſſicks. (Blackw.)

He ſaw it.] viz. By the eye of faith; as 1 Pet. i. 10. &c. (W.) A ſtrong faith gives ſuch a clear ſight of Chriſt, tho' at a diſtance, as produceth an holy delight and rejoicing in him. (B.) The word ſaw is here uſed in the ſame ſenſe, as the prophets are called Seers; becauſe they, by the gift of the Holy Spirit, could diſcern and foreſee things which were hidden to others. (D. Heinſ.)

Not yet fifty years old.] There is no cauſe to wonder, why the Jews, who were not ſolicitous about the age of Chriſt, ſhould ſpeak thus of one, whoſe gravity, wiſdom, and countenance perhaps, might cauſe them to think him older than truly he was. It was more to be admired, that Irenæus ſhould plead apoſtolical tradition for this Jewiſh error; eſpecially when we conſider, that many of the fathers, namely Clemens of Alexandria, Tertullian, Julius Africanus, Lactantius, and divers others, held that our Lord preached but one year, and ſuffer'd in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, and the thirtieth year of his age. Moreover, all Chriſtians agree, that our Lord ſuffer'd under Pontius Pilate. Now, he was depoſed by Tiberius in the laſt year of his reign, ſaith Joſephus; which demonſtrates, that our Lord's ſufferings muſt be paſt in the thirty-ſeventh year of his age. But indeed he was entring only into his thirtieth year, in the fifteenth of Tiberius, when he was baptized and conſecrated to his office, Luke iii. 1, and 23. and therefore could be but three and thirty years and an half old, in the nineteenth year of Tiberius, when he was crucified. (W.)

Before Abraham was, I am.] That is, 1. I have a being from all eternity; and ſo before Abraham was born: And therefore, as young as ye take me to be in reſpect of my age here, I may well have ſeen and known Abraham. But then, 2. In reſpect of my preſent appearance here on earth, tho' that be but a little above thirty years duration, yet, long before Abraham's time, it was decreed by my Father, and in kindneſs to Abraham revealed to him while he lived; in which reſpect 'tis true, that he knew me alſo. (H.) The Socinians interpret theſe words thus, "Before Abraham is made the father of many nations, I am the Meſſiah:" For, ſay they, 1. Prin genesthai doth not ſignify "before he was," but, "before he was made;" as it doth, chap. iii. 19. and xiv. 29. And, 2. Thoſe words Ego eimi is, Matt. xxiv. 5. "I am the Chriſt," or the Meſſiah, as Mark xiv. 62. and Luke xxi. 8. So the phraſe ſignifies, ſay they, here, ver. 24, 28. and chap. xiii. 19. But againſt this ſtrained expoſition, let it be conſidered, 1. That the whole ſeries of the diſcourſe ſhews, that the oppoſition is here put, not betwixt Abraham's being the father of all nations, and Chriſt's being the Meſſiah, but between to genesthai, the birth of Abraham, and to einai, the being of Chriſt. Moreover, the word Abraham, ſo frequent in the holy ſcripture, doth always ſignify his perſon, and is never elſewhere uſed in this myſtical ſenſe, in which it imports not his perſon, but his privilege, or rather the completion of a promiſe made to him. It being therefore evident, that the diſcourſe, from ver. 55. is of Abraham's perſon, it is incongruous here to introduce a myſtical ſenſe of the word, which the Jews never thought of; and which had Chriſt intended, he in all likelihood would have ſaid prin Abram genesthai Abraam, i. e. before the reaſon of his new name be accompliſhed. In confirmation of this argument, let it be noted, that the word genesthai ſignifies as well to be, as to be made. It ſignifies to be, Matt. v. 45. John i. 6, 30. chap. xx. 27. Acts vii. 38. and xiii. 5. And when 'tis uſed of perſons, in the ſenſe of fieri, to be made, it ſignifies to be born, produced, or generated: And ſo here, "before Abraham was made," muſt be the ſame as "before he was born." The places cited by the Socinians are doubly impertinent, viz. John iii. 19. and xiv. 29. 1. Becauſe pro toon genesthai is "before they are;" and, 2. Becauſe they ſpeak not of perſons but only of things, which were to happen afterwards. 2. Chriſt, in theſe words, anſwers the objection of the Jews, that he being "not yet fifty years old," could not have ſeen Abraham. Now, according to our interpretation, he anſwers it fully, by ſaying he was the eternal Logos, chap. i. 1. or the perſon that ſaid to Moſes, "I am," Exod. iii. 14. whereas according to the Socinian comment, his anſwer is nothing to the purpoſe, and was no more true of him than it was of all that heard him, that they were before Abraham; they being all before he was made the father of all nations. Who therefore can believe our Saviour would, upon this occaſion, put them off with ſuch a piece of ſophiſtry? For, as Novatian argues, either Chriſt lied, and put a cheat upon them, if being from Abraham, he was not "before him;" or, he was "before him," being the God of Abraham. (De Trin. c. 23.) To this Stegmannus anſwers, That this is no abſurdity, it being uſual with Chriſt to anſwer nothing directly to the objection of the Jews; to which effect he cites John vii. 20, 21. xii. 23, 25. and xiv. 23. Luke xiii. 23, 24. but very fallaciouſly: For, John xii. 23, 25. there is neither queſtion, nor objection; Luke xiii. 23, 24. there is a curious queſtion, but no objection; John xiv. 23. Chriſt ſpeaks not to the Jews, but to his own diſciples; and John vii. 20. Chriſt anſwers to the queſtion ſufficiently, by ſaying, ver. 23. "Are ye full of choler or rage againſt me?" and the people more directly, ver. 25. which made it the leſs neceſſary for him ſo to do. Let Stegman ſhew, if he can, when Chriſt anſwers in this impertinent and illuſive manner to the Jews carping at his words as being falſe, and impoſſible to be true, with ſuch an aſſeveration, "Verily, verily, I ſay unto you." 3. Had this only been Chriſt's meaning, why do the Jews "take up ſtones," to puniſh him as a blaſphemer; there being not the leaſt ſemblance of blaſphemy in the words taken in this ſenſe? They may do it, ſaith Stegman, becauſe he profeſſed himſelf the Meſſiah; for as blaſphemers, ſo alſo falſe prophets were to be ſlain. But as they never did attempt to ſlay, or to accuſe him upon this account, tho' he ſtill owned himſelf a prophet ſent from God to them; ſo they themſelves teſtify, they ſtoned, or attempted to ſtone him, for this "blaſphemy, that, being a man, he made himſelf God." chap. x. 33. 4. I aſk, whether our Saviour was willing to be underſtood by the Jews, or not? If not, why did he uſe this ſolemn preface, "Verily, verily, I ſay unto you?" If he would be underſtood, why did he ſpeak unto them in that language in which they neither did, nor could underſtand him? For how could they imagine the word Abraham was to be underſtood in ſuch a ſenſe in which they never knew it uſed? In a word, this interpretation is contrary to all antiquity; as their expoſitions in theſe caſes uſe to be: For even the Ante-nicene fathers proved that Chriſt was God, perfect from the beginning, and no new God, from theſe words. So Iren. l. 4. c. 27. Orig. contra Celſum, l. 8. p. 386. Tertul. adv. Prax. cap. 22. p. 513. Novatian, cap. 23 As for the phraſe Ego eimi, I am, let it be noted, 1. That, in the other Evangeliſts, it is only uſed to ſignify what the falſe Chriſts would ſay; and ſo can have no other import than "I am the Chriſt:" but, in this Goſpel, it ſeems to ſignify, "I am the Son of God." For he that ſaith, I am, ver. 24, 28. is he who had God for his Father, ver. 19. and was "from above" ver. 23. And chap. xiii. 19. he that calls them to "believe, I am," is he who came from the Father, ver. 3. and was their Lord, ver. 13. and was going to the Father, ver. 1. Now the rulers of the Jews ſtill accuſed Chriſt of blaſphemy, and condemned him upon this account, Matt. xxvi. 65. Luke xxii. 70, 71. Thus therefore Chriſt might ſay I am, and yet be God of God. 2. Others anſwer, with Grotius, That Chriſt here only ſignifies, that he was before Abraham, in the decree of God: But, 1. Chriſt anſwers to the objection of the Jews; which had no reſpect to the priority of theſe two perſons in the decree of God, but as to actual exiſtence. 2. In this ſenſe, even Judas, and all the murderers of our Lord, might be before Abraham had a being: And, laſtly, the arguments produced againſt the former anſwer conclude as ſtrongly againſt this. See Placæus, Argument 11. a Sect. viceſim. prim. ad finem. (W. and B.) To which I ſhall here ſubjoin a paſſage from Dr. Browne, Biſhop of Cork and Roſs, his letter, in anſwer to Toland, and all other oppoſers of revelation and Chriſtian myſteries, upon the pretence of ſetting up for reaſon and evidence, and clear and diſtinct notions of every thing they give their aſſent to. I am convinced (ſays he, p. 62, &c.) by the completion of prophecies, the miracles he wrought, and the agreeableneſs of his doctrine to the natural ſentiments of our minds, that whatever Jeſus Chriſt was, he came from God. I find him, in many places, aſſuming to himſelf the name, and titles, and worſhip of God. In diſcourſing with the Jews, he uſeth this form of ſpeech, "Before Abraham was, I am," on purpoſe to ſignify to them, that he was that very divine being which was revealed to Moſes under that name: And, ſome time after, he tells them, that as he was the Son of God, ſo "He and the father were one." That the Jews underſtood him in this ſenſe I am ſure, becauſe they took up ſtones, at each of theſe ſayings, to ſtone him as a blaſphemer, becauſe he made himſelf "equal with God." If theſe expreſſions were not to be underſtood in the ſenſe they took them, he would certainly have undeceived them, and made it known, that he was not God in the ſenſe they underſtood him, but that he was only a God by deputation, according to the wild notion of the Socinians. But he ſpake the truth, and the Jews underſtood him right, That he was eternal God, equal with the Father; the very ſame God, who was ſignified by that ſacred name, I AM: And he hath never undeceived either them or us to this day; but, inſtead thereof hath uſed many expreſſions to countenance and encourage this notion of him: And therefore, if I act like a reaſonable man, I am under a neceſſity, either of giving my aſſent to this, or of utterly rejecting him as an impoſtor. Now, had he been an impoſtor, God, who ſhew'd himſelf always very jealous of his honour, would never have confirmed this doctrine of his with ſuch repeated teſtimonies. If we ſuppoſe him to be only a meſſenger come from God, and a meer man, who ſpake only by his Spirit and commiſſion, he would never have uſed ſuch expreſſions, as muſt naturally be miſunderſtood, and lead thouſands into the groſs ſin of idolatry, which of all others is moſt deteſtable to God. Moſes was never ſuffer'd to enter into the land of Canaan for a much leſs ſuſpicious expreſſion, and in the heat of paſſion too, Numb. xx. 10. "Muſt we fetch you water out of this rock? Which was a vain-glorious inſinuation, that he and Aaron wrought that miracle by their own immediate power and proper efficacy. This comes much ſhort of theſe expreſſions of our Saviour's, "Deſtroy this temple, and in three days I will raiſe it again": "I have power to lay down my life, and I have power to take it up;" and "Before Abraham was, I am." And indeed, that paſſage concerning Moſes ſeems to have been upon record, by the ſpecial providence of God, for this purpoſe, that it might be a good argument of conviction to the Jews of the divinity of the Son: Since this inference was very natural and obvious from it; viz. If God was ſo incenſed with Moſes, for making uſe of one expreſſion, which ſeem'd to encroach upon his prerogative; then how far would he have been from giving teſtimony, of much more frequent and greater miracles, to a perſon, who, by many plainer expreſſions, aſſumed to himſelf the full power and perfection of the God-head, if he were not really what he gave himſelf out to be? For this reaſon, I ſay, becauſe I can't reject him as an impoſtor, therefore I believe this propoſition, and confeſs the bleſſed Jeſus, the Son of God, equal with the Father. Now, thus far I proceed in this myſtery upon the ſtricteſt rules of reaſon and evidence; and my faith in this propoſition is founded upon clear and diſtinct ideas. For I know clearly whom I mean by Jeſus Chriſt; namely, that perſon who was born of the Virgin Mary, and crucified under Pontius Pilate: I have a clear and diſtinct idea of what it is for one thing to be equal to another: And I apprehend very well what is ſignified by the name of God here; namely, that divine Being, whoſe neceſſary exiſtence I infer from that clear knowledge I have of his creatures; and of whoſe nature, tho' I have not the leaſt notion, as it is in itſelf, yet I form the beſt idea of him I can, by enlarging all the perfections that are diſcernable in the creatures: And I have a clear and diſtinct idea of what it is for one perſon to be the ſon of another. Thus I underſtand the meaning of the words; nor is there any thing in them contradictory to my reaſon. And laſtly, I have clear and diſtinct ideas of thoſe miraculous proofs to the ſenſes of men, and of thoſe completions of prophecies, and the excellency of that doctrine they confirm, the agreeableneſs of it to the common notions of men, and its natural tendency to make men eaſy and pleaſant, and uſeful to one another: All which raiſe ſuch an evidence or knowledge in my mind of the divinity of his miſſion, who revealed this propoſition to me, that I muſt do violence to my reaſon, if I do not give my aſſent to it. And thus far it is not ſo properly and ſtrictly a myſtery. But, when I think of this propoſition again, Jeſus, the Son of God, is God equal with the Father, I muſt own, at the ſame time I give my aſſent to it, I have no knowledge of that eternal generation, which I form an impoper idea of, from the procreation of one man from another: Nor have I any notion of this wonderful union of the human nature with the divinity: Nor can I in the leaſt imagine wherein this equality conſiſts. Theſe, and all other things relating to the manner of it, are wholly out of the reach of all my capacities, and totally obſcured from me. Theſe are the things which make it a myſtery, and in reſpect of this part of it, the authority or veracity of God is the only ground of my perſuaſion: And my Chriſtian faith of this article conſiſts in thus giving my aſſent to the exiſtence of things which I have no notion of, when he hath taken care to give me undoubted teſtimonies of the revelations coming from him: And I truſt he will accept of it; becauſe 'tis no raſh inconſiderate aſſent, but that I uſe thoſe powers of knowledge I have, as ſtrictly and impartially in this, as I would do in any affair which immediately concerned my life. (Fox.)

Jeſus hid himſelf, and went out.] Hence we may obſerve the lawfulneſs of avoiding danger and perſecution. There are ſome occaſions, in which the dangers that threaten us may fairly be declined; and others, wherein, without a breach of decency and duty, they cannot. As to which our judgments may be directed by theſe two rules, 1. That whatever difficulty cannot be otherwiſe avoided, than by violating our conſcience, that, we are to conclude, God hath called us to ſuffer. 2. That a man may uſe all lawful means for his own preſervation; and where the regular uſe of theſe is ſucceſsful, that may be accounted a caſe, in which he was no way bound to ſuffer. (Stanh.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 31.

CHAP. IX.

Chriſt miraculouſly healeth a man who was born blind. The Phariſees are offended, becauſe it was done on the ſabbath-day: And excommunicate the man, for his confeſſion of Chriſt; but he is received of Chriſt.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

AND as Jeſus paſſed by, he ſaw a man which was blind from his birth. And his diſciples aſked him, ſaying, Maſter, who did ſin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? Jeſus anſwered, Neither hath this man ſinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God ſhould be made manifeſt in him. I muſt work the works of him that ſent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work. As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world. When he had thus ſpoken, he ſpat on the ground, and made clay of the ſpittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay, And ſaid unto him, Go waſh in the pool of Siloam (which is by interpretation, Sent.) He went his way therefore, and waſhed, and came ſeeing. The neighbours therefore, and they which before had ſeen him, that he was blind, ſaid, Is not this he that ſat and begged? Some ſaid, This is he: others ſaid, He is like him: but he ſaid, I am he. Therefore ſaid they unto him, How were thine eyes opened? He anſwered and ſaid, A man that is called Jeſus, made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and ſaid unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and waſh: and I went and waſhed, and I received ſight, Then ſaid they unto him, Where is he? He ſaid, I know not.

Blind from his birth.] And therefore the more proper object for Chriſt to magnify his divine power upon; ſuch blindneſs being accounted incurable by any natural means (G. and B.)

Who did ſin?] Something is implied or ſuppoſed; namely, 1. That all bodily afflictions and calamities do come upon us for ſin: Whereas afflictions, altho' they always fall upon a ſinner, yet they are not always ſent to puniſh ſin, but by way of purgation and prevention of ſin. 2. It is here ſuppoſed, that as ſome afflictions come upon men for perſonal ſins, ſo others come upon them for parental ſins: And that children may, and oftimes do, very juſtly ſuffer for their parents ſins. 3. It is here ſuppoſed, that there is no other reaſon of a perſon's ſufferings but only ſin: Whereas tho' ſin be much and often the cauſe of ſuffering, yet we may wrong God and man, yea, and ſin too, to conclude, it is always the cauſe of ſuffering. 4. It is implied here, that there is a tranſmigration of ſouls from one body to another: The diſciples ſuppoſed, that this ſoul, when it was in another body, ſinned, and was now puniſhed, by being put into a blind body. This Pythagorean error was crept in among the Phariſees, and the diſciples ſeemed to be tainted and infected with it. This may teach us, how far the holieſt and wiſeſt of men are from an infallible Spirit; and that the beſt men may be miſled by a common error. (Blackall, and B.) Here note alſo, 1. That 'tis certain, theſe diſciples do not enquire, whether this man was born blind for his original ſin, ſince in that all others equalled him in guilt; and yet they here ſuppoſe he might, and the Phariſees ſay poſitively, ver. 34. "Thou waſt wholly born in ſins;" when as yet they themſelves were equally guilty of original guilt. Both therefore muſt underſtand this of ſome perſonal, and ſpecial ſin. 2. It is not hard to conceive what they might intend by the ſin of the parents, viz. the begetting him in their uncleanneſs, againſt the law, Levit. xx. 18. and this was thought to have ſo ill an influence upon the child, as to render it obnoxious to leproſy, or mutilation, and ſo might be the cauſe of this perſon's blindneſs: Whence Philo ſaith, that it was forbidden, that they might not produce imperfect children. And 3. That the opinion of the Platoniſts and Pythagoreans, concerning the tranſmigration of ſouls from one body to another, and being put according to their merit into better or worſe bodies, had obtained among the Jews, being perhaps derived from thoſe of Alexandria to their brethren in Judea. To this effect is that ſaying of the author of the Wiſdom of Solomon, that "being good he came into a body undefiled," or free from any notable infirmity; Chap. viii. 20. Joſephus ſaith, that this opinion firmly obtained among the Eſſenes, that ſouls were immortal, and that they deſcended from the pure air, to be chained to bodies. And Philo ſaith, the air was full of them, and that thoſe which were neareſt to the earth, deſcending to be tied to mortal bodies, return back to bodies, being deſirous to live in them. And ſo the apoſtles may be ſuppoſed to enquire here, whether our Lord allowed of any of thoſe ſentiments, that the ſoul of this man might be put into this imperfect body, for the puniſhment of what it had done before, whether in, or out of the body. (H. and W.)

Neither hath this man ſinned.] Chriſt's anſwer muſt not be underſtood abſolutely, as if he denied this man and his parents to be guilty of ſin; for both he and they had ſin enough, not only to deſerve temporal blindneſs, but eternal darkneſs. The meaning is, that in afflicting this man, the Lord did not ſo much reſpect his or his parents ſin, as the manifeſtation of his own glory in this miraculous cure. Chriſt doth not deny, but that a man's own ſin, and the ſin of his parents, may be the procuring cauſe of blindneſs: But that neither the one nor the other was the cauſe in that man's caſe; but that the power and mercy of God might be ſeen in reſtoring this man to his ſight, therefore was he born blind. Whence note 1. That tho' ſin be always the deſerving, yet it is not always the procuring, cauſe of affliction. 2. That we ſeldom think of, or hit upon, any other cauſe of affliction, but only ſin: Tho' the deſign of God looks beyond the ſin of man in afflictions; yet man ſeldom looks beyond that, or thinks of any other deſign of God in afflicting, but only puniſhing for ſin. (H. B. and Fox.) Our Saviour wiſely avoided to ſatisfy their curioſity in a point that it was needleſs for them to know; but told them, They had miſſtated the caſe: That the queſtion ſhould have been, Whether the blindneſs was at all deſign'd for a puniſhment of ſin? Or whether it was inflicted for ſome other cauſe? (Bl.) See the notes on Luke xiii. 2.

But that the works.] i. e. Tho' God did not actively concur to render this man blind; yet in his wiſdom he thought fit to leave this imperfection in the Plaſtic matter unrectified, that he might ſhew his miraculous power in giving ſight to ſuch a one, his wiſdom uſing this as a confirmation of Chriſt's doctrine; and his goodneſs in illuminating the ſoul and body of this man at once, and miniſtring this motive to others to believe. (W.)

I muſt work.] Here our Saviour tells his diſciples, That he was ſent by God into the world, and had a great work aſſigned him by God, during his abode in it; namely, to inſtruct, reform, and ſave mankind: And what our Saviour ſays of himſelf, is applicable to every one of us in a lower ſenſe: We are ſent into the world to work out our own ſalvation in the firſt place, and then to promote the ſalvation of others as much as in us lies. Note, 1. That every one has a work to do in the world; a great work aſſigned him by God that ſent him into it. 2. That the time allotted for the finiſhing and diſpatching of this great work, is a limited time, it is a ſhort time; our working ſeaſon is a ſhort ſeaſon; "While it is day." 3. That after the working ſeaſon is paſt and expired, there will ſucceed a night of darkneſs, in which there muſt be a ceſſation from work; "The night cometh." (B.) Saith Stegman, Chriſt ſpeaking of theſe works, not as his works, nor ſimply as the works of God, but "of him that ſent him," ſhews that he did them by the command of another; whereas the true God can be ſubject to the command of none: And hence he concludes Chriſt is not truly God. To this I anſwer, That Chriſt doth plainly call theſe works "the works of God," ver. 3. and ſo declares that they were done by a divine power, which is inſeparable from a divine eſſence. 2. Chriſt here ſpeaks in the perſon of a prophet ſent from God; which Chriſt was, only by virtue of his human nature, and therefore could not here ſpeak of himſelf as God. (W.) See the notes on chap. v. 19. and vii. 16.

I am the light of the world.] 'Tis uſual with Chriſt, when he hath done his cures upon the body, to convert his ſpeech to thoſe ſpiritual things which were adumbrated by them, and for which cauſe they were done. So, having given ſight to this blind man, he ſtiles himſelf "the light of the world;" which he was by that evangelical doctrine which did illuminate the minds of men. And tho', at his departure from the world, he was no longer ſo by his bodily preſence, and oral inſtructions, he ſtill continued ſo to be by the irradiations of his Holy Spirit, and by the doctrine of his apoſtles ſpread throughout the world. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. i. 5, 9. and viii. 12.

Made clay of the ſpittle.] Amongſt other good arguments to prove, that the effects of particular providences come not by ſecond cauſes, nor by nature, nor by chance, this is one, that ſome effects are wrought even contrary to nature. As this of opening the eyes of the blind with clay; which naturally is more proper to put out the eyes than to open them: That of Eliſha's making ſalt water freſh and ſweet, by caſting ſalt into it, 2 Kings ii. 19, &c. Joſeph's impriſonment being the means of his preferment, Gen. xxxix. And the unlearned Chriſtians confounding the learned men of their time. (Andr.) That which in the hand of another perſon would cauſe blindneſs, ſerves to reſtore ſight in the hand of Jeſus Chriſt; becauſe the creature is nothing, and can do nothing, but what the creator is pleas'd to make it be and do. (Q.) Obſerve here, 1. An act of divine power on Chriſt's part, working a cure by ſuch improbable means. Had he applied ſome medicinal ointment to the eyes, then the praiſe had been aſcribed to his skill, not to his power: But now it plainly appeared, that all the virtue was in Chriſt, not in the means. Lord! What great things canſt thou do by weak and unlikely means; yea, by oppoſite and contrary means! But it is the praiſe of omnipotency to work by improbabilities. From the contemptibleneſs of the means or inſtrument, always redounds the greater honour to the agent. Obſerve 2. An act of faith and obedience on the man's part; "He went away, and waſhed his eyes in the pool of Siloam, and returned ſeeing." Where note, 1. How Chriſt delights to exerciſe and try the faith of his people, by their ſubjection and obedience to difficult commands. 2. That true faith joined with ſincere obedience, never faileth the expectation of them that exerciſe it; eſpecially in obeying the moſt hard and difficult commands. Therefore the Evangeliſt added, that the blind man after waſhing returned ſeeing. (B.) Had not this man's faith produced obedience to Chriſt's commands he had not been healed. (W.) See the notes on Mark viii. 23.

Siloam, which is by interpretation ſent.] This pool of Siloam, was a pool, or fountain, of lympid water, falling with a great noiſe from the hard rocks at the foot of mount Sion, which God ſent at the prayer of Iſaiah the prophet, a little before his death, to ſatisfy the neceſſities of his people, oppreſſed with thirſt, and a ſtrict ſiege; and it gave its water at firſt by returns and periods, always to the Jews, but not to the enemies: And thoſe intermitted ſpringings were ſtill continued, but only a pool was made from the frequent effluxes. The interpretation of the word is purpoſely mention'd, becauſe this fountain, thus ſent, ſo near the temple, was to put the Jews in mind of the Meſſiah, who was to be ſent from God. (Beza, Tayl. G. H. W. and Howel.) See the notes on chap. v. 2. and Luke xiii. 4.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. They brought to the Phariſees him that aforetime was blind. And it was the ſabbath-day, when Jeſus made the clay, and opened his eyes. Then again the Phariſees alſo asked him how he had received his ſight. He ſaid unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I waſhed, and do ſee. Therefore ſaid ſome of the Phariſees, This man is not of God, becauſe he keepeth not the ſabbath-day. Others ſaid, How can a man that is a ſinner, do ſuch miracles? And there was a diviſion among them. They ſay unto the blind man again, What ſayeſt thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? He ſaid, He is a prophet. But the Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his ſight, until they called the parents of him that had received his ſight. And they asked them, ſaying, Is this your ſon, who ye ſay was born blind? How then doth he now ſee? His parents anſwered them, and ſaid, We know that this is our ſon, and that he was born blind: But by what means he now ſeeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age, ask him; he ſhall ſpeak for himſelf. Theſe words ſpake his parents, becauſe they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confeſs that he was Chriſt, he ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue. Therefore ſaid his parents, He is of age, ask him. Then again called they the man that was blind, and ſaid unto him, Give God the praiſe: we know that this man is a ſinner. He anſwered and ſaid, Whether he be a ſinner or no, I know not: one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I ſee. Then ſaid they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes? He anſwered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear: Wherefore would ye hear it again? will ye alſo be his diſciples? Then they reviled him, and ſaid, Thou art his diſciple; but we are Moſes diſciples. We know that God ſpake unto Moſes: as for the fellow, we know not from whence he is. The man anſwered, and ſaid unto them, Why, herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes. Now we know that God heareth not ſinners: but if any man be a worſhipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth. Since the world began was it not heard, that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind. If this man were not of God, he could do nothing. They anſwered, and ſaid unto him, Thou waſt altogether born in ſins, and doſt thou teach us? And they caſt him out.

They brought to the Phariſees.] That is, "the neighbours, and they which before had ſeen him that was blind," brought him to the great council, or Sanhedrim, which, conſiſting chiefly of that ſect, paſſeth frequently in this Evangeliſt under that denomination of "the Phariſees." And this they might do, either from ill-will to Chriſt, or out of curioſity, to know, whether they would own the perſon who had done this ſignal miracle, to be the very man of whom Iſaiah had propheſied, that he ſhould "open the eyes of the blind." And ſurely, the providence of God ſo order'd this, that they might hear from the mouth of the blind man, a teſtimony, which would either convince them, or render their unbelief without excuſe. (W.)

It was the Sabbath-day.] Our Saviour choſe to work moſt of his famous miracles on the ſabbath-day, probably, 1. To confirm his doctrine, which he taught on that day. And, 2. To inſtruct the Jews in the true doctrine, and proper duties, of their ſabbath; and to let them know, that works of neceſſity and mercy are very conſiſtent with the ſanctification of the ſabbath. (B.) And this he might alſo do, the rather, becauſe he foreſaw the danger ſuperſtition might bring upon the believing Jews, when the days of vengeance ſhould come upon that nation; whence he exhorts them to "pray, that their flight might not be on the ſabbath-day," Matt. xxiv. 20. (Idem.)

Not of God, becauſe.] That is, He is not ſent of God, as a prophet: And yet they themſelves own, that a prophet might do and command things contrary to the reſt required on the ſabbath; and prove this from the example of Joſhua, who commanded, that the ark ſhould be carried round Jericho, the armed men going before and after it ſeven days; one of which muſt have been the ſabbath, Joſh. vi. How then could that, which prophets were, by their own principles, allow'd to do, prove that Chriſt was no prophet? Eſpecially, conſidering, that by theſe actions he did not violate the reſt of the ſabbath, but only their corrupt traditions concerning it. (Idem.) This is a true repreſentation of men, who being blind by nature, will neither receive the light themſelves, nor ſuffer it in others; nor yet be at peace among themſelves. (Beza.) See the notes on chap. iii. 2.

A ſinner do ſuch miracles.] Certainly, ſuch miracles cannot be wrought but by the finger of God; and ſo cannot be the work of an impoſtor, a man of ſin, a great ſinner. (H.) See the notes on ver. 30, 31.

There was a diviſion among them.] Schiſma, from Schizo, to cut, rend, or tear aſunder, properly ſignifies a ſection in a ſolid body: But, by a metaphor it is applied to diviſion, diſſenſion, and diverſity of opinions. (Leigh.) What the proper import of it is in the eccleſiaſtical ſenſe ſhall, God willing, be clearly explained hereafter, in the proceſs of this work. See the notes on chap. vii. 12.

Unto the blind man.] The man is here called blind, even after he had received his ſight; and this is rightly tranſlated from the Greek. We are therefore to conſider, that it is the ſtyle of the holy ſcriptures, and ſo alſo of all languages, ſometimes to give to perſons, and likewiſe to inanimate things, the qualities they formerly had, tho' they now have them no more. Thus Moſes's rod is called a rod, Exod. vii. 12. when it was changed into a ſerpent. Thoſe who were cured of their blindneſs, deafneſs, and lameneſs, are ſtill called the blind, the deaf, and the lame, Matt. xi. 5. Simon is called the leper, Matt. xxvi. 6. after he was cured of his leproſy; and Matthew is called the publican, Matt. x. 3. after he had quitted that employment. (Howel.)

The Jews did not believe concerning him.] Obſerve here, 1. How deſirous the Phariſees were to obſcure the glory of this famous miracle. In order to which, 1. They examine the man, to know what his thoughts were of the perſon who had done this for him. They judged him to be an impoſtor, and a great ſinner; the man declares that "he is a prophet." 2. They examine his parents, being unwilling to believe the man himſelf, whether he was their ſon? And, if ſo, whether he was born blind? And by what means he now had his ſight? What endeavours are here uſed to ſmother a miracle, which undeniably proved Chriſt to be the expected Meſſias! They examine firſt the man, then his parents, then the man again; hoping, that, being overaw'd with fear, they would either deny, or at leaſt conceal, the truth: But, the more they ſtrove to darken and obſcure the truth, the more conſpicuous and evident they made it. "Great is truth, and will prevail," how many ſoever oppoſe it, and ſet themſelves againſt it. Obſerve 2. The cautiouſneſs of his parents anſwer. They expreſly own, that the blind man "was their ſon, and that he was born blind:" But for the manner of his cure, they wave that; poſſibly becauſe they did not ſee the cure wrought, and fearing the ſentence of excommunication; a decree being paſſed, among the rulers, that whoſo "confeſſed Chriſt ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue." Hence learn, 1. That excommunication, or ſeparation from the ſociety of God's people, is an ancient and honourable ordinance in the church of God, and as ſuch to be revered and eſteemed. 2. That this ordinance of God has been, and may be, abuſed by wicked men, and the edge of it turn'd againſt Chriſt himſelf, and his ſincereſt members. And, 3. That the fear of unjuſt excommunication muſt not diſcourage us from confeſſing the truth, when called to it. (B.) A ſincere and Chriſtian heart makes no difficulty of ſpeaking according to truth, even before the enemies thereof. (Q.) By all this we ſee how much it concerns us, not to ſuffer our minds to be prepoſſeſſed, ſince paſſion cloſes the eyes againſt things the moſt evident. What pains and trouble do men give themſelves, only to avoid receiving the truth? There is no avenue, whereby it can approach them, left unſhut. They refuſe to receive it, only becauſe it diſpleaſes them: And it diſpleaſes, only becauſe they will not receive it, out of obſtinacy, intereſt, or blindneſs. Theſe Jews have very faithful followers, in the perſons of hereticks, and of thoſe among the learned, who, by much examining things, bring themſelves to that paſs, as to reject that as incredible which is in itſelf the moſt evident. (Idem.)

Put out of the ſynagogue.] That ſynagogai, the ſynagogues of the Jews, ſignify all manner of aſſemblies, is well known. Agreeably, the removing, or turning "out of the ſynagogues," is the ſeparating any offender from ſuch aſſemblies; ſetting a mark of reproach upon him, that he might not be familiarly convers'd with by any; which is aphorizein, Luke vi. 22. the Nidui, ſo known among the Jews. This was always done with circumſtances of contumely, and ſo hath oneidizein added to it, contumelious uſage. And ſo, ver. 35. of this chapter, their "caſting the man out of the ſynagogue," ſignifies that ceremony of reproach; the officers of the court taking him that was condemned, and thruſting him out of the aſſembly. What thus belonged to excluding him out of the aſſembly, tho' it belonged to civil commerce, yet certainly excluded him out of the ſacred aſſembly alſo: For the loweſt degree of excommunication among the Jews, being the ſeparating for the ſpace of four paces, this muſt needs belong to all kind of aſſemblies, ſacred as well as civil. And therefore St. Chryſoſtome here affirms, they "caſt him out of the temple," Hom. 59. and Nonnus, of the diſciples in Chriſt's name, "they ſhall drive you out of God's houſe." Where only it muſt be obſerved, that this ſeparation being only for four paces, that is, from familiar commerce, or cum diſcrimine, to ſet a mark upon them, the excommunication did not always reach to total excluſion out of the temple; but confined them to a particular part and entrance into the temple, called "the gate of mourners," and excommunicate perſons, as others were admitted to that of bridegrooms, as 'twas called. This word is, beſide this place, uſed twice more in this Goſpel. Chap. xvi. 2. it clearly ſignifies what here it doth, excluding them from familiar converſation of men, and thoſe liberties which all others enjoyed. But, chap. xii. 42. it doth by accident come to ſignify ſomewhat more; loſing the dignity of being one of the Sanhedrim: For being there ſpoken of the rulers or members of the Sanhedrim, the interdicting them the aſſemblies, caſting them out, muſt of conſequence deprive them of that dignity or office; as in the Chriſtian church the excommunicating of a prieſt muſt neceſſarily be the degrading or ſuſpending him from his prieſthood. This puniſhment among the Jews (referred to Rev. xxii. 15.) being the making of any man infamous, (ſhaming, in order to reforming him) is by Chriſt accommodated to Chriſtian eccleſiaſtical uſes, by removing men from the ſacrament and prayers of the church, to work reformation on them, when admonitions will not work upon them. (H and W.)

Then again called they the man.] Here we have an account of the Phariſees farther practiſing upon the blind man, to rob Chriſt of the glory of this miracle. 1. They inſinuate with him; ſaying, "Give God the praiſe:" As if they had ſaid, Aſcribe the cure to God, not to this man; whom they conclude to be a ſinner, becauſe he broke (as they thought) the ſabbath. 'Tis no new thing, to ſee men pretend to aim at the glory of God, when at the ſame time they are maliciouſly oppoſing Chriſt, and perſecuting his members. 2. They attempt to frown this poor man into a denial of the miracle, or to perſuade the people that it was a cheat. But it is wonderful to obſerve, how his boldneſs increaſed; God giving him that wiſdom and courage, which all his adverſaries were not able to reſiſt or gainſay. Therefore they revile him, for being ſo ſilly as to become a diſciple to Chriſt, whoſe office and authority they knew not; whereas they were the diſciples of Moſes, whom they knew God ſpake unto. Learn hence, That ſuch as are led by malice, and prepoſſeſſed with prejudice againſt Chriſt, will not only think baſely of his perſon, but refuſe to ſee the cleareſt evidences of his authority and commiſſion. "As for this fellow (ſay the malicious Phariſees) we know not from whence he is," or who gave him this commiſſion. (B.)

They reviled him, and ſaid. Here it may be asked, what there is of aſperity, or reviling language, in their ſaying to the man, "Thou art his diſciple, but we are Moſes's diſciples"? For who would not wiſh to be Chriſt's diſciple, tho' it were even on the condition to have it made an objection againſt him by the impious and prophane? But, as the ancients rightly obſerved, we are not ſo much to regard the words themſelves, as the ſpirit with which they are ſpoken: For, whatſoever is ſpoken by any one, with a ſpirit of reviling another, is a reproach, tho' it may not indeed have any thing reproachful in itſelf. (D H.)

We know not from whence he is.] It is extremely dangerous to know ſome certain truths, and not to know them well. Indeed "God ſpake unto Moſes:" But the moſt important truth he taught him, was, that he was no more than only a type or ſhadow of our bleſſed Saviour; and that his law was given to no other end, but to lead men to Jeſus Chriſt: And this was the thing which theſe Phariſees, theſe great pretenders to learning, knew nothing of. (Q.) See the notes on chap. vii. 28.

Why, herein is a marvellous thing.] In theſe verſes the blind man proceeds to vindicate our bleſſed Saviour, who had cured him of his blindneſs, from the exceptions of the Phariſees; and endeavours by ſolid arguments to convince them, that his cure (being born blind) was truly miraculous, and conſequently proved Chriſt to be of God. 1. The man admires, that Chriſt, having wrought ſuch a miracle upon him, they ſhould be ignorant of his authority, "This is marvellous, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes." He lays down a general propoſition, That no deceiver, or falſe teacher, is heard of God, or enabled by him to work ſuch miracles as theſe, but only ſuch faithful ſervants as do his will are thus extraordinarily aſſiſted by him. "We know that God heareth not ſinners;" that is, ſuch as love and delight in ſin; ſuch as are in a ſtate of ſin, and go on in a courſe of ſin: God will not hear ſuch, or anſwer the prayers of ſuch. Indeed God ſometimes hears a ſinner's prayers in wrath, and refuſes to hear a ſaint's prayers in mercy: But he never denies a ſaint's prayer in wrath, or hears a ſinner's prayer in mercy. The propoſition laid down is an eternal truth; "God heareth not ſinners;" that is, ſo long as they purpoſe to continue ſinners, and go on in a courſe of ſin, and remain bold and preſumptuous ſinners. Learn thence, That none that live in a courſe of ſin can reaſonably expect that God ſhould hear them, and give an anſwer of prayer to them. "God heareth not ſinners: But if any man be a worſhipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth;" that is, If a man feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, him the Lord accepteth, heareth, and anſwereth. Learn hence, 1. That ſuch as would be heard of God, and accepted with him, muſt be devout worſhippers of him. 2. That it is not enough to prove men religious and acceptable with God, that they are devout worſhippers of him, unleſs they walk in obedience to him, and do his will. "If any man be a worſhipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth." Obſerve, 3. How the blind man goes on to prove, that Chriſt had a ſpecial authority from God, and an extraordinary preſence of God with him in what he did, becauſe he had done ſuch a work as was never done by Moſes, or by any of the prophets, or by any perſon whatſoever, ſince the creation of the world: From whence he wiſely and well infers, that Chriſt was a perſon authoriſed by and ſent of God. Learn hence, 1. That Chriſt having done that which was never done before, (namely, to give ſight to one that was born blind) it was an evidence of his omnipotency. 2. That this act of omnipotency proved him to "be God." Whatever miracles the prophets wrought, they wrought them by Chriſt's power, but Chriſt wrought this and all other miracles by his own power. Obſerve 4 How this blind man, tho' unlearned, judges more rightly of divine things, than the whole learned council of the Sanhedrim. Whence we learn, That we are not always to be led by the authority of councils, popes, or biſhops; and that it is not abſurd for laymen ſometimes to vary from their opinions. (W. and B.)

And yet he hath opened mine eyes.] The particle kai is here adverſative, as it is render'd, "and yet he hath," or although he hath: As if he had ſaid, It is wonderful, that ye know not whence he is, tho' he has open'd mine eyes. So it is uſed in Thucidides and Plato, for but or yet. (Blackw.)

God heareth not ſinners.] The prayers of a profeſt Libertine, of a ſeducer, and of ſuch ſinners as will not think of converſion, are rejected of God; but thoſe of a ſinner, who through love to God hates ſin, never are. A penitent ſinner is no longer a ſinner in the ſight of God: He can never deſpiſe the prayer of an humble and contrite heart; ſince it is his ſpirit who cauſes it to pray, and forms the very prayer itſelf. (Q.) See the notes on ver. 16. and 30.

Opened the eyes of one that was born blind.] The Jews themſelves reckon this among the ſigns of the Meſſiah, that he ſhould "open the eyes of the blind." Midraſh, in Pſal. cxlvi. 8. (W.) And here 'tis obſervable, what a beautiful expreſſion the great Father St. Cyprian made choice of in deſcribing this divine miracle. Oculos formaſſe: Becauſe the man being born blind, and never having had his eye-ſight, Chriſt did not ſo properly recover, as make his eyes. (Marſhall.)

If this man were not of God.] See the notes on ver. 16. and chap. iii. 2.

Altogether born in ſins.] See the notes on ver. 2.

And they caſt him out.] See the notes on ver 22.

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41. Jeſus heard that they had caſt him out; and when he had found him, he ſaid unto him, Doſt thou believe on the Son of God? He anſwered and ſaid, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him? And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou haſt both ſeen him, and it is he that talketh with thee. And he ſaid, Lord, I believe: And he worſhipped him. And Jeſus ſaid, For judgment I am come into the world: that they which ſee not, might ſee; and that they which ſee, might be made blind. And ſome of the Phariſees, which were with him, heard theſe words, and ſaid unto him, Are we blind alſo? Jeſus ſaid unto them, If ye were blind, ye ſhould have no ſin: but now ye ſay, We ſee; therefore your ſin remaineth.

When he had found him.] Obſerve here, 1. Our Saviour's regard to this blind man, whom the Phariſees had ſet at naught and excommunicated: He finds him out, reveals himſelf more fully to him, and directs him to believe in him. Where obſerve, That the miracle, which Chriſt had wrought upon the blind man, did not convert him, and work faith in him, till Chriſt revealed himſelf unto him, and enabled him to diſcern the truth of what he revealed. Learn hence, That miracles confirm faith; but miracles alone cannot work faith: The blind man had experienced a miracle wrought upon him, yet remains an unbeliever, till Chriſt ſaid, I am he. Obſ. 2. How readily the man receives the Lord Jeſus Chriſt by Faith, upon the forementiond revelation of himſelf unto him: He inſtantly ſaid, "Lord, I believe;" and in teſtimony thereof, worſhips him; that is, as God incarnate, as God manifeſted in the fleſh. Thence learn, That true knowledge of the Son of God will beget faith in him; and true faith in him, will be productive of homage and adoration, of obedience and ſubjection to him. He that knows Chriſt aright, will believe; and he that believes, will worſhip and obey: "He ſaid, Lord, I believe: And he worſhipped him." (B.)

Who is he, Lord, that I might believe.] Docility opens the heart to faith; but it is God who gives both. Not to believe immediately, but to deſire to be firſt inſtructed, is agreeable to the prudence which faith itſelf requires. When we are once thoroughly perſuaded of the almighty power of God, we are diſpoſed to believe every thing, as ſoon as it is ſufficiently propounded to our underſtanding as coming from him (Q.)

Thou haſt both ſeen him, and it is he.] Kai eorakas auton, kia, Gramarians know, that when two kia's do thus come together, the firſt is to be render'd, both. So, ch. xi. 48. "Take away both our place and nation:" So, ch. xii. 28. "I have both glorified it, and will glorifiy it again:" And that the Aoriſt is uſually put for the preſent tenſe. And ſo theſe words are well render'd thus, "Thou both ſeeſt him, and he talketh with thee." So chap. i. 26. "One ſtands in the midſt of you;" Chap. v. 45. "Moſes in whom ye truſt;" Chap. xi. 27. "I believe thou art the Chriſt." See Luke viii. 20. Acts i. 11. xii. 14. Rom. v. 2. 1 Tim. iv. 10. Et Gloſſ. de verbo, l. 3. tr. 3. Can. 46. (W.)

He worſhipped him.] That is, he bowed down, and made a moſt lowly obeyſance to him, as to the Meſſiah. (G. and H.) See the notes on Matt. viii. 2. Luke xxiv. 52. and here, ver. 35.

For judgment I am come.] The ſenſe of theſe words ſeems to be this, "I am come," to declare and manifeſt the juſt judgment and providence of God, which, contrary to the vain opinions of men, appears in this, "that they which ſee not," that is, who are ignorant, and ſenſible of their ignorance, and deſirous to have it removed, "may ſee; and that they which ſee," that is, who vainly think they ſee, and know enough already, and therefore ſhut their eyes againſt the light, "might be made blind," that is, be left in darkneſs. (Fox.) The criticks and ſome of the Fathers note, That the conjunction hina is not cauſal, but only conſequential; as when Chriſt ſaith, "I came not to ſend peace upon the earth, but a ſword," i. e. This will be the event and conſequence of my coming; ſo hina is uſed here, ver. 2. Rom. i. 20. 1 Cor. xi. 19. See the notes on chap. xii. 38, 40. And when Chriſt here ſaith, I came, "that they who ſee not might ſee;" he ſeems eſpecially to reſpect the Gentiles "ſitting in darkneſs," &c. That the Gentiles (ſaith Origen) who are now blind, may ſee; and Iſrael, who now ſees, may be made blind, through their infidelity. So alſo Cyril, and Chryſoſtome, referring us to the words of St. Paul, Rom. xi. 25. and Eph. v. 8. (W. and B.) See the notes on chap. iii. 17.

If ye were blind.] Obſerve here, 1. How the Phariſees, who watched all opportunities to inſnare our Saviour, look upon theſe laſt words as reflecting upon them; as if Chriſt did inſinuate, that they were blind. "Are we blind alſo?" They that ſhut their eyes, and will not ſee the light which Chriſt offers them, are the worſt of blind ones. Obſ. 2. Our Saviour's reply to the Phariſees queſtion, "If ye were blind;" that is, ſimply ignorant of your duty, and withuot the means of knowledge and inſtruction, "ye ſhould have no ſin;" that is comparatively, to what ye have; ye now ſhould not have had ſo much ſin and guilt upon you as now ye have, by ſhutting your eyes againſt the light: "But now ye ſay, we ſee;" that is, being puffed up with the knowledge which ye have, as if ye were the only men that ſaw; this proud conceit of yours renders your condition incurable, and "your ſin remaineth" unpardonable.

Learn hence, 1. That it is a far greater ſin to contemn the known laws of God, than to be ignorant of them; pride is a greater hindrance of knowledge than ignorance, becauſe the proud man thinks he wants no knowledge. 2. That the moſt exalted knowledge is inſufficient to ſalvation, without a ſuitable and correſpondent practice. The Phariſees had the key of knowledge at their girdle, yet our Saviour tells them of a double damnation: Lord! How ſad is it ſo to know Chriſt in this world, as that he will be aſhamed to know us in another world! (G. H. W. and B.)

CHAP. X.

Chriſt continueth his ſermon to the Jews, under the parable of the door and the ſheepfold. The Jews divided about him. He juſtifieth his authority by his works: Eſcapeth their hands; and retireth beyond Jordan, where many believe on him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. VERILY, verily, I ſay unto you, He that entreth not by the door into the ſheepfold, but climbeth up ſome other way, the ſame is a thief and a robber. But he that entreth in by the door, is the ſhepherd of the ſheep. To him the porter openeth; and the ſheep hear his voice; and he calleth his own ſheep by name, and leadeth them out. And when he putteth forth his own ſheep, he goeth before them, and the ſheep follow him: for they know his voice. And a ſtranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of ſtrangers. This parable ſpake Jeſus unto them: but they underſtood not what things they were which he ſpake unto them. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them again, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, I am the door of the ſheep. All that ever came before me, are thieves and robbers: but the ſheep did not hear them. I am the door: by me, if any man enter in, he ſhall be ſaved, and ſhall go in and out, and find paſture. The thief cometh not but for to ſteal, and to kill, and to deſtroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. I am the good ſhepherd: the good ſhepherd giveth his life for the ſheep. But he that is an hireling, and not the ſhepherd, whoſe own the ſheep are not, ſeeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the ſheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and ſcattereth the ſheep. The hireling fleeth, becauſe he is an hireling, and careth not for the ſheep. I am the good ſhepherd, and know my ſheep, and am known of mine. As the father knoweth me, even ſo know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the ſheep. And other ſheep I have, which are not of this fold: them alſo I muſt bring, and they ſhall hear my voice; and there ſhall be one fold, and one ſhepherd. Therefore doth my Father love me, becauſe I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myſelf: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.

Verily, verily, I ſay unto you.] Every thing ſpoken by Chriſt is infallibly true: But whenever he delivers any truths with a particular aſſeveration, it is either becauſe they are of greater importance; or becauſe the mind of man is more averſe to them; or becauſe the ſmall number of thoſe who will practiſe them may render them incredible. (Q.) Our bleſſed Lord having, in the end of the foregoing chapter, upbraided the Phariſees for their blindneſs and ignorance in the myſteries of religion, notwithſtanding the high conceit they had of their own knowledge, he proceeds here farther to convince them, that they were blind leaders of the blind, tho' they thought and looked upon themſelves as the only guides and teachers of the people. And in order hereunto, he propounds a parable of the true and falſe Shepherd, which repreſents a good and bad paſtor and teacher, and gives us a fourfold mark and character of a good ſhepherd. 1. The good ſhepherd "enters in by the door;" that is, he has his vocation and miſſion from Chriſt; he comes into the church regularly, in a right and approved way and manner; not by any clandeſtine methods, or indirect means. "To him the porter openeth;" that is, the Holy Spirit, who openeth the hearts of men to receive Jeſus Chriſt and the doctrine of the Goſpel, which the faithful ſhepherds deliver in his name, and by authority received from him. Learn hence, That all faithful paſtors have a lawful call to the works of the miniſtry: They enter by the right door, and execute their truſt in a right manner; but ſuch as without a call from God, unwarrantably thruſt themſelves into the miniſtry, are no better, nor no other, than "thieves and robbers" in God's account. 2. Another property of a good ſhepherd, is this, That "he calleth his ſheep by their names." This importeth three things; 1. A ſpecial love that he bears to them. 2. A ſpecial care that he has over them. 3. A particular acquaintance with them, that he may know how to apply himſelf ſuitably to them; which tho' it be eminently verified in Chriſt, yet is it the duty of every faithful paſtor and under-ſhepherd, in his meaſure, to labour after. 3. The good ſhepherd leadeth out his ſheep into good paſtures; that is, he feedeth them with ſound doctrine; nouriſhes them with the word of life: Whereas the hireling, or falſe ſhepherd, whatever he may do for his own ſake, has no regard to Jeſus Chriſt; to the honour of his perſon, the edification of his Church, or the ſalvation of ſouls; but his deſign is to raiſe and enrich himſelf; and ſo he may compaſs that, he cares not how many ſouls periſh thro' his neglect. 4. The laſt property of the good ſhepherd here mentioned, is this, That "he goeth before his ſheep," as the ſhepherd doth before his flock; namely, by a holy life, and unblameable converſation: He treads out thoſe ſteps before the people, which they take in their way towards heaven. "And the ſheep follow him," and are guided by him. "He leadeth out his ſheep, and goeth before them, and the ſheep follow him; for they know his voice." Now, for the right underſtanding this parable, let it be noted; 1. That Chriſt directs this parable againſt the Scribes and Phariſees to whom he ſpake, chap. ix. 40. as appears, 1. From the pronoun humin, which begins this chapter thus, "I ſay unto you." And, 2. From theſe words, ver. 6. "This parable ſpake Jeſus to them." They therefore muſt be the perſons concerned in the contents of it. Note therefore, 2. That theſe Phariſees took upon them to be guides and teachers of the people, whence by our Saviour they are repreſented as blind guides: They alſo held, that others were to receive authority to teach from their commiſſion or ordination to that office; tho' we find not, that they received any ſuch authority from God; who rather had appointed "the prieſts lips to preſerve knowledge, and the people to ſeek the law at their mouths," Mal. ii. 7. and thoſe of the tribe of Levi, to "teach his judgments to Jacob, and his law to Iſrael," Deut. xxxiii. 10. even "all the commandments which God had delivered by the hand of Moſes," Levit. x. 11. And hence Chriſt repreſents them as "a plantation which his father had not planted," Matt. xv. 13. bids his diſciples "beware of their doctrine," Matt. xvi. 12. they "teaching for doctrines of God the commandments of men, and making void the commandments of God by their traditions," Matt. xv. 6, 9. Their voice therefore was ſuch as the true ſheep neither would nor ought to hear. Note, 3. That theſe "Scribes and Phariſees believed not in Chriſt," John vii. 48. they "neither would enter into the kingdom of God themſelves, nor ſuffer others to enter into it," Luke xi. 52. and therefore are ſaid to have "taken away the key of knowledge." Chriſt therefore here pronouncing himſelf the door both of the ſhepherds, ver. 1. and of the ſheep, ver. 6 by which they were to enter into the ſheepfold, informs them, that now, that he the great ſhepherd of the ſheep was come, they who refuſed to own him, and to teach the ſheep in his name, according to his doctrine, and by his authority, as his apoſtles, and the ſeventy did, had no true commiſſion to inſtruct them; and that they who ſet up in oppoſition to him, to be the guides and teachers of the people, were not only blind, but falſe guides, and even "thieves and robbers;" the firſt, as taking away what belongs not to them; the ſecond, as deſtroying the Sheep. (W.)

He that entreth.] Here we may obſerve the marks, qualities and duties, of a good paſtor. 1. A lawful entrance into the miniſtry, by the internal call of Chriſt; namely, by an impulſe proceeding from his Spirit. 2. An external call, which is then lawful, and comes from the Holy Ghoſt, when it is convey'd by a lawful miſſion, and by the apoſtolic authority of biſhops, with a concurrence of the neceſſary talents and qualifications, according to the rules of the church, and the Spirit of the cannons. 3. Not the gift only, but the right uſe of the word for the inſtruction of the ſheep. 4. A perfect knowledge of his ſheep, and acquaintance with their wants and neceſſities, inward and outward, and with their ſeveral inclinations. 5. A diligent endeavour, to bring them out of their ſins, errors, and evil habits; out of the powers of the world and the devil; and to lead them into the wholſome paſtures of God's word, and the ways of a Chriſtian life. 6. Going before his ſheep, in the practice of what he preaches, and leading ſuch a life as they may follow, without fear of going aſtray. 7. Teaching no ſtrange doctrine, and continuing within the bounds of Catholic unity. 8. A true ſenſe, imprinted on his heart, that not he himſelf, but Jeſus Chriſt, is "the door of the ſheep," by whom they find entrance into the Church, and an admittance to the grace of faith, of the ſacraments, of charity, of good works, and of ſalvation. 9. A ſound remembrance, that whoever boaſts of being the way of ſalvation, and the gate of heaven, ſhews himſelf to be a thief and an impoſtor. 10. Conſtant care to conduct ſouls to Chriſt, as the door of ſalvation. 11. An endeavour to procure his ſheep eternal life, by the means of the life of grace. 12. A reſolution to ſacrifice himſelf for his ſheep. 13. A careful diſtinction betwixt a mercenary ſpirit, and the paſtoral charity. 14. A ſerious conſideration that to fly when he ought to ſtand his ground, to yield up the intereſts of his flock when he ought to maintain them, to hide himſelf when he ought to appear, and to be ſilent when he ought to ſpeak, are plain indications, that a man has either no concern at all for the welfare of his ſheep, or more regard to his own temporal conveniencies than to their eternal ſalvation. 15. Not only a knowledge of his ſheep, but the imployment of his thoughts continually upon them. 16. A continual deſire and labour to bring in more ſouls to God. 17. A contempt of all earthly things, of the conveniencies of life, and of life itſelf, that he may approve himſelf a faithful miniſter of Chriſt. 18. A willingneſs to "lay down his life," and to be made a voluntary ſacrifice, for his people. 19. Having the will of God continually before his eyes, and joining the virtue of obedience to that of charity. And 20. An expectation of, and preparation for, ill uſage from the ungrateful world, in return for all his toils and labours. (Q.)

To him the porter openeth.] That is, to him, who thus entreth by the door, God, the great keeper of the ſheepfold, openeth, as to one allow'd by him to feed his ſheep; and him the ſheep hear and obey, teaching the doctrine of the Goſpel, and the kingdom of God to them, in the name, and by the authority of the great Shepherd of the ſheep: And when this Shepherd by himſelf or others, acting in his name, and by his miſſion, leadeth "forth his own ſheep, he goes before them," after the manner of the eaſtern ſhepherds, to preſerve them from danger, and to conduct them into wholſome paſtures, ver. 4. So did Chriſt and his ſhepherds, being typoi, examples, for the flock to follow, 1 Pet. v. 3. (W.)

Calleth his own ſheep by name.] Probata, ſheep, here ſignify, in this parable, the obedient ſervants of God, conſidered before, and without, the revelation of Chriſt unto them, who, being ſo qualified, are moſt ready to embrace the precepts of the Chriſtian perfection, when they are offer'd to them: Theſe alſo is Chriſt ready to receive, or any that, having been engaged in ſin, come with patience, and reſolution of mind to be ſuch: And conſequently, when theſe come to Chriſt, they are ſtyled here, and looked on by him, as idia probata, that is, either peculiar ſheep, thoſe that by God's prevenient graces are thus fitted, beyond all other, to come to Chriſt, or elſe, as the 12th verſe imports, (where the ſhepherd is ſet oppoſite to "the hireling, whoſe own the ſheep are not;") his own ſheep, thoſe to whom Chriſt hath a peculiar title beyond all others, who are therefore ſaid to be given by God to Chriſt as his poſſeſſion. Now, of theſe thus own'd, or acknowledg'd by Chriſt, it is here ſaid, that he doth "call them by name;" That refers to the cuſtom of ſhepherds, that are ſo converſant among their ſheep, that they know them ſeverally, (ſee ver. 14. and 27. "I know them") and have a ſeveral name for every of them, by which they diſtinguiſh and call them, and each of them knows, and anſwers by obediential coming, or following, to that call. So ver. 3. "they hear his voice and know it," v. 4. and "he is known of them," ver. 14 Thus, among us, huntſmen do with their hounds, and plow-men with their cattle; And it ſeems in Jewry, where the feeding of cattle was the great trade, and where other cuſtoms obtained than thoſe that are among us, the ſhepherd did thus with his ſheep. For want of their art, and uſage of going before, and leading, and calling their ſheep after them, which is known in the ſcripture, to have been among them, Pſal. xxiii. 2, 3. and Pſal. lxxx. 1. and lxxvii. 20. our ſhepherds now go after, and drive the ſheep. But the change and diverſity of cuſtoms in divers countries is very ordinary. And here it is evident, that this cuſtom of the Jews is referr'd to, by ver. 4. where anſwerable to the ſhepherd's calling, and leading, and going before, is the ſheeps following, and knowing his voice, whereas ver. 5 "A ſtranger they will not follow; for they know not the voice of ſtrangers." By which it is clear, that his "calling his own ſheep by name," and leading them, is the ſhepherd's particular care, and providence for his ſheep, and, in the moral, denotes Chriſt's peculiar owning theſe honeſt, obedient, humble creatures, that come to him, not in the clothing, but real qualities of the ſheep, and making proviſion for them. (H. and Stanh.)

I am the door of the ſheep.] Obſerve here, 1. The character which Chriſt gives of himſelf; "I am the door of the ſheep;" that is, the only way and means, by which ſinners have acceſs to God, and can obtain ſalvation; the only door by which ſinners are enter'd into the kingdom of grace, and admitted into the kingdom of glory. Learn hence, That there is no poſſible way of acceſs to God for fallen man, but by Jeſus Chriſt. As there is no proper way of entring the houſe, but by the door, and thoſe that ſo enter are ſafe: In like manner, ſuch as come unto God through Jeſus Chriſt, in the way of faith and holy obedience, ſhall be put into a ſecure condition, and at laſt obtain eternal ſalvation. 2. The end and deſign of Chriſt in coming into the world, aſſerted and declared by himſelf; "I am come, that they might have life; and that they might have it more abundantly." But had not his people ſpiritual life before he came into the world? Yes, He gave life to his people, before his coming, in a meaſure ſufficient to ſupply their neceſſity: But, ſince his coming, he gives it in ſuch a ſuperabounding meaſure, as may teſtify his divine bounty: They ſhall not only barely live; but live abundantly; that is, their ſpiritual life ſhall abound, through the upholding, ſtrengthning, quickning, and comforting preſence of his Holy Spirit: For, having convey'd ſpiritual life unto his people, in their regeneration and converſion, he will cauſe it to increaſe more and more in their ſanctification, until it arrive to a compleat perfection in their glorification. And 3. The character, which our Saviour gives of the Scribes and Phariſees in general, and of theſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, which went before him in particular: He ſtyles them thieves and robbers; "All that came before me were thieves and robbers." He does not ſay, All that were ſent before me; but all that came before me. So that Chriſt does not ſpeak of the true prophets, who were ſent by God before him; but of the falſe, who came of themſelves without any commiſſion. The meaning therefore is, All perſons that came before me, pretending to be, what I am, the true Meſſias, as did Theudas, and Judas of Galilee, &c. were "thieves and robbers;" that is, they only ſought their own advantage, while they deceiv'd and ruin'd you. Hence learn, That whoever took upon them the office and perſon of the Meſſias before Chriſt, or whoſoever have ſince uſurped a lawful calling in his church, without his commiſſion, they are in Chriſt's account no better than murderers, thieves, and robbers; and they ought to be ſo in the people's eſteem: "The ſheep did not hear them." (H. Stanh. W. and B.)

Have it more abundantly.] See the notes on chap. i. 16.

I am the good ſhepherd.] In this and the following verſes our Saviour evidently proves himſelf to be the true ſhepherd of his church, by the marks and ſigns, by the properties and characters of a "good ſhepherd," which were eminently found in him; as, 1. Jeſus Chriſt, the great ſhepherd of his church, hath an exact knowledge of all his flock, "I know my ſheep." And this, 1. With a knowledge of intelligence and obſervation; 2. With a knowledge of approbation and acceptation; and, 3. With a knowledge of care and protection. Thus Chriſt knows his ſheep, and is alſo "known of them;" that is, believed on, beloved, and obeyed by them. 2. He "lays down his life for his ſheep:" He does not only give life to his ſheep, but gives his own life by way of ranſom for his ſheep. This example of Chriſt teacheth all ſubordinate ſhepherds, to prefer the good of their flocks even before their own lives. (B.) He is "the good ſhepherd," referr'd to by the prophets, Iſa. xl. 11. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. and xxxvii. 24. and ſo as to "lay down his life for his ſheep, and to take it up again," ver. 15, 17. which laſt words can agree to no other ſhepherd. I grant, the apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors, were true ſhepherds, and not hirelings: But none of them could be "the good ſhepherd," here, or the "one ſhepherd," ver. 16. viz. "the chief ſhepherd," 1 Pet. v. 4. tho' by their miniſtry he brought both Jews and Gentiles into his fold, after his reſurrection; and they doing this in his name, and by his authority and aſſiſtance, he himſelf is ſaid to do it, ver. 16. (W.) Now, the reaſons why Chriſt ſhould chuſe to make uſe of this alluſion, are chiefly, 1. Becauſe it was very proper to the perſons with whom he then argued, and the cuſtoms of their country; where the greateſt part of their wealth and improvement conſiſted in ſheep: And the examples of Jacob and David in particular are proofs, that the keeping of theſe was not uſually committed to ſervants and ſtrangers; but men of the greateſt quality and ſubſtance, the children of the family, nay the maſters and owners themſelves, made it their buſineſs, and eſteem'd the looking to their flocks a care and employment in no caſe below them. Hence probably came that frequent metaphor, of ſtiling kings the ſhepherds of their people: Hence Iſrael, God's peculiar treaſure, are ſo often ſtiled "the ſheep of his paſture;" and hence the ancient prophecies deſcribed the Meſſiah in the character of a ſhepherd. And, 2. Becauſe ſheep are remarkable for their peculiar ſimplicity and ſweetneſs of temper, ſo innocent and inoffenſive, ſo peaceable and gentle, ſo patient and ſubmiſſive, ſo honeſt and undeſigning, that they gain more upon the tenderneſs of mankind than moſt other creatures: All which qualities are ſo many lively images of that plainneſs and probity, that modeſty and humility, that quietneſs and ſubmiſſion, which prepare and fit men for embracing the doctrine of Chriſt. (Stanh.)

The hireling fleeth.] The hireling here is not he who receives maintenance from his particular flock; for this he may do, by virtue of Chriſt's ordinance, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14. and of this, ſaith

Chriſt, he "is worthy," Luke x. 7. And much leſs is it he who labours among them, with reſpect to that recompence, or "crown of glory, he is to receive, when the chief ſhepherd ſhall appear," 1 Pet. v. 4. But it is he, who is an intruder, "whoſe own the ſheep are not;" who intends not their good, ſo much as his own profit; and who, in time of danger, flies for his own ſafety, not caring tho' the wolf tear and devour them. Hence alſo we may learn, that a true paſtor muſt not deſert his flock in time of peril, when by his abſence they may be brought into great peril, and by his preſence may be happily preſerved from it. (W.) See the notes on ver. 7.

Know my ſheep, and am known of mine] That is, I have an intimate affection for them, and they ſincerely love me. For this phraſe ſignifies, 1. To approve: Thus "the Lord knoweth the righteous," Pſalm i. 6. and whom he approveth not, he is ſaid not to know; See the notes on Matt vii. 23. 2. To love, and to be kindly affected to: As when God ſaith, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth," Amos iii. 2. And "If any man love God, the ſame is known of him." 1 Cor. viii. 3. And, 3. To preſerve and protect: As, "Thou haſt known my ſoul in adverſities," Pſalm xxxi. 7. And "The Lord is good, a ſtrong hold in the day of trouble, and he knoweth them that truſt in him," Nah. i. 7. (Idem.)

As the Father knoweth me, even ſo.] See the notes on Matt. xi. 27. John i. 18. vii. 28, 29. and viii. 55.

I lay down my life for the ſheep.] The plain meaning of this place is, that thoſe who obey the voice of Chriſt, and ſubmit to the terms and conditions on which ſalvation is offered to them, ſhall partake of the benefits of his death. This is evident, from what our Lord ſays of his ſheep, ver. 4. that "they follow him, and know his voice." But thoſe who, from this and ſuch like expreſſions, would limit the death of Chriſt to a few particular perſons only, interpret them in a ſenſe which contradicts other plain ſcriptures; which aſſure us, that Chriſt "died for all," 2 Cor. v. 15. that he "would have all men to be ſaved," 1 Tim. ii. 4. and that he "taſted death for every man," Heb. ii. 9. If any therefore miſs of ſalvation, it muſt be through their own fault. (W. and Fox.) He who died both for his friends and his enemies died for all: But Chriſt died both for his friends, John xv. 13, 14. and for his enemies, Rom. v. 8. Again, He who died for the church of God, and for the unrighteous, that he might bring them to the church of God, died for all: But Chriſt died for both, 1 Pet. iii. 18. And laſtly, He that died for his ſheep that heard his voice, and for the loſt ſheep that did not hearken to his voice, died for all: But Chriſt died for his ſheep that heard his voice, as the text ſaith here, and for his loſt ſheep, Matt. x. 6. and xviii. 11. Therefore he died for all. (W.) See the notes on chap. vi. 37, 44.

And other ſheep I have.] Here Chriſt proves himſelf to be the true ſhepherd of his church, from another property of a good ſhepherd, which is, to take care for increaſing and enlarging of his fold, by bringing in the Gentiles to it, and breaking down the partition-wall, to make one church both of Jews and Gentiles. He calls the Gentiles his "other ſheep," by way of anticipation; becauſe ſhortly they were to be ſo, and united, together with the believing Jews, into one ſheepfold: And, whereas he ſays, he muſt bring theſe ſheep in, we are to underſtand it, not of a neceſſity of coaction, but of a neceſſity of compact; it being a fœderal agreement betwixt the Father and himſelf, that both Jew and Gentile ſhould be one flock, incloſed in one fold, and preſented to his Father as a glorious church. (H. Stanh. W. and B.) See the notes on ver. 11.

One fold, and one ſhepherd.] Here our Saviour ſeems probably to allude to a remarkable prophecy in Ezek. xxxvii. where, by the reſurrection of dry bones the dead hope of Iſrael was revived, and by the uniting of two ſticks was foreſhew'd the incorporating of Iſrael with Judah: Only he improves it, according to his uſual method, by ſuperadding a ſpiritual ſenſe to the more common ſignification, and applying it to the uniting of Jews and Gentiles in the Chriſtian church; as is noted on the foregoing verſe: And this was the more ſeaſonable at this time, when he was, not long after, to be vilified and crucified, and his followers to be left as a parcel of dry bones; whoſe hopes and expectations would be quite dead with him, but were to be revived by his reſurrection. (Brady.) To give the reader a clear notion of this "one fold, and one ſhepherd," that is to ſay, in the language of the primitive fathers, of the one church, and one epiſcopate, would exceed the bounds of theſe notes: I ſhall therefore recommend him to St. Cyprian's treatiſe of the "unity of the church;" which excellent piece deſerves to be read with great attention, as ſtating the ancient principles of church-unity in ſo clear a light, that our modern ſchiſmatics might hence alone, if they would come diſpoſed to it, meet with the conviction they ſo ſadly want. (Marſhall.)

Therefore doth my Father love me.] Hence note, 1. That Jeſus Chriſt certainly foreknew his own death and reſurrection. 2. That Chriſt was a voluntier in dying, "He laid down his life," none could have taken it from him. 'Tis true, his death was a violent death, but a voluntary ſacrifice; he died violently, but yet voluntarily: The hand of his enemies could never hurt him, without his own conſent. 3. That as Chriſt died voluntarily with reſpect to himſelf, ſo in a way of ſubjection to his Father's command: "This commandment have I received from my Father." 4. That this voluntary ſubmiſſion of Chriſt to die for us, was the ground of his Father's love to him: "Therefore doth my Father love me, becauſe I lay down my life." Altho' the Father had many reaſons to love the Son, yet none was ſtronger than this obedience to death, even the curſed death of the croſs, for the redemption and ſalvation of loſt ſinners: Therefore did the Father love him with a more exceeding love, becauſe he laid down his life for his ſheep. (B.)

I lay down my life.] Here Chriſt ſpeaks in the preſent tenſe, becauſe his whole life on earth was ſuch a continual ſcene of perſecution and ſuffering, as might be called a dying daily. (Beza.) Grotius, having hinted, on ver. 11. that tithesthai, to lay down, ſignifies only to expoſe it to danger, or "putting our life in our hand," as the phraſe is, Judges xii. 3. and 1 Sam. xxviii. 21. ſaith alſo that palin labein, to take it again, here, is to reſcue it from danger. But this is a very forced conſtruction: For, 1. This phraſe, to "lay down the life," being abſolutely put, is only uſed in the New Teſtament; and there only by this apoſtle: And it always ſignifies to die, or to give the life to death; as when St. Peter ſaith, "I will lay down my life for thee," chap. xiii. 37, 38. When Chriſt ſaith, chap. xv. 13. "Greater love than this hath no man, than that one ſhould lay down his life for his friend." And the beloved diſciple, 1 John iii. 16. argues thus, "If he laid down his life for us, we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." And ſurely, when Chriſt ſaith here, "I lay down my life for my ſheep," he meant not only, that he would expoſe himſelf to danger, but that he would ſuffer death for them: When therefore he ſaith, in the ſame place, "I have power to take it up again," he doubtleſs meant, he had power to raiſe it from death. Stegman the Socinian ſaith, That Chriſt here aſcribes this power to himſelf improperly; becauſe God had promiſed to uſe his power in raiſing him from the dead: But, 1. Is it proper to introduce Chriſt poſitively ſaying, "I have" what he had not, only becauſe another had that power? Since he ſays not, I have a promiſe, but I have exouſian, the power, to reſtore this life I lay down. 2. If we conſider how plainly he had challenged this power to himſelf, the power of raiſing up, and quickening whom he would, and that becauſe he had "life in himſelf," chap. vi. 21, 26. and engaged his word of truth, both "to raiſe up his own body," chap. ii. 19. and the "bodies of all his ſaints," chap. vi. 39, 40, 44, 54. yea, the bodies of "all that were in their graves," chap. v. 28, 29. as being "the reſurrection and the life," chap. xi. 25. we cannot doubt his power to raiſe his own body. And, 3. When he ſaith, in the preceding words, "No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myſelf, I have power to lay it down," he plainly aſcribes to himſelf a right or power to give up himſelf to the death; why therefore ſhould not the ſame words immediately following, viz. "I have power to take it up again," bear the ſame ſenſe? The little ſophiſms of Stegmannus here, are of no force to the contrary: For, why might not Chriſt's body die, tho' it was united to an immortal nature, as well as when it was united to an immortal ſoul? Nor do we ſay, that he was dead according to his human nature, but only according to his body; or that the union of his body with the divine nature was diſſolved by death, but only the union of his body with his ſoul. Note alſo, that the words following, "This commandment have I received from the Father," reſpect not the raiſing of his body, but only the laying down his life, or his dying for the ſheep, as Grotius here notes. (W.) Tho' the laſt phraſe ſeems yet more properly to be render'd a promiſe than a commandment, ſince it is manifeſtly grounded on that famous promiſe, in Pſalm xvi. 10.

Ver. 19, 20, 21. There was a diviſion therefore again among the Jews for theſe ſayings. And many of them ſaid, He hath a devil, and is mad: why hear ye him? Others ſaid, Theſe are not the words of him that hath a devil: Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?

There was a diviſion.] Here the Evangeliſt ſhews, what different effects this ſermon of our Saviour had upon the Jews; many of them, to calumniate and ſlander him, as one poſſeſſed and mad, and therefore not to be heard and minded; others of calmer thoughts ſaid, That the doctrine he taught, and the late miracle which he had wrought in curing the blind man, were abundantly ſufficient to confute ſuch a groundleſs ſlander. Learn hence, That the doctrine of Chriſt meeting with diverſity of diſpoſitions, it is no wonder that it occaſions different effects, to the ſoftening of ſome, and hardening of others; even as the ſame ſun, that melteth the wax, hardeneth the clay: Yet is not this to be imputed to the doctrine of our Saviour, but to mens corruptions which oppoſe the truth, and the maintainers of it. (B.) The Goſpel diſcovering the hipocriſy of the world, 'tis no wonder the world was in an uproar at its firſt appearance. (Beza.) See the notes on chap. vii. 12. and ix. 16.

He hath a devil, and his mad.] It may ſeem marvelous, how the Demoniacs, ſo often mention'd in the Goſpel, ſhould ſo abound in and about that nation, which was the people of God, whereas, in other nations, and their writings, we hear of no ſuch; and that too, as it ſhould ſeem, about the time of our Saviour's being on earth only; becauſe, in the time before, we find no mention of them in ſcripture: The wonder is yet the greater, becauſe it ſeems, notwithſtanding all this, by the ſtory of the Goſpel, not to have been accounted then, by the people of the Jews, any ſtrange or extraordinary thing, but as a matter uſual; nor beſides is taken notice of by any foreign ſtory. To meet with all theſe difficulties, which I ſee not how otherwiſe can be eaſily ſatisfied, I am perſuaded, till I ſhall hear better reaſon to the contrary, that theſe Demoniacs were no other than ſuch as we call mad-men, and lunaticks: At leaſt that we comprehend them under thoſe names; and that therefore they both ſtill are, and in all times and places have been, much more frequent than we imagine: The cauſe of which our miſtake, is that diſguiſe, of another name, and notion, than we conceive them by; which makes us take them to be divers, which are the ſame. That you may rightly underſtand this my aſſertion, before I acquaint you with the reaſons which induce me thereunto, you muſt know, that the maſters of phyſick tell us of two kinds of deliration, or alienation of the underſtanding; One, ex vi morbi, that, namely, which is with or from a fever, called delirium, or phrenitis, the latter being a higher degree than the former; another kind ſine febre, when a man, having no other diſeaſe, is craſed and diſturbed in his wits. And this, they ſay, is either ſimple dotage, proceeding from ſome weakneſs of the brain or intellective faculty; or melancholia, or mania, which they deſcribe and diſtinguiſh thus: Both of them to be when the underſtanding is ſo diſturbed, that men imagine, ſpeak, and do things, which are moſt abſurd, and contrary to all reaſon, ſenſe, and uſe of men: But their difference to be in this, that melancholia is attended with fear, ſadneſs, ſilence, retiredneſs, and the like ſymptoms; mania with rage, raving, and fury, and actions ſuitable, which is moſt properly ſtiled madneſs. Now then, I ſay, that thoſe demoniacs in the Goſpel were ſuch as we call mad-men: Underſtand me, to mean not of deliration, ex vi morbi, or of ſimple dotage, but of thoſe two laſt kinds, melancholici and maniaci, whereunto add morbus comitialis, or falling ſickneſs, and whatſoever is properly called lunacy. Such as theſe, I ſay, the Jews believed, and ſo may we, to be troubled and acted with evil ſpirits: As it is ſaid of Saul's melancholy, That "an evil ſpirit from the Lord troubled him;" and therefore, paſſing by all other cauſes and ſymptoms, they thought fit to give them their name from this, calling them daimonizomenos: An occaſion, of the more frequent uſe of which expreſſion, in our Saviour's time, and the ages immediately before him, than formerly had been, or may ſeem to have been, given by the ſect of Sadducees, which, after the time of Hyrcanus, had much prevailed, and affirmed, as St. Luke tells us, "That there was no reſurrection, neither angel nor ſpirit:" To affront, and cry down whoſe error, it is like enough, the Phariſees, and the reſt of the right-believing Jews who followed them, affected to draw their expreſſions whereſoever they could, from angels and ſpirits; as preſently they did, in the Acts, when St. Paul awaken'd their faction in the Council, ſaying, "I am a Phariſee, and the ſon of a Phariſee," &c. "We find no evil, (ſay they) in this man, but if a ſpirit or an angel, hath ſpoken unto him, let us not fight againſt God." Having thus ſufficiently ſtated, and explicated my aſſertion; now you ſhall hear what grounds I have for the ſame. 1. Therefore, I prove it out of the Goſpel itſelf; and that, in the firſt place, from this ſcripture, "He hath a devil and is mad:" Where, I ſuppoſe, the latter words to be an explication of the former. 2. I prove it out of Matt. xvii. 14, 15. where it is ſaid, "There came to our Saviour a certain man, kneeling down to him, and ſaying; Lord have mercy on my ſon, becauſe he is lunatick and ſore vexed; for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water." That this lunatick was a Demoniac, is evident, both out of the eighteenth verſe of that chapter, where it is ſaid, Our Saviour "rebuked the devil, and he departed out of him, and the child was cured from that very hour;" as alſo out of Luke ix. 39. where it is ſaid, of the ſelf-ſame perſon, "Lo, a ſpirit taketh him, and he crieth out, and it teareth him, that he foameth again, and, bruiſing him, hardly departeth from him." By comparing of theſe places, you may gather, what kind of men they were, which the ſcripture calls daimonizomenoi, Demoniacs. Now I come to other teſtimonies; and 1. Take notice, that the Gentiles alſo had the like apprehenſion of their mad-men; whence they called them Larvati, and Cerriti; where Larvati is as much as Larvis, id eſt, Demonibus acti: So Feſtus; Larvati (ſaith he) furioſi & mente moti, quaſi larvis exterriti: And for Cerriti, they were ſo called, quaſi Cereriti, hoc eſt, a cerere percuſſi. And therefore, when Menechmus in Plautus fains himſelf mad, and talks accordingly, the phyſician, who was ſent for to cure him, asks the old man who came to fetch him, whether he were Larvatus or Cerritus. If the Gentiles thought thus of their mad-men, ſhould we think it ſtrange the Jews ſhould? I could tell you here, that the Turks conceit of their mad-men, is not unlike this; but that they ſuppoſe the ſpirit that works in them, to be a good, rather than evil one. But I let this paſs. 2. My next teſtimony ſhall be out of Juſtin Martyr, who, in his ſecond apology ad Antonnium, to prove, at leaſt to a Gentile, that the ſouls of men have exiſtence, and ſenſe, after death, brings for an argument, their necyomantia, and their evocationes mortuorum, together with other the like; And, in the laſt place, this of Demoniacs; where, by his deſcription of them, we may eaſily gather what kind of people they were, which were ſo taken to be. Item illi (ſaith he) qui a mortuorum manibus corripiuntur, (for ſuch were theſe Demonia taken to be) atque humi abjiciuntur homines, which all call Demoniacs and mad-men: Daimonoleptoi therefore, and mainomenoi, were all one, as men then conceived. Note here, that theſe daimonia were taken to be the ſouls of men deceaſed, and that not among the Gentiles only, but, as may ſeem, among the Jews alſo: For Joſephus, in his ſeventh book, De Bello Judaico, cap. 25. mentioning theſe daimonizomenoi, upon occaſion of a certain herb, ſuppoſed to be good for them, ſaith expreſly, by way of parentheſis, ſpiritus ſunt peſſimorum hominum vivis immerſa. I tell not this, meaning to avouch it for true; but only that you might underſtand, how Juſtin Martyr's argument proceeds, to prove that ſouls have exiſtence after death, from demoniaci. 3. My laſt proof is taken from thoſe Energumeni, which are all one with daimonizomenoi, ſo often mentioned in our church liturgies, in the ancient canons, and in other eccleſiaſtical writings, many ages after our Saviour's being on earth; and that, not as any rare and unaccuſtomed thing, but as ordinary and uſual. They were wont to be ſent out of the church when the liturgy began; as they did the Pœnitentes, Auditores, and Catechumeni, which might not be partakers of the holy myſteries. If thoſe were not ſuch, as we now a-days conceive of no otherwiſe than as mad-men, ſurely the world muſt be ſuppoſed to be very well rid of devils, over what it hath been; which, for my part, I believe not. Nay, that theſe energumenoi, or daimonizomenoi, were ſuch as I ſpeak of, Balſamon and Zonaras both, in their Scholia upon the canons of the church, will, I think, inform us: For, to reconcile two canons, concerning thoſe Energumeni, which ſeem contradictory, one (called of the apoſtles) in theſe words; Si quis demonem habet, ne fiat clericus, ſed neque cum fidelibus precetur: Another of Timotheus, Patriarch of Alexandria, ſpeaking thus, Si qui fidelis (daimonizetai) debet eſſe ſanctorum myſteriorum particeps. To reconcile theſe, I ſay, they affirm the former, which admits them, not to be meant of him, that is continually and always mad; ne forte quid mali aut inhoneſti agat, aut Demoniacas voces emittat, ita ut populum dei conturbet, atque divinum officium impediat; but that of Timotheus that admits them, to be underſtood of him that is mad but by fits, and hath his lucid intervals. Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. And it was at Jeruſalem the feaſt of the dedication, and it was winter. And Jeſus walked in the temple in Solomon's porch. Then came the Jews round about him, and ſaid unto him, How long doſt thou make us to doubt? If thou be the Chriſt, tell us plainly. Jeſus anſwered them, I told you, and ye believed not: The works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witneſs of me. But ye believe not; becauſe ye are not of my ſheep, as I ſaid unto you. My ſheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. And I give unto them eternal life, and they ſhall never periſh, neither ſhall any pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them me, is greater than all: and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my Father are one.

The feaſt of the dedication.] This feaſt was not of divine, but human inſtitution: It was appointed by Judas Maccabeus; and continued eight days, as an anniverſary commemoration for the repairing of the temple. Now, our Saviour was ſo far from reproving the Jews for obſerving this feaſt, which was of human inſtitution, that he graced the ſolemnity with his own preſence. Hence obſerve, 1. That our Saviour held communion with the Jewiſh church, and did, without ſcruple, conform himſelf to the obſervation of their rites and cuſtoms, altho' they were not originally of divine inſtitution. Learn 2. That ſuch a Chriſtian, as doth peaceably comply with the practice of the church, in whoſe communion he lives, in the obſervation of thoſe indifferent rites and cuſtoms which are uſed by her, acts moſt agreeably to our Saviour's practice and example. Who can, with any ſhew of reaſon, cenſure Chriſtians, for obſerving the feaſt of the Nativity, who ſee Chriſt himſelf obſerving the feaſt of Dedication? Certainly no perſon of ſober principles ever queſtioned, but that eccleſiaſtical rulers, and civil magiſtrates, have a power to appoint publick days of thankſgiving yearly, for the commemoration of mercies, which ought never to be forgotten. From our Saviour's preſence at this feaſt, Grotius well notes, That feſtival days, in memorial of publick bleſſings, may piouſly be inſtituted by perſons in authority, without a divine command. But, to be ſomewhat more particular here, we are to obſerve, 1. That there was a ſolemn dedication, or conſecration, of places to religious uſes, even in Nature: For Jacob, in his journey, before the Law was given, conſecrated even that ſtone, which he ſet up, with intention to build God an houſe there, Gen. xxviii. 20. 2. There were the like dedications in the time of the law; viz. Of the tabernacle erected by Moſes, Numb. vii. 1. Of the temple built by Solomon, 1 Kings viii. 1. and 2 Chron. v. 2, &c. Of the ſecond temple which was rebuilt after the captivity, Ezra vi. 16. As well as this under our conſideration, when the holy temple was purg'd of the pollutions of the heathens, and a new altar ſet up in the place of that which had been prophaned, 1 Macc. iv. 45, &c. 3. Neither of the former feaſts of dedication, tho' ſolemnly kept at the time, appear to have been made anniverſary; but this was held every year, for eight days together: And yet Chriſt himſelf was ſo far from condemning this yearly feſtival, or diſputing the meer human authority by which it was inſtituted, that he honour'd it with his own preſence; thereby countenancing, and authorizing the inſtitutions of lawful authority, tho' human only, and directing us to ſubmit to the ſame: For, 4. That it was not at any anniverſary (if there had been any held) of either of the other dedications, but at this of Judas Maccabeus, is evident here, where we are expreſly told, that "it was winter:" Whereas that of Solomon's was "in the month Ethanim, which is the ſeventh month," 1 Kings viii. 2. that is, in autumn; and that of the ſecond temple was "in the month Adar," Ezra vi. 15. which was the twelfth month, and the beginning of the ſpring; but this was begun, and ordained to be continued eight days, from "the five and twentieth day of the month Caſleu," which was "the ninth month," 1 Macc. iv. 52, 59. anſwering to December, and conſequently winter. (Tremel. Donne, G. Prid. W. Godw. and B.)

In Solomon's porch.] Becauſe it was winter, and there was a cover; whereas in ſummer the cuſtom was to walk in the open air, or the courts of the temple which were not cover'd. This porch was call'd by Solomon's name, either to continue his memory, or becauſe the porches had ſome reſemblance of that porch which Solomon built before the temple, 1 Kings vi. 3. and was built in the ſame place where this had been. (Trem. G. H. W. and Godw.) The walks of our bleſſed Saviour were not ſuch as proceed from idleneſs, irreverence, and irreligion, accompanied with diſcourſe of the ſame nature, and ſuch as we ſometimes ſee in holy places, to the ſhame of Chriſtians; but they were profitable and religious walks, ſuch as tend to ſalvation. (Q.)

How long doſt thou make us to doubt?] Or keep our mind in ſuſpence. See the notes on Luke xii. 29. To which may be added here, That this is one of the many places, animadverted on by Dr. Mill, with an air of aſſurance, as inſtances of ſoleciſms and falſe Greek, with which the New Teſtament is ſaid to be defiled. This paſſage, in the original, is ſaid to be falſe Greek. Whereas, if we could not find the word (airo) in exactly the ſame ſenſe, in a claſſick, yet that would be only a peculiarity, and could not be falſe Greek, or ſoleciſm. But, we have a parallel place in an admirable Greek author; who is indeed much lower in time, but little inferior in merit, to the noble authors we chiefly make uſe of, viz. Plutarch, Demoſth. p. 853. paulo ante fin. Francof. 1599. apud hæred. Wichel. Where the ſame phraſe is made uſe of, to expreſs Greece being in ſuſpence, and doubtful expectation of the iſſue. (Blackw.)

Ye believe not, becauſe ye are not of my ſheep.] It is evident that Chriſt here gives the reaſon why they believed not; as he doth alſo chap. viii 43, 45, and 47. And this obſervation excludes the evaſion of thoſe who ſay, Becauſe, here, does not render the reaſon of their unbelief, but only intimates, that it was conſequential to their being not his ſheep: For 1. The word, here render'd becauſe, is not hoti, but ou gar; for "ye are not my ſheep," Now, gar is a rational particle, pointing out the cauſe. 2. The reaſon, which Chriſt here aſſigns, of this defect of faith, is doubtleſs ſuch as render'd it a great crime in them: For ſure, that muſt be ſuch for which they were to "die in their ſins," chap viii. 24. 'Tis therefore certain this unbelief cannot be reſolv'd into any natural defect of knowledge on their part, or any decree, or act of reprobation, on God's part; but into the want of a docile and well-diſpoſed mind. For, if it were the ſame, to be one of Chriſt's ſheep; and to be predeſtinated to faith and ſalvation, the import of Chriſt's words muſt be this, Ye therefore "believe not, becauſe ye are not of" the number of the elect, but of thoſe whom God hath from eternity rejected. Now, by this account of their infidelity, Chriſt would not have accuſed, but excuſed the Jews: For what fault could it be in them, not to do that which by reaſon of an act of God, before they had a being, they were incapable of doing? Then might they have replied to Chriſt, we therefore believe not, becauſe God, by his act of reprobation, hath ſhut the door of faith againſt us; and ſo our infidelity is not to be imputed to us, but to God. (W.) See the notes on chap. vi. 37. and 44. and viii. 43.

My ſheep hear my voice.] See the notes on ver. 4, 5, and 11.

They ſhall never periſh.] Our bleſſed Lord does not ſay, "they ſhall never periſh" through any faults of their own; but that they, continuing in his fold, and to be his ſheep, ſhall never periſh through any defect of his, or by reaſon of any want of power in him: For he is ſtronger than all their enemies, and "his Father, who gave them to him is greater than all" their adverſaries; and therefore none are able to "pluck them out of his hands." But, that his ſheep may ſtray out of his fold, and put themſelves from under his protection, is manifeſt from the cautions given them, to be circumſpect and watchful, and to "take heed leſt they fall," 1 Cor. 10, 12. and the exhortations to "continue in his goodneſs," Rom. 11, 22. and to "look to themſelves, that they loſe not thoſe things which they have wrought," 2 John 8. (W. and F.)

I and my Father are one.] That is, One, in eſſence and nature, One in authority and power; and not barely one in will and affection, one in concord or conſent. That this is the genuine ſignification of the words, appears, 1. From the original text; where it is not ſaid, "I and my Father are" (heis) one perſon, in the maſculine gender, but (hen) one thing, in the neuter. Now, if that thing be not the divine being, they cannot be One: For, ſince the Father is confeſs'd to be God, the Son cannot be one thing with the Father, if he be not God too. 2. It appears from the context; where our Saviour, having, in the preceding verſes, aſcribed the preſervation of his ſheep to the power of his Father, "None is able to pluck them out of my Father's hands," aſcribes the ſame alſo to his own power, "Neither ſhall any pluck them out of my hand; plainly intimating, that his ſheep were equally ſafe in his own hand, as in his Father's: For, ſays he, "I and my Father are one." And, 3. It appears from the next verſes, that the Jews underſtood him in that ſenſe; "taking up ſtones to ſtone him," as guilty of blaſphemy, "becauſe he made himſelf God." Now, this invidious charge Chriſt doth not evade, by declaring, that he conſpired with the will of God, as all true prophets did; but by appealing to the works, which he did by the power of the Father reſiding in him: All which plainly carries this to an unity of power, not of will only; and then St. Chryſoſtom's inference is undeniable, That if the power be the ſame, the eſſence alſo is the ſame. (W. and B.) From this text it is alſo obſervable, that tho' Chriſt be one in eſſence with the Father, yet they are diſtinct perſons one from another: For the original words are hen eſmen, "I and my Father (that is, in the plural number we) are one; clearly expreſſing at once the plurality of perſons, and the unity of the Godhead.

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. Then the Jews took up ſtones again to ſtone him. Jeſus anſwered them, Many good works have I ſhewed you from my Father; for which of thoſe works do ye ſtone me? The Jews anſwered him, ſaying, For a good work we ſtone thee not; but for blaſphemy, and becauſe that thou, being a man, makeſt thyſelf God. Jeſus anſwered them, Is it not written in your law, I ſaid, Ye are gods? If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the ſcripture cannot be broken: Say ye of him whom the Father hath ſanctified, and ſent into the world, Thou blaſphemeſt; becauſe I ſaid, I am the Son of God? If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, tho' ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him.

Took up ſtones again.] This is now the third time, that the Jews attempted to caſt Chriſt down headlong, or "to ſtone him." There would be but few preachers, could they foreſee, as Chriſt did, that they ſhould frequently meet with nothing but ill-uſage in the exerciſe of their miniſtry. They are often diſcouraged at leſs: And what is more deplorable, there is no occaſion for ſo frightful a proſpect to make them change the truth into lies and flatteries, and diſguiſe the word of God, in a moſt ſhameful and ſcandalous manner. (Q.)

But for blaſphemy.] See the notes on Matt. ix. 3. and John v. 18.

Is it not written in your law?] That is, in Pſalm lxxxii. 6. which book ye allow to be canonical ſcripture. (H.)

Called them gods, unto whom the word of God came.] The "coming of the word of the Lord" to any man, ſignifies among the Hebrews, frequently in the Old Teſtament, God's ſending a man, deſigning him, appointing him, to any office; and ſo 'tis conſtantly uſed in the writings of the prophets; who begin their prophecies ſolemnly in this form; "The word of the Lord came unto me, ſaying:" which is but their ſhewing or vouching their commiſſion. And ſo when, Rom. x. 17. it is ſaid, akoee, that is, preaching of the word, not their hearing, but their being heard, (as in Plato in Phædro, I deſire to temper the brackiſh hearing with ſweet, or potable ſpeech, where hearing is uſed for the word or ſpeech which is heard) is "by the word of God," the meaning of it is, that no man muſt "preach, except he be ſent," ver. 15 Where "the word of God" ſignifies not the word which they preach, but the commiſſion from which they are authoriſed to preach to others. And ſo for the office of judge, &c. it is as proper, "the word of the Lord," ſignifying a commiſſion from God, mediately, or immediately, for any ſuch: Which when it comes to any man, for the execution of power above others, it is the inſtating of him in that office of power; and the ſame will be ſaid of the ſacerdotal alſo. But, the truth is, the phraſe here is not, "Thoſe to whom the word of the Lord came," upon which ſuppoſition this interpretation is built; but pros hous ho logos tou Theou egeneto, "to whom the word of God was, or was ſpoken;" and that may thus be interpreted. David, Pſalm lxxxii. 1. hath theſe words, "God ſtandeth in the congregation of the mighty, he judgeth among the gods; how long will ye judge unjuſtly?" In that place the judges, or rulers of the Sanhedrim, are called gods, by the Pſalmiſt, in the perſon of God: And again, ver. 6. "I have ſaid, ye are gods, and ye are all children of the moſt High:" Chriſt, referring here to this, ſaith, "Is it not written in your law, I have ſaid, ye are gods?" From whence he concludeth, "If he called them gods, to whom the word of God was," that is, to whom, or of, or concerning whom God ſpake, in that place of the law, (that is, in the book of Pſalms, comprehended ſometimes under the word law, ſee chap. xii. 34. as the whole Old Teſtament is called "the law and the prophets," tho' elſewhere there is a third mention of the diviſion of thoſe books, the hagiographa, the book of Pſalms contained under that branch) "if he called thoſe gods, and ſons of God," who were but ordinary judges of thoſe times, choſen by men, and by impoſition of hands of the Sanhedrim advanced to that office, after the common manner of all (nothing peculiar, or extraordinary, or of immediate miſſion from heaven in all this) then how much more may he, whom God the Father hath ſent, with his immediate commiſſion into the world (the Spirit deſcending on him, which is called the ſanctifying of him, and the "voice from heaven, This is my beloved Son," &c. being the very words of his commiſſion) ſay without blaſphemy, that he is "the Son of God?" ver. 36. And this ſeems the moſt obvious clear meaning of the place. (D. H. and H.) This place the Socinians produce to prove, that Chriſt was not God by nature, but only in reſpect of his ſanctification and miſſion. It is a certain truth, that he who was "ſanctified and ſent was the Son of God;" but he was not, therefore, the Son of God, becauſe ſanctified and ſent: His ſanctification was not the ground of his ſonſhip; but his ſonſhip was the cauſe of his ſanctification. He was a Son before he was ſent; even from eternity: Otherwiſe, it muſt have been ſaid, that God ſent him to be his Son; and not, that God ſent his Son. This ſuppoſes him, before he was ſent, to have been actually his Son; as certainly he was before, from the foundation of the world, Prov. viii. 23. (B.) But this controverſy is very largely diſcuſſed by Dr. Whitby on this text.

Sanctified and ſent.] See the notes on Luke i. 35. and John v. 18. vi. 27.

If I do not the works.] Here Chriſt uſes another argument, to prove, that it was no blaſphemy in him, to call himſelf God; which argument runs thus; If I do thoſe miraculous works, which no power leſs than a divine power can effect, then ye ought, by theſe works, to be led to believe and acknowledge, that I am truly and really God: But the works which I do, are the effect and product of an omnipotent power; therefore ye ought to believe, that I am one in eſſence with the Father, there being a mutual in-exiſtence of one perſon in the other, ſo that the Father is in me, and I in him; and thus "I and the Father are one." Learn hence, That Chriſt never required of his diſciples and followers an implicit faith, or a blind obedience: But as he ſubmitted his doctrine to the trial of reaſon, ſo he ſubmitted his miracles to the examination and judgment of ſenſe; therefore he ſays, "If I do not the works of my Father," that is, divine works, "believe me not" to be a divine perſon. (W. and B.) See the notes on ver. 25.

Ver. 39, 40, 41. 42. Therefore they ſought again to take him: but he eſcaped out of their hand, And went away again beyond Jordan, into the place where John at firſt baptized; and there he abode. And many reſorted unto him, and ſaid, John did no miracle: but all things that John ſpake of this man were true. And many believed on him there.

He eſcaped out of their hand.] Chriſt did not avoid this danger, either out of diffidence, or fear of death, or to take his eaſe; but that he might gather a church elſewhere. (Beza.) See the notes on chap. vii. 30. and viii. 59.

Where John at firſt baptized.] That is, in Bethabara, beyond Jordan. See the notes on chap. i. 28.

John did no miracle.] Here obſerve the dignity of Chriſt above John. "John did no miracle;" but Chriſt did all. The wiſdom of God ſo order'd it, that tho' the Old Teſtament prophets, Elijah and Eliſha, wrought many miracles for the confirmation of their divine miſſion, yet John the Baptiſt, coming immediately before Chriſt, as his meſſenger and fore-runner, wrought none; for theſe three reaſons probably; 1. That ſo the glory of Chriſt, in working miracles, when he came upon the ſtage of his miniſtry, might be the more clear and evident. 2. That the evidence of Chriſt being the Meſſias, might be the more clear by the miracles which he wrought. 3. That the minds of the people might not be divided and diſtracted, between John and Chriſt; and that there might be no pretence of competition between them: Therefore "John did no miracle; but all things that John ſpake of Chriſt were true" (B.) See the notes on chap. iii. 30. and vii. 31.

CHAP. XI.

Chriſt raiſeth Lazarus from the grave, after four days burial. Many Jews believe. The great council conſpire againſt him Caiaphas propheſieth his death. Chriſt retireth to Ephraim: And is laid in wait for at the paſſover.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. NOW a certain man was ſick, named Lazarus of Bethany, the town of Mary and her ſiſter Martha. It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair, whoſe brother Lazarus was ſick. Therefore his ſiſters ſent unto him, ſaying, Lord, behold, he whom thou loveſt is ſick. When Jeſus heard that, he ſaid, This ſickneſs is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby. Now Jeſus loved Martha, and her ſiſter, and Lazarus. When he had heard therefore that he was ſick, he abode two days ſtill in the ſame place where he was. Then after that ſaith he to his diſciples, Let us go into Judea again. His diſciples ſay unto him, Maſter, the Jews of late ſought to ſtone thee; and goeſt thou thither again? Jeſus anſwer'd, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he ſtumbleth not, becauſe he ſeeth the light of this world. But if a man walk in the night he ſtumbleth, becauſe there is no light in him. Theſe things ſaid he: and after that, he ſaith unto them, Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth: but I go, that I may awake him out of ſleep. Then ſaid his diſciples, Lord, if he ſleep, he ſhall do well. Howbeit Jeſus ſpake of his death: but they thought that he had ſpoken of taking of reſt in ſleep. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead: And I am glad for your ſakes, that I was not there, (to the intent ye may believe) nevertheleſs, let us go unto him. Then ſaid Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellow diſciples, Let us alſo go, that we may die with him.

Named Lazarus.] This chapter relates unto us the miraculous power of Chriſt in raiſing of dead Lazarus; which, as it was one of his laſt, ſo was it one of the greateſt, miracles which he wrought: And yet we find none of the Evangeliſts make mention of it, but only St. John: The reaſon ſuppoſed to be this; becauſe, when the other Evangeliſts wrote their hiſtory, Lazarus was alive; (for Epiphanius ſays, he lived thirty years after he was raiſed by Chriſt) and probably, the mention of this relation might have brought Lazarus into danger and trouble: But St. John wrote his Goſpel after Lazarus's death. This miracle was a ſufficient demonſtration of Chriſt's Godhead: None but an almighty power could recal a man four days dead, from a ſettled corruption to a ſtate of life: None but he that created Lazarus could thus make him anew. (G. and B.) Others give another conjecture, why this miracle was not recorded by the former Evangeliſts, viz. That the laſt of thoſe three, writing but fifteen years after our Lord's aſcenſion, might think it needleſs to mention a miracle, concerning a perſon living ſo near Jeruſalem, where there was ſo great a fame thereof, and ſo many living witneſſes to atteſt it: But, St. John, writing this Goſpel, ſay the ancients, above ſixty years after our Lord's aſcenſion, when by the death of the perſon, and moſt of the witneſſes which were preſent at his reſurrection, the memory and fame of it might be much impair'd, had great reaſon to perpetuate the memory of it by this large rehearſal of it. (W.) And here, all unprejudic'd perſons may obſerve, That this whole narrative is adorn'd with a great number of the moſt moving and lively circumſtances; which are to the mind as the moſt beautiful and diverſified landſcape to the eye: 'Tis a maſterpiece and great pattern of genuine ſenſe and eloquence. There is a peculiar pomp and ſolemnity in the account of this miracle, which was immediately preparatory to that of our Saviour's raiſing himſelf the third day, after his miraculous ſubmiſſion to death and the grave. (Blackw.) See the notes on Luke vii 14.

Bethany, the town of Mary.] See the note on Luke xix. 29. It is here call'd "the town of Mary, and her ſiſter Martha," in the ſame ſenſe as Bethſaida is ſtiled "the city of Andrew and Peter," chap. i. 44. meaning the place in which they dwelt. (W.)

That Mary, which anointed.] This is, by moſt Interpreters, thought to be ſpoken of Mary Magdalen: But, I find no mention in ſcripture, of her anointing the head or feet of Jeſus, as this Mary did, Chap. xii. 3. Yea, when St. Luke had ſpoken of a woman who anointed, not our Lord's head, as this Mary did, but his feet only, Chap. vii. 46. he proceeds, chap. viii to the mention of Mary Magdalen; giving a Character of her, not from what ſhe had done to Chriſt, but from what he had done to her; ſaying, It was that Mary, "out of which he had caſt ſeven devils, ver. 2. which alſo is the character of her in St. Mark, chap. xvi. 9. Nor ſeems it for our Saviour's honour to have been ſo converſant with one who had been a noted harlot, tho' ſhe had now repented of that lewdneſs, or ſuch an ardent lover of her as he was of this Mary, ver. 5. It alſo is to be noted, that the apoſtle mentions this as a thing done, before he ſpeaks of the raiſing of Lazarus; not that it was done before his reſurrection from the dead, as appears, chap. xii. 3. but becauſe it was done before he writ his Goſpel, telling us when it was done in the chapter following. (G. and W.) See the notes on Luke vii. 37.

He whom thou loveſt, is ſick.] Here obſerve, 1. The tender ſympathy of theſe two endeared ſiſters with their afflicted brother; they feel his ſorrows, and acquaint their Saviour with his ſufferings. "Lord! behold, he whom thou loveſt, is ſick." They do not ſay, Our brother that loves thee is ſick; but "he whom thou loveſt, is ſick:" Thereby pleading, not the merit of Lazarus, but the merit of Chriſt: For how can the love of Chriſt, which is infinite and eternal, have any cauſe but itſelf? Note, the perſon whom Chriſt loved is ſick, and dies. Learn thence, That ſtrength of grace, and dearneſs of reſpect, even from Chriſt himſelf, cannot prevail, either againſt death, or againſt diſeaſes: Lazarus, whom Chriſt loved, is ſick. 2. The gracious anſwer which Chriſt ſent to the ſiſters meſſage; "This ſickneſs is not unto death, but for the glory of God;" that is, This ſickneſs ſhall not bring upon him ſuch a death, as he ſhall remain under the power of to the general reſurrection; but is only deſigned to give me an opportunity of glorifying God, by exerciſing my miraculous power in reſtoring him to life. Learn hence, 1. That, as God's own glory is his ſupream aim and end in all his actions, ſo in particular it is deſigned by him, in ſending afflictions upon his people, to glorify his power and wiſdom, mercy and love, in and upon them: The ſaints ſickneſſes are all for the glory of God. 2. That God is glorified when his Son is glorified: As none do honour the Father, who do not honour the Son; ſo the Father accounts himſelf glorified, when the glory of his Son is advanced. (G. W. and B) The love of Jeſus Chriſt for his church and its members is the ſource of all his mercies. This love is not like human affection, which is for ſecuring the objects of it, as much as poſſible, from diſeaſes, afflictions, and from death itſelf: He ſuffers thoſe whom he loves moſt, to be expoſed to all theſe like other men; but his love cauſes them to make a better uſe of them. St John makes mention here of this love, to teach us, that diſtempers are not always marks of God's diſpleaſure; and that we ought not, upon their account, to imagine ourſelves either neglected or forgotten by his providence, or depriv'd of the bleſſing of his love. (Q.)

Not unto death, but for the glory of God.] That is, not unto death only. See the notes on ver. 3. chap. v. 21, &c. and ix. 3.

Jeſus loved Martha, and her ſiſter, and Lazarus.] Here obſerve, What an happy, becauſe an holy and religious, family was here, and much honoured by Chriſt; "Jeſus loved Martha, Mary, and Lazarus:" Where-ever true piety dwells, it draws the eye and heart of Chriſt towards it. Chriſt had frequently and familiarly lodged under their roof, and he rewards them for their entertainment with his love; "Jeſus loved Martha, and her ſiſter." Where note, That Martha is here named firſt, tho' elſewhere Mary had the precedency; to ſhew, no doubt, that they were both equally dear to Chriſt. (Idem.) And yet,

He abode two days ſtill in the ſame place.] Where we may obſerve, That tho' Chriſt loved Lazarus, yet he ſeems to neglect him; he delays going to him for ſome days: But could Chriſt abſent himſelf from one ſo long, whom he loved ſo well? We find he did. Let us take heed that we do not miſinterpret Chriſt's delays: He ſeldom comes at our time, but never ſtays beyond his own: Our Saviour had a double end in ſtaying thus long; namely, for greatning of the miracle, and confirming of their faith. Had Chriſt gone before Lazarus was dead, they might have attributed his recovery rather to the ſtrength of nature, than to Chriſt's miraculous power: Or had Chriſt raiſed Lazarus as ſoon as he was dead, they might peradventure have thought it rather ſome trance or extaſy, than a death and diſſolution: Therefore Chriſt ſtays ſo many days, that God might be the more glorified, and his own omnipotent power the more magnified. We learn then, That when Chriſt delays to help them whom he dearly loves, it is always for wiſe ends and holy purpoſes. (W. and B.) God frequently refuſes to grant a leſs favour, in order to confer upon us a greater. (Q.) When he ſeemeth to delay his helping hand, he conſulteth both his own glory, and our good; as the event here ſheweth. (Beza.) Our Saviour's ſtay two days after the meſſage, and pathetical addreſs of the mourning ſiſters, kept them a little longer in ſuſpence and grief: But it ſhew'd his perfect wiſdom and goodneſs; as it made the wonderful work more remarkable, and conducive to the conviction of the ſpectators. For, if the Son of God had immediately gone, and recover'd Lazarus of his ſickneſs, the miracle would not have had ſo many witneſſes, nor have been entirely free from objections, which at leaſt would have leſſen'd it: But, to raiſe a perſon, "four days dead," offenſive and reduced to corruption, was a ſurprize of unutterable joy to his friends; remov'd all poſſible ſuſpicion of confederacy; ſilenc'd the peeviſhneſs of cavalling; and triumph'd over all the obſtinacy and impudence of prejudice. (Blackw.) See the notes on ver. 17.

The Jews of late ſought to ſtone thee.] Tho' the diſciples were dearly affected to Lazarus, for they had learn'd to love where their maſter loved; yet they diſcourage Chriſt from going to him into Judæa, for fear of violence. They plead for their maſter's ſafety, at the ſame time aiming at their own: They were to go with him; and they knew, their danger was inwrapped in his; therefore they ſeek to divert him from his intention. Oh! How has the fear of ſuffering made many of the friends of Chriſt decline an opportunity of glorifying God, and doing good to others! But cannot God give ſafety, in the midſt of danger, if he pleaſeth? Let us then not chuſe our way according to our own apprehenſion, either of danger or ſafety: But, as we ſee God going before us, if our call be clear, let us go on with courage, whatever difficulties lie in our way. (B.) See the notes on chap. x. 31.

Are there not twelve hours in the day?] This was a parabolical intimation, that his hour was not yet come. (Stanh.) As if he had ſaid, My day is not yet fully ſpent; and therefore it is not in the power of mine enemies to precipitate my paſſion, or to bring the night of ſufferings upon me before the appointed time. (B.) See the notes on chap. ix. 4. and Luke xiii. 32.

Lazarus ſleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him.] How amiable is the modeſty and wiſdom of our Saviour, in this expreſſion! He was not pleaſed to ſay, Lazarus is dead, and I go to raiſe him up; to prevent any appearance of vanity and oſtentation. Great words are an improper introduction to ſuch aſtoniſhing actions; they ſufficiently ſhew and magnifie themſelves. (Bl.) This expreſſion teaches us, That death is a kind of reſt, or ſleep, to the friends of Chriſt; that to a juſt man it is as deſireable, as reſt after the labours of the day; that the hope of the reſurrection ſhould make us deſpiſe death, which is to laſt, as it were no longer than the ſpace of one night; that it is as eaſy to the Son of God to raiſe a dead perſon, as it is to awaken one who is aſleep; that the diſciples ought to be accuſtomed to the language of faith, which is uſeful to preſerve and revive the notions thereof in their minds, &c. (Q.) But it is not only the death of good men, which is compared to, or ſtiled a ſleep, as the death of Moſes, Deut. xxxi. 16. of David, 2 Sam. 7, 12. Pſal. xiii. 3. but the phraſe is uſed alſo of bad men, who are ſaid to "have ſlept their ſleep," Pſal. lxxvi. 5. to "ſleep in the duſt," Dan. xii. 2, and generally of the kings of Iſrael and Judah, that they "ſlept with their fathers." So the word is uſed, ſaith Buxtorf, by the Talmudiſts and Rabbins; though ſaith he, it is uſed by them with a particular reſpect to the bodies of pious men, whoſe death is but a ſleep: And perhaps the ancient Jews might uſe this metaphor, as St. Paul doth, 1 Theſſ. iv. 13. in oppoſition to the heathens, who, having no expectation of the reſurrection of the body, ſtiled death a perpetual ſleep; declaring, they expected to be raiſed out of it as certainly as they roſe from ſleep: And, in alluſion to this metaphor, Chriſt here ſaith, "I go, to awake him out of ſleep," i. e. to raiſe him from the dead. (W.) See the notes on Matt. ix. 24.

I am glad, for your ſakes, that I was not there.] Who, had I been preſent, could not have ſeen my friend languiſhing, or reſiſted the importunity of his ſiſters to prevent his death: But now by raiſing him, after he has been four days dead, I ſhall ſo confirm your faith that I am the Meſſiah, as that ye need not doubt of it when I ſuffer death, as knowing my power to raiſe others, and therefore my own body, from the dead; as I have told you, I both can and will do. (Idem.) The faith of the moſt eminent ſaints, even of the apoſtles themſelves, wants confirmation, in this ſtate of weakneſs and imperfection, and is capable of growth. (B.) Here he gently blames their little faith, that he may make them more attentive to the miracle which he is going to perform. (Q.) See the notes on chap. ii. 19. and x. 18.

Thomas, which is called Didymus.] Didymus, according to both Greek and Syriac, ſignifies a twin; as Thomas alſo doth among the Hebrews: It being cuſtomary with the Jews, when travelling into foreign countries, or familiarly converſing with Greeks and Romans, to aſſume to themſelves a Greek or a Latin name, of great affinity, and ſometimes of the very ſame ſignification, with that of their own country. (Nelſ.)

Let us alſo go, that we may die with him] St. Chryſoſtome makes this an argument of greater cowardiſe in Thomas, than in any of the reſt: Others look upon it, as an inſtance of affection and reſolution. The moſt natural interpretation ſeems to be, that, tho' he ſaw nothing but death like to follow, upon their going again ſo near Jeruſalem; yet, if Jeſus were determined to hazard his perſon, it would ill become them to deſert him, whatever the conſequence might be. This ſenſe appears to be neceſſary, if by "dying with him," he meant Jeſus: And the dying with Lazarus carries ſo much of irony and poignancy, as was neither decent in reſpect to our Lord, nor at all agreeable to this apoſtle's manner. For, how full of other good qualities ſoever he might be, he ſeems to have been ſlow enough of apprehenſion: As appears, not only from his not underſtanding our Saviour's meaning, in ver. 9, 10. in which his brethren were equal with him; but more ſo, in chap. xiv. 5. where our Lord's words are more intelligible; and moſt of all, by his unperſuadeable ſtiffneſs in the point of Chriſt's reſurrection, chap xx. 25. (Stanh.)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46. Then when Jeſus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already. Now Bethany was nigh unto Jeruſalem, about fifteen furlongs off. And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother. Then Martha, aſſoon as ſhe heard that Jeſus was coming, went and met him: but Mary ſat ſtill in the houſe. Then ſaid Martha unto Jeſus, Lord, if thou had'ſt been here, my brother had not died: But I know, that even now whatſoever thou wilt aſk of God, God will give it thee. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Thy brother ſhall riſe again. Martha ſaith unto him, I know that he ſhall riſe again in the reſurrection at the laſt day. Jeſus ſaid unto her, I am the reſurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, tho' he were dead, yet ſhall he live; And whoſoever liveth, and believeth in me, ſhall never die. Believeſt thou this? She ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Chriſt the Son of God, which ſhould come into the world. And when ſhe had ſo ſaid, ſhe went her way, and called Mary her ſiſter ſecretly, ſaying, The Maſter is come, and calleth for thee. Aſſoon as ſhe heard that, ſhe aroſe quickly, and came unto him. Now Jeſus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him. The Jews then which were with her in the houſe, and comforted her, when they ſaw Mary that ſhe roſe up haſtily, and went out, followed her, ſaying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there. Then when Mary was come where Jeſus was, and ſaw him, ſhe fell down at his feet, ſaying unto him, Lord, if thou had'ſt been here, my brother had not died. When Jeſus therefore ſaw her weeping, and the Jews alſo weeping which came with her, he groned in the ſpirit, and was troubled, And ſaid, Where have ye laid him? They ſay unto him, Lord, come and ſee. Jeſus wept. Then ſaid the Jews, Behold, how he loved him! And ſome of them ſaid, Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have cauſed that even this man ſhould not have died? Jeſus therefore again groning in himſelf, cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a ſtone lay upon it. Jeſus ſaid, Take ye away the ſtone. Martha, the ſiſter of him that was dead, ſaith unto him, Lord, by this time he ſtinketh: for he hath been dead four days. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that if thou would'ſt believe, thou ſhould'ſt ſee the glory of God? Then they took away the ſtone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jeſus lift up his eyes, and ſaid, Father, I thank thee that thou haſt heard me. And I knew that thou heareſt me always: but becauſe of the people which ſtand by, I ſaid it, that they may believe that thou haſt ſent me. And when he thus had ſpoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. And he that was dead, came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Looſe him, and let him go. Then many of the Jews, which came to Mary, and had ſeen the things which Jeſus did, believed on him. But ſome of them went their ways to the Phariſees, and told them what things Jeſus had done.

In the grave four days already.] See the notes on ver. 39.

About fifteen furlongs.] That is, about two miles; commonly called a ſabbath-day's journey. (G.)

To comfort them.] Their neighbours and friends came, to viſit and relieve them in their ſadneſs, with ſuch conſolatory arguments as they had. Nor doth the Chriſtian religion condemn natural affection. Human paſſions are not ſinful, if not exceſſive: To be above the ſtroke of paſſions is a condition equal to angels: To be in a ſtate of ſorrow, without the ſenſe of ſorrow, is a diſpoſition beneath the beaſts: But duly to regulate our ſorrows, and ſet boundaries to our grief, is the wiſdom, the duty, the intereſt, and the excellency of a Chriſtian. (B.)

Martha, aſſoon as ſhe heard.] Altho' Martha was a true mourner for the death of her brother, yet ſhe doth not ſo far indulge to grief, but upon the firſt notice of Chriſt's approach, ſhe ariſes to go forth to meet him, with a mournful moan in her mouth, "Lord, if thou had'ſt been here, my brother had not died." Where obſerve, How faith and infirmity were mixed together: Faith appear'd in that firm perſuaſion which ſhe had of Chriſt's power; as if death durſt not ſhew his face in Chriſt's preſence: But then her infirmity appeared in limiting Chriſt both to time and place: To place, "If thou had'ſt been here;" as if Chriſt could not, if it had pleaſed him, ſave his life, abſent as well as preſent: Then to time, "Now he ſtinketh;" as if ſhe had ſaid, You are come, but, alas! too late; you have ſtaid too long; he is paſt recovery; the grave hath ſwallowed him up; as if death would not deliver up his priſoner at the command of Chriſt. Oh! the imperfect compoſition of the beſt of ſaints! What mixture of faith and infirmity is found in the holieſt and beſt of Chriſtians! This alſo farther appears in her next words, ver. 22. "I know, that whatſoever thou ſhalt aſk of God, he will give it thee:" She ſeems not to believe that Chriſt was able to raiſe him by his own immediate power, but muſt obtain power of God to do it, as the prophets were wont to do that raiſed the dead: She thought Chriſt a perſon highly in God's favour, but ſcarce believed him able to raiſe Lazarus by his own power. Had her faith extended to a belief that Chriſt was equal with the Father, and that the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt in him, ſhe would not have queſtioned his power to raiſe him from the grave: For, tho' Chriſt, as Mediator, did apply himſelf by prayer to God at the raiſing of dead Lazarus, ver. 41, 42. yet as God, he had a power of himſelf to raiſe Lazarus; an almighty power, communicated with his eſſence from the Father, by an eternal and ineffable generation. (B.) See the notes on chap. v. 21.

Thy brother ſhall riſe again.] As our Saviour had, with the utmoſt mildneſs and condeſcenſion, borne the peeviſhneſs and infirmities of his apoſtles; ſo does he alſo cure the miſtakes of Martha; cheriſhing her weak faith, and by ſteps raiſing her to the acknowledgment of his divinity. (Blackw.) He ſpeaks modeſtly, as uſual; and ſays nothing of himſelf, or his own power, unleſs neceſſity requires it of him. (G.) Here obſerve, 1. That the knowledge and belief of the general reſurrection is, and ought to be a ſufficient ſupport under the loſs of our endeared friends who die in the Lord. 2. That the doctrine of the general reſurrection was no new doctrine: Job believed it, chap. xix. 26. Daniel publiſhed it, chap. xii. 2. the Phariſees had a notion of it; but Martha here makes it an article of her faith, "I know he ſhall riſe again in the reſurrection at the laſt day." 3. How Chriſt particularly inſtructs Martha in the cauſe of the reſurrection; acquainting her, that he himſelf is the author and efficient cauſe of it: "I am the reſurrection and the life;" that is, I am the author, and principal efficient cauſe of the reſurrection: And this, with reſpect to both natures: 1. His divine nature is the efficient cauſe of the reſurrection; he ſhall raiſe our bodies out of the duſt by the power of his Godhead. 2. His human nature is the exemplary cauſe or pattern of the reſurrection; for which reaſon Chriſt is called the "firſt-born from the dead:" For tho' ſome were raiſed before him, yet was his reſurrection the cauſe of their reſurrection. Hence St. Paul argues, from Chriſt's reſurrection, the certainty of the reſurrection of his members: Chriſt and believers are one myſtical body; therefore is not Chriſt perfectly riſen till all his members are riſen with him. Indeed Chriſt's perſonal reſurrection was perfect when he aroſe, and all believers aroſe repreſentatively in him; yet till all believers ariſe perſonally, the reſurrection of Chriſt has not received its utmoſt perfection; but there is ſomewhat behind of the reſurrection of Chriſt. Moſt fitly then might our Saviour aſſert, "I am the reſurrection and the life." 4. That Chriſt not only aſſerts himſelf to be the reſurrection, but alſo the life: "I am the reſurrection and the life;" that is, I am the cauſe of life natural, ſpiritual, and eternal: "And whoſoever liveth and believeth in me, ſhall never die;" that is, eternally: Tho' his body ſhall die becauſe of ſin, yet his ſpirit ſhall live becauſe of righteouſneſs. (B.) See the notes on Luke xiv. 14. John v 28, 29. vi. 35, 40. viii. 51. and x. 28.

Thou art the Chriſt.] Obſerve here, The full confeſſion which Martha makes of her faith in Chriſt as God; "Thou art the Chriſt, the Son of God, which ſhould come into the world." A confeſſion which comes neareſt to that of St. Peter, Matt. xvi. 16. of any that we meet with in ſcripture: Nay, it ſeems more full than Peter's confeſſion; for thoſe additional words, "which ſhould come into the world," are not in his confeſſion: The ſum is, ſhe believed Chriſt to be the very Meſſias, who was typified and prefigured, propheſied of, and promiſed to the Old Teſtament ſaints, as the perſon that in the fulneſs of time ſhould come into the world for the redemption and ſalvation of it. Chriſt is never rightly believed in, nor regularly depended upon for ſalvation, except he be owned and acknowledged to be the eternal Son of God. Martha was now fully perſuaded of Chriſt's divine nature; of which the beſt of the diſciples, till after our Saviour's reſurrection, had but a faint and uncertain perſuaſion. (B.)

Followed her, ſaying.] This crowd of Jews know not, that Chriſt was the perſon, who drew them to the place, and brings them out of this houſe, to be witneſſes, on the part of the whole nation, of the laſt and moſt remarkable proof of his miſſion. This will be a miracle of mercy for ſome few; for the reſt a miracle of judgment: To the former it will be the laſt influence of grace, to compleat and finiſh their converſion; to the latter, the filling up of their meaſure, and as it were the ſeal, of their obduracy. We muſt pray on all occaſions. It frequently happens, that people think, they are only going to make a viſit of civility or curioſity, when they are perhaps going to meet with that, which will decide their portion for all eternity! (Q.)

He groned in the Spirit, and was troubled.] Or was moved in his Spirit. Whence we learn, That humane affections and commotions are not to be condemn'd as ſinful, if they do not incline us to do any thing repugnant to piety or reaſon, but only to expreſs our affection to our friend, or our compaſſion to mankind. (W.) Chriſt "groned in the Spirit," when he conſider'd the nature of ſin, the conſequences, effects, and puniſhment thereof, which are pain and death. The ill uſe, which he foreſaw the Jews would make of the miracle he was going to work, and a full purpoſe of following his Father's order, in reſtoring Lazarus to his ſiſters, raiſed in Chriſt this conteſt. (Q.) Tarattesthai is to be troubled with any paſſion; but, in this Goſpel peculiarly, with grief: So, chap. xii. 27. "Now is my ſoul troubled," in reſpect of death approaching. So chap. xiii. 21. "Jeſus, having ſaid this, was troubled in ſpirit," to think of his being delivered up by Judas. So, in his exhortation to the diſciples, when he tells them of his death, chap. xiv. 1. "Let not your heart be troubled:" And ver. 27. 'tis ſet diſtinct from fear the other paſſion, "Let not your heart be troubled, nor cowardly." So here 'tis joyned with "groning in ſpirit," as expreſſions of inward grief; as the tears that follow, ver. 35. are outward evidences of it. As for the form of ſpeech in the Greek, he troubled himſelf, that is but an idiom of the Hebrews; who oft uſe the reciprocal voice Hithpael for a paſſive. (H.)

Jeſus wept.] What a ſolemn concern, what a tenderneſs of devotion, poſſeſſes every Chriſtian heart, when he attends the ever-adorable friend of mankind to the place where Lazarus lay, among the mourning Jews, and his diſconſolate friends, the hoſpitable Martha, and the devout Mary! He, who had all the tenderneſs and goodneſs, without the faults, of humane nature, condoles and ſympathiſes with the diſtreſs'd mourners, with all the inward concern, and outward expreſſion, of undiſſembled grief. "He was troubled, gron'd in Spirit, and wept." After this, one cannot but pity the weakneſs of thoſe orthodox Chriſtians, who were offended with a paſſage parallel to this in St. Luke; and would have had it ſtruck out of the canon, as a diſhonour to our bleſſed Saviour, as Epiphanius relates the thing. How meanly do we think of the affected formality, and unnatural concern of the Stoics, when we read of the wiſeſt and divineſt perſon that ever appear'd in the World, "Jeſus wept"? This ſpoils all the pointed and ſmart ſayings of Seneca, upon the unconcern and courage of his wiſe man; and makes us in love with that ſaying of the ſatyriſt, ſo full of good nature and good ſenſe;

> Lachrymæ noſtri pars optima ſenſus.
> (Tears, the beſt way to eaſe a troubled mind.)

(Blackw.) St. Jerome ſays, Our Saviour wept here in compaſſion to Lazarus, who was to be brought back again into a ſinful and troubleſome world. (B.) See the notes on Luke xix. 41. and xxii. 44.

A cave, and a ſtone lay upon it.) The form of the burial place among the ancient Jews, was a vault, hew'd out in a rock, ſix cubits long, and four broad; in which eight other cells or leſſer holes (or as ſome ſay thirteen) were made, as ſo many diſtinct receptacles, or tombs, for the dead bodies to be laid in. As often as they buried any, they were wont to roll a great ſtone to the mouth of the cave. (Godw.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 60.

Jeſus ſaid, take ye away the ſtone.] No doubt, but that voice, which raiſed the dead, could have remov'd the ſtone: But it is always the will of Chriſt, that we put forth our utmoſt endeavours, and do what we can, in order to our own deliverance. To remove the ſtone, and untie the napkin was in their power: This therefore they muſt do: But, to raiſe the dead was out of their power; and Chriſt will do this alone. Our hands muſt do their utmoſt, before Chriſt will put forth his help. (B.)

He ſtinketh; for he hath been dead four days.] Here Martha, having no hope of ſo great an event, as her brother's being immediately raiſed again to life, ſeems to call away our Lord from the cave, leſt he ſhould be offended with the unſavoury ſmell of the body, now beginning to putrify. (G.) Her argument is this, "He hath been dead four days:" That is, this is the fourth day ſince his death; and therefore, according to experience of dead bodies, which after a revolution of the humours, completed in ſeventy-two hours, (See the notes on Luke xxiv. 46.) tend naturally to putrefaction, he muſt needs be putrefied, and ſo ſtink, before this time. (H.) In this time the viſage of the dead began to change in thoſe countries, and all hopes of any return to life ceaſed. So Dr. Lightfoot, from Maimonides and the Talmudiſts, ſays, They go to the ſepulchres, and viſit the dead for three days, for ſo long the Spirit wanders about the ſepulchre; but then they certifie of the dead, for after three days his countenance is changed. (W.) But whereas, in ver. 17. we read, that "when Jeſus came" to Bethany, "he found that Lazarus had lain in the grave four days already, and here his ſiſter ſaith only "he hath been dead four days;" to reconcile this, which to ſome may ſeem an inconſiſtency, let us obſerve, 1. That the Greek phraſe here is no more than tetartaios eſti, that is, in general terms, this is the fourth day; which may be conſtrued the fourth day after his burial, as properly as after his death. But then, 2. It appears from the context, that after our Saviour had receiv'd the news of his being ſick, "he abode two days ſtill in the ſame place where he was," (that is, other two days, beſide that on which he receiv'd the news;) and then, on the fourth day, incluſively from that of the ſickneſs, he went to Bethany. Now, Bethany being not above ſix miles from the place where our Saviour was before, (W.) he doubtleſs arrived there on the ſame day on which he ſet out; that is, on the fourth day after Lazarus his ſickneſs and death, when he alſo raiſed him again. From whence we muſt conclude, 3. That the body of Lazarus was repoſited in the cave or vault, the ſame day on which he died; without any embalming at all; (as is noted by Mr. Calmet;) which at once reconcileth the ſeeming difficulty, and ſhews the reaſon why Martha ſaid, "By this time he ſtinketh."

Father, I thank thee that thou haſt heard me.] Woltzogenius ſaith, it follows not from theſe words, that Chriſt requeſted any thing of the Father; God being, by an Hebraiſm, ſaid to hear them to whom he vouchſafeth any benefit, tho' they did not aſk it, Pſal. x 17. Iſa. lxv. 24. there being no need, that Chriſt ſhould requeſt that power which from his unction he always had reſiding in him, but only that he ſhould thank the Father for it. But the words following, "I know that thou doſt hear me always," ſeem plainly to imply a requeſt; not indeed that he might receive power to raiſe Lazarus from the dead, for that he teſtifies he had already, Chap. v. 22, 26. but that this miracle might be efficacious to confirm the faith of his apoſtles, and to convince the multitude that he was a prophet ſent from God, and did all things to promote his glory. (W.)

He cried with a loud voice.] That it might appear to all, that even the dead were ſubject to his voice. (Idem.) And that it might be a repreſentation of that ſhrill and loud voice of the laſt trumpet, at the general reſurrection; which ſhall ſound into all graves, and raiſe all fleſh from their bed of duſt (B.) After we have been highly pleas'd and entertain'd with our Saviour's moſt genuine expreſſions of friendſhip, tenderneſs, and generous compaſſion, with what wonder and devout awe are we ſtruck, when we hear that royal and godlike command, "Lazarus, Come forth!" With what ſurprize and amazement do we view the aſtoniſh'd priſoner of the grave, in his funeral attire, ſtart up at that voice which all nature obeys! Before, Jeſus expreſs'd all the tenderneſs of the moſt generous, and prudence of the wiſeſt, of men: Here, he claims his full authority; ſpeaks and acts with the majeſty of the God of Gods, and declares himſelf the reſurrection, the life, and the truth. (Blackw.)

Then many of the Jews.] Obſerve here the different effects which this miracle had upon thoſe Jews that were preſent at the raiſing of Lazarus. Some of them believed on Chriſt; but others, perſiſting in their unbelief, went to the Phariſees, and informed againſt him. Notwithſtanding all the evidences which our Saviour gave of his being the Meſſias, by the miracles which he wrought, yet many rejected him, and refuſed to believe in him, to their unutterable and inevitable condemnation. (B.) There are always flatterers to be found, who make their court to perſons in authority, by decrying virtuous men and their good actions. It is a very helliſh employment, for a man to be a profeſs'd accuſer of God's elect, and to inform againſt them for their holy actions, as others inform againſt notorious villains for their crimes: And yet ſome of that employment are to be met with in the world. (Q.) See the notes on chap. ii. 23. and Luke xvi. 31.

Ver. 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57. Then gathered the chief prieſts and the Phariſees a council, and ſaid, What do we? for this man doeth many miracles. If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans ſhall come and take away both our place and nation. And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the high prieſt that ſame year, ſaid unto them, Ye know nothing at all, Nor conſider that it is expedient for us, that one man ſhould die for the people, and that the whole nation periſh not. And this ſpake he not of himſelf: but, being high prieſt that year, he propheſied that Jeſus ſhould die for that nation: And not for that nation only, but that alſo he ſhould gather together in one the children of God that were ſcattered abroad. Then from that day forth they took counſel together for to put him to death. Jeſus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderneſs, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with his diſciples. And the Jews paſſover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jeruſalem before the paſſover, to purify themſelves. Then ſought they for Jeſus, and ſpake among themſelves, as they ſtood in the temple, What think ye, that he will not come to the feaſt? Now both the chief prieſts and the Phariſees had given a commandment, that if any man knew where he were, he ſhould ſhew it, that they might take him.

This man doeth many miracles.] Obſerve here, how greatly diſturbed the Phariſees were, upon the account of our Saviour's miracles: Knowing how proper an argument they were to convince men, they concluded, that if Chriſt were ſuffered to go on and work miracles, he would draw all men after him. Learn thence, That Jeſus proved himſelf to be the true Meſſias by the miracles which he wrought; his enemies themſelves being judges: For, we find here, the worſt of our Saviour's enemies were afraid of his miracles, that by them he would draw all men after him: "If we let him alone, all men will believe on him." (B.) But, for this very cauſe, that he did ſo many miracles, all ſalutary, and tending to the good of men, and with ſuch evidence of a divine power, as was ſufficient to draw all men to the faith, they ſhould have owned him as the true Meſſiah. (W.)

The Romans ſhall come.] The Jews, in council, ſeeing the miracles which Jeſus did, this eſpecially of raiſing Lazarus, did much fear, that, profeſſing himſelf to be the Meſſias, he would ſoon attempt to make himſelf king; and by the admiration which he had gotten among the people, be quickly aſſiſted to it, if he were not timely hinder'd. If this were done, the conſequent ſeemed viſible to them, that the Romans, to whom they were ſubject, muſt look upon this as a rebellion; and be by that temptation provoked to come with an army, and deſtroy them utterly. That this was their fear is evident, by their many groundleſs objections made afterwards againſt him, that he "forbad to give tribute to Cæſar;" that he "made himſelf a king," and ſo oppoſed himſelf againſt Cæſar: Not that they deſired the continuance of Cæſar's power over them; but that their fear of a yet farther conqueſt from the Romans made them unwilling to provoke them. And this the rather, becauſe of a tradition among them, that a little before the end of the world, there ſhould come one to deſtroy them, called Armolus, which is, by an eaſy change, Romulus. This ſeems to be but the depravation of ſome prophecy from God, which foretold the coming of the Romans in the laſt days, meaning the days of Meſſias, to deſtroy them; and demonſtrates their expecting and believing, that the Romans were the people from whence the change of their religion, and over-running their nation ſhould come. And therefore, when they ſee the doctrine of Chriſt thrive ſo well, gather ſo many proſelytes, and that the miracles which he did were ſo great, as might well ſet him up for a king, or Meſſias, which they through their unbelief would not acknowledge him to be truly, it follows, that they preſently apprehend the Romans coming in, (the Armolus, now mentioned) to deſtroy their religion, ſignified by the word place, and carry them out of their country; that is, deſtroy their nation, or elſe wholly to change their laws, and rule them as conquer'd people. But in this, poor men! they were ſadly miſtaken; the prophecy of the Romans coming in, to conquer them, and deſtroy their temple, (which, I ſuppoſe, was ſcattered among them, and became the occaſion of their miſtake in expecting Armolus to deſtroy them) being thus perfectly fulfilled on them; not by their letting Chriſt alone, or "believing on him," but by the contrary, by this their reſiſting, and bandying againſt, and at laſt crucifying, him. See the note on Matt. xxiv. 28. (H.) Learn hence, how all the enemies and oppoſers of Chriſt and his kingdom do endeavour to colour their quarrel with ſome ſpecious pretences, that they may hide the odiouſneſs of their practices from the eye of the world, and may not be openly ſeen to fight againſt God. (B.)

Caiaphas, being the high prieſt that ſame year.] The high-prieſthood, by God's inſtitution, was to continue for the term of life: But, when the power came into the hands of the Romans, they changed them at pleaſure, and ſo they came to be accounted ſuch by the year. (W.) See the notes on Luke xiii. 2.

Expedient for us, that one man ſhould die] Here the high-prieſt delivers his opinion, for preventing their ſuppoſed danger. He tells the reſt, that they ought not to boggle at the matter, but come to a poſitive and peremptory reſolution to provide for the public ſafety, right or wrong: And that it is a great folly, to prefer one man's life, tho' never ſo innocent, before a nation's welfare. A moſt wicked and deviliſh ſpeech! As a judge, he regarded not what was lawful; but as a wicked politician, he conſulted what was expedient. He declares, that one man, tho' never ſo good and holy, tho' never ſo juſt and innocent, had better die, than a whole nation ſuffer: whereas it is, in any caſe, unlawful to "do evil that good may come." Learn thence, That, altho' it be the duty of all perſons, to pray for, and endeavour after, the public welfare of a church and nation, whereof they are members, yet it is altogether unlawful, to promote the greateſt national good by wicked and unlawful means. Obſerve farther, how God overruled the tongue of Caiaphas, beyond his own intention; prophetically to foretell that great good, which by our Saviour's death ſhould redound to the world; and that the fruit and benefit of his death ſhould not only extend to the Jews, but to the Gentiles alſo; and that he ſhould gather into one body, or church, all that truly believe in him, tho' far and wide diſperſed upon the face of the earth. Hence learn, 1. That the ſpirit of prophecy did ſometimes fall upon very bad men; and God has been pleaſed to reveal ſome part of his mind to the worſt of men. Thus Pharaoh, and Nebuchadnezzar, had in their dreams a revelation from God, what things he intended to do. 2. That it is conſiſtent with the holineſs of God, ſometimes to make uſe of the tongues of the worſt of men, to publiſh and declare his will. Caiaphas here, tho' a vile and wicked man, was influenced by God, to propheſy and ſpeak as an oracle. Almighty God may, when he pleaſes, employ wicked men this way, without any prejudice to his holineſs. "This Caiaphas ſpake not of himſelf, but being high-prieſt that year, he propheſied, that Jeſus ſhould die for that nation." (B.) The public good will ever be the pretence, with which the ambitious and the covetous will endeavour to conceal their wicked deſigns. Theſe men dare not ſay plainly, It is more expedient, that truth, juſtice, and innocence ſhould periſh, and that we ſhould crucify this worker of miracles, rather than loſe our credit and reputation, the eſteem of the world, and all the advantages ariſing from them: But they actually do what they have not the confidence to ſpeak. Let worldly men but ſeriouſly examine themſelves, and they will find ſomething of this nature in their conduct: They copy in miniature that original which the Jews drew at full length. (Q.) This doctrine is abſolutely condemn'd by the beſt commentators of all perſuaſions. Yea, even the Aſſembly of divines, tho' they liv'd in an age when this doctrine was taught, and were on that ſide which put it in practice; yet they were not hardy enough to aſſert it in their Annotations, but inſinuate the contrary from a paſſage in Tertullian. (South)

Gather together in one the children of God.] That is, believers: For "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name," chap. i. 12. But the Gentiles are here called "the ſons of God;" not that they were ſo at preſent, but that they were by faith to be made ſuch; as our Lord calls them "ſheep, which were to hear his voice," chap. x. 16. (W.) See the notes on theſe texts.

Walked no more openly.] See the notes on chap. iv. 3. and vii. 1.

Before the paſſover, to purify themſelves.] That is, that they might be cleanſed from legal impurities; from which till they were cleanſed they could not celebrate the paſſover; and that all who were under any vow of Nazaritiſm might timely perform it. (H.) They who had committed ſins, which were to be expiated by ſacrifices, were not obliged to travel inſtantly to Jeruſalem, to offer them; but might defer the oblation to the next feaſt, at which they were obliged to be preſent. And they who enter'd on the vow of Nazarites, did uſually contrive it ſo, as that it might conclude at one of thoſe feaſts; and therefore they are ſaid to come to Jeruſalem before the feaſt, "to purify themſelves." (W.)

CHAP. XII.

Chriſt ſupping with Lazarus, Mary anointeth his feet. Judas repineth at it. The chief prieſts conſult to put Lazarus to death. Chriſt entreth Jeruſalem in triumph. Certain Greeks deſire to ſee him. He foretelleth his paſſion. The Jews in general are blinded: But many of the chief rulers believe; tho' they dare not confeſs him. Chriſt earneſtly preſſes them all to embrace the Goſpel.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. THEN Jeſus, ſix days before the paſſover, came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raiſed from the dead. There they made him a ſupper, and Martha ſerved: but Lazarus was one of them that ſat at the table with him. Then took Mary a pound of ointment of ſpikenard, very coſtly, and anointed the feet of Jeſus, and wiped his feet with her hair; and the houſe was filled with the odour of the ointment. Then ſaith one of his diſciples, Judas Iſcariot, Simon's ſon, which ſhould betray him. Why was not this ointment ſold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor? This he ſaid, not that he cared for the poor, but becauſe he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein. Then ſaid Jeſus, Let her alone: againſt the day of my burying hath ſhe kept this. For the poor always ye have with you; but me ye have not always. Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there: and they came not for Jeſus ſake only, but that they might ſee Lazarus alſo, whom he had raiſed from the dead. But the chief prieſts conſulted, that they might put Lazarus alſo to death; becauſe that by reaſon of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jeſus.

There they made him a ſupper.] This ſupper was prepared at the houſe of Simon, a kinſman of Lazarus: And it was a cuſtom among the Jews, before the paſſover, to make greater entertainments than ordinary for their friends. (G.) This ſupper was different from that mentioned, Matt. xxvi. 6. Mark xiv. 3. 1. Becauſe that was in the houſe of Simon the Leper, Matt. xxvi. 6. 2. Here Mary anoints the feet of Chriſt, ver. 3. there a woman, not named, pours ointment on his head, Matt. xxvi. 7. 3. This ſupper was ſix days before the paſſover, ver. 1. that only two, Matt. xxvi. 2. Mark xiv. 1. And if the ſuppers were not the ſame, the Mary that anointed Chriſt's feet here, and the woman that anointed his head there, were not the ſame. (W.)

Then took Mary a pound of ointment.] Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, (See the note on Chap. xi. 2.) who is never called Mary Magdalene; nor is it ſaid ever that Chriſt caſt ſeven devils out of her. That they were divers women we learn from the Apoſtolical conſtitutions, which ſay, There were with us, Mary Magdalene, and Martha, and Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus: And from Origen, in theſe words, the Goſpel ſaith, "There came a woman having an alabaſter box of ointment," &c. Not the ſinner, but Mary an holy Woman. Luke indeed ſpeaks of the ſinner; but Matthew, Mark and John, ſpeak of that Mary, who was not a ſinner. Elſewhere he ſaith, There were three Marys; one of whom Matthew and Mark, another of whom Luke, and a third of whom St. John here ſpeaks. And Baſil of Seleucia in his homily on Lazarus ſaith, This was not the Mary mentioned by St. Matthew or St. Luke: For they were harlots, or ſinners; but ſhe was an holy and honeſt woman. So alſo ſay Chryſoſtom, Euthimius, and Theophylact here. See Coteler. Note in Conſtit. Apoſt. p. 204. and Caſaub. Exercit. 14. a p. 242. ad. p. 300. where he anſwers the arguments of Baronius to the contrary. (W.)

One of his diſciples, Judas Iſcariot.] He was permitted to be among the apoſtles, perhaps to teach us, 1. That there ſhould never be wanting bad men, even in the higheſt places of the Church. 2. That we are to judge of the members of the church, not from the evil lurking in their hearts, which we cannot diſcern, but from their outward profeſſion; this qualifying Judas for the paſſover, if not for the participation of the ſacrament: And, 3. That inward holineſs is not neceſſary to render the offices belonging to the miniſterial function valid, and effectual: For Judas preaches Chriſt, and is ſent out to do it with the power of "healing diſeaſes, and caſting out of devils," Matt. x. 1. &c. (See the note there) though he had himſelf a devil, John vi. 70. nor is he excepted when Chriſt ſaith, "He that receiveth you, receiveth me." (Idem.)

Which ſhould betray him.] That is, the perſon who, ſoon after this, agreed to deliver him into the hands and power of the Jews. (H.)

Sold for three hundred pence.] See the notes on Luke xv. 8.

He was a thief, and had the bag.] He, having the office of receiving all that was brought or preſented to Chriſt, and being a covetous perſon, who purloined much to his own uſes, conceived himſelf to be a loſer, by what was thus beſtow'd on Chriſt. (H.)

Againſt the day of my burying.] As kings and great perſons were wont in thoſe eaſtern countries, at their funerals, to be embalm'd with odours and ſweet perfumes; ſo, ſaith Chriſt, to declare her faith in me, as her King and Lord, ſhe doth, with this ointment, as it were beforehand, embalm my body for its burial. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 12. and Mark xiv. 8.

The poor always ye have with you.] This, being an act of religion, was at this time more ſeaſonable than an act of charity; for of the poor we have always many and daily objects. (How.)

Conſulted, that they might put Lazarus alſo to death.] Tho' he was an innocent man, without any crime laid againſt him, yet they conſpired to put him to death, only to preſerve their own honour and reputation. (W.) But God, in his providence, was pleas'd to preſerve him, as a monument of his glory, and a teſtimony of the miracle which Jeſus had perform'd on him, thirty years after this. (Tayl. and How.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. On the next day much people that were come to the feaſt, when they heard that Jeſus was coming to Jeruſalem, took branches of palm-trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hoſanna, Bleſſed is the king of Iſrael that cometh in the name of the Lord. And Jeſus, when he had found a young aſs, ſat thereon; as it is written, Fear not, daughter of Sion: Behold, thy king cometh ſitting on an aſſes colt. Theſe things underſtood not his diſciples at the firſt: But when Jeſus was glorified, then remember'd they, that theſe things were written of him, and that they had done theſe things unto him. The people therefore that was with him when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raiſed him from the dead, bare record. For this cauſe the people alſo met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle. The Phariſees therefore ſaid among themſelves, Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? Behold, the world is gone after him.

On the next day.] That is, the fifth day before the paſſover, and that which we now call the Lord's-day. (How.) On the tenth day of the month Niſan, when the paſchal lamb was taken up and reſerved till the paſſover, Chriſt, the true paſchal Lamb, cometh up to Jeruſalem. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xxi. 1, &c. and Luke xix. 28, &c.

Took branches of palm-trees.] Theſe and the other ceremonies uſed on this occaſion, were nothing ſtrange among the Jews, on the days of joy and triumph. When Jehu was anointed king, we find every man "haſting to take his own garment, and put it under him;" ſpreading them as carpets for him to walk upon, 2 Kings ix. 13. And on the feaſt of Tabernacles, it was commanded them, to "take branches of palm-trees, &c. and ſo to rejoice before the Lord," Lev. xxiii. 40. whence it afterwards became uſual, on all feaſts of ſolemn joy, to do the like. So we read of Simon entring the tower in Jeruſalem "with thankſgiving, and branches of palm-trees," 1 Maccab. xiii. 51. And when Judas Maccabeus had recover'd and cleanſed the temple, "they bare branches, and fair boughs, and palms alſo," rejoycing for it, 2 Macc. x. 7. So that the reaſon's ready, why the multitude met him in this manner. But the matter is not ſo much what they do, as what we learn by Chriſt's ſuffering them to do ſo. And by it we learn, 1. That Chriſt is no enemy to outward ceremonies and reſpects, to outward civilities and expreſſions. 2. That he diſlikes not even the ceremonies of ſolemn joys and triumphs, of reſpects done to kings and great perſons, or publick congratulations with them in the days of their joy, as occaſion ſhall preſent. 3. That he rejects not even the old and ancient ceremonies, but is as much content with theſe as any other. Nay, 4. Even in his ſervice, and for his own honour, he accepts them, and is pleas'd with them. It is the Phariſees only, and Phariſaical ſpirits, men of meer pretended piety and religion, that find fault with the doing it, Luke xix. 39. See the notes there. (Frank) And palms are, 1. The emblems of patience and perſeverance: They can't be depreſs'd with any weight; but the more you preſs them, the more they riſe. Thus they may teach us the patience of the croſs; not to look ſad for any hardſhip that ſhall befal us in the way to Chriſt; but the more we ſuffer for him, the more to bear up, and lift up our heads that our redemption draweth nigh. 2. They are therefore ſigns of victory; and being here, as it were, given to Chriſt, they intimate to us, to whom to give the glory of all the victory we get over our ſins and paſſions; and ſo to labour againſt them, that we may be thought worthy to overcome them. (Idem.)

Hoſannah, bleſſed is the king.] See the notes on Matt. xi. 3. and xxi. 9.

Theſe things underſtood not his diſciples at the firſt.] Viz To be done in completion of any propheſy concerning him: But, when Jeſus was advanced to the throne of his glory, and had ſhed upon them the Spirit of truth, and illumination promiſed, they not only underſtood, that theſe things were done according to the words of Zachary, chap. ix. 9. but alſo that his kingdom was not to be of this world, but ſpiritual; or a dominion over the hearts, and conſciences of men, ſubdued to the obedience of the truth. Hence alſo we may learn the manner of the operation of the Holy Spirit, viz. by "bringing thoſe things to remembrance," which are requiſite that we may know the truth, and be excited to perform our duty, and by enlightning thus our underſtandings. (W.) See the notes on chap. vii. 39.

Ye prevail nothing.] See the notes on chap. xi. 47.

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. And there were certain Greeks among them, that came up to worſhip at the feaſt: The ſame came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethſaida of Galilee, and deſired him, ſaying, Sir, we would ſee Jeſus. Philip cometh and telleth Andrew: And again, Andrew and Philip told Jeſus. And Jeſus anſwered them, ſaying, The hour is come, that the Son of man ſhould be glorified. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone: But if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life, ſhall loſe it: And he that hateth his life in this world, ſhall keep it unto life eternal. If any man ſerve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there ſhall alſo my ſervant be: If any man ſerve me, him will my Father honour. Now is my ſoul troubled; and what ſhall I ſay? Father, ſave me from this hour: But for this cauſe came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven, ſaying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again. The people therefore that ſtood by, and heard it, ſaid, that it thundred: Others ſaid, An angel ſpake to him, Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, This voice came not becauſe of me, but for your ſakes. Now is the judgment of this world: Now ſhall the prince of this world be caſt out. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. (This he ſaid, ſignifying what death he ſhould die.) The people anſwered him, We have heard out of the law, that Chriſt abideth for ever: And how ſayſt thou, The Son of man muſt be lift up? Who is this Son of man? Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you: Walk while ye have the light, leſt darkneſs come upon you: For he that walketh in darkneſs, knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light. Theſe things ſpake Jeſus, and departed, and did hide himſelf from them.

Certain Greeks among them.] Dr. Hammond thinks, theſe Greeks were Proſelytes of the gate, at leaſt, who worſhipped the God of the Jews, as the creator of heaven and earth: Such as were Cornelius, and the treaſurer of queen Candace; for theſe perſons uſed to worſhip God in the court of the Gentiles, and alſo to offer ſacrifice to him. That ſuch did come in Solomon's time, and would come afterwards, we learn from his petition, that their prayers might be heard which they made in his temple, 1 Kings viii. 41, &c. That they offer'd burnt offerings, from Joſephus: For, when Eleazar the Zealot perſuaded the prieſts, not to receive the gift or offering of any Gentile, This, ſaith he, was done contrary to the ancient cuſtom of the Jews; for the prieſts produced witneſſes, moſt tenacious of their rites, depoſing, That all their anceſtors receiv'd the ſacrifices of other nations, and thought it abſurd, that the Jews only ſhould exelude ſuch from worſhipping and ſacrifiſing to their God. Grotius ſaith, Theſe Greeks ſeem to have been Syrophenicians, perhaps dwelling about Tyre and Sidon; and ſo might eaſily be acquainted with the Galileans, with whom they had commerce, and with Philip of Bethſaida to whom they came. (W.)

Philip cometh, and telleth Andrew] Becauſe Chriſt, when he ſent them forth to preach, forbad them to go into the coaſts of the Gentiles, Matt. x. 5. and it was then alſo a controverſy among the Jews, whether the Gentiles ſhould be admitted to their Sacra; they might therefore doubt, whether ſuch uncircumciſed perſons were to be admitted to converſe with Jeſus; and ſo conſult him firſt, before they brought them to him. (G. and W.)

The hour is come.] That he, who is contemned by the Jews, his own people, to whom he was firſt ſent, ſhould be glorified by the Gentiles. (W.) Chriſt did not refuſe or reject theſe Gentiles from coming to him; but in general words intimated, that the preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles was now ſhortly at hand: And, in order to that, Chriſt ſhould be rejected by the Jews, ſuffer, riſe, and aſcend to heaven; and then, upon the Jews obſtinate holding out, the Goſpel ſhould be preach'd to the Greeks, and all the reſt of the heathen world. (H.)

Except a corn of wheat fall.] Obſerve here, 1. How our bleſſed Saviour arms his diſciples againſt the ſcandal of the croſs; by ſhewing them the great benefit that would redound by his death unto all mankind: And this, by a ſimilitude taken from grain; "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone:" That is, as corn unſown, lodged in the barn, or laid up in a chamber, never multiplies nor increaſes; but ſow it in the field, and bury it in the earth, and it multiplies and increaſes, and brings forth a plentiful crop: So if Chriſt had not died, he had remained what he was, the eternal Son of God, but he had had no church in the world; whereas his death and ſufferings made him fructify; that that brought a plentiful encreaſe of exaltation to himſelf, and ſalvation to his people. Obſerve, 2. How plainly our Saviour dealt with his followers: He did not deceive them with a vain hope and expectation of temporal happineſs; but tells them plainly, that all that will be his diſciples, muſt prepare for ſufferings, and not think their temporal life too dear to lay down for him when he calls them to it; this being the ſureſt way to ſecure unto themſelves life everlaſting. "He that loveth his life ſhall loſe it, but he that hateth his life in this world, ſhall keep it unto life eternal." Learn hence, That the ſureſt way to attain eternal life, is chearfully to lay down our temporal life, when the glory of Chriſt, and the honour of religion requires it at our hand. (B.)

He that hateth his life.] To hate here ſignifies only to love leſs. It is not ſuppoſed, that a man ſhould, properly ſpeaking, "hate his own life:" But the meaning is, He that ſhall love his life more than Chriſt, and he that, to ſave his temporal life, and be free from ſufferings, ſhall deny Chriſt; ſuch a one ſhall loſe his eternal life; that is, he ſhall loſe his eternal happineſs, and bring upon himſelf eternal miſery. (Fox.) See the notes on Matt. x. 39. and xvi. 25. Luke ix. 24 xiv. 26. and xvii. 33.

If any man ſerve me.] That is, if any man aſſumes the title, and enters into the ſacred engagement, of being Chriſt's ſervant, let his converſation correſpond with his profeſſion, and let him be willing to follow me in the thorny path of affliction and ſufferings, from this aſſurance, That all his grievous ſufferings ſhall end in eternal joys: "Where I am, there ſhall my ſervant be, and him will my Father honour." Learn hence, 1. That all that will be Chriſt's ſervants, muſt be his followers; they muſt obey his doctrine, and imitate his example. 2. That Chriſt's ſervants muſt not expect better uſage at the hand of an unkind world, than He their maſter met with before them. 3. That ſuch as ſerve Chriſt by following of him, ſhall at death ſee him as he is, and be with him where he is; "Where I am, there ſhall alſo my ſervant be." 4. That God will crown the fidelity and conſtancy of Chriſt's ſervants, with the higheſt dignity and honour; "If any man ſerve me, him will my Father honour." (B.) See the notes on Luke xii. 43.

Now is my ſoul troubled.] Whilſt our Saviour was thus preaching of his own death and ſufferings, a natural horror of his approaching paſſion (tho' ſuch as was without ſin) ſeizes upon him; his Father giving him a taſte of that wrath which he was to undergo upon the croſs for our ſins. Hereupon he betakes himſelf to prayer, "Father, ſave me from this hour: This was the harmleſs inclination of his ſinleſs nature, which abhorred lying under wrath, and therefore prays againſt it; yet (as it were) recalling himſelf, he ſubmits to what his office, as our ſurety, required of him, and prays again unto his Father to diſpoſe of him as may moſt and beſt conduce to the purpoſes of his glory; "Father, glorify thy name.', Learn hence, 1. That mere trouble is no ſin: Chriſt's ſoul was troubled; chriſtianity doth not make men ſenſeleſs; grace introduceth no ſtoical ſtupidity. 2. That fear of death, eſpecially when accompanied with apprehenſions of the wrath of God, is moſt perplexing and ſoul-amazing. "My ſoul is troubled, and what ſhall I ſay?" 3. No extremity of ſufferings ought to diſcourage us from laying claim to that relation, which God ſtands in to us as a Father. Our Saviour, in the midſt of his diſtreſs, calls God Father; "Father, ſave me from this hour." 4. In the extremity of our ſufferings, we may be importunate, but muſt not be peremptory in our prayers: As Chriſt, in his agony, prayed more earneſtly, ſo may we in ours; but always ſubmiſſively: "Father, ſave me from this hour; but for this cauſe came I unto this hour." 5. That our exemption from ſuffering may ſometimes be inconſiſtent with the glory of God. "Father, ſave me from this hour; Father, glorify thy name." Obſerve laſtly, The Father's anſwer to the Son's prayer; "There came a voice from heaven, ſaying, I have glorified it, and will glorify it again:" That is, as God the Father had been already glorified in his Son's life, doctrine, and miracles; ſo he would farther glorify himſelf in his death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion; as alſo by the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and the preaching of the Goſpel for the converſion of the Gentiles to the ends of the earth. Learn hence, That the whole work of Chriſt, from the loweſt degree of his humiliation, to the higheſt degree of his exaltation, was a glorifying of his Father: He glorified his Father by the doctrine which he taught; he glorified his Father by the miracles which he wrought, by the unſpotted innocency of his life, and by his unparallel'd ſufferings at his death; by his victorious reſurrection from the grave, and by his triumphant aſcenſion into heaven. (Idem.) That they might not ſay, he had no dread of death, or ſenſe of pain, to render ſufferings diſtaſtful to him, and ſo it was not to be expected, that they, who were deeply affected with theſe things, ſhould follow his example; Chriſt here ſhews, that he himſelf had the ſame natural concern for theſe things as others had, only he over-ruled them by a deſire to promote his Father's glory. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 39. Luke xii. 50. and xxii. 44.

A voice from heaven.] See this conſider'd hereafter in the notes on Acts ix. 7.

Now is the judgment of this world.] This word Criſis ſometimes ſignifies condemnation or puniſhment: As Jer. xlviii. 47. "The judgment of Moab," is the condemnation or puniſhment of Moab. Sometimes it ſtands for deliverance or redemption: As Iſa. i. 17. to "judge the fatherleſs," is to deliver them from the oppreſſion they labour under. And in this ſenſe I underſtand it here; "Now is the judgment of this world;" that is, Now is the time, when the world, which has been long under the tyranny of the devil, ſhall be deliver'd. (Fox.) But here again, it is obſerv'd, that our Saviour is not ſpeaking, in this place, of his future coming to judge the world; but of the conflict between him and the devil; that is to ſay, of his ſufferings and death then approaching, and his "ſaving the world" thereby, as he declares, ver. 47. And therefore, ſince the word criſis is adopted into our own language, why may we not expreſs it in this text, thus, Now is this world come to its Criſis? (Maſſey.) See alſo the notes on chap. iii. 18, 19. and Luke xxiv. 20.

Now ſhall the prince of this world be caſt out.] See the notes on Matt. xii. 29. Luke x. 18. and xi. 22.

If I be lifted up.] Ean, which is here render'd if, ſignifies more properly when; as in Deut. vii. 1. Judg. vi. 3. 2 Sam. vii. 12. Jer. iii. 16. Thus, When I am "lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me;" viz. By the power of my reſurrection, the miſſion of my Spirit, the excellency of my doctrine, and the miracles which ſhall attend the preaching of it; I will do what is ſufficient to prevail with all men to believe in me, will actually draw many throughout all parts of the world ſo to do, and render them who do not, inexcuſable. The event ſhews, that Chriſt and the Father draw many, who come not to him. (W.) See the notes on chap. iii. 14. vi. 44. and viii 28.

We have heard out of the law.] Obſerve here the objection which the Jews make againſt our Saviour's being the true Meſſias. Their argument runs thus; It was foretold under the law, that Chriſt, or the Meſſias, "abideth for ever;" but thou ſayeſt, "The Son of man muſt be lift up," and die: How then canſt thou be the promiſed Meſſias? The anſwer is, In his ſtate of humiliation unto death, he was lifted up; but in his ſtate of exaltation he "abideth for ever." Learn hence, That Chriſt's lifting up by death, and his abiding for ever, do very well conſiſt together: For both are true of him; the one in his ſtate of humiliation, the other in his ſtate of exaltation. (B.) That which they had learn'd from the prophets, they ſay, they had "heard out of the law;" that word comprehending the whole ſcripture. This they had gather'd, partly from the prophets, repreſenting Chriſt's kingdom as an everlaſting kingdom; and ſuch like expreſſions, in Dan. vii. 14. Ezek. xxxvii. 25. Iſa. ix. 7. and Pſal. lxxxix. 35, 36. But then, thoſe words hinder not the truth of thoſe things which the ſame prophets had foretold, of "a body prepared," in which he was to ſuffer, having "his hands and his feet pierced," Pſal. xxii. 16. and xl. 6. of his "giving up his life a ſacrifice for ſin," Iſa. liii. 10. or "the Meſſiah's being cut off," Dan. ix. 26. And theſe prophets having ſpoken, not only of his ſufferings, but alſo of his reſurrection, Pſal. xli. 10. Acts iii. 24. and of his future glory, 1 Pet. i. 11. they might eaſily, by comparing theſe things together, have remov'd this ſcruple; eſpecially when he ſo oft had told them, and they ſo well remember'd, Matt. xxvii. 63. he had ſaid, that "after three days he would riſe again." (W.)

Leſt darkneſs come upon you.] As it did in a wonderful manner after the light of the Goſpel was taken from them; they ſinning then not only againſt all laws civil and ſacred, but even againſt the laws of nature in the vileſt manner, as Joſephus fully teſtifies. And from our Lord's exhortation to them here, to "walk in the light, that they may be the children of the light," 'tis manifeſt Chriſt thought not God had then ſo blinded their eyes that they could not ſee, or ſo deſerted them that they could not walk in the light: For if ſo, he could not ſeriouſly have exhorted them to "walk in the light," much leſs to do it, ſo that they might become "the children of light:" For all exhortations to do that which 'twas impoſſible for them to do, by reaſon of a judicial act of God upon them, muſt be not only vain and deluſory, but alſo contrary to the will of God. If you here ſay, Chriſt's exhortations muſt be as much in vain, ſuppoſing they had, by their vicious habits, contracted ſuch a blindneſs, "that ſeeing they would not ſee," as ſcripture ſeems to teſtify they had; I anſwer, That this follows not; that blindneſs being not natural, but only moral, ariſing from their prejudices, and ill affections to the light, and ſo might be depoſed with them. And hence we find the ſcripture frequently exhorting them, who in this moral ſenſe had their eyes blinded, and their ears made deaf, to hearken, to believe, and be obedient to the truth. So Jer. vi. 10. To whom ſhall I ſpeak, and give warning, that they may hear? Behold their ear is uncircumciſed, that they cannot hearken:" And yet 'tis ſaid, ver. 8. "Be thou inſtructed," O Jeruſalem, leſt my ſoul depart from thee;" and ver. 16. "Stand in the way, and ſee, and aſk for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye ſhall find reſt to your ſouls." Yea Chriſt himſelf ſaith, John viii. 43. "ye cannot hear my words;" and yet he adds, that he "came into the world," and ſpake unto them "that they might be ſaved," Luke ix. 56. John xiii. 17, 18 and v. 34 and reprehends them becauſe they "would not come to him that they might have life," John v. 40. and that they "would not be gathered by him," Luke xiii. 34. Yea the Evangeliſt here, ver. 37. imputes it to them as their great ſin, that tho' Chriſt had "done ſo many miracles among them, they believed not in him:" Yea God himſelf ſtill looks upon them as perſons who might believe, for "this was his commandment, that they ſhould believe in him;" this was the work which he expected from them, ver. 24. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. viii. 12. and xi. 10.

Did hide himſelf from them.] See the notes on chap. viii. 59. and xi. 54.

Ver. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. But though he had done ſo many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him: That the ſaying of Eſaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, Lord, who hath believed our report? And to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed? Therefore they could not believe, becauſe that Eſaias ſaid again, He hath blinded their eyes, and hardned their heart; that they ſhould not ſee with their eyes, nor underſtand with their heart, and be converted, and I ſhould heal them. Theſe things ſaid Eſaias, when he ſaw his glory, and ſpake of him. Nevertheleſs among the chief rulers alſo many believed on him; but becauſe of the Phariſees they did not confeſs him, leſt they ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue. For they loved the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God.

That the ſaying of Eſaias.] The word hina, here render'd that, does not denote the cauſe, but the event. The meaning then of this place is, It ſo fell out, or ſo it came to paſs, that the ſaying of the prophet was fulfill'd. God wills not evil; nor does he, by his prophets, foretel it, that it may come to paſs: But ſince the evil diſpoſitions of men will bring it to paſs, he foretels it by his prophets, and knows how to bring good out of it. The prophecy therefore is not the cauſe of the event: But the agreeableneſs of the event with it ſhews the exactneſs and truth of the prophecy. This ſame word (that) alſo denotes not the final cauſe, but the event, in Pſal. li. 4. 1 Cor. xi. 19. and in many other places. (Fox and Maſſey.) But, becauſe theſe, and the following words, ſeem to contain a very ſtrange and uncomfortable doctrine, viz. that the infidelity, even of God's own people, is to be reſolved, not into the perverſeneſs of their wills, or the evil diſpoſitions of their hearts, but into the divine predictions, or into a judicial blindneſs, and obduration wrought by God upon them, which renders it impoſſible for them to believe: Therefore, for explication of them, let it be noted, 1. That our bleſſed Lord, in the immediate precedent verſes, viz. 35, 36. doth paſſionately exhort theſe very perſons to "believe, and walk according to the light;" which is a certain evidence, our Lord well knew his Father had not, by any of his actions, or predictions, made it impoſſible for them to believe on him, or walk according to his doctrine: For if God had ſo "blinded their eyes that they could not ſee the light," or ſo "harden'd their hearts that they could not embrace it," Chriſt would not ſeriouſly have exhorted them to believe, or walk according to it; and that ſo effectually, that they might "become the children of the light:" For every exhortation to do a thing we know to be impoſſible, muſt be vain; and he, who by it ſeems to be deſirous we ſhould do that which he knows we cannot, muſt delude us; and if he knows that God hath by ſome antecedent action, render'd the thing impoſſible to be done, it muſt be alſo an exhortation repugnant to the will of God. Now, it is blaſphemy to ſay the exhortations of the Son of God were vain, deluſory, or contrary to his Father's will. Moreover our Saviour knew, the Jews were capable of mercy and ſalvation by him; for he expreſly ſays, God ſent him into the world, "that the world by him might be ſaved," chap. iii. 17. he makes this declaration, "Theſe things ſay I unto you, that ye might be ſaved," chap. v. 34. and this enquiry, "How oft would I have gathered you, and ye would not? Luke xiii. 34. and ſays, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life," John v. 40. God himſelf would not have his words ſo underſtood, as if he were unwilling that the Jews ſhould believe, or had by any of his actions render'd it impoſſible for them to do ſo, for "this was his commandment, that they ſhould believe on him, whom he had ſent," John vi. 29. And why ſent he his Son "to ſeek, and to ſave that which was loſt." even "the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael," had he not truly been deſirous that they ſhould believe? The Evangeliſt alſo, and that good Spirit by which he did indite theſe words, did not thus underſtand them: For he objects this to the Jews as their great crime, ver. 37. that "tho' Chriſt had done ſo many miracles among them, yet they believed not on him;" whereas it can be no man's ſin not to do, what he cannot do purely by reaſon of the act of God. Theſe words muſt therefore have ſome other ſenſe, than at firſt view they ſeem to bear. 2. Obſerve that God's foreknowledge, ſayings, and predictions, have no ſuch influence on the will of man, as to lay on him a neceſſity to do, what he foreknows, or hath foretold he will do: For, were it otherwiſe, 1. All human actions muſt be neceſſary; for, to that God who is omniſcient, all things, both paſt, and preſent, and to come, are known: If then this knowledge of mens actions, which the ſcripture ſo plainly doth aſcribe to God, did make them neceſſary, all human actions muſt be neceſſary, and ſo the freedom of them muſt be overthrown. 2. Then vice and virtue muſt be only empty names; we being capable of doing nothing which is blameworthy, or deſerveth praiſe: For, who can blame a perſon for doing only what he could not help; or judge him worthy of applauſe, who doth that only which he cannot avoid? And, 3. Then muſt all future recompences be diſcarded; it being viſibly unjuſt to puniſh any man for that which it was never in his power to avoid; and as unreaſonable to reward him for that action which cannot be praiſeworthy. We know that an almighty God is able ſo powerfully to work upon the hearts of men, as to convert them to himſelf; and it is natural to conceive that a good God is ready to do all which he ſees proper for that end: Since then, in ſome regard, it muſt be true that "God would have all men to be ſaved," what anſwer can be given to that enquiry, Why are not all men actually ſaved? but this, that the divine Wiſdom does not ſee it fit to lay reſtraints upon their actions, and to neceſſitate their wills to a compliance with his calls and invitations to turn to him. This anſwer I believe is true: But then it is an evidence that God hath never, by his preſcience, or his predictions, laid ſuch reſtraints upon mens actions. When then it is ſaid here, "Therefore they could not believe, becauſe Iſaias ſaid," Theſe words muſt bear this ſenſe, "therefore they could not believe, becauſe (that was fulfilled upon them) which Iſaias ſaid," or, "It had happen'd to them as he had foretold." So chap. xv. 24, 25. (See the note there.) "They have hated me and my Father, but that the word might be fulfilled," i. e. but "This hath happen'd to," or "been done by them," that what was written in their law might be fulfilled, viz. "They hated me without a cauſe:" And this is the expoſition of the Holy Ghoſt, who, Matt. xiii. 13, 14. ſaith, from the mouth of Chriſt, "Therefore ſpeak I to them in parables, becauſe they ſeeing ſee not;" and in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Iſaiah, "Their eyes have they cloſed," &c. (W.)

They could not believe.] The ouk edunato here may be render'd, by analogy with the ſame phraſe, chap. v. 19. ſo, as to ſignify, not any impotence in them, but that, as 'tis ſaid, v. 37. they believed not. So doth the Hebrew phraſe ſignify, Gen. xix. 22. And ſo ſaith Iſidorus Peluſiota, of that John v. 19. expounding to dunatai by endechetai, he cannot, that is, he doth not. So the phraſe is uſed, Mar. vi. 5. Luke xvi. 2. And ſo the context here imports; being no more than this, that this unbelief of theirs was foretold by the prophets; which indeed was an argument to prove what the effect would be, through their own contumacious wills; but no way a cauſe of their unbelief, or that which laid an impoſſibility of believing on them. (H.) See the notes on ver. 42.

He hath blinded their eyes.] To what has been ſaid on the foregoing verſes, let us here add, 1. That, whereas our tranſlation ſaith, "He hath blinded;" the word He is not in the original; which ſaith only tetuphloken autoon tous ophthalmous, and may be render'd malice, or "wickedneſs, hath blinded their eyes;" as we read, Wiſd. ii. 21. Or, 2. The perſonal is here put for the imperſonal; the active for the paſſive: that is, "He hath blinded their eyes, and harden'd their hearts;" inſtead of, Their eyes are blinded, and their hearts harden'd. A plain inſtance of the like nature we have, in Iſa. xliv. 18. where we read it, "He hath ſhut their eyes, that they cannot ſee, and their hearts, that they cannot underſtand:" And yet, both the Greek and Chaldee paraphraſt read the words thus, Their eyes are ſhut and darken'd, leſt they ſhould ſee, &c. And that this is the true import of the prophet's words, Not that God, but Satan, and their own evil diſpoſitions, had done this, is evident from this conſideration, That this is ſpoken to the ſhame of them who made and worſhipped ſenſeleſs images, ver. 9, 11. and to convince them of their want of conſideration, ver. 19. And that this muſt alſo be the ſenſe here, we learn, not only from the Septuagint, the Syriac, and the Arabic; but from our bleſſed Saviour himſelf, and St. Paul; who exactly follow this tranſlation of the words, Matt. xiii. 15. and Acts xxviii. 26, 27. (W. B. and Fox.) In the Eaſtern phraſe, a perſon is ſaid to do that which he only permits or ſuffers to be done. Thus God is ſaid to "give the heathen up to uncleanneſs, and to a reprobate mind," Rom. i. 24, 26, 28 Here is no poſitive act of God expreſs'd: But the meaning is, He left them to themſelves, and to thoſe evil ſpirits they choſe to worſhip; and the vices they fell into were the neceſſary effects of their idolatry. Thoſe who would ſee this matter more fully handled, may read Dr. Sherlock of divine providence, chap. vi. (Fox.) The voluntary inability of a blind and obdurate heart has three cauſes, 1. The devil, who ſuggeſts. 2. Man, who conſents. 3. God, who either leaves the ſinner to his own corrupt inclinations, or heaps up benefits upon him, which to him are no other than freſh occaſions of ſin; as both admonitions and miracles were to Pharaoh, and here to the Jews. Blindneſs and obduracy have ſeveral degrees. Whoever either does not ſee and underſtand the truths which are neceſſary to his good conduct and behaviour; or is not directed by thoſe he does underſtand, on ſuch occaſions wherein they ought to be his rule and guide, is blind and harden'd, with reſpect to them. - Let us take care, that theſe words do not induce us to murmur againſt God, or to preſume to cenſure his proceedings, inſtead of humbling ourſelves, and adoring him with fear and trembling. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xiii. 15. and Luke xii. 20.

When he ſaw his glory.] That is, when he ſaw the glory of the Lord Chriſt; not, as ſome Socinians contend, of God the Father: For, 1. Theſe words, "his glory," and, "he ſpake of him," contain two pronouns, which are not in the words of the prophet, but only of the Evangeliſt; and ſo muſt be referred to him, of whom the Evangeliſt here ſpeaks, viz. to him who "had done ſo many miracles among them;" and to him, "in whom they believed not," ver. 37. and "in whom they could not believe, ver. 39. 2. If thoſe words, "Theſe things ſaid Iſaias, when he ſaw his glory," are not to be underſtood of Chriſt, what uſe have they, or to what purpoſe do they here ſerve; there being no need to tell us, that Iſaias then ſaw the glory of God the Father, or ſpake of him? 3. Socinus well obſerves and proves, that the apoſtles words do equally relate to both the paſſages produced from Iſaias; becauſe he ſaith not, this, but "theſe things ſaid Iſaias." Now, it is evident from the apoſtle Paul, Rom. x. 16. citing theſe words, and applying them to the Goſpel-times, that the firſt teſtimony relates to them; and from the contents of the whole 53d chapter, that they relate to Chriſt's ſufferings, and his future glory, as Schlictingius here grants: And conſequently, the words, "Theſe things ſpake Iſaias," muſt induce us to believe, that he ſpake alſo, in the other paſſage cited from him, of the glory of the ſame Perſon. Schlictingius therefore anſwers, That the prophet, by ſeeing the glory of God, is ſaid alſo to ſee the glory of Chriſt; which was to fill the whole earth: For then was the earth replenished with his glory, when God by him did his admirable works; when he raiſed him from the dead, and placed him at his own right hand, ſubjecting all things to his feet: When Iſaias in the ſpirit ſaw his glory, John rightly ſays, he ſaw the glory of Chriſt; the glory of God and of Chriſt being ſo inſeparably connected, as the means to the end, that the glory of Chriſt directly tends to the glory of God the Father. But, againſt this evaſion, it is obſervable, 1. That the prophet, chap. liii. if he ſpeaks at all of the glory of any perſon, (as indeed he doth) ver. 10, 11, 12. ſpeaks of ſuch a one who "poured out his ſoul unto death," and was number'd with the tranſgreſſors, and bare the ſin of many;" which words cannot refer at all to God the Father 2. In the ſixth chapter, he ſpeaks of one whom he then ſaw, "ſitting upon a throne high and lifted up, and whoſe train filled the temple," ver. 1. and to whom "the Seraphims cried, Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of hoſts, the whole earth his full of his glory, ver. 3. He therefore ſpeaketh not of any future glory; but of the glory he then ſaw, and of which the Seraphims then ſang. And who can reaſonably think the prophet ſhould cry out, ver. 5. "Wo is me, becauſe I have ſeen the King, the Lord of hoſts," only becauſe he had ſeen a viſion of a mere man, who had as yet no being? However, 3. Seeing the prophet is ſo expreſs in it, that it was Jehovah Zebaoth, "the Lord of hoſts," the King Jehovah, whoſe glory he then ſaw, and of whoſe glory the angels then ſang; and yet the Evangeliſt declares, he ſpake theſe things when he ſaw the glory of Chriſt; it follows that Chriſt muſt be one with this Jehovah. (W. and B.)

Among the chief rulers alſo, many believed.] Obſerve here, 1. That tho' the generality of the Jews were thus harden'd under Chriſt's miniſtry and miracles, yet there were ſome, and thoſe of the chief rank, even rulers, that did believe on him; that is, they were under ſtrong and powerful convictions, that he was the true and expected Meſſias. Even in times and places where obſtinacy and infidelity moſt prevails, the miniſtry of the word ſhall not be altogether without its fruit: Chriſt here had ſome, and thoſe of the rulers too, who believed on him, when others under the ſame word were harden'd. 2. That tho' many of the chief rulers had a ſecret belief, or an inward perſuaſion that Chriſt was the promiſed and expected Meſſias, yet it was not ſufficient to make them openly own, confeſs, and avow him to be ſuch, for fear of Excommunication from the Phariſees: "They did not confeſs him, leſt they ſhould be put out of the Synagogue." Slaviſh fear of men, and ſuffering by them, has hinder'd many from believing on Chriſt, and kept more from an open owning and confeſſing of him. 3. As the fear of ſuffering on the one hand, ſo the love of reputation on the other, kept them from owning and confeſſing Jeſus to be Chriſt: "They loved the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God;" that is, they valued honour and applauſe from men, more than God's honouring and approving them. There is no greater ſnare to draw perſons from their duty, than inordinate love and affection to their own credit and reputation. Oh! how often is the applauſe and commendation of men preferred before the teſtimony and approbation of God! (B.) Theſe mens faith was deficient in one great requiſite, "confeſſion of it being made with the mouth unto ſalvation," Rom. x. 9. (W.) The common obſtacles to the confeſſion of the faith, are, 1. Too great a regard to men. 2. Riches, and temporal advantages. 3. The fear of diſgrace. And, 4. The "love of the praiſe of men." Abundance of perſons perſuade themſelves, they love God more than the world, till ſome trying occaſion fully convinces them of their miſtake. It is a very great misfortune, for a man not to know himſelf, but only by his falls and acts of infidelity: But it is the greateſt of all, not to riſe again, and recover himſelf: This is generally occaſion'd by the "love of the praiſe and glory of men;" becauſe, in their account, it is more ſhameful to riſe again, than it was to fall. (Q.) However, from this paſſage, that "among the chief rulers many believed," it is evident, that the expreſſion, ver. 39. that "they could not believe," was not ſpoken of any abſolute impoſſibility, as is there noted. See alſo the notes on chap. iii. 1. vii. 50. ix. 22. and Matt. x. 32.

Ver. 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50. Jeſus cried, and ſaid, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that ſent me: And he that ſeeth me, ſeeth him that ſent me. I am come a light into the world, that whoſoever believeth on me, ſhould not abide in darkneſs. And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: For I came not to judge the world, but to ſave the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: The word that I have ſpoken, the ſame ſhall judge him in the laſt day. For I have not ſpoken of myſelf; but the Father which ſent me, he gave me a commandment, what I ſhould ſay, and what I ſhould ſpeak. And I know that his commandment is life everlaſting: Whatſoever I ſpeak therefore, even as the Father ſaid unto me, ſo I ſpeak.

Jeſus cried, and ſaid.] In theſe verſes we have our bleſſed Saviour's farewel ſermon to the Jews; concerning his perſon, office, and doctrine. As touching his perſon, he acquaints them with his divine nature, his oneneſs and equality with the Father; and accordingly challenges not only the aſſent, but alſo the obedience and adoration of their faith. "Jeſus cried, ſaying, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that ſent me:" That is, he that believeth on me, doth not believe on a mere man, but on him that is truly and really God, as well as man: And therefore, he being true God, one in eſſence, and equal in power and glory with the Father, their believing in him, was a believing in God the Father, that ſent him. Obſerve, 2. The argument which our Saviour uſes to prove, that believers in Chriſt do believe in the Father: "He that ſeeth me, ſeeth him that ſent me." That is, he that ſeeth me, ſpiritually, and by faith, ſeeth my Father to be one with me in eſſence, tho' not in perſon; and he that ſeeth me, in my miraculous works which I do, ſeeth him alſo that ſent me, by whom I do theſe mighty works. Learn hence, 1. That we do not ſee Chriſt aright, with the eye of our faith, unleſs we ſee him, and believe him to be truly and really God; one with, and equal to, the Father. 2. That the Father is not to be ſeen but in the Son; nor can believers know what the Father is, but by ſeeing what the Son is; and what they ſee the Son to be, that the Father is in him. Obſerve, 3. The dreadful judgment which Chriſt denounces againſt all unbelievers, and ſuch as reject him, by rejecting of his Goſpel: For tho', at Chriſt's firſt coming, his errand was not to judge the world, but to ſave the world, that is, to offer the tenders of ſalvation to loſt ſinners; yet at his ſecond coming he will judge them at the laſt day; when the word preached to them, and rejected by them, will give a judicial teſtimony againſt them. Learn hence, 1. That Chriſt and his doctrine are inſeparable: To receive his doctrine, is to receive him; and to reject his doctrine, is to reject him. 2. That ſuch rejecters of Chriſt, and the doctrine of the Goſpel, ſhall not eſcape the judgment of Chriſt at the great day. 3. That, at the great day, were there no other witneſs againſt the rejecters of Chriſt and his Goſpel, but the word preached, yet that alone will be ſufficient both for their conviction and condemnation. "The word that I have ſpoken, the ſame ſhall judge him in the laſt day." The word is now the rule of living; and it ſhall be hereafter the rule of judging: Now it is the rule by which we muſt live to Chriſt: Then it ſhall be the rule by which we ſhall be judged of Chriſt. Obſerve, 4. The argument and reaſon which our Saviour produces, to prove that the word of God, and the doctrine of the Goſpel ſlighted and rejected, ſhould condemn ſinners at the great day: Namely, from the divine authority of his doctrine; for albeit his doctrine was his own, as he was true God, yet as man, and as mediator, it was not his own, but the Father's that ſent him; ſo that his word and doctrine being divine, and the Father's as well as his, ("for he did not ſpeak of himſelf;" that is, of himſelf and alone, without the Father) it is ſufficient to judge and condemn all the rejecters and deſpiſers of it. Learn hence, 1. That tho' the doctrine of the Goſpel be Chriſt's own, as he is truly and really God, yet it was not his own as mere man, excluſive of the Father, who is one God with him, and who gave him a commiſſion and inſtruction as mediator, to preach and publiſh the glad tidings of the Goſpel: For, ſays he, "I have not ſpoken of myſelf, but the Father which ſent me gave me a commandment." 2. That the doctrine which Chriſt delivered by command from the Father, doth point out the way to eternal life, and will bring loſt ſinners thereunto, if they ſincerely believe it and obey it: "I know that his commandment is life everlaſting." 3. That therefore ſinners, who rejected the doctrine of Chriſt contained in the Goſpel, do highly diſhonour, offend, and affront both the Father and Son, and bring upon themſelves a juſt and righteous judgment; and expoſe themſelves to unutterable and inevitable condemnation. "The word that I have ſpoken, the ſame ſhall judge him in the laſt day." (B.) Here Chriſt raiſeth his voice, on purpoſe to conclude his publick preaching in a more remarkable manner; to ſhew, that the hatred and power of his enemies do not in the leaſt diſmay him; to upbraid thoſe with their cowardice who dared not openly declare for him; and to encourage them by his example. (Q.)

Believeth not on me.] That is, not in me only; but in him alſo "that ſent me," and hath ſet his ſeal to the teſtimony, chap. iii. 33. So the word only is to be underſtood, Mark ix. 37. Acts v. 4. and 1. Theſſ. iv. 8. And the ſame addition is neceſſary here, to avoid a contradiction in theſe words, "He that believeth on me, believeth not on me." (Trem. Beza and W.)

I am come a light.] See the notes on chap. i. 9. iii. 19. and viii. 12.

I judge him not.] The word krinein, judging, here ſeemeth to be taken in the ſenſe of accuſing, as a plaintiff, or witneſs accuſeth; and not of condemning, which is the office of a judge. For, 1. It is here, ver. 48. ſpoken of the word, or Goſpel of Chriſt, which had been preach'd unto them, and not of Chriſt himſelf in that place. 2. 'Tis affirmed of Chriſt, chap. v. 22. that "all judgment is committed to the Son," and that he hath authority to execute judgment, and that his "judgment is juſt," &c. And therefore, though it may be ſaid, that that judgment of his belongs in thoſe places, to the judgment to which his reſurrection inſtates him, and the place here belongs to his condition here in this world; and ſo that that affirmative, and this negative are reconcileable; yet becauſe the judging, ver. 48. is alſo ſaid to be "at the laſt day," it will be fit to aſſign ſuch a notion of judging, in both theſe verſes, as that the ſaying "he judgeth not," may be reconcileable with thoſe other places, where "judgment is committed to the Son;" and that will be, by interpreting the judgment here, of accuſing. And thus it will be agreeable with John v. 45. "Do not think that I will accuſe you to the Father; There is one that accuſeth you, Moſes;" whoſe writings, produceable againſt them, are there ſaid to accuſe them, as here Chriſt's words are ſaid to do. Thus Luke vi. 37. "Judge not, and ye ſhall not be judged," is ſet as diſtinct from "condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned," and ſet preparative to it; as accuſing regularly is to giving of ſentence in any judicature. (H. W. and Fox.) See the notes on chap. iii. 17. v. 22. and viii. 15.

I have not ſpoken of myſelf.] See the notes on chap. vii. 16. and viii. 38.

His commandment is life everlaſting.] The law of God, fulfill'd by charity or love, has a quickning virtue in it, and is the ſource of life everlaſting. This is the ſum and ſubſtance of all Evangelical preaching. With this Chriſt concludes his exerciſe of the public miniſtration of the word: And to this all the cares and endeavours of a preacher or paſtor ought to tend. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xi. 25.

CHAP. XIII.

Chriſt waſheth his apoſtles feet; exhorting them to humility and charity. Foretelleth Judas's treaſon. Chargeth the reſt to love one another: And forewarneth Peter of his denial.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. NOW before the feaſt of the paſſover, when Jeſus knew that his hour was come, that he ſhould depart out of this world, unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end. And ſupper being ended (the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iſcariot, Simon's ſon, to betray him) Jeſus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God, He riſeth from ſupper, and laid aſide his garments, and took a towel, and girded himſelf. After that, he poureth water into a baſon, and began to waſh the diſciples feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. Then cometh he to Simon Peter: And Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, do'ſt thou waſh my feet? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, What I do thou knoweſt not now; but thou ſhalt know hereafter. Peter ſaith unto him, Thou ſhalt never waſh my feet. Jeſus anſwered him, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me. Simon Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but alſo my hands and my head. Jeſus ſaith to him, He that is waſhed, needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet, but is clean every whit: And ye are clean, but not all. For he knew who ſhould betray him; therefore ſaid he, Ye are not all clean. So after he had waſhed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was ſet down again, he ſaid unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me maſter and Lord: And ye ſay well; for ſo I am. If I then, your Lord and maſter, have waſhed your feet, ye alſo ought to waſh one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done to you. Verily, verily I ſay unto you, The ſervant is not greater than his Lord, neither he that is ſent, greater than he that ſent him. If ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them. I ſpeak not of you all; I know whom I have choſen: But that the ſcripture may be fulfilled, He that eateth bread with me, hath lift up his heel againſt me. Now I tell you before it come, that when it is come to paſs, ye may believe that I am he. Verily, verily I ſay unto you, He that receiveth whomſoever I ſend, receiveth me: And he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me.

That he ſhould depart.] The word metabe, paſs, refers to the paſſover, mention'd before; to ſignify, that that legal paſſover, or the occaſion of it, God's paſſing over the houſe of Iſrael, and the Iſraelites paſſing or going out of Egypt, did note the paſſing of Chriſt out of this world, where he was a ſervant, into the land of liberty, that is, heaven. (H.) See the notes on Luke ix. 31.

He loved them unto the end.] To the cloſe of his life, and ſhewed this affection to them by waſhing their feet. This paſſage therefore can afford no argument, that the regenerate can never fall away: Becauſe Chriſt ſpeaks not of the chuſing of any to ſalvation, but only of thoſe whom he "had choſen out of the world" to be his apoſtles, chap. xv. 19. nor of his love of them to the end of their lives, but of his own. (W.)

Supper being ended.] See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 18. and Luke xxii. 3, 7.

Judas Iſcariot.] See the notes on chap. vi. 70. and Luke xxii. 3.

He was come from God, and went to God.] The like again, chap. xvi. 28. "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the "world; again, "I leave the world, and go to the Father." Now, ſeeing 'tis certain, that Chriſt left the world, and went to the Father, by aſcending from the earth to the higheſt heavens; muſt not the oppoſition require, that he came out from the Father into the world, by coming from heaven to the earth: For theſe two are oppoſite by commutation of terms; the term from which in the one, being the term to which in the other: Which oppoſition is wholly loſt, by ſaying, with the Socinians, that Chriſt is ſaid to come forth from God, or from the Father, only becauſe he came as his legate or ambaſſador, and was made known to the world by his credentials, the miracles done by him in his Father's name. Moreover, according to this expoſition, the oppoſite term, his going to God, and to the Father, muſt import his ceaſing to be his legate, or to make himſelf known by the miracles done by a power derived from his Father; whereas he, after his aſcenſion, made himſelf ſtill thus more known to the world Add to this, that the prophets of old, and Moſes eſpecially, were God's meſſengers, and made themſelves known to the world by miracles done by God as their credentials; and ſo were after them the apoſtles in like manner the legates and ambaſſadors of God and Chriſt: But yet it never was, nor could be ſaid of them, or any of them, "I went forth from God, and from the Father, and come into the world;" which ſhews, this phraſe is proper to our Lord; and ſo the reaſon of it muſt be peculiar to him alone. (W.) See the notes on chap iii. 13.

Girded himſelf.] See the notes on Luke xii. 35.

Began to waſh the diſciples feet.] Great is this inſtance of humility, if we conſider, 1. The dignity of the perſon, expreſſed in the foregoing words, ver. 3. And, 2. The action itſelf, with the circumſtances of it. For, 1. Chriſt "laid aſide his garment, and girded himſelf;" as, Philo ſaith, ſervants uſed to do, when they miniſter'd to their maſters. 2. He actually waſhed his diſciples feet; which alſo ſervants did to their maſters, when they came from a journey, to cleanſe them from the dirt, and to refreſh them, 1 Tim. v. 10. according to thoſe words of Abigail to David, "Let me be a ſervant to waſh the feet," &c. 1 Sam. xxv. 41. and which ſuperiors did not uſe to their inferiors. See more of this, in Dr. Lightfoot on the place. (W.)

What I do, thou knoweſt not now.] Learn hence, 1. That the ſervants of God themſelves are oft times much to ſeek, and cannot apprehend and underſtand at preſent the actings and dealings of God with them; they underſtand not either the intent or the event of God's diſpenſations: Yet, 2. That there will come a time for the clearing and evidencing of them, when they ſhall underſtand, that all his diſpenſations were in mercy to them. (B.) After the ceremony is finiſh'd, ye ſhall know, that this was intended, as an example of that humility, which I would have you ſhew, when ye come to diſcharge the function of apoſtles in the church, in miniſtring to the meaneſt Chriſtians, tho' ye be, in ſtation and office, ſuperior to them; and that the dignity of it conſiſts eſpecially, in ſerving thoſe who are placed under you, and in waſhing from them the ſins and ſullages of their earthly affections; which are ſtill apt to remain, even after they are Chriſtians, and muſt be daily waſh'd off by the work of your miniſtry. It may farther be gather'd, from thoſe words, ver. 8. "If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part in me," or canſt receive no benefit by me; and from the purity intimated, ver. 10. that Chriſt intended alſo, by this rite, that purity of mind and affection, which he required of all thoſe who belonged to him, and which he would increaſe in them by his word and ſpirit, Eph. v. 26. and which in ſcripture was uſually repreſented by waſhing, and pouring of water; as Iſa. i 16. Ezek. xxxvi. 25. (H. and W.)

Needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet.] The Hebrews had their louſeis, and their baptiſmous or nipſeis. The former, waſhing of the whole body, the other two, of the hands or feet, of one part alone, either by immerſion, or pouring on of water, which they call ſanctifying. So in Joma, c. 3. ſect. 3. The high-prieſt, on the day of expiation, waſhes five waſhings, and ten ſanctifications; that is, waſhes his whole body five times; at every changing of his veſtments once, and his hands and feet ten times; that is, at every waſhing of his whole body twice. The former were uſed by the prieſt, after the building of the temple, before the entring into the temple. No man (ſaith Joma) enters into the court of the temple to miniſter, tho' he be clean, (that is, tho' he be not under any legal pollution) until he have waſhed all over. And ſo alſo by the proſelytes at their initiation. The latter was of every day's uſe. And to thoſe our Saviour ſeems here to refer; and by the ho leloumenos he means him that hath been totally waſh'd; that is, that hath been initiated, and enter'd into Chriſt, hath undertaken his diſcipleſhip, and ſo renounced ſincerely all the profaneneſs of his former life; and he that had done ſo, is ſaid to be catharos holos, in the words following, "whole clean," and he hath no need to be ſo waſhed again, that is, all over. For that ceremony of initiation was never repeated, ſay the Jewiſh writers. All that is needful to him is the baptiſmoi or nipſeis, the immerſion, or pouring of water, and ſo rinſing of the hands and feet, the daily miniſtry of the word and grace of Chriſt, thereby ſignified, to cleanſe and waſh off, and purify, more and more daily, the frailties, and imperfections, and lapſes of our weak nature, thoſe feet of the ſoul, ta ſarkika diabeemata, ſaith Eulogius, even after he is converted (H.) Our Lord here tells Peter, that the ablution, or waſhing of the feet, was ſufficient for the purification of the whole man: Referring to the cuſtom of thoſe countries, who uſed to go to ſupper immediately from the baths; who therefore were ſufficiently clean, ſave only their feet, by reaſon of the duſt contracted in paſſing from the baths to the eating-rooms; from which, when, by the hoſpitable maſter of the houſe they were cauſed to be cleanſed, they needed no more waſhing. And by this, Jeſus, paſſing from the letter to the ſpirit, meant, that the body of ſin was waſhed in the baths of baptiſm; and afterwards, it was only neceſſary to purge away the filth contracted in our paſſage from the font to the altar. (Taylor and Howel.) So, in the metaphor, in our travel through the world, all the defilement we contract ariſes from our miſplaced or immoderate affections, love, deſire, fear, averſation, hatred. The Jewiſh prieſts were to waſh their hands, as well as feet, when they offered ſacrifice to God, Exod. xxx. 19. becauſe their hands were chiefly employed in that work: and ſo their hands unwaſh'd were ſaid to be unconſecrated, Maim. Tr. de Ædif. Templi, c. 1. ſect 6. and Tr. 3. c. v. ſect. 1. The apoſtles are required only to waſh their feet; their buſineſs being to travel through the world, preaching the Goſpel. Note alſo, that Chriſt waſhed the feet of Judas: for he was preſent at this rite, and is not ſaid to be excepted; only Chriſt here ſaith, this waſhing did not make him clean. (W.)

He knew who ſhould betray him.] See the notes on ver. 18. and chap. ii. 24. vi. 64.

Know ye what I have done to you?] Here our Saviour declares his intention in what he had done; viz. to teach them, by his example, the duty of humility: That, as he had performed that act of abaſement towards them, ſo ſhould they be ready to perform all offices of love and humble condeſcenſion one towards another: "I have given you an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done to you." Learn thence, that humility and mutual condeſcenſion, among the members and miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, is a moſt neceſſary grace and duty; which the Son of God not only taught by his doctrine, but enforced by his example. The argument which he makes uſe of to preſs the imitation of his example upon them, is drawn from the titles given to him by his diſciples. "Ye call me Maſter and Lord, and ſo I am." Now, ſervants ought to imitate their maſter, and ſubjects to obey their lord and king. Chriſt is a maſter to teach and direct; a lord to govern and protect: As he is a maſter, we are to learn in his ſchool; as he is a lord, we are to ſerve in his houſe: He muſt be ſubmitted to as a prince, as well as relied upon as a Saviour. It is invain to expect ſalvation from him, if we do not yield ſubjection to him. Another argument, which our Lord makes uſe of to preſs his diſciples to imitate his example, is drawn from his dignity and ſuperiority over them; "The ſervant is not greater than his lord." As if Chriſt had ſaid, Tho' ye my diſciples are to have a very high and honourable ſtation in the Goſpel-church, yet let not this ſwell you with pride, but be ye mutually condeſcending to each other, remembring ye are yet but ſervants to myſelf, and ought to be ſo to one another; "and the ſervant is not greater than his lord." Learn hence, 1. That whatever dignity Chriſt confers upon his ſervants and officers, yet he is over them all, ſuperior to them, and above them. 2. That the conſideration of Chriſt's dignity, and his miniſters meanneſs, ought to keep their minds humble and lowly, and far from affecting ſuperiority over their brethren. "The ſervant is not greater than his lord; nor he that is ſent, greater than he that ſent him." (B.)

Maſter and Lord.] Your Maſter by teaching, and your Lord by commanding. (G.) But ho Kyrios, the Lord, here ſeems to import "the Lord from heaven," ver. 1. or him who is "Lord of all;" in which ſenſe, "to us Chriſtians there is but one Lord," Acts ii. 36. 1 Cor. viii. 6. (W.)

Ye ought alſo to waſh one another's feet.] Not in the literal ſenſe, or by doing this once a year: but in the ſpiritual, by being always ready to do any ſervice, by which we may promote the welfare, and advance the purity, of any member of the church; for "the ſervant is not greater than his Lord." (Idem.) This example does not oblige to the individual act, but to follow the reaſon of the example. (B.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 25.

If ye know theſe things.] Our Lord here intimates unto us, 1. The neceſſity of knowledge, in order unto practice. 2. The neceſſity of practice, in order unto happineſs. A man may know the will of God indeed, and not do it; but he can never do the will of God, acceptably, and not know it. The knowledge of God's will and our duty, and the practice of it, may be, and too often are, ſeparated; but the practice of religion, and doing what we know to be our duty, is the only way to true happineſs. Learn thence, 1. That Chriſt doth not approve a blind obedience in his people; but requires that their practice and obedience be founded upon underſtanding and knowledge. 2. That the firſt care of thoſe that will be Chriſt's diſciples and followers, muſt be this, with all ſeriouſneſs to apply themſelves to the knowledge of their Maſter's will; that, next to the knowledge of our duty, our firſt and chief care muſt be to practiſe every thing that we underſtand and know to be our duty. 3. That a right knowledge and practice of our duty will certainly make us happy; "If ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them." (Idem.)

I know whom I have choſen.] Chriſt ſpeaks not here of an election to faith, and by it to ſalvation, that being conſtantly in ſcripture aſcribed to God the Father, not to Chriſt acting as his prophet; but of being choſen to the office of an apoſtle: Nor does he intend here to ſay, that he had choſen ſome of his apoſtles, and not others; for he owns, that he had choſen Judas, by ſaying, "Have not I choſen twelve, and one of them is a devil?" chap. vi. 70. The import of theſe words ſeems therefore to be this, I know the temper and diſpoſition of them whom I have choſen, and what I may expect from one of them; for which cauſe I ſaid, "Ye are not all clean." But God in his wiſdom hath permitted this; that, as Achitophel betrayed David, tho' he was his familiar friend, ſo Judas, my familiar at my table, might betray the Son of God; and ſo the words recorded Pſalm xli. 9. might be fulfilled in him alſo, of whom king David was the type. Theophylact notes, that the phraſe of "lifting up his heel," here uſed, is a metaphor taken from wreſtlers: Others ſay from racers; who, following others, endeavour to trip up their heels, and throw them down. So Eſau ſaid of Jacob, who had his name from the word akab, "Is he not rightly called Jacob, for he hath trip'd up my heels theſe two times," Gen. xxvii. 36. And ſo, Jer. ix. 4. "Every brother will utterly ſupplant;" that is, will trip up his brother's heels. (W.) Others think this metaphor to be taken from a fed beaſt, which kicks againſt his maſter. (B.) See the notes on chap. ii. 24. and vi. 64.

I tell you before it come.] Here another argument occurs, to prove the divinity of our bleſſed Saviour, from his fore-knowledge of Judas's treaſon: The perſon who, the time when, and the place where, were all known to Chriſt; "I tell you before it come to paſs." The argument lies thus: He that foreſaw the future actions of men, and infallibly foreknew the future events and iſſues of things, is certainly God: But Chriſt did this; therefore he is really God. And he tells us here, That for this very reaſon he foretold now the treaſon of Judas: "Now I tell you before, that when it comes to paſs, ye may believe that I am he." What He doth he mean? What He could foretell ſo many things to come, which did not depend upon neceſſary, but contingent cauſes only? This He was not a mere man ſurely; for he knows not what ſhall be on the morrow: but muſt be real God, becauſe he knew all things, not by revelation, as the prophets knew things to come, but by immediate inſpection, and ſimple intuition; ſo that we may ſay with Peter, "Lord, thou knoweſt all things: And becauſe thou knoweſt all things, thou art God." (Idem.)

He that receiveth.] Leſt his apoſtles ſhould think, that, for the treachery of one of them, they ſhould all become odious and abominable to the whole world, our Saviour encourages them with this promiſe and aſſurance, That there ſhould be thoſe that would receive them, and that he would take it as kindly as if they received himſelf; "He that receiveth you, receiveth me." Learn hence, That it is a ſweet encouragement to the miniſters of Chriſt unto the faithful diſcharge of their duty, that Chriſt and the Father account, that the reſpect paid to the miniſters of the Goſpel, is paid to themſelves; and, on the contrary, that all the contempt caſt upon them, reflects upon themſelves: "He that receiveth you, receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me." (Idem.) The miſſion is the thing which we muſt chiefly regard. To aſſure us, that we receive an ambaſſador of Chriſt, ſent by Jeſus Chriſt, it muſt appear, that the miſſion, which is pretended to, is derived from Chriſt, by an uninterrupted ſucceſſion. (Q.) See the notes on Luke x. 16.

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. When Jeſus had thus ſaid, he was troubled in ſpirit, and teſtified, and ſaid, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, that one of you ſhall betray me. Then the diſciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he ſpake. Now there was leaning on Jeſus boſom, one of his diſciples whom Jeſus loved. Simon Peter therefore beckned to him, that he ſhould ask who it ſhould be of whom he ſpake. He then lying on Jeſus breaſt, ſaith unto him, Lord, who is it? Jeſus anſwered, He it is to whom I ſhall give a ſop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the ſop, he gave it to Judas Iſcariot, the ſon of Simon. And after the ſop, Satan enter'd into him. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, That thou doeſt, do quickly. Now no man at the table knew for what intent he ſpake this unto him. For ſome of them thought, becauſe Judas had the bag, that Jeſus had ſaid unto him, Buy thoſe things that we have need of againſt the feaſt: or that he ſhould give ſomething to the poor. He then having received the ſop, went immediately out: and it was night.

He was troubled in ſpirit.] Partly on account of Judas his obſtinate malice, who could not be reclaimed by any benefits: Partly out of horror and deteſtation of ſo much wickedneſs; and partly, to manifeſt, that he was neither ignorant of, nor unwilling to endure it. (Strateman.) See the notes on chap. xi. 33. xii. 27. and Luke xii. 50.

And teſtified.] That is, he ſpake this openly, and with an aſſeveration, "Verily, verily, I ſay unto you." (Beza.)

One of you ſhall betray me.] Oh! what an aſtoniſhing word was this, "One ſhall betray me;" one of my diſciples ſhall betray me! yea, "one of you," my diſciples and apoſtles, ſhall do it! Well might they look one upon another with ſorrow and amazement, to hear that their Maſter ſhould die; that he ſhould die by treaſon; and that the traitor ſhould be one of themſelves, ſaying, "Maſter, is it I?" not, Maſter, is it Judas? Learn hence, 1. That it is poſſible for ſecret wickedneſs to lurk, yea, for the greateſt villainy to lodge, in the hearts of profeſſors, in whoſe converſation appeareth nothing that may give a juſt ſuſpicion to others. 2. That it is both the duty and property of the diſciples of Chriſt, to have ſo much candour and brotherly love, as not raſhly to cenſure and judge one another, but to hope the beſt of others, and to fear the worſt of themſelves. (B.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 21.

Leaning on Jeſus boſom.] See the notes on Luke xvi. 22.

Whom Jeſus loved.] Viz. St. John himſelf; tho' the Evangeliſt, out of modeſty, does not diſtinguiſh himſelf by name.

Dipped the ſop.] What pſomion ſignifies, is clear from Heſychius, viz. The lower ſide of the bread; and pſomia, broken pieces of the loaf, or cruſt of bread. Such was it that was wont to be given about to each of the gueſts in the poſt-cœnium (the breaking of bread after ſupper) among the Jews, to ſignify that charity that ſhould be among them; and ſo the cup of grace, or charity alſo, after ſupper, ſaith St. Luke, chap. xxii. 20. And ſuch was this here, that Chriſt on purpoſe did, to expreſs his love to his diſciples now at parting with them, ver. 1. and to engage them to the like among one another. That this was the poſt-cœnium, there can be no doubt, if genomenou deipnou, ver. 2. be render'd, ſupper being ended; for then there could be nothing after that but the poſt-cœnium. But altho' genomenou, being the aoriſtus medius, importeth no more, but it being come, or when ſupper was come, in ſupper time, yet 'tis apparent, that after this he roſe from ſupper, to waſh their feet; and accordingly 'tis ſaid expreſly, ver. 12. lying down again, which ſignifies that he was before lain down to meat. And therefore in reaſon this waſhing their feet, coming between the ſupper, and the poſt-cœnium, that which here follows the waſhing, and his ſecond lying down, is the poſt-cœnium, wherein, as it is evident by the other Evangeliſts, he inſtituted the Lord's ſupper. See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 26. where it is the laſt thing that is done, but the ſinging of the hymn, before their going to the Mount of olives, ver. 30. and ſo Mark xiv. 26. And Luke ſaith expreſly, chap. xxii. 20. that he took the cup after ſupper. Which being ſuppoſed, and the mention being here expreſs of Chriſt's giving the pſomion, or cruſt, to Judas, as it is neceſſarily conſequent, that Judas was preſent at the inſtitution of the ſacrament, and not only at the firſt part of the ſupper, which that concluded, ſo it is not probable that the cruſt now mention'd to be given him ſhould be dipp'd or moiſten'd in the juice of the herbs, as it might be thought, if it had been at the former part of the ſupper. For the cuſtom of giving about bread in the poſt-cœnium was, ſurely, to give a cruſt of dry bread, broken off from the loaf, or a loaf cut in a diſh, to that purpoſe, to give every one a piece, and the cup of wine following it, there was no uſe, or occaſion of moiſtening it: And beſides, the firſt courſe, and the diſhes of that ſervice, were in all reaſon taken away, to give place to this concluding courſe; as we know it is, where ever the cuſtom of the grace cup is ſtill retained. And if ſo, there was then no moiſt thing on the table but the wine, to dip or wet it in; and that being in a cup, or pot, and not in a diſh (which is mention'd in Matthew and Mark, at his pointing at the traitor) there is no pretence of believing, that the bread was dipp'd in that. Upon theſe grounds it ſeems not unreaſonable to interpoſe a conjecture, that the word bapſas, or embapſas, may here be miſtaken, and miſapplied to pſomion, the piece of bread (which from thence is uſually render'd a ſop, ſuppoſing it to be baptomenon, dipp'd in wet, and ſo moiſten'd) when it may ſignify no more than his putting, or dipping, his hand into the diſh. For the putting one's hand into any hollow veſſel, which is made hollow, that it may contain liquids in it, may fitly be thus expreſs'd, altho' there be not any liquid thing in it at that time. So embaptein cheira, to dip, or put in the hand, Matt. xxvi. 23. ſignifies to take meat, and eat bread, Pſal. xli. 9. and here ver. 18. without any notion of wetting it, and ſo embaptomenos, Mar. xiv. 20. which may as well conclude that Judas was made wet in the diſh there, as that the bread was ſopp'd here. It is ordinary for words to loſe their native ſignifications, and to be uſed in a greater latitude than originally belongs to them; and ſo we know baptizeſthai, to be dipp'd, or waſh'd, is uſed not only of water, but of the Holy Ghoſt, and fire: And then, why may not the words be thus render'd, "To whom, having dipp'd, I ſhall give the piece of bread;" by dipping, meaning, putting the hand into the diſh; and then, having dipp'd, that is, put in his hand, he gives the cruſt, or piece of bread, to Judas, telling John at the ſame time, that he, that he ſhould next give it to, was he that ſhould deliver him up. (H.)

Satan enter'd into him.] That is, as St. Jerome ſaith, Not as to the ſubſtance, but as to the operation: As he is ſaid to do, when the will is fully inclined to obey his motions, and we do not reſiſt them. (W.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 3.

That thou doeſt, do quickly.] That is, Thou may'ſt do it quickly, as ſoon as thou wilt; for I am ready to ſuffer. (G. and W.) For theſe and ſuch like expreſſions, are not to be underſtood imperatively, tively, as commands to proceed in wickedneſs, but as a bare permiſſion only; as we have already noted, on chap. ii. 19.

Give ſomething to the poor.] This charity ſeems to be the proper buſineſs at a feaſt, Eſth. ix. 22. (W.)

Went immediately out; and it was night.] Tho' it was night, yet ſo intent was Judas upon the devil's work, to which he had now given himſelf up, that he went about it immediately, and ſold his Lord into the hands of his enemies. (B.)

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. Therefore when he was gone out, Jeſus ſaid, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him. If God be glorified in him, God ſhall alſo glorify him in himſelf, and ſhall ſtraightway glorify him. Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye ſhall ſeek me: And as I ſaid unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; ſo now I ſay unto you. A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye alſo love one another. By this ſhall all men know that ye are my diſciples, if ye have love one to another. Simon Peter ſaid unto him, Lord, whither goeſt thou? Jeſus anſwered him, Whither I go, thou can'ſt not follow me now; but thou ſhalt follow me afterwards. Peter ſaid unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy ſake. Jeſus anſwered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my ſake? Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, The cock ſhall not crow, till thou haſt denied me thrice.

Jeſus ſaid.] Here our Saviour began his farewel-ſermon, in which he took leave of the eleven apoſtles; which was very curiouſly mix'd with ſadneſs and joy, and interwoven with myſteries, as with rich jewels: And here he diſcourſes of the glorification of God in his Son, and of thoſe glories which the Father had prepared for him: He mentions his ſudden departure, and his going to a place to which they could not follow him yet, but afterwards ſhould; meaning, firſt to death, and then to glory; commanding them to "love one another." (Howel.)

Now is the Son of man glorified.] That is, Now is the time at hand, when I am to die, and by my death to finiſh the work of man's redemption, and thereby eminently glorify God. God the Father was eminently glorified in the obedience and ſufferings of his dear and only Son. 'Tis true, that the ſufferings of Chriſt were ignominious in themſelves; yet were they the way to his own glory and his Father's alſo: For by them he redeem'd a loſt world, trampled upon Satan, and triumph'd over ſin. (B.) The Son of man is now ſoon to ſuffer, and then to be glorified, Luke xxiv. 26. Hebr. ii. 9. and God is to be glorified in him thus ſuffering for the ſalvation of mankind. The context ſeems to require the ſenſe here given: And then the paſſive Aoriſt is put for the future, as in chap. xi. 56. and xv. 6. Or elſe the ſenſe may be given thus, Hitherto hath the Son of man been glorified by his doctrine and his miracles, by which he hath fully prov'd his miſſion: And God hath been glorified by them both; he having ſtill done and ſpoken them in his Father's name. (W.)

If God be glorified in him, God ſhall alſo glorify him in himſelf.] Viz. By ſigns done in the heaven and the earth, which ſhall force men to ſay, even at his death, "Truly this was the Son of God," Matt. xxvii. 45. by his glorious reſurrection and aſcenſion, and ſeſſion at his own right hand, by "giving him all power in heaven and earth, and a name above every name," Philip. ii. 9. And this he will preſently begin to do, ſo that ye, ſeeing ſuch admirable circumſtances of my paſſion, and ſuch a glorious iſſue of it, may go on chearfully in preaching my Goſpel, expecting my power to aſſiſt you in the work, and a full reward of all your ſufferings for my ſake. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. xii. 23, 28.

Little children.] This endearing compellation intimates that tender affection which Chriſt bears to his diſciples. Whatever his dealings may be with his people, in reſpect of his removing and withdrawing from them, yet he ſtill retains the relation of a Father to them, and will in his abſence exerciſe ſuch a care over them, as parents have of their young and tender children. (B.)

Yet a little while I am with you.] That is, By my bodily preſence: For he promiſed them to "abide with them for ever," by his Holy Spirit, chap. xiv. 16. and his divine preſence, Matt. xxviii. 20. (W.)

Ye ſhall ſeek me.] See the notes on chap. vii. 34. viii. 21. and xii. 35.

A new commandment.] Our Saviour having, in the foregoing verſe, intimated to his diſciples, that he was ſuddenly to depart from them, proceeds here to give them a ſtrict charge, that, in his abſence, they ſhould "love one another." And this he calls "a new commandment:" Not as being new in regard of inſtitution, but of reſtitution; not new in regard of the ſubſtance of it, for it was a branch of the law of nature, and a known precept of the Jewiſh religion; but, 1. Becauſe it was purg'd from the old corrupt gloſſes of the Phariſees, who had limited this duty of love, and confined it to their own countrymen; whereas Chriſt enlarges the object, and obliges his diſciples to love all mankind, even their very enemies. 2. Becauſe it was ſo highly advanc'd by him, in meaſure and degree, even to the laying down of our lives for one another. 3. Becauſe it was now urged from a new motive, and enforced by a new example; "As I have loved you, that ye alſo love one another." 4. Becauſe it was never to wax old, but to be always freſh in their memory and practice, to the end of the world. (B.) Now, the fruits and effects of this love, or Chriſtian charity, are deſcribed by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiii. 4, &c: Or, in other words, it conſiſts in doing all the good we can to the ſouls, the bodies, the goods, and the good name of all our neighbours; eſpecially of all Chriſtians. One duty of it is to inſtruct, convert, admoniſh, reprove, or at leaſt to pray for one another's ſouls. Another is to defend one another's bodies, as much as we can, from all internal infirmities, and all external violences, perſecutions, torments, murders, unjuſt puniſhment, and the like. A third is to preſerve one another's goods from fraud, oppreſſion, and rapine. And the laſt is to maintain one another's good name from lying, railing, reviling, calumny and ſlander. (Pooley.)

By this ſhall all men know, that ye are my diſciples.] The diſciples of John the Baptiſt were known by the auſterity of their lives; thoſe of the Phariſees by their habit and ſeparation from other men: But Chriſt will have his diſciples known by their affection to each other; which, in the primitive times, was ſo conſpicuous, that the very heathens did cry out and ſay, See, how the Chriſtians love one another. Here obſerve, 1. Our Saviour doth not ſay, By this men ſhall conjecture and gueſs that ye belong to me, as being my diſciples; but they ſhall certainly know it. 2. He doth not ſay, By this ſhall ye know yourſelves to be my diſciples, and one another to be ſo; but "by this ſhall all other men know" it, as well as yourſelves. 3. He doth not ſay, By this ſhall all men know that ye look like my diſciples; but that ye are indeed what ye pretend to be, namely, by your loving one another. 4. He doth not ſay, By this ſhall the world know, that ye are my diſciples, by your aſſembling often together in my houſe of prayer, by your frequent faſtings, by your reading the ſcriptures daily, by your hearing ſermons weekly, by your receiving ſacraments monthly: All theſe, put together, will be no ſufficient evidence of your diſcipleſhip, if ye keep up a ſecret grudge in your heart one againſt another; but "By this ſhall all men know that ye are my diſciples, if ye have love one to another." (W. and B.) In which words there are two things ſuppoſed, and a third is taught, viz. 1. That all either are, or ought to be, Chriſt's diſciples: And that, not only in profeſſion, but in ſingleneſs of heart; not only verbally, but really; which is eaſily collected from theſe words, "that ye are my diſciples." 2. That ſuch as are really Chriſt's diſciples (not in ſhew, but in ſubſtance, not in hypocriſy, but in deed) ought to endeavour to make it known to all the world, that they are ſuch: Their light muſt ſhine before men, by their growth in the ſchool of Chriſt; as is apparent from thoſe other words, "all men ſhall know it." And 3. That the ſureſt teſtimony and proof of ſincere diſcipleſhip under Chriſt, is that we "love one another." (Pierce.) But it is worth our obſerving here, That it is not only a cuſtom in the church of Rome, upon a certain day in the year, ſolemnly to curſe and excommunicate all other Chriſtians beſides themſelves; (Hoſp. de feſt. Chriſt.) but they do it on the very day whereon they read, and our Saviour ſpake theſe words. So excellently well do they practiſe this divine leſſon: And ſuch evident tokens do they give, of their being the only Catholic church; the only viſible diſciples of Chriſt! (Pooley.)

Simon Peter ſaid.] Here we find Peter reflecting upon our Saviour's ſaying, ver. 33. "Whither I go, ye cannot come." He is inquiſitive to know of Chriſt, whither he went. Our Lord tells him, that for the preſent he could not follow him, but ſhould hereafter: He was not yet ſtrong enough to ſuffer for him, as he ſhould and did afterwards. St. Peter griev'd at this, raſhly reſolves to follow him, tho' he ſhould die for his ſake. Chriſt adviſes him, not to be over-confident of his own ſtrength; for he ſhould deny him thrice, within the time of cock-crowing. Obſerve here, 1. How that fond conceit which the diſciples had, of Chriſt's temporal kingdom, did continue with them to the very laſt. For when Chriſt ſpake of leaving them, by aſcending into heaven, Peter underſtands him of a removal that was earthly, from one place to another; whereas Chriſt intended it of a removal from earth to heaven. The opinion, that the Meſſiah was to be a temporal prince, and that his kingdom ſhould be of this world, was ſo deeply rooted in the minds of the Jews, that they ſtumbled at it fatally: And Chriſt's own diſciples had ſo drunk in the notion, that they wonder to hear Chriſt ſay, that he is going from them, and that whither he goes they cannot come, 2. That Chriſt's diſciples ſhall certainly follow, low their maſter afterwards, and be for ever with the Lord; but they muſt wait their Lord's time, and finiſh their Lord's work: They muſt patiently wait for their change, and not peeviſhly wiſh for it; for tho' they do not follow Chriſt preſently to heaven, they ſhall follow him afterwards. 3. The greatneſs of St. Peter's ſelf-confidence: "I will lay down my life for thy ſake." Good man! He reſolved honeſtly; but too much in his own ſtrength. Little did he think, what a feather he ſhould be in the wind of temptation, if once God left him to the power and prevalency of his own fears! The holieſt of men knows not his own ſtrength, till temptation brings him to the trial. How deteſtable St. Peter's preſumption and ſelf-confidence was to Chriſt; and how fatal and pernicious to himſelf: "Wilt thou lay down thy life for my ſake?" As if Chriſt had ſaid, Peter, thou ſay'ſt more than thou can'ſt do: Thine own ſtrength will fail thee, and thy ſelf-confidence deceive thee; I know thy heart better than thou do'ſt thyſelf; and foreſee, that "before the cock crows thou wilt deny me thrice." Thence learn, That none are ſo near falling, as thoſe that are moſt confident of their ſtanding. (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 34. Mark xiv. 30. and Luke xxii. 34.

CHAP. XIV.

Chriſt continueth his ſermon to his diſciples; comforting them with the hope of heaven. He profeſſeth himſelf to be the way, the truth, and the life; and one with the Father: Aſſureth their prayers in his name to be effectual: Requireth love and obedience: Promiſeth them the Holy Ghoſt, the comforter; and leaveth his peace with them.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. LET not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, Believe alſo in me. In my Father's houſe are many manſions; if it were not ſo, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myſelf, that where I am, there ye may be alſo. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

Let not your heart.] Our bleſſed Saviour, in the foregoing chapter, having acquainted his diſciples with his approaching death, by the treachery of Judas, their hearts were thereupon overwhelm'd with grief and trouble. Accordingly, in this chapter, by ſundry arguments, he comforts his diſciples againſt the perplexity of their fears and ſorrows. Obſerve, 1. How Chriſt addreſſes himſelf to his diſciples, in a very endearing and affectionate manner: "Let not your heart be troubled." Whence learn, 1. That the beſt and holieſt of God's Children and ſervants, whilſt here in an imperfect ſtate, are ſubject to deſponding, and diſquieting, and diſtruſtful fears. 2. That no work is more delightful to our Saviour, than to comfort the troubled and perplexed ſpirits of his ſervants. Obſerve, 2. The remedy which Chriſt preſcribes, for the calming their preſent fears, and for arming them againſt future troubles; and that is faith in the Father and in himſelf: "Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me." Hence learn, 1. That God is the ſupreme object of faith; his unchangeable love and faithfulneſs, with his infinite power in the accompliſhing of his promiſes, is the ſecurity of believers. 2. That Chriſt, as mediator between God and guilty creatures, is the immediate object of our faith. 3. That Chriſt being the true and proper object of our faith, is a proof of his being truly and really God. Chriſt doth here aſſert his own deity in the ſubſtance of the command, in making himſelf an object of faith, in conjunction with God the Father: "Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me." Obſerve, 3. The arguments of conſolation, which Chriſt propounds for the ſupport of his diſciples, under the ſorrow which they had conceived for his approaching departure. Firſt, He tells them, That heaven, whither he was now going, was his Father's houſe; a place of happineſs, not deſigned for himſelf alone, but for many more, to enjoy a perpetual reſt and abode in, as in everlaſting manſions: "In my Father's houſe are many manſions." Heaven is God's houſe, in which he will freely converſe with his domeſticks, his children and ſervants, and they ſhall enjoy full glory there, as in a quiet and capacious habitation. A ſecond Ground of comfort is, that he aſſures them, that he will come again and receive them to himſelf, that they may live together with him in the heavenly manſions. This promiſe Chriſt makes good to the Saints, partly at the day of their death, and perfectly at the day of judgment; when he ſhall make one errand for all, and take up all his children to himſelf, and make them compleatly happy both in ſoul and body with himſelf. Learn hence, That tho' Chriſt has removed his bodily preſence from his friends on earth, yet his love to them is not ceaſed; nor will he reſt ſatisfied till he and they meet again, eternally to ſolace themſelves in each other's company: "I will come again, and, receive you to myſelf, that where I am, there ye may be alſo. A third argument for conſolation is, that notwithſtanding Chriſt was to leave them, yet they knew whither he went; namely, to heaven, and which was the way thither: "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." It contributes much to the comfort of believers, as to know God and heaven, ſo to know the way that leads thither, that ſo they may be armed againſt all the difficulties of that way. (B.)

Ye believe in God.] There being no example I can find, where the ſame word, in the ſame ſentence, is uſed both in the indicative and the imperative mood; I had rather render theſe words in the ſame mood thus, "Believe in God, believe alſo in me," i. e. That I may preſcribe a remedy to that trouble which hath ſeized your hearts, from the conſideration of my paſſion, and my departure from you, and of the troubles ye muſt expect in execution of your office, I adviſe you to believe in God, the author of that doctrine ye are to preach, and therefore the defender of thoſe who propagate it; and in me, in whoſe name ye are to preach it, as having all power in heaven and earth, and being always preſent with you, and therefore being able to aſſiſt and preſerve you from all dangers, and to reward your faithful labours with that crown of glory which I have promiſed. (W. and Maſſey.) See the notes on chap. x. 30, 38.

In my Father's houſe are many manſions.] In which, after your labours, ye ſhall find eternal reſt. So the Jews ſay, that in paradiſe are ſeven manſions, which are each twelve thouſand miles long, ten thouſand broad, and as many high. So Moſes Haddarſon, in Gen. ii. 9. (W.) The excellency of the reward here promiſed is illuſtrated in three particulars, 1. The durableneſs of it, intimated by the word manſions, places of abode; oppoſed to that uncertain condition of things below, repreſented elſewhere by our "having here no continuing city," Hebr. xiii. 14. 2. The abundance of that proviſion: For thoſe manſions are many, and furniſh room for all who make it their care to ſeek and to be qualified for them; be the number of ſuch ever ſo great. 3. The exquiſiteneſs of the felicity which ſhall be then attained; in regard theſe manſions are in Chriſt's "Father's houſe," where all happineſs and perfection dwells: For in God's "preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at his right hand there are pleaſures for evermore," Pſal. xvi. 12. (Stanh.)

I go to prepare.] This is a ſimilitude taken from travellers, when one of the company goes before to their inn, to order entertainment for the reſt, and to prepare for their reception. (G.) Thus Chriſt, by his entrance, with his ſacrifice, into heaven, procured for us an entrance into that place which before was inacceſſible, or a new living way of entering through the veil rent for us at his death; he preparing theſe manſions for us by his own entrance firſt into heaven with his ſacrifice. (W.) See the notes on chap. xii. 26. and xiii. 33, 36.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Thomas ſaith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goeſt, and how can we know the way? Jeſus ſaith unto him, I am the way, and the truth, and the life: No man cometh unto the Father, but by me. If ye had known me, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo: And from henceforth ye know him, and have ſeen him. Philip ſaith unto him, Lord, ſhew us the Father, and it ſufficeth us. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Have I been ſo long time with you, and yet haſt thou not known me, Philip? He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father; and how ſay'ſt thou then, Shew us the Father? Believeſt thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I ſpeak unto you, I ſpeak not of myſelf: But the Father that dwelleth in me, he doth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: Or elſe believe me for the very work's ſake. Verily, verily I ſay unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do, ſhall he do alſo, and greater works than theſe ſhall he do; becauſe I go unto my Father. And whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye ſhall aſk any thing in my name, I will do it. If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him: But ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you. I will not leave you comfortleſs; I will come to you. Yet a little while, and the world ſeeth me no more: But ye ſee me: Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo. At that day ye ſhall know, that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: And he that loveth me, ſhall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifeſt myſelf to him. Judas ſaith unto him, (not Iſcariot) Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifeſt thyſelf unto us, and not unto the world? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: And my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. He that loveth me not, keepeth not my ſayings: And the word which ye hear, is not mine, but the Father's which ſent me. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, being yet preſent with you. But the comforter, which is the holy Ghoſt, whom the Father will ſend in my name, he ſhall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid unto you. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: Not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Ye have heard how I ſaid unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, becauſe I ſaid, I go unto the Father: For my Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to paſs, that when it is come to paſs, ye might believe. Hereafter I will not talk much with you: For the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me. But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even ſo I do. Ariſe, let us go hence.

Thomas ſaith unto him.] Obſerve here, 1. How Thomas, and probably divers others of the apoſtles, notwithſtanding all that Chriſt had ſaid to the contrary, did ſtill dream of a temporal kingdom, and ſuppoſed him to ſpeak of ſome earthly palace which he was going to, and therefore he tells our Saviour he knew not whither he was going: But Chriſt meaning not a temporal, but heavenly kingdom, tells them, that if they intended to follow him, and be with him in heaven, he himſelf was the only way thither: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life;" that is, I am the true and living way to the Father: "And no man cometh to the Father but by me;" that is, no man can have any acceſs to God by prayer, or any other act of religious worſhip here on earth, or any acceſs to God in heaven, but by me as Mediator. (B.) See the notes on ver. 13.

I am the way, and the truth, and the life.] That is, the author of the way that leadeth to life; the teacher of that truth which directs to it; and the giver of that life which is to be obtained by walking in it. (G.W. and B.) Jeſus is the way by his example, the truth by his word, and the life by his grace: The new and living way, wherein faith cauſes us to walk; the infallible truth of good things to come, for which we muſt hope; and the eternal life, which muſt be the ſole object of our love. Out of this way, there is nothing but wandering; without this truth, nothing but error and deceit; and without this life nothing but death. By means of ſin the heart has loſt the life of righteouſneſs, the underſtanding the light of truth, and the ſenſes the aſſiſtance of the creatures which ſerv'd as a way to lead us to God. All three are reſtored to us in Jeſus Chriſt: The way of heaven, diſcovered and laid open to our ſenſes by his life and myſteries; the truth, which enlightens our underſtanding; and the life, which reanimates our heart. Let us take great care, not to transfer to any creature that which Chriſt appropriates to himſelf exclusively of every thing beſides. He alone is our way, as our Mediator, by his blood: He alone is the truth of the promiſes, which are fulfilled only in him as the head of the elect, and in us as his members; and he alone is our life, as being the principle of the Chriſtian life, and of all the actions thereof by his grace. (Q.) See the notes on chap. i. 4, 17. iii. 16. vi. 33. viii. 32. x. 28. and xi. 25

If ye had known me.] Chriſt here ſpeaks not of the knowledge of his Father's eſſence; 1. Becauſe that is not to be ſeen, as here the Father is ſaid to be, ver. 9. 2. Becauſe the reaſon here aſſigned of this knowledge is, That Chriſt ſpake not from himſelf, but from the Father; and ſo the Father was to be known by what he taught. 3. He adds, that "the works which he did, were done by the power of the Father abiding in him:" And ſo, the power and other attributes of the Father might be ſeen by them; his goodneſs and mercy, by the kindneſs and mercy ſhewed in all his miracles; his wiſdom, righteouſneſs and holineſs, in the purity of his doctrine. In me, ſaith he, ſpeaking my Father's words, ye do already know him; that is, his ſacred will: In me, doing my Father's works, ye ſee him, viz. his attributes: And of my ability to do them, ye cannot well doubt; for "I am in the Father, and the Father in me," by virtue of his Spirit reſiding in me; ſo that I both perfectly know his will, and can do the moſt mighty works by this power of the moſt High. (W.) See the notes on chap. x. 9.

Philip ſaith unto him.] Obſerve here, 1. What a groſs conception the apoſtles had, and St. Philip in particular, of the divine nature and being, as if God the Father could be ſeen with mortal eyes. "Shew us the Father and it ſufficeth us." It is not eaſy to determine what degrees of ignorance may conſiſt with ſaving grace; doubtleſs, as the degrees of revelation and means of knowledge are more or leſs, ſo a perſon's ignorance is more or leſs excuſeable before God. 2. How meekly our bleſſed Saviour reproves their ignorance; "Have I been ſo long time with you, and yet haſt thou not known me, Philip?" and then proceeds to inſtruct them in, and farther acquaint them with, the oneneſs of himſelf with the Father, and the perſonal union of the divine and human nature in himſelf. Learn hence, That the Father being inviſible in his eſſence, to know or ſee him with mortal bodily eyes is impoſſible: But he was ſeen in his Son, who is the expreſs image of his Father, being one in eſſence with him, and one in operation alſo: "He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father alſo." (B.) God "has been ſo long time with us;" ſo long has he ſhew'd himſelf to us by his benefits, and made his power, wiſdom and goodneſs, manifeſt in his creatures; and ſo long has he urged us, by his inſpirations, his chaſtiſements, and his word, to own him for our God, and to obey him as our Father and our Lord, and do we not yet know him? Let us open the eyes of our faith, and not thoſe of our fleſh. We cannot ſee him that is inviſible, but only with inviſible eyes: And we ſee his ſame divine eſſence, his ſame power, and his ſame perfections, in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xii 45.

The words that I ſpeak.] See the notes on chap. v. 19, 36. vii. 16. viii. 38. and x. 38.

Greater works than theſe ſhall he do.] That which interpreters here ſay, of diſeaſes heal'd by the ſhadow of Peter, and by napkins ſent from St. Paul, and of more miracles perform'd throughout the world, and devils ejected through three whole centuries every where, is not unfitly mention'd here, as anſwering to theſe words: But yet, I think, this chiefly is to be refer'd to the admirable ſucceſs of the Goſpel, preach'd by the apoſtles, after the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them; and the inward gifts of tongues, and the interpretation of them; of prophecy, and diſcerning of ſpirits; and the imparting of theſe gifts to others, by baptiſm, and the impoſition of the apoſtles hands. For, as this was a greater work in our Lord Jeſus, thus to aſſiſt ſo many with his mighty power, when abſent, at ſo great a diſtance as is earth from heaven, than to do miracles in their preſence; ſo, to communicate theſe inward gifts to men, and to enable them to transfer them to others, upon faith in Chriſt, is truly wonderful, as Arnobius ſaith. But more eſpecially, when he himſelf ſucceeded ſo little in three years preaching here on earth, and had ſo few ſincere diſciples, that he ſhould enable his apoſtles, at one ſermon to convert ſome thouſands, and cauſe his Goſpel to fly like lightning through the world, and beat down all ſtrong holds of oppoſition, this is truly admirable. That to theſe fruits of the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt theſe words do principally relate, appeareth from the reaſon of them here aſſign'd, "Becauſe I go to the Father," viz. to ſend that Holy Spirit down upon you, by whom theſe greater works are to be done. (W.) Our bleſſed Lord reſerves the greateſt miracles for his apoſtles and other holy perſons, on the following accounts; 1. That there might be leſs room to attribute thoſe miracles to them. 2. To ſhew, that he has not leſs power on earth, than when he was preſent here in a viſible manner. 3. To ſupply the want of that impreſſion which was made by the viſible preſence of his ſacred humanity. 4 Becauſe his ſtate of glory, and the eſtabliſhment of his kingdom among the nations which had not known God, required more illuſtrious effects of his power; in like manner as he had given ſuch extraordinary inſtances thereof, in bringing his people out of Egypt, and eſtabliſhing the Jewiſh religion. 5. Becauſe it is only in a certain ſenſe that by his death he merited to be the mediator and advocate of men; and that, by his reſurrection, he enter'd upon his functions of prieſt, of interceſſor, and of head. (Q.)

Whatſoever ye ſhall ask:] In theſe words our Saviour produces another argument to quiet his diſciples hearts, under their peplexity and trouble for the loſs of his bodily preſence: He aſſures them, that whatever comforts they enjoyed by his preſence, they ſhall obtain by their prayers. Obſerve here, 1. The qualification requiſite in prayer: We muſt pray in Chriſt's name; that is, for the ſake of his merits and mediation, in obedience to God's command, and with an eye to his glory, and for things agreeable to his will, and for things which his wiſdom ſees good for us. To pray in Chriſt's name, is more than to name Chriſt in prayer. It implies three things, 1. To look up unto Chriſt as having purchaſed for us this privilege, that we may pray; for it is by the blood of Chriſt that we draw near to God, and that a throne of grace is open for us. 2. To pray in the name of Chriſt, is to pray in the ſtrength of Chriſt, and by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit of Chriſt. 3. To pray in the name of Chriſt, is believing, that what we ask on earth, Chriſt obtains in heaven. To pray thus is no eaſy matter; yet unleſs we do pray thus, we do not pray at all. Obſ. 2. The promiſe made to ſuch prayers; "Whatſoever ye ſhall ask in my name, that will I do:" He ſaith not that will my Father do; but that will I do, to teſtify his divine power and oneneſs with the Father. This evidently proves him to be God. Obſ. 3. The repetition of the promiſe for the further confirmation of it; "If ye ſhall ask any thing in my name, I will do it." The promiſe is doubled for the confirmation of it, that ſo we might be free from all fears and doubts of being heard, when we put up our prayers to God, in the name and mediation of Jeſus Chriſt, for things agreeable to his will. Learn hence, That altho' the children of God have ſometimes many jealouſies and fears ariſing in their mind concerning the anſwer of their prayers, yet they are altogether groundleſs; for it is moſt certain, their deſires ſhall be granted them, ſo far as the Wiſdom of God ſees fit and convenient for them. Here Chriſt ſhews, how theſe great works ſhould be done by them, viz. Not by their own power, or any divine virtue reſiding in them, as our Lord did his, but in the name and by the power of Chriſt, Acts iii. 12, 16. by faith in him, and prayer to God in his name, Acts iv. 24, 30. (Stanh. W. B. and Q.) See the notes on Matt. vii. 7.

If ye love me, keep my commandments.] The notion of loving God in ſcripture, but eſpecially in the New Teſtament, ſeems moſt fitly to be taken from one moſt eminent act, and expreſſion of love amongſt all men, viz that of doing thoſe things which are eſteemed moſt grateful and acceptable to the beloved; either as tending moſt to his good, or any other way moſt deſirable to him. For this indeed is the one expreſſion of "loving one another;" all other being effects of love to ourſelves. But, becauſe God wants no contributions of ours, to the advancing of his good, or indeed of his glory, and our only way of doing grateful things to him, is our performing what he commands, therefore it is conſequent, that our obedience to the will, or commands of God, in the higheſt and moſt perfect manner, is ſtiled the loving of him; being indeed the prime, if not the only way of demonſtrating our love to him. So here, "If ye love me, keep my commandments;" If ye are ſo affected to me, as to deſire to gratify me, obedience to all my precepts is the way of doing it. So, ver. 21. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, &c. and I will love him;" and, as the moſt grateful thing to him, that can be done from one lover to another, "I will ſhew myſelf to him." So ver. 23. "If any man love me, he will keep my word, and my Father ſhall love him, and we will (as the moſt grateful obliging thing again) come to him, and make our abode with him." And ſo, ver. 24. and 1 John ii. 5. "He that keeps my word, in him is the love of God made perfect." And chap. v. 3. "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." And ſo ſaith Chriſt, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you." From whence it is, that, as in ſome places compared together, love is equivalent, or parallel, to "keeping the commandments" of God, as Exod. xx. 5. Deut. v. 9. and Gal. v. 6. compared with 1 Cor. vii. 19. (and diſobedience to enmity, Rom. viii. 7. James iv. 4.) ſo the whole condition, available to our acceptation with God, and ſalvation, is oft expreſſed by this ſtile of love. And becauſe thoſe duties that are to be performed to God immediately, are moſt acceptable and grateful to him, but eſpecially that of confeſſing him, and, in deſpight of dangers, and death itſelf, keeping cloſe to him; therefore that is many times expreſſed by "loving of Chriſt," 1 Cor. viii. 3. and xvi. 22. Epheſ. vi. 24. James i. 12. Rev. ii. 4. Another notion there is of the love of God, a deſire of union, and near conjunction with him; but this but ſeldom look'd on in the ſcriptures. (H.) Here our Saviour implicitly reproves his diſciples, for their fond way of expreſſing their love to him, by doating upon his bodily preſence, and ſorrowing immoderately for his abſence; and he expreſly warns them to evidence their love to him, by their obedience to his commands: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Whence obſerve, Chriſt requires an obedient love, and loving obedience: Love without obedience is but diſſimulation; obedience without love is but drudgery and ſlavery. Such a love as produces obedience, muſt be a dutiful love; a love of reverence and honour to him as a commander, and an operative and working love, a labour of love, as the Apoſtle calls it: Not waiters, but workers, are the beſt ſervants in Chriſt's eſteem. And ſuch an obedience as is the product of love, will be a willing, eaſy, and chearful obedience, a pleaſing and an acceptable obedience, a conſtant and abiding obedience: All other motives without love are ſervile and baſe, and beget in us the drudgery of a ſlave, but not the duty of a ſon; He that fears God only, is afraid of ſmarting; but he that loves God, is afraid of offending. Learn hence, That the beſt and ſureſt evidence we can have of our love to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is an humble, chearful, univerſal, and perſevering obedience to his commands, "Keep my commandments;" that is, endeavour it without reſerve: For tho' we cannot keep the commandments, to a juſt ſatisfaction, yet we may perform them to a gracious acceptation: And the word my, my commandments, is a ſweetning and alleviating word: Moſes's law, an inſupportable load; but Chriſt's law an eaſy burden: The law from Sinai dreadful; the law from Sion gracious; it pardons weakneſs, and accepts ſincerity. (B.) All pretenſions to love God, if we refuſe to obey him, are vain and of no account. The motive, which ſhould influence us to obey God, and to perform every duty and part of religion, ſhould be love. The firſt beginnings of converſion may probably ariſe from fear of puniſhment, but we muſt not ſtop here. For the great principle we ſhould be governed by, and which will make our obedience eaſy and delightful, is love, not a ſlaviſh fear. A ſervant performs the ſame actions and commands which a child does; but they are not ſo acceptable and pleaſing, becauſe the former acts only on a mercenary view of reward, or out of fear of puniſhment; but the latter is influenced by a filial ſenſe of love and duty. I would not diſcourage thoſe, who as yet act on no higher views; but I would exhort them to labour after that ſtate, which will render all their religious performances a delight and joy to themſelves, as well as more pleaſing to God. (Fox.)

I will pray the Father.] Chriſt comforteth his diſciples here with a promiſe of the miſſion of the Holy Spirit, to ſupply the want of his bodily preſence. Where obſerve, 1. The procurer of this bleſſing; and that is Chriſt, by his prevailing prayer, and powerful interceſſion: "I will pray." It runs in the future tenſe; and ſo 'tis a promiſe of Chriſt's continual interceſſion. As long as Chriſt is in heaven, a Chriſtian ſhall not want a ſupply of comfort and conſolation here on earth. 2. The author and donor of the bleſſing, and that is God himſelf: "I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give." The Father; that is, my Father, your Father; and he, that is, the Father of comfort and all conſolation: "I will pray, and he will give." 'Tis an expreſſion of great aſſurance. 3. The bleſſing itſelf; the Holy Ghoſt, called here "another comforter." Where note, 1. The divinity of the Holy Ghoſt; He that will ſupply the comforts of Chriſt's preſence, muſt be as Chriſt is, the God of all comfort. 2. The perſon of the Holy Ghoſt: He is a divine perſon, not a divine quality or operation; then we might call him a Comfort, but not a Comforter. 3. The office and employment of the Holy Ghoſt: "He is a Comforter;" that is, an advocate, an interceſſor to ſue for us; an encourager, and one that adminiſters conſolation to us; and as he is a Holy Spirit, ſo are his comforts holy comforts. Obſerve, 4. The ſtability of this bleſſing; "That he may abide with you for ever." The beſt of our outward comforts are ſudden flaſhes, not laſting flames; but the conſolations of the Holy Spirit are ſtrong conſolations: They are abounding conſolations, and everlaſting conſolations; eſpecially the Holy Spirit will be the Comforter of good men in the day of affliction, in the day of temptation, and at the hour of death, when all other comforts flag and fail. Obſerve laſtly, The additional title given to the Holy Ghoſt: He is called "the Spirit of truth;" partly in oppoſition to Satan, who is called a lying ſpirit; partly becauſe he teacheth and revealeth the truth, leadeth his people into all truth, and ſealeth and confirmeth truth to the ſouls of believers; he is the Spirit of Truth, both in his eſſence and in his operations. Learn hence, That as the Holy Spirit is true in his eſſence and nature, ſo he is true in his office as a comforter to good men; All his conſolations being real and ſolid, and free from impoſture and deluſion. (B.) The word Paraclete in the Greek, comes from a word of large, and ambiguous ſignification; and conſequently may be render'd advocate, exhorter, or comforter: And every one of theſe do fitly accord to the offices of the Holy Ghoſt among the apoſtles, on whom he was to deſcend, and ever ſince in the church; and therefore ought not to be ſo render'd by any one of theſe, as to exclude the others, but to be left in the latitude of the ſignification, which belongs to the Greek word. Yet, the truth is, one notion there is of the word, which ſeems to be eſpecially referr'd to, both here, when he is called Paraclete, and chap. xvi. as ſhall there appear: And that is the firſt notion, that of an advocate or interlocutor; an advocate of the Chriſtian's cauſe with God, Rom. viii. 26. and ſo alſo with men, teaching the apoſtles "what they ſhall ſay," when they are brought before kings, &c. Matt. x. 20. and an advocate, or actor, of Chriſt's cauſe againſt the world of unbelievers, and crucifiers, John xv. 26. and efficaciouſly convincing the adverſaries, John xvi. 8. And this is the notion of the word retained among the Talmudiſts, who continue the Greek word without the termination, and ſet it in oppoſition to kategoros, an accuſer. And proportionably to what is here ſaid of parakletos, muſt, I ſuppoſe, be reſolved of, Acts ix. 31. Not that it be reſtrained to note comfort particularly, but be taken in the latitude, for the whole work of the miniſtry, to which the apoſtles were ſet apart, and conſecrated, and enabled by the Holy Ghoſt's coming down upon them; and ſo indeed the word is generally uſed in the Acts, to denote the preaching of the word, ſpeaking to the people, as the apoſtles did in the ſynagogues, or elſewhere, to tell them their duty of all kinds. So Acts xi. 23. the ſum of his ſpeech or ſermon to them all was, that they ſhould “cleave unto the Lord.” So Acts xiv. 22. preaching to, or interceeding with, them “to abide in the faith,” and xv. 32. with much ſpeech they exhorted, or taught, or preach'd to the brethren. So chap. xvi. 40. they preach'd to, or exhorted them. So Acts xiii. 15. “a word of exhortation,” according to their cuſtom of ſaying ſomething ſeaſonably to the people at their public aſſemblies, after their reading of the law, &c. So Acts xv. 31. the whole meſſage of the Synod at Jeruſalem, and their deciſion of the controverſy, is called parakleſis, exhortation. (H.)

I will not leave you comfortleſs.] Here obſerve, 1. The condition which the diſciples were in, upon the account of Chriſt's removal from them, and that was ſad and comfortleſs; fatherleſs or orphans, as the word ſignifies. Learn hence, that Chriſt's departure, or the loſs of his gracious preſence, is very ſad and comfortleſs to a pious ſoul: Well might the diſciples here lament and mourn, upon the occaſion of Chriſt's leaving them, ſeeing thereby they ſhould be deprived of his doctrine and inſtructions, of his advice and counſel, and of the benefit of his holy and inſtructive example. Obſerve, 2. The care of Chriſt for his diſciples, in reference to this their ſad and diſconſolate condition: “He would not leave them comfortleſs.” Where note, He doth not ſay, I will not ſuffer you to be comfortleſs, but I will not leave you ſo; that is, he will not deſert or diſown them in their comfortleſs condition: He will not leave them, either in point of affection, or in point of activity, he will not ceaſe to love them, nor to beſtir himſelf for them. Learn hence, That Chriſt will not leave his friends in a comfortleſs condition, tho' for a time they may be brought into it. “I will not leave you comfortleſs; I will come unto you.” Chriſt's coming here unto them is to be underſtood of his coming to them by his Holy Spirit; in the gifts of it, in the graces of it, and in the comforts of it: Thus he did not leave them comfortleſs, but at the feaſt of Pentecoſt came to them again. (B.)

The world ſeeth me no more.] Here our Saviour foretells his approaching death, that within “a little while the world ſhould ſee him no more:” For tho' he roſe again, the world ſaw him no more after his death; for we read of no appearance of him after his reſurrection to any but to his diſciples only. Indeed, the hour is coming when the world ſhall ſee him again; namely, at the day of judgment, when every eye ſhall behold him with terror and amazement. (Idem.)

Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo.] By virtue of this promiſe, tho' the apoſtles were “alway deliver'd unto death for the ſake of Jeſus,” yet was “the life alſo of Jeſus made manifeſt in their mortal fleſh,” by preſerving them, and delivering them from ſo many deaths, 2 Cor. iv. 10, 11. and they are ſaid to live by, and with him, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. by virtue of that miraculous power he conferr'd upon them for the promotion of the Goſpel, 2 Cor. iv. 7. x. 4. and xii. 10. (W.) See the notes on chap. xi. 25.

Ye in me, and I in you.] The word ka'go, in this writer eſpecially, hath oft a peculiar elegancy in it, and is not fully underſtood, but by adding the word ſo in the rendering of it; ſo alſo I; and then it hath an influence on the former part of the period, and makes that the firſt part of a ſimilitude or compariſon, as it is itſelf the antapodoſis or ſecond. Thus it is oft in other places. So, chap. vi. 56. “As he remaineth in me, ſo alſo I in him.” So 1 John. iv. 15. “As God abides in him, ſo he alſo in God:” And again, ver. 16. and here in this verſe, where two parts (not three) of conviction ſeem to be ſet down, as the effects of Chriſt's reſurrection, &c. 1. They ſhall know that “Chriſt is in his Father;” that is, that he came truly with commiſſion from him, and hath kept cloſe to the diſcharge of it, varied not from it in the leaſt. That that is the meaning of “being in his Father,” may appear by the uſe of it again, chap. xvii. 21. “That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee;” that is, that they may agree in the ſame doctrine, as my Father and I agree perfectly in the ſame; I teaching what is his will ſhould be taught, and nothing elſe. But more evidently here, ver. 10. “Doſt thou not believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me?” i. e. whatſoever I do or teach is the power of God in me; as it follows, “The words which I ſpeak are not from myſelf, but the Father that abideth in me, he doth the works,” ver. 10. and ver. 11. To the ſame purpoſe, that the miracles which he doth, he doth from God, and that is a proof that his doctrine is the doctrine of God. This the Father's raiſing him from the dead, and taking him up to heaven will convince them of. See chap. xvi. 10. where his “going to the Father” is mentioned as a means to convince them of righteouſneſs, i. e. both that he was a righteous perſon, and that he taught them the true way of righteouſneſs. 2. They ſhall know, that Chriſt continues in them, communicates and derives his power to them, that he hath not forſaken them, ver. 18. as by his death they were apt to ſuſpect he did, but are convinced of the contrary by his reſurrection; 1. By his appearing to them. 2. By his going to heaven, only (as he ſaith) “to prepare a place for them,” and then to come, meet and conduct them thither, ver. 3. and 3. By his ſending his ſpirit to them, to fit them to be his ſucceſſors on earth; which is the principal thing in this chapter. Now their obedience, and the ſincerity thereof to him, is not any third principal thing, that they were thus to be convinced of by this miracle of Chriſt's reſurrection; being a thing, which if it were in them, they might poſſibly know without God's working miracles to teſtify it: And again, their knowing of this would be an effect, or conſequent, of thoſe former convictions, and not a principal branch antecedent (as in the order of the words it lies) to the latter of them. That therefore which the mention of “ye in me” ſeems to point at in this place, is only this, That whereas the world ſhould never ſee Chriſt again, ſo they that remained in him, his faithful and obedient diſciples (upon which the whole promiſe of the Paraclete is built in this chapter, ver. 15.) ſhould partake of the bleſſing and fruits of his appearance, and of the Paraclete; and that, as they had continued faithful to him, he in like manner would be ſure to perform his promiſe to them, make them his ſucceſſors in his power in the church, and preachers of the ſame doctrine which he taught from his Father. And ſo that is the plain meaning of theſe words, “As ye are in me, ſo I in you,” which was the only ſecond thing they needed to be convinced of. Though by the way, I ſay, as this was the rewarding of their obedience and fidelity to him, ſo alſo would it be a teſtimony from God of the ſincerity of it, which he was pleaſed thus to accept and reward. That this is the right interpretation of this verſe, appears by the next verſe 21. where he that loves Chriſt and keeps his commandments, that is, that is in Chriſt here, is the ſubject, to whom the promiſe is made of Chriſt's manifeſting himſelf unto him, which hath appeared to be the importance of ka'go en auto, “and I in him.” By which it appears that the fidelity to Chriſt is the qualification or condition required in the ſubject, to make a man capable of the manifeſtation of Chriſt to him, which would not be afforded to any others. And the ſame is the importance of ver. 23. (H.) 'Tis certain, that Chriſt was in his apoſtles by his Spirit abiding with them, ver. 16. and that they were in him, by the ſame Spirit uniting them to their head, Chriſt, Eph. ii. 22. iii. 16, 17. iv. 16. And therefore Chriſt muſt be here ſaid “to be in the Father” by the Spirit of the “Father reſiding in him:” but with this difference, that the Spirit of the Father reſided in Chriſt without meaſure, chap. iii. 34. and ſo that all that was the Father's was alſo Chriſt's, chap. xvi. 15. his wiſdom, and his power; whereas he was in the apoſtles only by the gifts confer'd upon them, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. 2. He was in Chriſt, as Juſtin Martyr notes, not for indigence, but partly becauſe the nature of his prophetick office did ſo require, and partly to be derived from him as the fountain upon all his members; but he was given to them becauſe they wanted his aſſiſtance to fit them to be able miniſters of the New Teſtament, 2 Cor. iii. 5, 6. Theophylact obſerves, that we muſt not ſay, that this is ſo in the ſame manner: For Chriſt is in the Father, as “being of one ſubſtance with him;” but in the apoſtles only as an helper and coworker with them: But, perhaps the apoſtles underſtood Chriſt thus; I, as a prophet, work miracles by the Spirit of my Father dwelling in me, Matt. xii. 28. and ye ſhall work yours, mention'd here, ver. 12. by my Spirit abiding with you, ver. 16. (W.) The knowledge which the ſaints now have of the myſterious and myſtical union, is but dark and imperfect; but in heaven they ſhall underſtand theſe things clearly. (B.) This verſe is an abridgment of the chriſtian theology, by the knowledge which it gives us, of the Trinity, of the Incarnation, and of our own ſanctification. 1. Of the Trinity, Becauſe it is here declared, that the Son is in the Father, by the unity of his nature with him, and by the eternal birth which his Father gives him in his boſom, wherein he is together with him the principle from which the Holy Ghoſt proceeds. 2. Of the Incarnation, Becauſe we here learn, that our nature is in the eternal Word, the Son of God, by a perſonal union; that the Church is in Chriſt as his body; and that all Chriſtians are his members incorporated with him. 3. Of Sanctification, Becauſe Jeſus Chriſt is in us by his Spirit of adoption, to ſanctify and to govern us, and to communicate to us, as the head to its members, the life of grace and of glory. (Q.)

He that hath my commandments.] See the notes on ver. 15.

Lord, How is it, that.] Some underſtand theſe words of a temporal manifeſtation; and think that Judas the brother of James, who ſpake them, ſtill expected that Chriſt ſhould be a temporal Prince, and have ſuch a kingdom as ſhould be conſpicuous to all the world; and therefore puts the queſtion, how he could poſſibly ſhew himſelf, to his diſciples, and the world not ſee him? Others underſtand it of a ſpiritual manifeſtation; as if he had ſaid, Lord, who or what are we thy diſciples, that we ſhould enjoy more ſpecial manifeſtations of thy love to us, than to the reſt of the world? Why ſhould we be dignified by ſuch diſtinguiſhing favours above others? Learn hence, 1. That there is a real difference put by Chriſt, betwixt his own children and the world, in the matter of ſpecial manifeſtation. 2. That there being no cauſe from the creature why Chriſt ſhould make this difference, his diſcriminating grace is matter of juſt and great admiration. Well might the apoſtle, out of a deep admiration ſay, "Lord, how wilt thou manifeſt thyſelf to us, and not unto the world?" (B.) Judas, who propoſed this queſtion, was the brother of James the leſs; and is ſometimes called Thaddeus, ſometimes Lebbeus: Which names were given him, partly to diſtinguiſh him from Judas the Traytor, and partly as a commendation of his wiſdom and zeal; Lebbeus, according to St. Jerome, denoting prudence and underſtanding, and Thaddeus ſignifying a perſon zealous in praiſing God. (Nelſ.) See the notes on Matt. x. 3. and Luke xvii. 20.

Jeſus anſwer'd, and ſaid.] In anſwer to Jude's inquiry, our Saviour tells him, Becauſe the world had no reſpect for him and his doctrine, therefore they ſhould not enjoy the happineſs of his preſence: But, ſince they, who had been his conſtant diſciples, had ſhew'd their love to him by obeying his laws, and attending upon his perſon, he would make them the comfortable returns of his love, by revealing himſelf to them. (Idem.)

We will come unto him.] Viz. My Father and I, by that Spirit whoſe temple is the body of the ſaints, 1 Cor. iii. 16. vi. 13. and by whoſe in-dwelling they are made an habitation of God, Eph. ii. 22. Here therefore is no expreſs mention made of the Holy Spirit, becauſe by him it is that the Father and the Son dwell in us; and ſo it is in the beginning of the epiſtles, praying for grace and peace from the Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe this grace and peace was to be confer'd on men by the Spirit. (W.)

The comforter, which is the Holy Ghoſt.] Here Chriſt repeats his promiſe made, ver. 16. (where ſee the notes) of the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, called "The Comforter;" and declares his ſpecial office, viz. to "teach, and bring to remembrance what Chriſt had taught." (B.) The Holy Ghoſt and his grace are neceſſary for us in all reſpects. The underſtanding has need of him, in order to know the will of God, and to receive comfort and conſolation in this ſtate of exile. The heart ſtands in need of him; becauſe it is this Spirit alone, who can teach it to do the divine will, by inſpiring into it a love thereof. The memory has likewiſe as much need of him, to "bring all things to remembrance," and to fill it with the knowledge of ſalvation. (Q.) Notwithſtanding his viſible preſence ſhould be taken from them, they ſhould not be deſtitute of a divine power. A power, which ſhould atteſt the truth of their doctrine by ſigns and wonders, and every way fit them for the diſcharge of their office: A power, that ſhould plead their cauſe before princes and governors, help them to recollect their duty, and encourage them to perſeverance. Theſe aſſiſtances are partly implied in the word Paraclete, or Comforter; and all of them promiſed in the ſending the Holy Ghoſt: The Holy Ghoſt, who was to vindicate their innocence, and maintain their commiſſion; to raiſe their courage, and make them proof againſt danger; and to put them into the poſſeſſion of ſuch laſting pleaſures, which ſhould be above the power of their enemies to deprive them of, chap. xvi. 22. (Collier.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 49.

Peace I leave with you.] As if our Lord had ſaid, whatever outward trouble the world gives you, be not afraid of it before it comes, nor troubled at it when it is come; for I will give you inward peace in the midſt of all your outward troubles. "Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." Where note, That Chriſt's peace is vaſtly different from that peace which is given or enjoyed by the world: The world may wiſh peace, yet never intend it; or they may wiſh it, yet not be able to give it; but Chriſt's peace is real and effectual, ſolid and ſubſtantial: The world's peace is only a freedom from outward trouble, but Chriſt's peace is a deliverance from inward guilt; and tho' it doth not give us an exemption from outward troubles, yet it gives us a ſanctified uſe and improvement of them, and aſſures us of a joyful iſſue and deliverance out of them. (B.) The peace of the world conſiſts in reſt, joy, plenty, and delights; the peace of Chriſt, in ſubmiſſion to the will of God, in the joy of charity, and in the hope of good things which are inviſible. The carnal man is troubled, afraid, and ready to deſpair, when he is depriv'd of temporal ſatisfactions, in which he places his happineſs, and finds his peace: The heart of a Chriſtian preſerves its peace and tranquility, even when it is depriv'd of all. The world either gives peace only in fruitleſs and barren deſires, or elſe gives only a falſe and counterfeit peace: But Chriſt performs what he ſpeaks, and his words produce their effect even in the heart; by fortifying it againſt the threats of the world, and againſt every thing which may diſturb or interrupt its friendſhip with God. (Q.) And this inward peace of conſcience ariſeth from the pardon of our ſins, Rom. v. 1. and from the ſenſe of the favour of God, and of his preſence with us by the Spirit, John xvi. 22. Phil. iv. 7. (W.)

Ye would rejoice.] True love to Chriſt will make us rejoice in his advancement and exaltation, tho' it be to our own diſadvantage. (B.) His glory is ours, ſince we are his members: But then, for this very reaſon, his humiliations and ſufferings ought likewiſe to be ours by imitation, as they are by the application which he makes of them to us. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 52.

My Father is greater than I.] Theſe words muſt be underſtood with reference to his human nature as Mediator; for ſo he was the Father's Servant, and the Father as God was greater than he as man: Again, the Father may be ſaid to be greater than Chriſt, in regard of his paternity, as being the fountain of the deity; the Father is of himſelf, but the Son is begotten of the Father; but being of the ſame ſubſtance with the Father, he is conſequently God, as the Father is God; for the inequality ariſes not from the eſſence, but from the order and manner of ſubſiſtence. Thus "the Father was greater than he:" Greater than he, as to his original, the Son being begotten by him; and "greater is he that gives, than he that receives;" but as to his eſſence, they are both one God, and ſo equal. Three ways the Father was greater than Chriſt; 1. With reſpect to his human nature. Who can doubt but a dependent creature is inferior to that Almighty Being that made him? 2. With reſpect to the eternal generation of his divine perſon, as he was begotten of the Father, who is therefore called the fountain of the deity. 3. With reſpect to his office as Mediator; for thus he was the Father's ſervant O wonderful condeſcenſion! that the eternal Word, who, as ſuch, was equal with the Father, ſhould, in compaſſion to us, accept a ſtation, and ſuſtain a character, in which the Father was greater than he! Now, tho' under each of theſe conſiderations, God the Father is greater than the Son, yet none of them are inconſiſtent with the Son's being God by nature. (B.) Add to this, That the argument, produced by the Socinians, to prove, that Chriſt ſpeaks not here of his human nature, becauſe none could doubt but that God is greater than man, proves as effectually, that Chriſt could not be only man: Becauſe then none could doubt but God was greater than he; nor is any ſuch compariſon, as to greatneſs, to be found in ſcripture betwixt God and mere man. (W.) See the notes on chap. v. 18. and x. 29.

Ye might believe.] See the notes on chap. xiii. 9.

The prince of this world cometh.] Viz. By his miniſters, Judas and the rulers of the Jews; "and findeth nothing in me;" he himſelf having no power to inflict death on me, in whom is no ſin, and they "finding nothing in me worthy of death," Acts xiii. 28. Tho' therefore I am to ſuffer death, I do not ſuffer for any fault that can deſerve it, or on account of any power he, or his miniſters, have over me to inflict it; but I give up myſelf to the death, in compliance with my Father's will, that the world may know, and, knowing, imitate my obedienee to him in the ſevereſt precepts. (W. and B.) See the notes on chap. xii. 31.

Ariſe, let us go hence.] Theſe words ſhew, 1. That thus far our Saviour continued his diſcourſe to his diſciples, before their ariſing up from table after ſupper. 2. That his offering himſelf up to his ſufferings was voluntary; ſince he now went out to meet the traitor Judas and his aſſociates. See the notes on chap. x. 18.

CHAP. XV.

Chriſt continuing his ſermon, declareth the unity and mutual love between him and his true members, under the parable of the vine: Encourageth his apoſtles againſt perſecution; and ſheweth them the office of the Holy Ghoſt, and their own duty.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. I AM the true vine, and my Father is the huſbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have ſpoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itſelf, except it abide in the vine: no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch, and is withered: and men gather them, and caſt them into the fire, and they are burned. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye ſhall aſk what ye will, and it ſhall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, ſo ſhall ye be my diſciples. As the Father hath loved me, ſo have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye ſhall abide in my love: even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my Friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not ſervants; for the ſervant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you. Ye have not choſen me, but I have choſen you, and ordained you, that ye ſhould go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit ſhould remain: that whatſoever ye ſhall aſk of the Father in my name, he may give it you. Theſe things I command you, that ye love one another.

I am the true vine.] That vine, which gives vital juice to render all my branches fruitful; and whoſe fruits refreſh and fill their hearts with joy, as doth the fruit of the vine the body, Judg. ix. 13. Pſal. civ. 15. (Of the epithet true, See the notes on chap. vi. 55.) "My Father is the huſbandman," who takes care of theſe branches; cutting off the ſuckers, and the withered branches, pruning the vine, and purging the fruitful branches, that they may bring forth more fruit. Grotius thinks, the occaſion of this parable was taken from the Lord's Supper he had then celebrated, or was inſtantly to celebrate: For as, chap. vi, diſcourſing of his paſſion, he calls himſelf "the true bread;" ſo here he calls himſelf "the true vine;" nouriſhing to life eternal, with relation to that element which was "the Fruit of the vine," Luke xxii. 18. And thus it ſeemed neceſſary to ſpeak of the fruit of his death, becauſe his diſciples were offended at it, and their faith wavered on that account. Others think, that, having ſpoken of Judas, as a branch not purged but withered, and fit only for the fire, chap. xiii. 10, 11. he admoniſheth them to be careful that they become not ſuch branches; and as he had ſaid there, ver. 10. ſo he repeats that ſaying here, ver. 3. "Ye are clean," &c (W.) Obſerve here, How our bleſſed Saviour, under the metaphor of a vine, elegantly ſets forth himſelf, in his relation to his viſible church; ſhewing under that ſimilitude, what his Father meant to do with Judas, and with all unfruitful branches like unto him; even take them away, cut them off, and throw them into the fire; but ſuch as are fruitful he purges by his word and Spirit, by ordinances and providences, by mercies and afflictions, that they may be more aboundingly and abidingly fruitful. Learn hence, 1. That Jeſus Chriſt, in his offices for, and relation to his people, doth moſt fitly reſemble a vine. As the vine is weak, mean, and ſmall in outward appearance, not like the Cedar for height, or like the Oak for ſtrength; ſo was Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation; there was no beauty in him, Iſa. liii. As the vine is a fruitful plant, tho' it has little pomp, yet it has much plenty, and is only uſeful for fruit-bearing, and brings forth both plenty and variety of ſweet fruit to make glad the heart of man: Thus the fruits of Chriſt's death, reſurrection, aſcenſion, and interceſſion, are many and great, delightful and ſweet. As the fruit of the vine is preſſed, that it may be drink unto men; ſo Chriſt ſubmitted to be trod in the wine-preſs of God's wrath, that thereby the ſweeteſt fruit and benefit might redound to his people. As the vine is the root from which all the branches derive their nouriſhment and fruitfulneſs; in like manner is Chriſt the ſtock, into which all his members are ingrafted, the root in which they all ſubſiſt, and the fountain from whence their ſpiritual life and fruitfulneſs doth proceed and flow. 2. That as Chriſt is the vine, ſo his Father is the Huſbandman: He ingrafts and implants all the branches into this vine; the plants of righteouſneſs are of his own planting: He takes notice, what ſtore of fruit every branch doth bring forth; and it is his daily care to dreſs and dung, to purge and prune, to ſupport and ſhelter his vineyard, that it may bring forth fruit abundantly. 3. That there are two ſorts of branches in this vine; ſome fruitful, others unfruitful: Some have the viſibility, but not the reality of branches; ſome are branches only by external profeſſion, others are ſo by real implantation. 4. That the true touch-ſtone, whereby to diſcern one ſort of branches from another, is not by the fair leaves of profeſſion, but by the ſubſtantial proofs of an holy and righteous converſation. 5. That in the moſt fruitful branches, in the beſt and holieſt of Chriſtians, there remains much corruption to be purged out, in order to future and farther fruitfulneſs. 6 That the Huſbandman's hand (God the Father's) manages the pruning-knife of affliction, in order to his people's improvement in grace and holineſs; he had rather ſee this vine bleed, than ſee it barren. Laſtly, That ſuch branches, as after all the Huſbandman's care and coſt, remain unfruitful, ſhall be finally cut off and caſt away, as was Judas here; who in this diſcourſe of our Saviour ſeems particularly and eſpecially to be aimed at: He was a branch in him that bare no fruit, who was ſhortly after taken away, and went to his own place. (B.) By this parabolical repreſentation are moſt elegantly and ſignificantly ſet forth, the intimacy, and the beneficial effects of the union between Chriſt and his diſciples; the duty, the manner, and the neceſſity of preſerving it; and the irreparable miſeries of a ſeparation. The intimacy of this union is abundantly plain, from the choice of a tree and its branches, as a fit emblem to repreſent it: Wherein we may obſerve, 1. That tho' any other tree would well enough have ſignified the cloſeneſs of the union, yet the vine is here ſingled out from the reſt, becauſe there are ſome other effects and conſiderations relating to this union (beſides thoſe already noted) which are much more emphatically ſhewn in a vine than in any common tree. Thoſe interpreters no doubt have judg'd very rightly, who applaud the wiſdom of this choice, on account of the many vineyards in that country; from whence our Saviour frequently raiſeth parables, becauſe every part of ſuch compariſons could not but be very intelligible to his hearers; and they, who conſtantly dealt in the alluſion, might more eaſily apply and diſcern the intent of matter and expreſſions ſo familiar to them: But there ſeems to have been a yet greater inducement to this choice, from the very nature of the thing itſelf; in regard of the vine bearing a fruit more generous, and in greater abundance; which renders it more worthy of the tiller's care: And yet that noble and delicious plant, ſo highly valued when proſperous, is, when barren, more vile and refuſe than any other tree. But then, it muſt be obſerv'd, 2. That, when our Lord ſpeaks of himſelf as this vine, we are to underſtand him in a complex ſenſe; of him and his church, root and branches, head and body together: But when the tree is diſtinguiſh'd into its parts, then Chriſt is the root and trunk, and Chriſtians are the branches; of a piece with, ſhooting out of, nouriſh'd by, and living with, in, and through him. (Stanh.) Thus ſome have ingeniouſly compared the univerſal church unto a tree; whereof the root is reſembled to Chriſt, the trunk to the apoſtles, the boughs to the ſeveral metropolitical churches, the branches to the epiſcopal churches under them, the twigs to the parochial congregations under theſe, and the ſingle members of parochial congregations to the leaves upon thoſe twigs. From which apt repreſentation of the nature of the Catholic church, and of one undivided communion in it, we may perceive, how much it is the duty of every leaf to adhere to the twig, and of every twig to adhere to his branch, and of every branch to adhere to his bough, and of every bough to adhere to the common trunk; that there may be one undivided catholic communion, in all parts of the catholic church, called the communion of ſaints, according to the will of Chriſt. Neither is this way of making a tree the ſymbol of the church, without ground in antiquity and ſcripture. For St. Cyprian compares all the dioceſes of the church to the boughs of a tree: And in the ſcriptures we read of being planted into Chriſt, Rom. vi. 5. and of being grafted into him, Rom. xi. 23. (Hickes.)

Every branch in me that beareth not.] Theſe unfruitful branches are ſaid to be in Chriſt, or in his church, as being by profeſſion Chriſtians, and by baptiſm admitted into the church, and owning her faith: But they are ſtill dead branches, becauſe unfruitful in good works; for "faith without works is dead," James ii. 26. (W.)

Every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth.] Viz. In his ſeaſon, or the fit time of pruning. The apoſtles then labour'd under many infirmities and prejudices of their minds: They were weak in the faith, and underſtood but little of Chriſt's ſalutary paſſion, and the oblation of himſelf, as a piacular victim for their ſins, Luke xviii. 34. They knew nothing of the calling of the Gentiles, or of God's intended kindneſs to them; and therefore would not preach to them without a ſpecial admonition ſo to do, Acts xi. 18, 19. They were contending for primacy; and that out of proſpect of carnal advantages, 2 Cor. v. 16. From theſe and ſuch like infirmities, the good Husbandman purg'd them, when he ſhed the Holy Ghoſt upon them, and ſent them to preach the Goſpel to all nations When therefore he ſaith, "Now ye are clean," we muſt not underſtand this abſolutely, but comparatively, in reſpect of thoſe who did not believe or obey his word; and in good part, they being to be farther purged by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt. (Idem.) But here, 'tis well obſerv'd, that the word cathairo, when uſed in relation to matters of husbandry, will not admit of the phyſical interpretation; and therefore ſhould not be render'd by the term purgeth, but rather he dreſſeth, or pruneth it. (Maſſey.) See the notes on Matt. xiii. 41, 42. Luke xiii. 7. and xviii. 34.

Now ye are clean.] See the notes on chap. xiii. 10.

Abide in me.] Here follows an earneſt exhortation to perſeverance, grounded upon the neceſſity of a ſtedfaſt adherence to Chriſt, in order to the preſervation of our ſpiritual life: Becauſe the whole ſubſtance and efficient cauſe of this is as neceſſarily deriv'd from him, as the fruitfulneſs of the branches depends upon the root. (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 1.

Without me ye can do nothing.] Viz. Nothing acceptable to God, Prov. xv. 8. Becauſe, we can do nothing that is good in itſelf without him, 2 Cor. iii. 5. Phil. ii. 13. For, without him, 1. Our underſtandings are dark, 1 Cor. ii. 14. Eph. v. 8. And, 2. Our wills are perverſe, Jer. xvii. 9. Rom. i. 24. But in him we may abound in fruit, ver. 5. Becauſe, if we be in him, his Spirit will diffuſe itſelf into us; 1. Clearing our apprehenſions, Eph. v. 8. 2. Reforming our judgments, Iſa. v. 20. 3. Awakening our conſciences, Acts xxiv. 16. 4. Cleanſing our hearts, Acts xv 9. 5. Rectifying our wills, Pſal. cxix. 36. 6. Ordering our affections, Col. iii. 2. And 7. Regulating our lives and actions, Pſal. l. 23. (Bever.)

If a man abide not in me.] Whoever abides not in Chriſt; and dies in that ſtate, is fit for nothing but the fire, like a branch cut off and wither'd. That perſon who does not continue united to the head, will, 1. Be ſever'd from the body, and have no ſhare in the good things belonging to it: 2. Depriv'd of the juice and ſap of grace: 3. Abandon'd to the devil: 4 Caſt into the eternal fire: And, 5. He will burn there continually without ever being conſumed. To ſeparate ourſelves from his church, which is his body, is to ſeparate ourſelves from him and from his Spirit: And what fruit can we poſſibly bear, in a ſtate of ſeparation from this body, and without this Spirit, but only the fruit of malediction and of death? (Q.)

Ask what ye will, and it ſhall be done.] Obſerve here, 1. A glorious privilege declared. Not that we are hereby warranted to ask what we pleaſe at God's hand; but our will muſt be limitted by the word and will of God: We muſt pray in faith, and in the name and mediation of Jeſus Chriſt, and with a ſingle eye to the glory of God. 2. The condition upon which this privilege is attainable, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you;" that is, practically and experimentally: If my doctrine and commands abide in your hearts, and diſpoſe you to an holy fruitfulneſs in your lives, then ſhall all your juſt requeſts be granted. (B.) Our Lord, with his own mouth, hath told us, ſaying, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another," ver. 12. And again, "I ſay unto you, that if two of you ſhall agree on earth, as touching any thing which they ſhall ask, it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven," Matt. xviii. 19. Now, if the agreement of two be ſo prevailing, what would not the agreement of all be able to obtain? If, in conformity to the peace which our Lord bequeathed us, chap. xiv. 27. the whole fraternity ſhould join in a requeſt, certainly we ſhould have obtained long ago what we had ſo asked of God; and our faith and ſalvation would not have been in the hazard they are, at preſent, expoſed to, of a ſhipwreck. (Marſhall's Cypr.) See the notes on chap. xiv. 13. Matt. vii. 7. and Luke xviii. 1.

Herein is my Father glorified.] Here are three motives which cauſe our prayers to be heard; 1. The glory of God. 2. The edification of the church; and, 3. The ſanctification of ſouls. Theſe are three conditions always included in a true Chriſtian prayer. Wherever the firſt is, which comprehends the other two, God always grants whatever is asked of him. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 35.

That ye bear much fruit.] Some, by the great quantity of fruit expected here, underſtand the prodigious number of converts, and the glorious ſucceſſes of the Chriſtian faith, which thoſe apoſtles ſo zealouſly labour'd after: And that our Lord's intention was at that time to excite and inflame their zeal, from a conſideration, how greatly the propagation and eſtabliſhment of the Goſpel would redound to his and his Father's honour; and how well it would become them, who profeſſed to retain him as their Maſter: For by their "being his diſciples" cannot here be meant their now becoming ſuch; ſince they were ſo already, and had been for a long time. But the true intent of that expreſſion is, that this was the way to appear, and manifeſt to the world, that they are ſuch: A phraſe of much like importance with that laſt referr'd to, "By this ſhall all men know that ye are my diſciples." As charity there, ſo fruitfulneſs here, is recommended for a diſtinguiſhing mark, and ſure indication, to whom they belong. (Stanh.) "And ye ſhall be my diſciples:" That is, by your likeneſs to me, your maſter, who am intent on this, that I may glorify my Father upon earth, chap. xvii. 4. and give up myſelf to the death, that I may be more fruitful, in drawing all men to the knowledge of him, chap. xii. 24. it will appear, that ye, thus bringing forth much fruit to the glory of God, are my genuine diſciples. For thus the words en touto, herein, are to be underſtood, from the beginning of the verſe. (W.) See the notes on chap. viii. 31. and xii. 24.

As the Father hath loved me.] Lord! what a compariſon is here! "As the Father hath loved me, ſo have I loved you:" He doth not ſay, As the Father hath loved me, ſo have I loved him; but ſo have I loved you: Nor doth he ſay, As God hath loved me, ſo have I loved you; but, "As the Father;" It is a word importing dearneſs of affection: Nor doth he ſay, The Father hath loved me, and I love you; but, "As the Father hath loved me, ſo have I loved you:" Nor doth he ſay, As the Father hath loved me, ſo will I love you; but ſo have I loved you. This ſhews the priority of Chriſt's love; that he loved us firſt: and alſo denotes the invincible conſtancy of his love, and the indubitable certainty thereof; "I have loved you:" Follow me from heaven to earth, and from earth to heaven again; and ye will find, that every ſtep I have taken hath been in love. Learn hence, 1. That our Lord hath given ample demonſtration of his wonderful love to his church and people. 2. That it is the duty, and ought to be the ſingular care of every Chriſtian, to preſerve the ſweet ſenſe and inward diffuſions of Chriſt's love to their own ſouls: "Continue ye in my love." (B.)

If ye keep my commandments.] As our obedience to Chriſt is the beſt evidence of our love to him, ſo is it the beſt means to preſerve and keep us in the ſenſe and aſſurance of his love to us. (Idem.) See the notes on ver. 20. and chap. vii. 16. viii. 28. And xiv. 15.

Theſe things have I ſpoken.] In theſe words our Saviour declares the ground and reaſon, why he did ſo earneſtly preſs and urge the duty of being univerſally fruitful upon his diſciples; and that was two-fold; 1. "That his joy might remain in them;" that is, that the joy which he had in their holineſs and obedience might remain with him: Nothing is more deſired by Chriſt, than that he may have cauſe continually to rejoice in the faith and fruitfulneſs of his people. 2. "That their joy in him might be full." This latter ariſes from the former: our joy in Chriſt reſults from Chriſt's joy in us; his delight in us cauſes us abundantly to delight in him. Learn hence, That nothing is more deſired by Chriſt, Than that the joy of his people ſhould be a full, ſolid, conſtant, and uninterrupted joy. 3. That the only way and means in order thereunto, is by an holy fruitfulneſs in good works: "All theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that my joy may remain in you, and that your joy might be full." The obſervation of God's commandments does give a Chriſtian here the fulleſt and moſt perfect joy. (Idem.) Pious and true is the note of Woltzogenius here, that the obſervation of God's commandments gives here the fulleſt and moſt perfect joy. For what richer treaſure is there in this world, than that of a good conſcience? And what greater joy than that which flows from the good "Spirit teſtifying to our ſpirits that we are the ſons of God, and ſhall be made heirs of eternal life?" Rom. viii. 16, 17. Gal. iv. 6. (W.) Senſeleſs and ſtupid is that perſon, who ſacrificeth this joy, and the hope of that in heaven, to a joy which is only carnal and momentary, and is the ſource of a thouſand vexations and inquietudes, even in this life. (Q.)

Love one another, as I have loved you.] This qualification may import either, 1. A motive why we ſhould obey; or, 2. A pattern or direction, how we ſhould obey, the command laid down before it. In the firſt ſignification it repreſents the equity; in the ſecond, the meaſure and extent of our duty. Some difference there is among interpreters, which of theſe two ſenſes ought to take place: But it is a diſagreement of no great importance; ſince both are warranted by ſcripture, as 'tis evident, 1 John iv. 11. and iii. 16. (St.) They who are commanded to "love one another, as Chriſt hath loved us," muſt, open their hearts wide, and ſtretch their affections as far as he did his. No part of mankind ought to be excluded. A narrowneſs of ſpirit can by no means be excuſed in a Chriſtian, which confines all kindneſs within thoſe very ſtrait lines, which either nature, or fortune, or private profit, or perſonal obligations, have drawn about us. We muſt not love our next neighbours only; for this is a point of convenience: Nor our acquaintance only; for this is the effect of inclination, and we do it for our pleaſure: Nor our friends only; for this is required in gratitude and common juſtice: Nor thoſe from whom we hope to receive benefit only; for this is no more than intereſt would adviſe: Nor our relations only; for this is the dictate of mere nature: Nor them who are of the ſame church or opinion with us only; for that is but a ſerving and valuing ourſelves. All this is no more, than the ſordid, the covetous, the proud, the voluptuous, the publican and heathen, the Jew or the Samaritan would do. But, the Chriſtian muſt do a great deal more. He is to diſtinguiſh himſelf by higher degrees of goodneſs; even by "doing good to all men, as he hath opportunity," Gal. vi. 10. by putting on bowels of charity for the moſt miſerable, the moſt deſpicable, the moſt neglected, the moſt miſtaken, the moſt obſtinate, the worſt of men, the bittereſt of enemies, the moſt revengeful and implacable that even thirſt after his blood: For in all this Chriſt is our pattern. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 34. and Matt. v. 43, 44.

Lay down his life for his friends.] 'Tis certain, Chriſt did this for his enemies, Rom. v. 6, 7, 8. Chriſt notwithſtanding ſpeaks of his friends, as ſpeaking only to his apoſtles, whom he here owneth as his friends. Note alſo, that Chriſt here ſaith, he doth tithenai, "lay down his life for his friends, rather to expreſs the greatneſs of his love, than the merit of his paſſion: And when he doth ſo, he uſes conſtantly this phraſe, viz. chap. x. 15, 17. and 1 John iii. 16. But when the merit of his paſſion is expreſſed, the phraſe uſed is apothanein, to "die for us," or "for our ſins," Rom. v. 6. 8. 2 Cor. v. 15 Heb. ii 9. 1 Pet. iii. 18. as the circumſtances of thoſe places ſhew. (W.) See the notes on chap. iii. 16. and x. 11.

Ye are my friends.] Love is the greateſt of human affections, and friendſhip is the nobleſt and moſt refined improvement of love; a quality of the largeſt compaſs, which includes in it ſeveral privileges; as freedom of acceſs, a favourable conſtruction of all paſſages which are not ſo high and malign as to diſſolve the relation, ſympathy in joy and grief, communication of ſecrets, counſel and advice, and conſtancy. From whence we may infer, 1. The excellency and value of friendſhip, which God himſelf ſets above all conſiderations of kindred or conſanguinity, as the greateſt ground and argument of mutual endearment, in Deut. xiii. 6. Where the emphaſis of the expreſſion is very remarkable; it being a gradation, or aſcent by ſeveral degrees of dearneſs, to that which is the higheſt of all, "Thy friend which is as thine own ſoul." 2. The high advantage of being truly pious and religious: For only the true Chriſtian, and the religious perſon, can be ſure of a friend. A friend is the gift of God; and he only who makes hearts can unite them. (Taylor, Alleſtr. and South.) And here we may obſerve, 1. How condeſcending is the love of Chriſt, in calling his ſervants by the name of friends. 2. How glorious is the believer's relation to Chriſt, in being one of his friends. 3. How grateful is obedience to Chriſt, ſeeing it dignifies the practiſers of it with the title of his friends. 4. Our conformity to Chriſt conſiſts not ſo much in imitation of what he did, as in obedience to what he preſcribed: Some actions of Chriſt are inimitable; but all his commands are obeyable. 5. That nothing ſhort of an humble, uniform, chearful, and conſtant obedience to the commands of Chriſt, will evidence the truth of our relation to him, and the ſincerity of our friendſhip with him. (B.) And even the moraliſts, Cicero and Saluſt, do both of 'em make the conformity of our will to that of him we love, the teſt of ſincere friendſhip. (W.) See the notes on chap. iv. 27. and xiv. 15.

Henceforth I call you not ſervants.] By theſe words Chriſt declares the reaſon why he was pleaſed to change his ſtile, and call his diſciples friends, inſtead of ſervants: Namely, becauſe of his communication of ſecrets to them, which ſervants are not admitted to the knowledge of: "Henceforth I call you not ſervants;" that is, not mere ſervants: Not that they were to be exempted from obedience, for that is called for in the foregoing verſe; but Chriſt treated them now with the kindneſs and familiarity of friends; being about to leave them, he unboſoms himſelf unto them, ſaying, "All things, that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." Not as if Chriſt had communicated the infinite treaſures of knowledge to them, which the Father had imparted to him; but he ſpeaks here as the prophet of his church, that, as ſuch, he had revealed all things needful for them to know in order to ſalvation; all things belonging to their caſe and ſtate: As a counſellor doth not impart all his knowledge to his clients; but all that is neceſſary for his client to underſtand and know, that he makes known unto him, relating to his own caſe. Learn hence, 1. That all Chriſt's diſciples are his ſervants, and all his ſervants are his friends, in regard of intimate communion, and tender uſage: "Henceforth I call you not ſervants, but friends." And after his reſurrection he called them brethren, John xx. 17. The dignity of believers is a growing dignity; the longer they follow Chriſt, the higher privileges are indulged to them. 2. That all the Father's counſel, concerning our ſalvation, and ſo far as it is needful and neceſſary for us to know, is faithfully revealed by Chriſt to his church; he being conſtituted by God the Father to be the great prophet and inſtructor of it: "All things that I have heard of the Father, I have made known unto you;" that is, all things fit for them at preſent to know; namely, concerning his paſſion, reſurrection, aſcenſion, miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, a future judgment, and the promiſe of eternal life. (B.) Not all things abſolutely: For they were not yet able to hear of the ceſſation of the law, of circumciſion, and the Sabbath, the caſting off the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles to be his church, without offence, chap. xvi. 12. But all things fit to be told them then. (W.)

I have choſen you.] Viz. From the reſt of the Jews, to bear witneſs of me, ver. 27. and be my apoſtles. That Chriſt ſpeaks here of this election, appears, 1. From the preceding words' "Ye have not choſen me," as diſciples among the Jews choſe to themſelves a maſter; for ye came not to me till I called you. 2. From the perſons called; for, ſaith Chriſt, "Have not I choſen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" chap. vi. 70. And, 3. From the end of their vocation here, viz. "That they might go into the world, and bring forth fruit;" or that they ſhould go forth and preach that Goſpel to the world, which ſhould abide for ever, 2 John 2. and erect that church againſt which the gates of death ſhould not prevail. (W.) Let us here take notice of the conditions which are neceſſary to make men the friends and confidents of Chriſt, and as it were his miniſters of ſtate. 1. They muſt not intrude themſelves, but wait for the choice of Chriſt. 2. They muſt be ordained to the miniſtry by a lawful miſſion. 3. Not in order to lead an idle life, but to go and labour. 4. They muſt not wait till ſome work is offer'd them, but they muſt go and ſeek ſouls. 5. They muſt labour ſo as to bring forth, not leaves but fruit; not in order to pleaſe, but to convert. 6. They muſt ultimately refer all the fruit to God, and not to themſelves out of vanity, ſelf-intereſt, &c. 7. They muſt do all for the ſake of the elect, who are "the fruit which remains always," becauſe it has the eternal love of God for its root, and ſtands on the firm foundation of his divine election. 8. They muſt take care to fortify them againſt the trials and afflictions of this world, and to prepare them for them, that they may ſtand their ground in the time of temptation. 9. They muſt devoutly offer to God in prayer both their labours and the fruit of them. 10. They muſt preſent to God his elect, as to a Father who begets them by his word and his Spirit. 11. They muſt preſent them in the name, and through the merits of Jeſus Chriſt, in whom the Father has choſe them, and by whom he has purchaſed them. 12. They muſt render themſelves ſo devoted to the intereſts of God in their labours, and ſo familiar with him in their prayers, as to have the confidence to aſk, and the hope to obtain, all things of him, for his glory, the good of the church, and the ſalvation of ſouls. 13. They muſt keep up a good underſtanding betwixt themſelves; having no intereſt in view but that of their maſter. And, 14. They muſt expect to be hated and perſecuted by the world, and treated as he was. (Q.) See the notes on chap. iv. 36. and Matt. xxviii. 19.

Love one another.] See the Notes on chap. xiii. 34.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I ſaid unto you, The ſervant is not greater than his lord. If they have perſecuted me, they will alſo perſecute you: if they have kept my ſaying, they will keep yours alſo. But all theſe things will they do unto you, for my name's ſake, becauſe they know not him that ſent me. If I had not come, and ſpoken unto them, they had not had ſin; but now they have no cloke for their ſin. He that hateth me, hateth my Father alſo. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had ſin: but now have they both ſeen, and hated both me and my Father. But this cometh to paſs, that the word might be fulfilled, that is written in their law, They hated me without a cauſe. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he ſhall teſtify of me. And ye alſo ſhall bear witneſs, becauſe ye have been with me from the beginning.

If the world hate you.] We may obſerve, 1. With what fervency and importunity our Lord had inculcated and preſſed upon his diſciples the duty of mutual love, in the foregoing verſe; "I command you, that ye love one another." 2. The argument which he makes uſe of here, to preſs his diſciples in general, and his miniſters and ambaſſadors in particular, to love each other; and that is, becauſe the world would certainly hate them. Learn hence, That the world's hatred of the members and miniſters of Chriſt, is and ought to be eſteemed by them, a ſtrong argument to excite and perſuade them to love one another; for this is ſubjoined, as an argument to preſs mutual love, that we are ſure to meet with the world's hatred. 3. The ſeveral arguments, by way of encouragement, which Chriſt propounds, to comfort his members and miniſters againſt the world's hatred. The firſt argument is taken from his own lot and uſage; when here in the world, he met with the very ſame before them: "The world hated me before it hated you." Learn hence, That hatred and perſecution from the world need not ſeem hard to the ſaints, if they conſider what a ſtock Chriſt before them had upon him: He is the prime object of the world's hatred, and they who hate him much, do hate his members more, becauſe of their likeneſs to him, and reſemblance of him. A ſecond argument of comfort under the world's hatred, is this, That it will evidence they are not of this world, but choſen out of the world, ver. 19. "Becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hates you." Hence learn, 1. That the children of God, tho' in the world, yet "are not of the world;" they have not the ſpirit of the world in them, nor is the converſation of the world led by them. 2. That the difference betwixt them that are of the world, and thoſe that are choſen out of the world, is of God's making: "I have choſen you out of the world." 3. That ſuch Chriſtians as are ſeparated from the world in judgment, affection and practice, muſt for that reaſon expect to be hated and perſecuted by the world: "Becauſe ye are not of the world, therefore the world hates you." The third argument for conſolation and ſupport under the world's hatred, is taken from our relation to Chriſt, as ſervants to a maſter, ver. 20. "Remember that the ſervant is not greater than his lord;" As if Chriſt had ſaid, Is it equal that ye ſhould expect better treatment than myſelf, either as to your perſons or miniſtry; or that ye ſhould expect that the world ſhould better receive your doctrine than it did mine before you? Learn hence, That neither the members nor miniſters of Chriſt can, nor ought to expect better entertainment in, and from the world, than their Maſter found before them: "The ſervant is not above his maſter, nor greater than his lord." A fourth argument to ſupport them under the burden of the world's hatred, is taken from the goodneſs of the cauſe for which they were to ſuffer; namely, for Chriſt's name's ſake, ver. 27. "All theſe things will they do unto you for my name's ſake." Hence learn, 1. That it is the duty of all, but eſpecially the miniſters of Chriſt, to own the name of Chriſt, to ſtand up in defence of his name and truth, his glory and honour, what oppoſition ſoever they meet with for the ſame. 2. That the great quarrel of the world againſt the diſciples of Chriſt, is for the name of Chriſt: Whatever may be pretended, this is the ground of the quarrel. (Stanh. W. and B.) See the notes on chap. iii. 19. vii. 7. and Matt. vii. 7.

Becauſe ye are not of the world.] The godly are in this world, "as ſtrangers and pilgrims," 1 Pet. ii. 11. in a foreign, yea, in the enemies country; and they look upon the world, and are looked upon by it, as ſtrangers, and are uſed by it accordingly. If they were of the world, the world would own them, and love them, as her own party; and they would alſo love the world again, as their own home: But, becauſe they are not of the world, tho' they be in it, but are deſirous of heaven, Phil. iii. 20. therefore the world hateth them; and they, on the other ſide, are weary of the world, and long after heaven, their own country, where their treaſure is laid up, Matt. vi. 20, 21. and where their hearts and affections alſo are. (Sanderſ.)

The ſervant is not greater.] How unreaſonable muſt it be, in the caſe of Chriſtians, for the ſervant to decline thoſe ſufferings, which the maſter hath undergone before him; for us to ſuffer unwillingly for our own ſins, when he, who had no ſin of his own, hath ſuffered for us? The Son of God hath ſuffered, to make us the children of God; and yet we ſons of men are loth to ſuffer, in order to continue the ſons of God. If we labour under the hatred of the world, Chriſt, before us, endured that hatred: If we are forced to fly from our habitations; if contempt and ſcorn be poured upon us; or if the rack and torture be our portion in this world; the Lord and Maker of the world endured worſe than all this, and hath accordingly warned us of it. (Marſh. Cypr.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 16.

If they have kept my ſaying.] The joining of ei etereſan here with ei edioxan makes it ſeem a little probable, that terein ſhould be here taken in an ill ſenſe, for an inſidious obſerving or treacherous watching of Chriſt's words; as terein and paraterein are ſometimes uſed: And ſo alſo the Hebrew, in Pſal. lvi. 6. They obſerve, that is, "watch, my ſteps, when they lay wait for "my ſoul; and Job. vii. 20. when God is ſaid to be the obſerver of men. But the uſe of this phraſe terein logous, in the New Teſtament, eſpecially in the writings of St. John, chap. viii. 55. xiv. 23, 24. xvii. 6. 1 John ii. 5. Rev. iii. 8. 10. and chap. xxii. 7, 9. and that with entolas, commands, inſtead of logous, words, very often (and particularly in this chapter, ver. 10. twice) will be ſufficient reaſon to reject this rendering, and to read it literally, "If they have kept my word, they will alſo keep your word;" that is, obey and obſerve it, making their not obſerving the word of Chriſt an argument, that they will not obſerve the apoſtles neither; or, that by this experiment of their dealing with Chriſt, they may learn what kind of dealing or entertainment is to be looked for from the world for the diſciples of Chriſt, agreeable perfectly to what was before ſaid of the world's perſecuting them alſo. (H. and W.)

If I had not come.] Theſe words are not to be underſtood abſolutely, but comparatively; as if Chriſt had ſaid, Had not I come amongſt them in my incarnation, and preached perſonally to them the doctrine of ſalvation, and confirmed that doctrine by miraculous operations, they might have pleaded ignorance in ſome meaſure, and "they had not had ſin;" that is, they had not had the ſin of unbelief and Goſpel-contempt to anſwer for; or had not had ſo great a meaſure of any kind of ſin to anſwer for, as now they have; but would have had more to ſay in excuſe, or for a cover for their ſin, than now they can: "But now they have no cloke for their ſin;" that is, they are totally inexcuſeable, and have not the leaſt colour or pretence for their obſtinate unbelief. Learn hence, 1. That ſins of ignorance are, as it were, no ſins, compared with ſins committed againſt light and knowledge. 2. That ſins committed againſt Goſpel-Light, are of an heinous nature, aggravated guilt, as being committed againſt the very remedy. 3. That the Goſpel, where it is plainly preached, doth take away all pretence and excuſe from ſinners: "Now they have no cloke for their ſin." (B.) See the notes on chap. ix. 41. and Luke xii. 47.

Works which none other man did.] They can't be ſaid to hate me out of ignorance of my commiſſion; for I have ſpoken to them a doctrine plainly divine, and worthy of God, againſt which they have no exceptions which ariſe not from their own luſts and prejudices; and have confirmed it not only with the teſtimonies of Moſes and the prophets, chap. v. 46. but alſo with ſuch works as neither Moſes nor the prophets ever did: Had not this been done by me, they could not reaſonably have been charged with the great ſin of infidelity; but now, ſhutting their eyes againſt the light thus ſhining on them, and hardening their hearts againſt that ſtrong conviction of my miſſion which my mighty works afford, 'tis evident that they reject me not out of ignorance and weakneſs, but out of wilful hatred to me, and him that ſent me, and ſo their infidelity is inexcuſeable. (W.) See the notes on chap. vii. 31. and x. 37.

The comforter.] See the notes on chap. xiv. 16, 26. and xvi. 7. and Luke xxiv. 49.

Which proceedeth from the Father.] Obſerve here, 1. That Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are three diſtinct perſons in the Godhead. 2. That the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth from the Father and the Son: Here the Son is ſaid to ſend him; and as to the Father, he is ſaid to proceed from him. If the Holy Ghoſt doth not proceed from the Son, why is he called "the Spirit of the Son," Gal. iv. 6? Why is he ſaid here to be ſent by the Son? "The comforter, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father." And if the Spirit doth not proceed from the Son, what perſonal relation can we conceive betwixt the Son and the Spirit? 3. That it is the higheſt dignity and honour of the apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt, that the Spirit beareth no teſtimony unto Chriſt, but with and according to the teſtimony given by them; for here it is conjoined, "He ſhall teſtify of me; and ye ſhall alſo bear witneſs, who have been with me from the beginning." (B.) See the notes on chap. xiv. 16.

Ye alſo ſhall bear witneſs.] See the notes on chap. v. 34.

CHAP. XVI.

Chriſt, ſtill proceedeth in his ſermon, comforting his apoſtles againſt tribulation, with the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt; and intimating to them his reſurrection and aſcenſion. He aſſureth them, that their prayers in his name ſhall be acceptable to God. He foretelleth them of their forſaking him, and the troubles at hand: But concludes with words of peace and conſolation.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. THESE things have I ſpoken unto you, that ye ſhould not be offended. They ſhall put you out of the ſynagogues: Yea, the time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you will think that he doeth God ſervice. And theſe things will they do unto you, becauſe they have not known the Father, nor me. But theſe things have I told you, that when the time ſhall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And theſe things I ſaid not unto you at the beginning, becauſe I was with you. But now I go my way to him that ſent me, and none of you asketh me, Whither goeſt thou? But becauſe I have ſaid theſe things unto you, ſorrow hath filled your heart. Nevertheleſs, I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: For if I go not away, the comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will ſend him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgment: Of ſin, becauſe they believe not on me; Of righteouſneſs, becauſe I go to my Father, and ye ſee me no more; Of judgment, becauſe the prince of this world is judged. I have yet many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when he the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: For he ſhall not ſpeak of himſelf; but whatſoever he ſhall hear, that ſhall he ſpeak: And he will ſhew you things to come. He ſhall glorify me: For he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you. All things that the Father hath, are mine: Therefore ſaid I, that he ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.

These things have I ſpoken.] In the cloſe of the foregoing chapter, our Saviour had acquainted his diſciples with the hatred and hard uſage they were to meet with in the world: And here he intimates to them the reaſon why he inſiſted ſo much on that ſubject; namely, that they might "not be offended," diſcourag'd, or ſcandalized at them when they came, but prepared for them, and arm'd againſt them. Hence learn, 1. That all afflictions, but eſpecially perſecutions, are ſo ſearching and trying, that the beſt of Chriſtians have need to be guarded againſt them. 2. That it was the great deſign of Chriſt to arm his diſciples againſt the ſcandal of the croſs; leſt, ſtumbling at what they expected not, they ſhould fall from the profeſſion of Chriſtianity; (B.) Or deſiſt from their office in propagating it. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xi. 6. and Luke xvii. 1.

They ſhall put you out of the ſynagogues.] Here our Saviour inſtanceth in two particular ſorts of ſufferings, which his diſciples were to expect from the world; namely excommunication and martyrdom. "They ſhall put you out of the ſynagogues;" that is, exclude you from all their aſſemblies, both civil and religious: Yea, and moreover, "Whoſoever killeth you, will think that he doeth God ſervice;" (B.) That is, as St. Chryſoſtome ſaith, A mighty religious matter, and a thing that will pleaſe God: An expiatory offering, as the original may import, and a ſacrifice that will atone for ſins. (Fleetw.) In their ſynagogues they had not only aſſemblies for reading the ſcriptures every ſabbath day, Acts xiii. 27. and xv. 21. for public prayers and exhortations to the people, Acts xiii. 15. But offences committed againſt the law were there corrected, and ſometimes puniſh'd with ſcourging, Matt. x. 17. and xxiii. 34. And they who would not be reform'd by ſtripes, nor by the leſſer excommunication, which remov'd them (ſaith Buxtorf) four foot from others, were pronounced apoſynagogoi; that is, by a public recitation of their names, they were caſt out of communion of the church; which is meant by "caſting out their names as evil," Luke vi. 22. (W.) See the notes on chap. ix. 22.

Will think, that he doeth God ſervice.] The phraſe here is latreian proſpherein, to offer ſacrifice; and is taken from Exod. xxxii. 29. which, according to the paraphraſe of onkelos, is to offer an oblation. Hence the Zealots among the Jews, who kill'd thoſe they eſteemed tranſgreſſors with their own hands, not expecting the judgment of the Sanhedrim, were by them deem'd religious men, fill'd with zeal in the cauſe of God; they having their name, ſaith Joſephus, from thoſe that were zealous for what was good: And therefore, after infinite ſlaughters of their brethren, they pronounc'd themſelves men without offence: And, ſuitably to this prediction, Juſtin Martyr informs us, that the Jews did diſgrace and execrate the Chriſtians in their ſynagogues, killing them with their own hands wherever they could. (W.)

Becauſe they have not known.] Here Chriſt diſcovers to his apoſtles the cauſe and ground of the world's hatred againſt them; namely, their ignorance of the Father and of himſelf. All perſecutions ſpring from ignorance, as well as from malice: And men, who continue ignorant of God and Chriſt, are in danger of turning perſecutors, if they have a temptation to it. (B.) The miſtakes of men's minds in this caſe ariſe chiefly from a two-fold original, 1. From an extreme ignorance of the true nature of religion. 2. From the fond prejudices of men, and their blind zeal to a religious party. (Tilly.) To know, or not to know, the Father and Chriſt, is taken in a great many different ſenſes in the holy ſcriptures; too many, and of too little uſe, here to recount. Thoſe only that are pertinent to the deſign in hand, and to our Saviour's words, muſt be ſuch ſenſes and acceptations, as would influence the Jews to the cruelties and perſecutions foretold in this place. The Jews could not be ſaid, not to know God, in ſuch a ſenſe as to deny his Being: For never people knew him better. Nor could it be ſaid, with any colour of truth, in our Saviour's time, that the Jews knew not God, in the ſenſe it is often uſed in ſcripture, to reproach the world with forſaking the only true God, and ſerving other Gods: For the Jews were never freer from idolatry, than in our Saviour's days, and for many years before; and that good humour has continued ſince for upwards of ſeventeen hundred years. Not to know God therefore, in this place, muſt in all reaſon ſignify, not ſo to know him, as to conceive right notions of him, or form a judgment ſuitable to the excellent extenſive goodneſs of the divine nature. Not to know the Father, is not to attend to, or comprehend ſufficiently the diſpenſation and oeconomy of God the Father, in ſaving them and all mankind, by ſending his Son into the world: And not to know the Son, is not to receive and believe on him that was thus ſent for their deliverance. (Fleetw.)

That when the time ſhall come, ye may remember.] And ſo be aſſured of my divine preſcience and veracity; and therefore may not doubt of that aſſiſtance and conſolation which I have promiſed you under theſe troubles. (W.) It is an invincible proof of the truth of the Chriſtian religion, that Chriſt foretold exactly whatever was to happen both to himſelf and to his church: And that his church, being oppoſed by all the powers of the world, ſhould yet triumph over them all, by the ſole ſtrength of the word and the Spirit of God. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 19.

I ſaid not.] Here it may be ask'd, Why Chriſt ſaith, "Theſe things, I ſaid not unto you at the beginning, becauſe I was with you;" when, in the firſt miſſion of the apoſtles, to preach in the cities of Judæa, he uſeth almoſt the ſame words. Matt. x. 17, 18. and the like words, Matt. xxiv. 9. and Luke vi. 22. Woltzogenius anſwers, That Chriſt, in theſe places, had in the general informed them of the great perſecutions they were to ſuffer, but had not ſo clearly told them, they were to ſuffer them on the account of religion. But this ſeems a miſtake; for he had told them, that they were to ſuffer theſe things in the Jewiſh ſynagogues, for his name's ſake, and for righteouſneſs ſake; Matt. v. 10. x. 18. and xxiv. 9. I anſwer therefore, That what was ſpoken, Matt. xxiv. 9. was ſaid about this time; and ſo Chriſt might well ſay, "He ſaid it not to them from the beginning:" And that what Chriſt ſaid, Matt. x. and Luke vi. do plainly reſpect the times which were to come upon them, after our Lord's departure from them. For the words of Chriſt in St. Matthew, from ver. 16. to 36. reſpect thoſe times, when they were to give teſtimony to him before the Gentiles, ver. 18. and were to be filled with the Holy Spirit, ver. 20. and ſo do the words of St. Luke alſo; as appears from the particle hotan, "when theſe things ſhall happen:" What therefore Chriſt there foretells as future, he ſpeaks of here as inſtant, and now ready to befall them. (W.)

None of you asketh me, Whither goeſt thou?] This Peter had asked, chap. xiii. 36. but received no direct anſwer. They did not therefore ſo ask as to know, chap. xiv. 3. much leſs to conſider duly, whither he was going; viz. to his and their Father's houſe, chap. xx. 17. or why he went, viz. "to prepare a manſion for them," chap. xiv. 2. Or none of them asked, now his departure was at hand; and ſo gave greater reaſon for this enquiry, whither he was going. (Idem.)

It is expedient for you, that I go away.] Since, by the advent of the Holy Spirit, ye will find greater comfort than from my preſence:

ſence: And this Spirit was not to come, till Chriſt was glorified, and had aſcended into heaven, chap. vii. 39. (Idem.) Chriſt's bodily preſence was comfortable; but the Spirit is more intimately a Comforter, than Chriſt in his fleſhly preſence: Becauſe the Spirit can comfort all believers at once, in all places; but Chriſt's bodily preſence did comfort but few, and thoſe in one place only at once. Chriſt did converſe with his diſciples outwardly; but the Spirit poſſeſſed himſelf of their hearts inwardly. Now for the Spirit to dwell in us, is more advantageous, than to have Chriſt dwell in the fleſh amongſt us. The benefit of Chriſt's converſation was great, but the advantage of the Spirit's renovation and holy inſpiration is much greater: The one encourages and incites us to be holy; but the other quickens and enables us to be holy. Therefore, well might Chriſt ſay, "It is expedient," or highly neceſſary and advantageous, "for you that I go away." He ſubjoins a reaſon, "If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will ſend him unto you." Whence we learn, That Chriſt's aſcenſion was indiſpenſibly neceſſary in order to the Spirit's miſſion: The Spirit could not have deſcended, if Chriſt had not firſt aſcended: The Spirit could not come, but by the gift and miſſion of the Mediator. Now, the ſending of the Spirit being a part of Chriſt's royalty as Mediator, it was not convenient that the Spirit ſhould be ſent, till Chriſt was crowned, and ſat down on his throne in his kingdom; for then the Spirit was to make application to us of the redemption purchaſed for us. (B.)

The Comforter.] What is meant by the word Paraclete, here attributed to the Holy Ghoſt, hath been already mentioned, and will more fully be diſcernible by this place. For of the Paraclete, taken in the notion of an advocate, or actor, this is the office, to convince the accuſer; or as it is, Titus i. 9. "to juſtify the cauſe againſt all gainſayers;" to convince them, or to convince others, that they have complained or acted unjuſtly. So that all that here follows, muſt in any reaſon ſo be interpreted, as ſhall agree with the cuſtoms of pleading cauſes among the Jews. Now there were three ſorts of cauſes or actions among the Jews, 1. Publick judgments, concerning criminal matters; and thoſe conſiſted in the condemnation and puniſhing of offenders againſt God, falſe prophets, &c. 2. In the defending of the juſt or upright, againſt all oppreſſion, or invaſion, or falſe teſtimony; and that is called concerning juſtice, or equity, or righteouſneſs. 3. In pleading againſt any for treſpaſs againſt his neighbour, as in robbery, &c. and urging the law of retaliation, to ſuffer as he hath done; and this is called concerning judgment. In every one of theſe was the Holy Ghoſt at his coming to be the advocate for Chriſt againſt the world, who had rejected and crucified him. One action he ſhould put in againſt the world of the firſt kind, concerning that queſtion whether Chriſt were guilty of being a falſe prophet, or they of not believing a true prophet, the Meſſias of the world, and ſhould demonſtrate or prove them guilty of a great crime, viz. of not believing the Meſſias; and that ſhould be managed thus: There are rules ſet down, Deut. xviii. 22. to diſcern and diſtinguiſh a falſe prophet from a true, and particularly to diſcern the Chriſt or Meſſias, ver. 18 viz. If undertaking to be the Meſſias, and to prove that by foretelling things, which were not in the power of the devil to work or to foretell, "all the things which he foretold came to paſs." Now one of the things foretold by Chriſt was, that the Spirit or Paraclete ſhould come; which being fulfilled by his coming, and his coming from God, and not from the devil, but deſtructive to his kingdom, this would be a convincing argument, that he was a true prophet, and ſo the Meſſias, which he affirmed himſelf to be; and ſo that they were guilty of a great ſin in not believing on him, of a greater in crucifying him, and therefore that they ought to expect that puniſhment of exciſion, Deut. xviii. 19. which, within a while after, did accordingly befall that nation. A ſecond action which the Holy Ghoſt did put in for Chriſt againſt the world, was to vindicate his innocence, tho' he had ſuffered among them as a malefactor: And his way of managing that was, by giving them aſſurance, and convincing them, that he who was thus condemned and crucified by them, was by God taken up into heaven, as a clear teſtimony of his innocence, to partake of his own glory there. The third action was that of judgment, or of puniſhing injurious perſons by way of retaliation, againſt Satan, the cauſe and author of the death of Chriſt; who put it into Judas's heart, and the chief prieſts and Phariſees, the former to deliver up, the latter to put him to death: And by the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, and preaching of the word through the world, and ſo the ſpreading of Chriſtianity among the Gentiles, which was an effect of this coming, and office of the Holy Ghoſt, this work of retaliation was wrought moſt diſcernibly on Satan, or "the prince of this world." He put Chriſt to death, and he himſelf is ſlain, as it were, his kingdom deſtroy'd, his idols, oracles, abominable ſins, whereby he reigned every where among the Gentiles in the heathen world, were remarkably deſtroy'd by this coming of the Holy Ghoſt: and ſo the world, and the prince thereof judged, ſentenced, and condemned judicio talionis, to ſuffer from Chriſt, as he had dealt with him, and that was the "convincing the world concerning judgment" This ſeems to be the meaning of this very difficult place; to the underſtanding of which I acknowledge to have received light from the learned Hugo Grotius, in his Annotations on the Goſpels, and from Val. Schindler in his Pentaglott. p. 1521. C. (H.) Faith diſcovers to us three different ſtates of man; 1. Under ſin; in which there is nothing but infidelity towards God, becauſe there is no faith in Jeſus Chriſt. 2. Under grace; in which ſtate ſin is overcome, and righteouſneſs acquired by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, riſen from the dead, and by the hope of inviſible treaſures. 3. In the peace and glory of heaven, where Chriſt will reign with his members; the devil, with all the reprobate, being baniſhed into hell by the laſt judgment. Thus faith ſhews us three principal and fundamental truths, taught here by Jeſus Chriſt, and explained by St. Paul, Rom. iii. 9, 22. i. 17, 18. v. and vii. which comprehend the whole Chriſtian Theology; which is deſigned, not for one people alone, like that of the law, but for the whole earth. The firſt is the general corruption of nature in Adam, and in conſequence of that, the reign of ſin till the coming of Jeſus Chriſt. The ſecond is the reparation of our nature in the new Adam, and the reign of Chriſtian righteouſneſs by his grace. The third is the condemnation of ſinners, and the total deſtruction of the kingdom of ſin, and of all the power of the devil, by the laſt judgment. None but the Holy Ghoſt can give us a certain knowledge and an indubitable proof of the wound of original ſin, and of the diſorder it has cauſed in the world. The myſteries of the eſtabliſhment of the true righteouſneſs by Jeſus Chriſt, are ſtill more impenetrable without faith. And the judgments of God, in the temporal and eternal puniſhment of ſin are, to human underſtanding, a profound and unfathomable abyſs. (Q.)

The prince of this world.] See the references on chap. xii. 31.

I have yet many things to ſay.] Viz. Concerning the aboliſhment of the ſabbath and the ceremonial law, juſtification by faith without the works of the law, the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles; which through the prejudices ye now lie under, ye cannot yet bear. (W.)

He will guide you into all truth.] That is, into all truth that can be neceſſary to your apoſtolical office, and to direct the Chriſtian church to the end of the world in all ſaving truth: For, as Irenœus notes, The doctrine which they taught, they after delivered in the ſcriptures to be the pillar and foundation of our faith. And, as St. Auſtin adds, Chriſt having committed to them the writing of thoſe things which he would have us read, they choſe out thoſe things to write, which they judged ſufficient to be written for the ſalvation of the faithful. 'Tis therefore certain, that the apoſtles, in compiling the canon of ſcripture, were ſo aſſiſted by the Holy Spirit, as to write all truths neceſſary for the ſalvation of believers; and conſequently, that all things neceſſary to be believed or done by Chriſtians, are fully and perſpicuouſly contained in the holy ſcriptures. (W.) This is a principal text, which the papiſts bring, for their doctrine of infallibility; but groundleſly. For, this promiſe was made to all the apoſtles, as well as to Peter: Nay, not only to the apoſtles, but to all their ſucceſſors; yea, and to all believers alſo. (B.) Now, in order to diſcern and diſtinguiſh this Spirit of truth, and when it is He that ſpeaketh in any one, the beſt way ſeems to be, to ſearch out the nature and office of this Spirit, from the ſeveral expreſſions thereof in this our Lord's laſt moſt holy and comfortable diſcourſe, here briefly laid together. Thoſe doctrines therefore have a good ſign of the Spirit of truth, which, 1. Are contrary to worldly, carnal, ſenſual reſpects, and not conceivable by the natural or carnal man; chap. xiv. 17. 2. Thoſe which ſtick by us, when worldly comforts leave us, chap. xiv. 18. 3. Thoſe which are according to Chriſt's word and his example, accompanied with meekneſs and obedience, chap. xiv. 26. 4. Thoſe which teach us charity, and love to one another, chap xv. 12. 5. Thoſe which inform us rightly in the prime articles of the faith, chap. xv. 26. 6. Thoſe which witneſs Chriſt an univerſal Saviour, as Adam was the univerſal ſinner, chap. xv. 26, 27. 7. Thoſe which reprove the ſins and infidelities of the world, and teach us how to be acquitted from them, chap. xvi. 8, &c. 8. Thoſe which have a kind of conduct and ſincere affection with them to all truths whatſoever, under whatever term or name, tho' ever ſo odious, or contraty to worldly intereſt and honour. 9. Thoſe which ſeek not to raiſe a man's ownſelf, to get him a name, or ſet up a faction; but are conſonant to the ancient fathers, and primitive antiquity, with humble ſubmiſſion to it. 10. Thoſe which lift up all our thoughts to heaven, chap. xvi. 13. And, 11. Thoſe which by all means poſſible can give God and Chriſt, and the Holy Spirit the glory; and deny nothing to them that is theirs, under a fooliſh pretence only to abate and vilify man beyond the truth, chap. xvi. 14. Theſe doctrines are truth: Such of them, at leaſt, as agree with theſe rules, are from the Spirit of truth, and manifeſtations that the Spirit of truth is come to that ſoul that embraces them. (Frank.)

Shew it unto you.] See the notes on chap. xiv. 26.

He ſhall glorify me.] Here Chriſt ſhews the advantage which would redound to himſelf by the coming of the Comforter: He declares, that the Spirit ſhall glorify him by his teſtimony, gifts, and miracles, and ſhall in all things accord with him, and thereby evidence that he hath his miſſion from him: "He ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you." And "All things that the Father hath are mine." Hence learn, That altho' the union in eſſence, amongſt the perſons in the Trinity, is the ſame, yet the order of their ſubſiſtence and operation is diſtinct: The Son, being from the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Son. "For all things that the Father hath are mine: And the Spirit ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you." (B.) Obſerve farther, That theſe words contain two arguments for the divinity of Chriſt. For, 1. The things the Holy Spirit was to receive from Chriſt, who is emphatically ſtiled the truth, are all truth by the apoſtles to be delivered to the church, and all future contingencies reſpecting the church to the end of the world: For, ſaith Schlictingius here, To this we are to refer the revelations of St. John, in which are contained prophecies of the ſtate of the church from that time to the end of the world. Now, the knowledge of theſe things muſt imply a divine preſcience. "We ſpeak (ſaith the apoſtle) the wiſdom of God, which God hath revealed to us by his Spirit," 1 Cor. ii. 7, 10. Chriſt therefore, from whom the Spirit received theſe things, muſt be God. Laſtly, God ſaith to the idols of the Gentiles, "Shew the things that are to come, that we may know, that ye are Gods," Iſa. xli. 23. He therefore, who ſheweth theſe things to the Spirit, muſt be God. 2 By ſaying, "All things which the Father hath are mine;" he challenges to himſelf the incommunicable attributes, and conſequently that eſſence which is inſeparable from them. To this Woltzogenius anſwers, That the phraſe, All things, muſt be reſtrained to the ſubject of Chriſt's diſcourſe, viz. to all things which the Spirit of truth was to reveal to them, and which reſpected their office, and the good of the church; all which things the Father had communicated to him. But, 1. Chriſt ſaith not here, I am conſcious to the ſecrets of my Father; but, "All things which the Father hath are mine". 2. Chriſt here gives the reaſon, why he had ſaid, "he ſhall receive of mine;" viz. "becauſe all that the Father hath is mine.' Take away any thing from the generality of this expreſſion, and you render our Lord's inference infirm, ſince that which you take away, the Holy Spirit might not receive from him. 3. All thoſe things which he confeſſes are here to be underſtood, are ſufficient to prove the divinity of Chriſt, as the citation from him ſhews. (W. and B.) See the notes on Matt. xi. 27.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me: And again, a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me, becauſe I go to the Father. Then ſaid ſome of his diſciples among themſelves, What is this that he ſaith unto us, A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me: And again, a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me: and, Becauſe I go to the Father? They ſaid therefore, What is this that he ſaith, A little while? We cannot tell what he ſaith. Now Jeſus knew that they were deſirous to aſk him, and ſaid unto them, Do ye enquire among yourſelves of that I ſaid, A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me: And again, a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me? Verily, verily I ſay unto you, that ye ſhall weep and lament, but the world ſhall rejoice: And ye ſhall be ſorrowful, but your ſorrow ſhall be turned into joy. A woman when ſhe is in travail, hath ſorrow, becauſe her hour is come: But as ſoon as ſhe is delivered of the child, ſhe remembereth no more the anguiſh, for joy that a man is born into the world. And ye now therefore have ſorrow: But I will ſee you again, and your heart ſhall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you. And in that day ye ſhall aſk me nothing: Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Whatſoever ye ſhall aſk the Father in my name, he will give it you. Hitherto have ye aſked nothing in my name: Aſk, and ye ſhall receive, that your joy may be full.

A little while.] In theſe words our Holy Lord proceeds to comfort his diſciples with a promiſe, that however he was now to be removed from them, yet they ſhould ſhortly ſee him again; namely, after his reſurrection; it being impoſſible that he ſhould be held by death, but muſt ariſe and go to his Father. His diſciples, not underſtanding what he meant, but labouring under the prejudices of their national errors, concerning the temporal kingdom of the Meſſias, knew not what to make of theſe words, "A little while and ye ſhall not ſee me:" Our Saviour therefore explains himſelf to his diſciples, telling them that they ſhould have a time of ſad ſorrow and grief of heart, during the time of his ſuffering and abſence from them; but their ſadneſs ſhall ſoon be turned into joy, when they ſhall ſee him alive again after his reſurrection. This he illuſtrates by the ſimilitude of a travailing woman; who ſoon forgets her ſorrow after ſhe hath brought forth a child. Thus will their hearts revive upon the ſight of him riſen from the grave; and no man ſhall be able to take their joy away from them, becauſe he ſhall die no more, but go to heaven, and there live for ever, to make interceſſion for them. Learn hence, 1. From the apoſtles not underſtanding Chriſt's words concerning his departure, tho' ſo often inculcated upon them; How unreaſonable it is to arrogate to man's underſtanding a power to comprehend ſpiritual myſteries, yea, to underſtand the plaineſt truths, till Chriſt enlightens the underſtanding: Let the doctrine be delivered never ſo plainly, and repeated never ſo frequently, yet will men continue ignorant, without divine illumination. How often had this plain doctrine of Chriſt's departure to the Father, been preached to the diſciples by Chriſt's own mouth? Yet ſtill they ſay, "What is this he ſaith? We cannot tell what he ſaith." 2. From the different effects which Chriſt's abſence ſhould have upon the world, and upon his diſciples; Note, 1. That it is the wretched diſpoſition of the world to rejoice in the abſence and want of Chriſt out of the world: When I am gone, "the world will rejoice." 2. That nothing is the cauſe of ſo much ſorrow and ſadneſs to ſincere diſciples, as Chriſt's abſence and removal from them: Such is their eſtimation of the worth of him, ſo great is their apprehenſion of the want of him, that there is no loſs comparable to his abſence and removal from them; "Ye ſhall weep and lament" at my departure, though the world will rejoice. Learn, 3. That the believers ſorrow for Chriſt's abſence, though it be very great, yet it ſhall not be perpetual: "Ye have now ſorrow; But I will ſee you again, and your heart ſhall rejoice, and your joy ſhall no man take from you." The joy of the Saints may be interrupted; it ſhall never be totally extinguiſhed: It is a permanent joy, of which they ſhall never be totally deprived, till they enter into the ocean of eternal joy: "Your joy no man taketh from you." (B.) See the notes on chap. vii. 33. xiii. 33. and xiv. 19.

Ye ſhall weep.] See the notes on Luke xxiii. 27.

Your heart ſhall rejoice.] See the notes on chap. xiv. 1. and Luke xxiv. 41.

In that day.] This may poſſibly be miſtaken, by aſſigning too reſtrained a ſenſe to it. For if it be applied to that part only of the precedent verſe, "But I will ſee you again," which notes the ſpace immediately following his reſurrection, and antecedent to his aſcenſion, it will not then be proper to affirm of that ſpace, that "they ſhould aſk him nothing:" For it is evident, that at that time of ſeeing him, they aſked him many things, Acts i. 6. But as this reſurrection of Chriſt was attended with his aſcenſion to heaven, and ſending the Paraclete, ſo it is moſt exactly true, which here follows, "In that day ye ſhall aſk me nothing; that is, ſhall have no need of aſking more queſtions, The Paraclete "ſhall teach you all things." That this is the meaning of eroteſete here, which is render'd aſking, and not that other relation of aſking, for praying, in the following words, may appear, 1. By ver. 19. where they, being dubious and uncertain what he meant by, "yet a little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me," &c. it is ſaid, "Jeſus knew that they would aſk him;" that is, aſk him the meaning of that ſpeech; and to that he here refers in the ſame words, "In that day," when that courſe ſhall be taken for the inſtructing you ſo perfectly, "ye ſhall aſk me nothing." 2. By the changing of the word, in the other part of this verſe; where it is hoſa an aiteſete, "whatſoever ye ſhall aſk (or beg of) the Father," &c. and not, as it is here, eroteſete. In the ſame ſenſe muſt the phraſe "in that day" be taken again, ver. 26. that which is there ſaid, belonging not peculiarly to that time betwixt his reſurrection and aſcenſion, but to the ſtate of them, and all Chriſtians after Chriſt's departure from them, to the right hand of his Father. (H. and W.) Thus the ſeeming contradiction in this verſe is eaſily reſolv'd. For there is a twofold aſking; one by way of queſtion, the other by way of petition. The former is aſking that we may know, or be informed in what we doubt; the latter is aſking that we may receive, and be ſupplied with what we want. Now, when Chriſt ſaith, "In that day ye ſhall aſk me nothing;" it is as much as if he had ſaid, At preſent ye underſtand but little of the myſteries of religion, and therefore ye put queſtions about many things; but in that day, when the Comforter comes, ye ſhall be ſo clearly enlightned by him, that ye ſhall not need to aſk me any more queſtions. But when Chriſt ſaith, "Whatever ye aſk the Father in my name, he will give it," the meaning is, in that day, when I have left the world, and aſcended to my Father, ye ſhall not need to addreſs your prayers to me, but to my Father in my name. (B.) St. Auſtin and Maldonate interpret "that day" of the day of judgment. But 'tis plain, That the apoſtles could then have nothing farther to aſk for the churches benefit. (W.)

Aſk the Father in my name.] To aſk, or pray in the name of Chriſt, is, 1. To look up to Chriſt, as having purchaſed for us this privilege, that we may pray; for it is by the blood of Chriſt that we draw near to God, and that a throne of grace is open to us. 2 To pray in the name of Chriſt, is to pray in the ſtrength of Chriſt, by the aſſiſtance of his grace, and the help of his Holy Spirit. 3. To pray in the name of Chriſt, is to pray by faith in the virtue of Chriſt's mediation and interceſſion; believing that what we aſk on earth, he intercedes for and obtains in heaven. To pray thus is no eaſy matter; and unleſs we do pray thus, we do not pray at all. (B.) Tho' this charter is enlarged to "whatſoever we ſhall aſk;" yet it is limitted too, to our aſking in Chriſt's name. A reſtraint not of bondage, but of favour; for there muſt be a Mediator between a juſt God and guilty man, and none ſuch but Chriſt only, chap. xiv. 6. Acts iv. 12. Eph. ii. 18. Other mediators are more his affronts, than our advantage: For, if one ſuffice, many are vain. To make him inſufficient, is black blaſphemy: To put others into office with him, blaſphemous injury; to invade his prerogative, violate his royal charter, and to doubt, if not to break his ſeal; to queſtion his word, nay, to diſpute his oath, if not to disbelieve it. (Brough) Origen ſuppoſes, that Chriſt here excludes himſelf, requiring them to pray only to God the Father: But that conceit cannot ſtand; being contrary to the practice of St. Paul, and the whole Chriſtian church. See the notes on Rom. x. 13. (W.) See alſo the notes on chap. xiv. 13. Matt. vii. 7. and xviii. 19. and ver. 29. here below.

Hitherto have ye aſked nothing in my name.] That is, explicitly and expreſly in my name; or by me as Mediator betwixt God and man, and with reſpect to my merits. Do this after my death, reſurrection, and interceſſion at the right hand of God, and ye ſhall receive ſuch anſwers as will fill you with joy; for the Saints of God under the Old Teſtament, and the apoſtles themſelves under the New, had hitherto put up all their petitions in the name of the Meſſiah, tho' not in the name of Jeſus: But now he exhorts them to eye his mediatory office in all their addreſſes to God; and promiſes them, whatſoever he had purchaſed of the Father by his ſufferings and ſatisfaction, they ſhould obtain it for the ſake of his prevailing interceſſion. Learn hence, That it is a mighty encouragement to prayer, that now under the Goſpel, the perſon of the Mediator is exhibited in our fleſh, has ſatisfied divine juſtice in our nature, and in that nature intercedes as a Mediator, for whatever he purchaſed as our ſurety. Hence is the encouragement; "Whatever ye aſk the Father in my name, he will give it you." (W. and B.)

That your joy may be full.] See the notes on chap. xv. 11.

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you in proverbs: The time cometh, when I ſhall no more ſpeak unto you in proverbs, but I ſhall ſhew you plainly of the Father. At that day ye ſhall aſk in my name: And I ſay not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you: For the Father himſelf loveth you, becauſe ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God. I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father. His diſciples ſaid unto him, Lo, now ſpeakeſt thou plainly, and ſpeakeſt no proverb. Now are we ſure that thou knoweſt all things, and needeſt not that any man ſhould aſk thee: By this we believe that thou cameſt forth from God. Jeſus anſwered them, Do ye now believe? Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye ſhall be ſcattered, every man to his own, and ſhall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, becauſe the Father is with me. Theſe things I have ſpoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye ſhall have tribulation: But be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.

Spoken unto you in proverbs.] Paroimia, a parable or proverb, ſaith St. Baſil, is a profitable ſpeech, uttered with ſome obſcurity; and ſo it is here; as is apparent from the anſwer of the apoſtles, ver. 29 "Lo, now ſpeakeſt thou plainly, and ſpeakeſt no proverb;" and from the following words, in ver. 25. "The time cometh, when I ſhall no more ſpeak unto you in proverbs, but I ſhall ſhew you plainly (the will) of the Father." (W.)

At that day ye ſhall aſk.] See the notes on ver. 23.

I ſay not unto you, that I will pray.] Here Chriſt's meaning is not, that he will lay aſide his office as interceſſor for believers; but that they had not only his interceſſion, but his Father's love, upon which to ground their hope of audience. Learn hence, 1. That the Chriſtian's prayers, put up in Chriſt's name, cannot fail of audience and acceptance. 2. That in our prayers, we ought ſo to eye and look up to Chriſt's interceſſion, as not to overlook or forget the Father's love: "I ſay not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you, (tho' I ſhall aſſuredly do it) for the Father himſelf loveth you, becauſe ye have loved me." (Idem and B.) See the notes on chap. viii. 42. and xiii. 3.

I came forth from the Father.] Here obſerve, 1. A proof of our Saviour's Godhead; He "came forth from the Father into the world." He came out from the Father in his incarnation, and came into the world to accompliſh the work of our redemption. Learn hence, That Jeſus Chriſt is true God, equal with the Father; for he was not only ſent by him, but "came forth from" him. 2. That it pleaſed Chriſt, out of love to his people, to leave the Father, and come into the world: Not by being ſeparated from the Deity, but by obſcuring the Deity with the veil of our fleſh, in order to the finiſhing the great and glorious work of redemption for us. 3. That Chriſt, having finiſhed his ſuffering work here on earth, aſcended into heaven, and ſent down the Holy Spirit, to apply unto his church the redemption purchaſed by his blood. And, 4. That the apoſtles argue from the knowledge of Chriſt's omniſciency, to the certainty of his divinity; "Now are we ſure that thou knoweſt all things; by this we believe that thou cameſt forth from God." The knowledge and experience of Chriſt's omniſciency may, and ought fully to confirm us in the belief of his Deity: For that attribute of the Deity cannot be communicated to any perſon without the communication of the divine nature. (B.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 3.

Again, I leave the world.] Upon this text it is argued thus, againſt Chriſt's bodily preſence in the ſacrament of the Euchariſt; If Chriſt be preſent in the ſacrament in his natural body, then his bodily preſence muſt continue ſo long as the uſe of the ſacrament continueth, to the world's end: But Chriſt, touching his bodily preſence, doth not ſo continue: Therefore Chriſt is not preſent in the ſacrament in his natural body. Chriſt himſelf hath here denied his bodily preſence or continuance; as well as in Matt. xxvi. 11. Therefore he ſhall not ſo continue. (Goade.)

Lo, now ſpeakeſt thou plainly.] Now, that they had heard our Saviour explain himſelf, concerning praying in his name, which he had formerly ſpoken of more darkly and conciſely, and ſeen him adminiſter the holy ſacrament, they thought themſelves fully informed in this point; and that therefore, to pray in Chriſt's name, is to offer up prayers in the ſacrifice of the Euchariſt; as the learned Mr. Mede has long ago obſerved. (Johnſon.)

Behold, the hour cometh.] In the foregoing verſe the apoſtles made a full profeſſion of their faith in Chriſt's divinity and omniſciency. In this he intimates to them, that their faith ſhould ſoon be put upon a great trial; when they ſhould all forſake him, and take care of themſelves: "Ye ſhall be ſcattered, and leave me alone." Learn hence, 1. That Chriſt was forſaken by his own diſciples, in the day of his greateſt diſtreſs and danger. 2. That when they left Chriſt, they were "ſcattered every man to his own." 3. That when all forſook Chriſt and left him, he was far from being ſimply alone, becauſe God was with him; "Ye ſhall leave me alone: And yet I am not alone, becauſe the Father is with me." God was with Chriſt, and will be with Chriſtians in a ſuffering hour, in his eſſential preſence, in his gracious and ſupporting preſence. (B.) See the notes on chap. viii. 29. and xiv. 10. Matt. xxvi. 31. and Mark xiv 27.

Theſe things have I ſpoken.] Theſe words are the concluſion of our Lord's farewel-ſermon; in which he declares to them, 1. The inevitable neceſſity of the world's trouble: "In the world ye ſhall have tribulation." That is, while ye have to do with the men of the world, or the things of the world; nay, while ye have a being in the world, ye muſt look for trouble, both from within, and from without, from friends and foes, in body, ſoul, name, eſtate. Learn hence, That the diſciples of Chriſt in this world may, yea muſt, expect and look for trouble. 2. The remedy provided by Chriſt againſt this malady: "In me ye ſhall have peace;" that is, ſerenity of mind, a quiet and calm temper of ſpirit within, when the world, like a tempeſtuous air, is full of ſtorms without. Learn hence, That Chriſt has taken effectual care, that, amidſt all our troubles, in him we "may have peace:" Chriſt's blood has purchas'd peace for us; his word has promis'd it to us; and his Spirit ſeals it up to us. 3. The cordial provided by Chriſt, for the ſupport of his diſciples Spirits, under the burden of their troubles: "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world:" I have taken the ſting out of every croſs, and the venom out of every arrow. Learn hence, That it is a great comfort to a Chriſtian, under all the troubles of the world to conſider, that Chriſt has "overcome the world:" That is, all the things in the world which may hinder his people's comfort and conſolation here, and their eternal happineſs hereafter; namely, the prince of the world, the rulers of the world, the wicked men of the world, the troubles of the world, the temptations of the world, the corruptions that are in the world through luſt. Now, Chriſt "having overcome the world," all perſons and things in it are at his diſpoſal, and can do nothing but by his permiſſion: And, as he has overcome the world himſelf, ſo he will enable us, through faith in him, to overcome it alſo; for "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith," 1 John v. 4. (B.) The peace which he leaves to his ſervants does not conſiſt in having nothing to ſuffer from the world, but in deſpiſing every thing it can make us ſuffer, through a full truſt and confidence in him. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xiv. 27. and Luke i. 79.

Be of good cheer.] Here is to be underſtood, 1. That the being of good cheer under tribulation, does by no means infer that firmneſs of mind (as ſome philoſophers of old miſcalled it) which preſerves the man from being at all affected with calamities, or moved from his uſual eaſineſs of temper. How far human nature might be beholden to them who beſtow'd this fanciful perfection upon it, is not worth ſtaying to examine: Let it ſuffice to obſerve, that religion is not at all obliged by it. For the Goſpel no where goes about to delude us with romantic notions: It tells no man upon a croſs, or in a fire, that he feels no pain; or that ſuch pain is nothing to him, becauſe it cannot reach his ſoul: And yet, it commands every man to continue ſtedfaſt in his duty, notwithſtanding the moſt exquiſite tortures to deter him from it: It is entirely ſuited to the condition and common ſenſe of mankind; and would not require more conſtancy in ſuffering, if it did not furniſh more ſubſtantial comforts than any other ſyſtem in the world. 2. This command belongs to ſuch tribulation only, as the hand of God brings upon us. The ſufferings of theſe diſciples, in propagating the faith, ſeem to have been principally in our Lord's view at this time; and for theſe he had long ſince declar'd them bleſſed, Matt. v. 10, 11, 12. But he had alſo directed them, to join the wiſdom of the ſerpent with the harmleſneſs of the dove, Matt. x. 16. and made prudence, as well as perſeverence in goodneſs, a truly Chriſtian duty. When therefore men court danger, and draw upon them unneceſſary ſufferings, it is not the beſt cauſe, nor the beſt meaning, in the world, that will bear ſuch people out, or entitle them to the comforts of perſecuted Chriſtians. But, 3. That, tho' by being of good cheer, when we have tribulation, be not meant, either that we ſhould be inſenſible, or fond of it; yet thus much certainly is meant by it, That neither the ſharpneſs of any affliction we feel, nor the terror of any we fear, ſhould ſo far vanquiſh our reaſon and religion, as to drive us upon unlawful methods for declining the one, or delivering ourſelves from the other. We are to ſatisfy ourſelves in the juſtice, the wiſdom, the goodneſs of him who orders all our events to us: To entertain them all with meekneſs and much patience: To bring our will into ſubjection to the divine will: To rejoice in the teſtimony of a good conſcience; and preſerve this at any rate, tho' with the hazard, nay, the certain loſs, of all our worldly advantages: And to ſet the ſupports and the rewards of perſecuted truth, or afflicted piety, in oppoſition to all the diſcouragements and preſſures from abroad, and all the frailties of feeble and too yielding fleſh and blood at home. This is the good cheer our Lord requires, and hath himſelf contributed to, by overcoming the world. (Stanh.)

I have overcome the world.] By the world here, we are to underſtand the evil of the world, the wickedneſs, the malice, the temptations, the troubles; all in it that we have reaſon to fear and flee from, for the ſake of our ſafety, or our happineſs, in this and the next life. Now, the wickedneſs of the world Chriſt hath overcome, by expiating the ſins of mankind in the ſacrifice of himſelf upon the croſs: By the powerful aſſiſtances of his grace, enabling all the faithful to conquer the paſſions of corrupt nature: By thus looſing the bands, and releaſing the captives of hell; and breaking that old ſerpent's head, whoſe attempts againſt him were ſo very vain, as only to "bruiſe his heel," Gen. iii. 15. The malice of the world he overcame, by diſappointing the deſigns of the devil and his wicked inſtruments againſt himſelf and his Goſpel: Making his own ſufferings fatal to the contrivers, and ſaving to all penitent believers: And eſpecially, by the irreſiſtible evidence of truth, ſubduing the ſpight and the cruelty, the calumny and cunning, of the enemies of every ſort, who conſpired to ſuppreſs and extirpate his religion and the profeſſors of it. The temptations of the world he overcame, by all that ſevere, but ſtill ſocial virtue, and heavenly piety, which ſhone ſo bright in all his converſation. And the troubles of it, by ſubmitting to hunger and thirſt, to poverty and grief, to live like the meaneſt, and to be treated like the worſt of men. Nay, even death itſelf, our laſt and grimmeſt enemy, hath he overcome. To ſo total a rout hath he put his adverſaries and ours. And the benefits of this conqueſt will appear, 1. As it gives us the comfort and encouragement of our bleſſed Saviour's example. 2. As he won the day in the capacity of our repreſentative, and for our ſake and benefit; our rights and intereſts being ſo interwoven with his, as to convey to us a ſhare and claim in all his undertakings and all his ſucceſſes. And, 3. As our Lord "overcame the world," not by preventing or eſcaping, but enduring, the tribulations of it: So by making tribulation the lot of his diſciples, he hath added to their virtue and their honour; ſince the aſſiſtance of his grace to carry them through their difficulties is better and more glorious than the keeping them clear thereof. (Idem.)

CHAP. XVII.

Chriſt concludeth with a prayer to his Father, to glorify him: To preſerve his apoſtles in unity and truth; and to glorify them, and all other believers, in heaven.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. THESE words ſpake Jeſus; and lift up his eyes to heaven, and ſaid, Father the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son alſo may glorify thee. As thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent. I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own ſelf, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

Theſe words ſpake Jeſus.] Our bleſſed Saviour, having ended his conſolatory and valedictory ſermon, contained in the three foregoing chapters; in this chapter we have recorded his laſt prayer, with and for his diſciples, before he left the world; which is a copy left upon earth, of what he doth now intercede for, as an advocate in heaven. It is good (ſaith one) to compare ſcripture with ſcripture, but not to prefer ſcripture before ſcripture; all ſcripture being written by inſpiration of God: But, if any part of ſcripture be to be magnified above another, this chapter claims the pre-eminence: It contains the breathings of Chriſt's ſoul for his church and children, before his departure; not for his diſciples only, but for the ſucceeding church to the end of the world. In the verſe before us, obſerve, 1. The order of our Saviour's prayer: "Theſe words ſpake Jeſus;" that is, after he had finiſh'd his excellent ſermon, he cloſes the exerciſe with a moſt fervent and affectionate prayer; teaching his miniſters, by his example, to add ſolemn prayer and ſupplication to all their inſtructions and exhortations: If every creature of God be to be ſanctified by prayer, much more the word of God, which works not as a natural agent, but as a moral inſtrument in God's hand. Now as God ſets the Word on work, ſo is it prayer that ſets God on work. 2. As the order of Chriſt's prayer, ſo the geſture in which he prayed; "He lifted up his eyes to heaven," as an indication of his ſoul's being lifted up to God in heaven; to ſignify his reverence of God, whoſe throne is in heaven; and to denote his confidence in God, and raiſed expectation of aid and help from God, and not from any creature. Learn, That the geſtures which we uſe in prayer, ſhould be ſuch as may beſt expreſs our reverence of God, and denote our affiance and truſt in him. 3. The perſon prayed to, God, under the appellation of a Father: It intimates a ſweet relation; 'tis a word of endearing affection, and implies great reverence towards God, and great confidence and truſt in him. Learn, It is very ſweet and comfortable in prayer, when we can come and call God Father. 4. The mercy prayed for: "The hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son alſo may glorify thee." The hour is come; that is, the hour of my ſufferings, and thy ſatisfaction; the hour of my victory, and of thy glory; the hour, the ſad hour, determined in thy decree and purpoſe: No calamity can touch us till God's hour is come; and when the ſad hour is come, the beſt remedy is prayer, and the only perſon to fly unto for ſuccour is our heavenly Father; "Father, the hour is come," the doleful hour of my death and paſſion; "Glorify thy Son," glorify him at his death, by manifeſting him to have been the Son of God; glorify him in his death, by accepting it as the death of thy Son for the ſins of the world; glorify him after his death, by a ſpeedy reſurrection from the grave, and a triumphant exaltation at thy right hand. Here note, How the glory of the Father and the Son are inſeparably linked together; it was the Father's deſign to glorify the Son, and it was the Son's deſire to have glory from the Father; for this end, that he might bring glory to the Father: "Glorify thy Son, that thy Son may glorify thee" (B.) Chriſt, our high-prieſt, before he goes from the Euchariſtic altar to that of the croſs, prays to his Father for himſelf, for his apoſtles, and for his whole church. This is the oblation, the ſolemn ſervice, of the grand ſacrifice. It is the pattern for prieſts to imitate, when they pray, as thoſe who offer up that ſacrifice, and as mediators for the people: It is likewiſe the pattern for other prayers. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 31. and xv. 8.

As thou haſt given him power.] Obſerve here, 1. The dignity which Chriſt was inveſted with, "power over all fleſh;" that is, authority to judge and ſentence all mankind. 2. How Chriſt came to be inveſted with this power; it was given him by his Father: "Thou haſt given him power over all fleſh." Hence the Socinians would infer, That he was not God, becauſe he received all from God: But the text ſpeaks not of his divine power as God, but of his power as Mediator. And the note is, that all mankind is under the power and authority of Jeſus Chriſt as a Mediator: He has a legiſlative power, or a power to give laws to all mankind; and a judiciary power, or a power to execute the laws that he hath given. 3. The end for which Chriſt was inveſted with this power; "That he might give eternal life to as many as God had given him." Here note, 1. That all believers, that is, all ſincere and ſerious Chriſtians, are given by God the Father unto Chriſt; they are given to him as his charge, to redeem, ſanctify, and ſave; and as his reward, Iſa. liii. 10. 2. All that are given to Chriſt have life from him; a life of juſtification and ſanctification on earth, and a life of glory in heaven. 3. The life which Chriſt gives to them that are given him, is eternal life. 4. That this eternal life is a free gift from Chriſt unto his people; tho' they do not work for wages, yet they ſhall not work for nothing: "I give unto them eternal life." (B.) See the notes on chap. vi. 37.

This is life eternal.] That is, This is the true way to obtain eternal life; namely, by the true knowledge of God the Father, and of Jeſus Chriſt the Mediator; who was commiſſioned and ſent by his Father, to accompliſh the work of redemption for a loſt world. Here obſerve, Chriſt calls God the Father "the only true God;" not in oppoſition to the Son and Holy Ghoſt, who, being one in eſſence with the Father, are truly and really God as well as the Father; but in oppoſition to idols and falſe gods. There is a great difference betwixt theſe two propoſitions; The Father is the only true God, and The Father only is true God; Chriſt ſaith the former, "This is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God:" The Socinian ſays the latter; This is life eternal, to know only thee to be the true God, and that neither Jeſus Chriſt nor the Spirit are God, but the Father only. But how comes eternal life to depend as well upon the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, as of God the Father, if Jeſus Chriſt be only man, and not truly and really God? For thus our Saviour affirms, "This is life eternal, to know thee and Jeſus Chriſt." Whence learn, 1. That the beginning, increaſe, and perfection of eternal life lieth in holy knowledge. 2. That no knowledge is ſufficient to eternal life, but the knowledge of God, and Jeſus Chriſt, who is alſo God; for who can think that the knowledge of a mere creature ſhould be accounted equally neceſſary to ſalvation, with the knowledge of the great and mighty God? Surely, if our happineſs conſiſts equally in the knowledge of God and Chriſt, then God and Chriſt are of the ſame nature, equal in power and glory. The comprehenſive ſenſe of the words ſeems to be this; That the knowledge of the only true God, and of Jeſus Chriſt the Mediator, is the life of grace, and the neceſſary way to the life of glory. (Idem.) See the next note here following.

Know thee, the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt, whom thou haſt ſent.] That is, that the Gentiles, quitting their dumb idols and falſe gods, may own thee alone to be "the living and true God," 1 Theſſ. i. 9. who madeſt heaven and earth, Acts xiv. 15. And that the Jews may own me to be thy Son, ſent to them from heaven; and that Meſſiah which, according to thy promiſe made to Abraham and David, thou haſt ſent to them: For, by knowing thee fully, they will know me alſo; whom all men are to worſhip as they worſhip the Father, and whom he that doth not worſhip, doth not truly "honour the Father," chap. v. 23. for "I and the Father are one," chap. x. 30. whom "no man knoweth who he is, but the Father, and he to whom the Father will reveal him," Luke x. 22. whom "he that denies, hath not the Father," 1 John ii. 23. "doth not know him; and he that ſeeth, ſees the Father alſo," chap. xiv. 9. xv. 21. xvi. 3. Here the Socinians ſay, That theſe words plainly prove, that the Father alone is the true God, and that by the words, "the only true God," Chriſt muſt be excluded from being true God, ſince otherwiſe the Father would not be only ſo. But to this we anſwer, 1. That theſe words cannot be reaſonably ſuppoſed to exclude him from a true divinity, who is in ſcripture ſtiled "the true God." Now, that Chriſt is ſo ſtiled, ſee the note on 1 John v. 20. True therefore is the gloſs of Grotius, that he is ſtiled "the only true God," in excluſion of thoſe, whom the falſe perſuaſion of the Gentiles had introduced: Not ſo as to exclude the other perſons, but in oppoſition to polytheiſm, as Epiphanius; or for the removal of thoſe which by nature are not true gods, as Athanaſius ſaith. Hence the Pſeud-Ignatius obſerves, That the Evangeliſt, ſaying, "The Father is the only true God," did not omit what belonged to our Lord, but premiſed this, ſaying, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was God." And in this ſenſe the word only is frequently applied to God in the Old Teſtament. So Deut. xxxii. 12. "The Lord only was their guide, and there was no falſe god with them;" and yet the angel, "in whom his name was," Exod. xxiii. 21. went with them; "the angel of his preſence ſaved them," Iſa. lxiii. 9. and was the captain of their hoſt, Joſhua v. 14. So alſo Iſa. xliii. 11. "I am the Lord, and there is no Saviour beſide me," and ver. 12. I am the Lord your God, and there is "no ſtrange god" with me. See Judges x. 16. 1 Sam. vii. 3. Pſalm lxxxi. 9. See alſo the word Solus ſo uſed by Irenæus often: As when he ſaith of the Maker of the world, that he is Solus Deus, & Solus Dominus, & Solus Conditor, & Solus Pater, & Solus continens omnia, l. 2. c. 1. and yet puts it into the ſymbol of faith owned by all Chriſtians at their baptiſm, that Chriſt is "our Lord and God," l. 1. c. 2. See the note on 1 Cor. viii. 3. Woltzogenius ſaith, This place proves Chriſt is not God in the moſt perfect ſenſe; in which he is to be underſtood to be God, who is the author and original of the whole deity, and who hath his divinity from himſelf, and not from another: And if this be all they contend for, we, who believe that Chriſt is "God of God," may grant this, and yet maintain that he is God, not by title only, as angels and magiſtrates are ſtiled Elohim, but by communication of the divine nature, as being the true God, and having the name of God diſtributively given, and the divine attributes aſcribed to him only; i. e. in oppoſition to them, who are only called gods, but are not by nature ſo. 2. We anſwer, That the excluſive particle only is not in conſtruction to be joined with the true God thus; To know thee only to be the true God: For the words run not thus, ſe monon ton aleethinon Theon; but thus, ſe ton monon aleethinon Theon, who only art true, or the God who alone art true: And whereas againſt this Crellius objects, that the word aleethinos, being an adjective, cannot be here the predicate, this is confuted by many inſtances in this Goſpel; for phoos to aleethinon is the light which is truly ſo, chap. i. 9. and ſo is "the true bread," chap. vi. 32. and "the true vine," chap. xv. 1. it being manifeſt, that in all theſe places true is the attribute, or the thing predicated, of light, bread, and the vine. And whereas they urge farther, that the word ſolus, only, added to it, excludes all other things from any communion with that of which it is predicated, and ſo imports, that the Father alone is a true God; this aſſertion may be confuted from many inſtances, both of the Old and the New Teſtament. As when Jacob ſays of Benjamin, "He is left alone," Gen. xlii. 38. viz. in reſpect of Joſeph, not of his ten brethren; and of Chriſt, that "he was left alone," viz. in reſpect of the multitude, when yet his diſciples were with him, Luke ix. 18, 36. John viii. 9, 10. and when he ſaith, "Ye ſhall leave me alone, and yet I am not alone, for the Father is with me," chap. xvi. 32. But, to proceed to inſtances more appoſite, we read of "the bleſſed and only Potentate, King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality," 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. Now, if this be ſaid of God the Father, as the Socinians muſt aſſert, or allow Chriſt to be truly God; yet muſt they allow that Chriſt, who is ſtiled "King of kings, and Lord of lords," by reaſon of his powerful victories over the enemies of his church, Rev. xvii. 14. xix. 15, 16. is alſo a potentate; that he who "hath life in himſelf," and "of whoſe kingdom there ſhall be no end," John v. 26. Luke i. 33. hath alſo immortality; and he who is exalted to God's right hand, dwells alſo in light inacceſſible: They therefore muſt allow that neither the word only, before potentate, nor before immortality, exclude Chriſt from a communion in thoſe attributes. Solomon ſaith of God, i. e. according to the Socinians, of the Father, 1 Kings viii. 39. "Thou only knoweſt the hearts of all men:" And yet Chriſt ſaith, that "all the church ſhall know that he is the ſearcher of the hearts and reins," viz. of all men, that being neceſſary, that as it follows, he might "give to all men according to their works," Rev. ii. 23. And St. Jude ſpeaks of ſome wicked men, who denied "our only Maſter, God, and Lord," ver. 4. If they ſay this is meant of Chriſt, as probably it is, all theſe words being put by appoſition with one only article prefixed, and the ſame perſons being by St. Peter ſaid to "deny the Lord that bought them," 2 Pet. ii. 1. ſurely they will not ſay, theſe words exclude the Father from being our Maſter, God, and Lord: Or, if they do interpret them of God the Father, they cannot deny, againſt expreſs ſcripture, that Chriſt is our "Lord and Maſter." See John xiii. 13, 14. 1 Cor viii. 6. Eph. iv. 5. All theſe inſtances therefore, ſhewing the falſhood of that aſſertion, do alſo ſhew the weakneſs of the Socinians arguments from theſe words againſt the deity of Chriſt, and of the Holy Ghoſt. (W.) Now here, by knowing, our Saviour doth not mean a bare contemplative knowledge, but a thankful acknowledging, which comprehendeth all Chriſtian duties. (Uſher.) For the Holy Ghoſt, in the ſcripture, is pleaſed, by the figure ſynechdoche, for ſhortneſs of ſpeech, oft-times to name one duty, and in that one to comprehend the whole worſhip of God. As here, all the worſhip of God is attributed to knowledge. Eccleſ. xii. 13. it is attributed to fear. Rom. viii. 24. to hope; and ſo of the reſt: And all this without injury to the reſt of the duties; for they all have good dependance one of another. (Andr.) Who would not pity thoſe fine wits, who know every thing except the Goſpel; whoſe memories are ſtored with all the actions of antiquity, except thoſe of Jeſus Chriſt; who make a thouſand diſcoveries in arts and ſciences, and neglect the art of ſanctifying themſelves, and the ſcience of ſalvation! (Q.) See the notes on chap. iii. 16. and vi. 29.

I have glorified thee on earth.] To glorify God, is to finiſh the work which he has given us to do; and not to undertake any other, merely of our own head, how great and conſiderable ſoever it may poſſibly be. We have no other buſineſs on earth, but to glorify God; and, in order to this, every one has his particular work appointed him. (Id.) The whole life of Chriſt, when here on earth, was a glorifying of his Father: He glorified him by the doctrine which he preached, by the miracles which he wrought, by the unſpotted purity and innocency of his life, and by his unparallel'd ſufferings at his death. (B.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 32.

I have finiſhed the work.] That is, I am now about to finiſh it: He ſpeaks of what he was reſolved to do, as already done. Here note, 1. That 'tis work that glorifies God. 2. That every man has his work, his proper work, aſſigned him by God. 3. This work muſt be finiſhed here upon earth. 4. That when we have done our proportion of work, we may expect our proportion of wages. 5. That it is a bleſſed thing at the hour of death, to be able to ſay in ſincerity and uprightneſs, that we have glorified God in the world, and have finiſhed the work which he appointed us to do: "Father, I have glorified thee on earth, and have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do." (Idem.) See the notes on chap. iv. 34. ix. 3. and xv. 10.

Glorify thou me.] From the connexion of this with the former verſe, Learn, 1. That whoever expects to be glorified with God in heaven, muſt glorify him firſt here upon earth. 2. That after we have glorified him, we may expect to be glorified with him, and by him. "I have glorified thee, now, O Father, glorify thou me;" it follows, "with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Hence note, 1. That Chriſt, as God, had an eſſential glory with God the Father before the world was: He had this glory not in the purpoſe and decree of God only, as the Socinians would have it; for he doth not ſay, Glorify me with the glory which thou didſt propoſe and prepare for me before the world was, but "which I had (and enjoyed) with thee before the world was." By which words our Lord plainly aſſerts his own exiſtence and being from eternity, and prays for a re-exaltation to that glory which he enjoyed with his Father before his incarnation. Note, 2. That Chriſt, as Mediator, did ſo far humble himſelf, that he needed to pray to his Father to beſtow upon him the glory which he wanted; namely, the glory of his aſcenſion and exaltation. "Now, O Father, glorify me with thine own ſelf." As if Chriſt had ſaid, Father, glorify me, embrace and honour me as thy Son, who have been, in the eyes of the world, handled diſgracefully as a ſervant: It is an actual glory that Chriſt ſpeaks of, not in decree and purpoſe only, for that believers had as well as he; but this was a glory when no creature was in being. (Idem.) See the notes on chap. i. 1. x. 30. and xiv. 9.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. I have manifeſted thy name unto the men which thou gaveſt me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me; and they have kept thy word. Now they have known that all things whatſoever thou haſt given me, are of thee. For I have given unto them the words which thou gaveſt me; and they have received them, and have known ſurely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou did'ſt ſend me. I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou haſt given me, for they are thine. And all mine are thine, and thine are mine, and I am glorified in them. And now I am no more in the world, but theſe are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name thoſe whom thou haſt given me, that they may be one, as we are. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: thoſe that thou gaveſt me I have kept, and none of them is loſt, but the ſon of perdition; that the ſcripture might be fulfilled. And now come I to thee, and theſe things I ſpeak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themſelves. I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, becauſe they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I pray not that thou ſhould'ſt take them out of the world, but that thou ſhould'ſt keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth: Thy word is truth. As thou haſt ſent me into the world, even ſo have I alſo ſent them into the world. And for their ſakes I ſanctify myſelf, that they alſo might be ſanctified through the truth.

I have manifeſted thy name.] By the name of God we are here to underſtand his nature, his properties and attributes, his deſigns and counſels for the ſalvation of mankind: Chriſt, as the prophet of his church, made all theſe known; he has made a full and compleat diſcovery of his Father's mind and will unto his people; "I have manifeſted thy name unto them which thou gaveſt me. Thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me; and they have kept thy word." Learn, 1. That all believers are given unto Chriſt as his purchaſe, and as his charge: They are given him as his ſubjects, as his children; as the wife of his boſom, as the members of his body. 2. That none are given to Chriſt, but thoſe that were firſt the Father's, "Thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me." 3. That all thoſe that are given unto Chriſt, do keep his word; they keep it in their underſtandings, they hide it in their hearts, they feel the force of it in their ſouls, they expreſs the power of it in their lives: "They have kept the word." (G. H. W. and B.) See the notes on chap. i. 18. and vi. 37.

Now they have known.] Viz. By my doctrine and miracles which they have heard and ſeen, that I derived both from thee. (H. W. and B.) See the notes on chap. vii. 16. viii. 28. and xv. 15.

I pray for them.] Here our Saviour prays, in the firſt place, particularly for his apoſtles, by whoſe miniſtry other diſciples were to be brought into the church, and (rejecting at once all the unbelieving and impenitent world) recommends them to his Father; for that, as they were given him of the Father, and as ſuch taken into his protection, ſo they, having receiv'd his word, acknowledged and believed in him, ſhould therefore be expoſed to ſuch and ſo many enemies, that they could not be ſafe without divine aſſiſtance. (Beza.)

I pray not for the world.] Viz. At this time; or in this part of my prayer. Here is no foundation for that notion of thoſe who fancy, that, becauſe our Lord does not in this verſe, "pray for the world," therefore he did not die for the world, but only for ſome few perſons in it. For, 1. Such men do plainly contradict both Chriſt, and his apoſtles. For Chriſt ſaith, he "came not to condemn the world, but that it might be ſaved," chap. xii. 47. that "God ſent his Son into the world, that the world through him might be ſaved," chap. iii. 17. Hence this Evangeliſt aſſures us, he was "the propitiation for the ſins of the whole world," 1 John ii. 2. And others of them, that he came to ſeek and "ſave that which was loſt," as doubtleſs all the world was, Matt. xviii. 11. 2. They vainly argue, that Chriſt never prayed for the world, becauſe he ſaith here, I do not do it now; which is arguing againſt plain matter of fact. For how oft doth he ſay to the Jews, "Ye are of the world," chap. viii. 23. and of his apoſtles choſen out of them, that they were called "out of the world"? as here ver. 6. 14, 16. And yet he ſaith to them, Luke xix. 42. How do I wiſh, that "thou hadſt known, in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace"? And, hanging on the croſs, he ſaid, "Father, forgive them," Luke xxiii. 34. "making interceſſion for thoſe tranſgreſſors," Iſa. liii. 12. He therefore ſaith, that in this addreſs he prayed not for them, becauſe he was then asking thoſe things which could not agree to them, but to his apoſtles only, or to thoſe whom God had given him out of the world, viz. that they might be conſecrated to their apoſtolical function by that Spirit which "the world could not receive," chap. xiv. 17. that their joy from his preſence with them might be full; nor is there any thing in this whole prayer which is not proper to believers only. And, 3. This very prayer for them is made for the ſake of the world, and with reſpect to their ſaving faith, i. e. "for them who ſhould believe through his word," ver. 20. that the "world might believe, and know that the Father had ſent him," ver. 23. So that he prayed for his apoſtles for this very end, that the world by their means might believe, and believing, might have life through his name. 'Tis therefore plain he made this prayer, in which he ſaith, "I pray not for the world," out of affection to the world; and with this deſign, that the preaching of the apoſtles to them might be more effectual for their converſion and ſalvation. (W. B. and Fox.)

All mine are thine, and thine are mine.] We may underſtand this, either, 1. Of all perſons; All my friends, all my apoſtles are thine, as well as mine. Thence learn, That the Father and the Son have a like ſhare and propriety in all believers. Or, 2. Of all things; the words in the original being of the neuter gender: For Chriſt and his Father, being one, agreeing in one, and having the ſame eſſence and nature, the ſame attributes and will, Chriſt hath all things that the Father hath, willeth all things that the Father willeth, and doeth all things that the Father doeth. Whence we learn, That Chriſt is really and eſſentially God. (B.)

I am glorified in them.] That is, I am made glorious, by their owning and receiving me; by their believing in me, and accepting me for their Lord and Maſter; and more ſo hereafter by their miniſtry, and the miraculous works which they ſhall do in my name. (G. and B.)

Now I am no more in the world.] That is, I ſhall continue on earth but a ſmall time longer, and then aſcend to my Father in heaven. Hence learn, That Chriſt, as he is man, is gone out of this lower world, into the immediate preſence of his Father: As he had been abaſed before, he muſt be exalted now: He had no more work to do on earth, but much to do in heaven; and therefore he left this earth to go to heaven. (B.)

Holy Father, keep.] Here obſerve, Our Saviour's prayer to his Father for his apoſtles, before he left the world: "Holy Father, keep them;" that is, preſerve them by thy divine power and goodneſs, for the glory of thy holy name. Here note, 1. The title and appellation given to God; "Holy Father." Thence learn, That when we go to God in prayer, eſpecially for grace and ſanctification, we muſt look upon him as an holy Father, as eſſentially and originally holy, as infinitely and independently holy. 2. The ſupplication requeſted of God; "Keep, through thy name, thoſe whom thou haſt given me." Thence learn, That the perſeverance of the ſaints in a ſtate of grace, is the ſweet effect and fruit of Chriſt's prayer: Chriſt has begged it, and it cannot be denied; there being ſuch an harmony and ſweet conſent betwixt the will of the Father, and the will of the Son. Three things concur to the believer's perſeverance. On the Father's part, there is everlaſting love, and all-ſufficient power: On the Son's part, there is everlaſting merit and conſtant interceſſion: On the Spirit's part, there is a perpetual inhabitation and continued influence. Obſerve, 2. The end of Chriſt's ſupplication on behalf of his people; "That they may be one, as we are one." Here note, 1. That the heart of Chriſt is exceedingly ſet upon the unity of his members. 2. That believers union with Chriſt their head, is a reſemblance to that unity that is betwixt the Father and the Son: For 'tis an holy and ſpiritual union, a cloſe and intimate union, an indiſſoluble and inſeparable union. (Idem.) See the notes on ver. 23.

None of them is loſt.] Either by temporal death, chap. xviii. 9. or by falling off from me; "but the Son of perdition;" that is, Judas, worthy of perdition. (W.) Now, a man may be ſaid to be a ſon of perdition two ways, actively and paſſively. Actively he is ſo, who makes it his work and buſineſs to deſtroy others: Paſſively, he is a ſon of perdition who for his wickedneſs in deſtroying others, is deſtroyed himſelf. Judas was a ſon of perdition in both theſe ſenſes: His heart was maliciouſly ſet upon deſtroying Chriſt, and wilfully ſet upon his own deſtruction: His covetouſneſs and hypocriſy prompted him to betray our Saviour; his deſpair provoked him to deſtroy himſelf. (B.) See the notes on chap. vi. 39, 70. and x. 28.

My joy fulfilled in themſelves.] That is, That the joy they had hitherto, from my love to them, my preſence with them, and care of them, may, in my abſence, be increaſed, by the preſence of that Spirit with them, who will ſupply my bodily abſence, chap. xvi. 7. and whoſe "fruits are love, joy, and peace," Gal. v. 22. yea, by whom I, tho' abſent in body, am ſtill preſent with them, chap. xiv. 18. (G. W. and B.) See the notes on chap. xv. 11.

The world hath hated them.] See the notes on chap. vii. 7. and xv. 18, 19.

Keep them from the evil.] That is, From the evil men of the world; and from Satan, "the prince of the world," who, by their means, endeavours, by fiery perſecutions, to ſuppreſs the truth, and deſtroy or diſcourage the preachers of it: Whence, their perſecutions are aſcribed, not to them, but to Satan, Luke xxii. 31. 1 Theſſ. ii 18. iii. 5. and Rev. ii. 10. From hence we may learn, 1. That a ſpiritual victory over evil is to be prefer'd before a total exemption from evil. 2. How neceſſary divine aid is to our preſervation and ſucceſs, even in the beſt of enterpriſes; and how neceſſary therefore it is to ſeek it by fervent prayer. And, 3. That ſuch as do ſincerely devote themſelves to Chriſt's ſervice may be ſure of his aid and protection, while they are ſo employ'd. (W. and B.) See the notes on Matt. vi. 13.

Sanctify them through thy truth.] That is, Conſecrate and ſet them apart, for the propagation of thy truth. Now this ſanctification to the prieſthood under the Old Teſtament, was made firſt with a ſacrifice offered for them. So Moſes receives a command, hagiazein, to "ſanctify the prieſts," that they might ſerve or offer to God, 1. By the oblation of a "bulock and a ram," Exod. xxix. 1. And thus Chriſt ſanctified his apoſtles by offering up himſelf for them, ver. 19. 2. By anointing them with holy oil, ver. 7. And in this ſenſe, Chriſt deſires here the Father to ſanctify them to their office, by the deſcent of the Holy Spirit; ſtiled, "The oil of gladneſs," and "the promiſe of the Father," on them, and by whoſe aſſiſtance they became "able miniſters of the New Teſtament," 2 Cor. iii 6. which before they were not; and are therefore bid not to begin their preaching to the world, till this Spirit from on high was come upon them, Luke xxiv. 49. Acts i. 8. (W.) See the following notes on ver. 19.

As thou haſt ſent me.] Obſerve here, 1. Chriſt's miſſion: The Father ſent him into the world; which ſending implies the deſignation of his perſon, his qualification for the work, his authority and commiſſion. Learn hence, That Chriſt himſelf did not of himſelf undertake the office of a Mediator, but was ſent; that is, authorized and commiſſion'd of God ſo to do: "Thou haſt ſent me into the world." 2. As Chriſt's miſſion, ſo that of the apoſtles: "As thou haſt ſent me, ſo have I ſent them." Learn hence, That none may, or ought to undertake the office of the miniſtry, without an authoritative ſending from Chriſt himſelf; not immediately and extraordinarily by voice or viſion, but immediately by the officers of the church: And ſuch as are ſo ſent, are ſent by Chriſt himſelf; and ſo it is the people's duty, to reverence their perſons, to reſpect their office, and to receive their meſſage. (B.)

I ſanctify myſelf.] The word hagiazo, to ſanctify, here, is not to be taken for the cleanſing, purifying, or making holy that which before was unclean: But Chriſt's ſanctifying himſelf imports, 1. His ſeparation, or ſetting himſelf apart, to be a ſacrifice for ſin. 2. His conſecration, or dedication of himſelf, to this holy uſe and ſervice. Hence learn, 1. That Jeſus Chriſt did dedicate, and ſolemnly ſet himſelf apart to the great work and office of a Mediator. 2. That the great end, for which Chriſt did thus ſanctify himſelf, was, that he might ſanctify his members: Therefore did he conſecrate and ſet himſelf apart for us, that we ſhould be conſecrated to, and wholly ſet apart for him. (Idem.) Our bleſſed Lord here particularly praying for his apoſtles, the judicious and learned Mr. Joſ. Mede thinks the ſenſe of theſe words, commencing at ver. 17. to be thus; "ſanctify them" unto, or for, "thy truth: Thy word," which they are to preach, and deliver to the world, "is the truth: As thou haſt ſent me into the world," to deliver thy mind and will, "even ſo have I alſo ſent them into the world," for the ſame purpoſe. This, ſays he, is the key which unlocks the reſt. "And for their ſakes I ſanctify myſelf;" that is, I offer myſelf as a ſacrifice unto thee, to attone for, and purify them, inſtead of thoſe legal ſacrifices, wherewith Aaron and his ſons firſt, and then the whole tribe of Levi, were conſecrated to thy ſervice. (Fox.) To this agrees alſo the expoſition of Dr. Hammond, Dr. Outram, Mr. Johnſon, and Mr. Maſſey: The ſecond of whom ſays, That here, by Chriſt's conſecrating himſelf, can be meant nothing but his offering himſelf a ſacrifice: But we ſhall (God willing) have occaſion to enlarge on this ſubject hereafter; and particularly on the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

Ver 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Neither pray I for theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall believe on me, through their word. That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they alſo may be one in us: That the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me. And the glory which thou gaveſt me, I have given them: That they may be one, even as we are one. I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me, and haſt loved them, as thou haſt loved me. Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou haſt given me: For thou loved'ſt me before the foundation of the world. O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee; but I have known thee, and theſe have known that thou haſt ſent me. And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: That the love wherewith thou haſt loved me, may be in them, and I in them.

Neither pray I for theſe alone.] As Chriſt, ver. 17, &c. had prayed for his apoſtles, that they might be filled with the Spirit, ſo here he asks the ſame thing for thoſe that "ſhould believe thro' their word," that they alſo might be repleniſhed with the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; according to the prediction of the Baptiſt, Matt. iii. 11. and his own promiſe, chap. vii. 38, 39. and as it after came to paſs. That theſe words, viz. "That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee," are to be interpreted, not of an unity of concord, but by the participation of the Spirit, of the Father, and the Son, is proved; (See the notes on chap. xiv. 20.) Add that Chriſt declares, he did his miracles by the Holy Spirit, Matt. xii. 28. That the Spirit was given to him without meaſure, chap. iii. 34. That thereby he was "anointed to preach the Goſpel," Luke iv. 18, 19. Chriſt alſo ſays, that the Father abiding in him, did theſe miracles, chap. xiv. 10. And that the Jews, by the doctrine thus preached, by virtue of this unction, and the miracles thus done by the Spirit of God, might and ought to know, that "the Father was in him, and he in the Father," chap. x. 38. And he promiſes, that "they who believed in him ſhould do greater works than he had done, becauſe going to the Father, he would ſend the Holy Spirit to them to abide ever with them, chap. xiv. 12, 16, &c. And then adds, " in that day, ye ſhall know, that I am in the Father, and ye in me, and I in you," ver. 20. All which things prove, that the Father was in Chriſt, and he in him: Not only by the union of the divine nature with the human, but by the union of the ſame Spirit alſo reſiding in him; and conſequently the union of believers with them both muſt be by the ſame Spirit: Whence it is ſaid, That " he that is joined to the Lord, is one Spirit with him," 1 Cor. vi. 17. That their bodies are made " the temples of the Holy Ghoſt," ver. 19. and they are " an habitation of God through the Spirit," Epheſ. ii. 22. This farther will appear here, from the end of this union, which is, ſaith Chriſt, " That the world may believe and know that thou haſt ſent me:" For this the apoſtles teſtified, and made known to the world; not by their concord, but by virtue of that Spirit, with which they were endowed from on high, and which God gave to them that believed, Acts v. 32. And this interpretation we may learn from the words of Irenæus to the ſame effect. This alſo will be ſtill more evident from the words following. (W.)

That they all may be one.] Origen here ſaith, The apoſtles and the prophets ſhall then know the Father, when they are become " one, as the Son and the Father are one:" Which he thus explains, in his Commentary on theſe words, " The love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghoſt which is given unto us," Rom. v. 5. That by this gift of the Holy Ghoſt might be fulfilled that ſaying of the Lord, " That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee;" viz. being made partakers of the divine nature, in the abundance of love miniſtred to them by the Holy Spirit. And, in this ſenſe, the Fathers often ſay, That at the reſurrection we ſhall be Theopoioumenoi; as being then completely made partakers of the divine nature, by the Spirit of God then more fully dwelling in us; and ſo " God will be all in all," in his glorified ſaints. (Idem.) Our Lord, no doubt, deſired, and might, with ſubmiſſion to his Father's will, pray for the union of his diſciples in all future ages; thoſe who ſhould embrace the Chriſtian faith, either through the preaching of the apoſtles or their writing: But the words ſeem to have a ſpecial reference to the hearers and converts of the apoſtles themſelves; " them which ſhould believe through their word," or by hearing them preach the doctrine of Chriſt; that their perfect union, being obſerved, might be a means, as it did indeed prove, of converting the infidel world, and ſpreading the Chriſtian faith, into thoſe parts of the earth that were far and wide removed from the land of Judea: For ſo it follows here, " That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they alſo may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me." The only difficulty that can be in the words is, How thoſe who believe in Chriſt can " be one, as the Father and the Son are one"? To which 'tis eaſy to reply, They cannot be equally ſo, but only in reſemblance of that union; and that particularly in theſe two reſpects, 1. As the Father and the Son are one by entire love, ſo may thoſe who believe in Chriſt be one in them; as being belov'd by them, as making the return of fervent love to them, and as heartily loving one another. And, 2. As whatſoever the Son of God, when he dwelt upon earth in our nature, taught and acted, was by commiſſion from the Father, agreable to his will, and by his direction and influence; ſo thoſe who believe in Chriſt may be one in the Father and the Son, by partaking of the divine Spirit, and by his influence being preſerved in the unanimous belief of the doctrine revealed, and obedience to the precepts given by the Son of God. Now, this inward and ſpiritual union among Chriſtians is what St. Paul means, 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. and Eph. iv. 4. &c. But this is inviſible, and no otherwiſe to be diſcerned than by its effects, here referred to by our Saviour, viz. 1. An union in mutual charity, diſcovered by all its natural products; 2. An union in the profeſſion of the ſame faith; and, 3. An union in external communion; that is, in a joint partaking of all the inſtitutions, which Chriſt, by his apoſtles, appointed and ſettled in his church; viz. in all the parts of the publick worſhip of God. (Bradford and Johnſ.) From whence, by the way, we may fairly and properly infer the heinouſneſs of their guilt, who make any breach in this peace, or any ſchiſm in this unity: Since our bleſſed Lord hath asked it of his Father, that we might abide in this peace and unity; as knowing its importance to our final happineſs, and that no diſcord nor variance can ever enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Marſh. Cypr.)

The glory, which thou gaveſt.] By this glory we are to underſtand Chriſt's power of working miracles; which power was given to the apoſtles, and thoſe who believed through their preaching, by virtue of the Holy Spirit which came down upon them: For by the power of this Spirit Chriſt wrought his miracles, and ſo " manifeſted his glory," chap. ii. 11. And the adminiſtration of the Goſpel is upon this account ſaid to be in or with glory, 2 Cor. iii. 7, 11. and the apoſtles are ſaid to have ſeen " the glory of the Lord," and to have been transformed into the likeneſs of it, " from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord," ver. 18. This glory Chriſt is here ſaid to have given his apoſtles, not only that they might be one with the Father and the Son, but alſo " that the world might know the Father had loved them as he had loved Chriſt," whom he had ſo loved as to give the Spirit without meaſure to him. (W.) See the notes on chap. ii. 11. xi. 40. and xiv. 12.

May be made perfect in one.] The learned Mr. Johnſon, having proved, That the Euchariſt is the proper, peculiar worſhip of the Chriſtian church; that prayer is a duty of natural religion, and not peculiar to Chriſtians; that to " pray in the name of Chriſt," chap. xvi. 24. &c. is that manner of praying, which diſtinguiſhes the devotions of Chriſt's diſciples from thoſe of other men; and that then only we pray, properly and ſtrictly, in the name of Chriſt, when we offer up our prayers in and by the Euchariſt; and having therefore juſtly cenſured thoſe who live in a neglect or contempt of this holy ordinance, as " a new ſort of Chriſtians, and not truly Chriſtian worſhippers," he proceeds to conſider the unity of the Euchariſt, in relation to them who are the communicants, viz. 1. and principally, The prieſts: And, 2. The people. He proves, That the Euchariſt is one, as offered by prieſts, who are one by their commiſſion: And that, from this, and ſeveral other verſes in this chapter, it is evident, That it was not only our Saviour's intention, but his moſt paſſionate deſire, that, as all his apoſtles received their commiſſion from him, ſo they might execute it with ſuch an harmony and conſent of mind, that there might not be the leaſt jarring between them. See Johnſon's Unbloody Sacrifice, &c. part ii. chap. iii.

Be with me where I am.] That is, where I am again to be, after my reſurrection and aſcenſion. (G.) Our Saviour had pray'd for his diſciples ſanctification before: Here he prays for their glorification; 1. " That they may be where he is." Now, Chriſt is with them in his ordinances, in his word, and at his table: Ere long they ſhall be with him, as his friends, as his ſpouſe, as his companions in his kingdom. 2. That they may be with him, where he is; that is more than the former; a blind man may be where the ſun is, but not with the ſun, becauſe he doth not enjoy the light and benefit of it: To be with Chriſt where he is, imports union and communion with him. 3. That being with him where he is, " they may behold his glory;" that is, to ſee it, and everlaſtingly to poſſeſs and enjoy it. Learn, 1. That all thoſe that are given to Chriſt as his charge, and as his reward, ſhall certainly come to heaven to him; " Father, I will that they be with me:" Becauſe I have merited that they ſhould be with me; I will that they behold my glory, becauſe I have purchaſed it at ſo dear a rate. 2. That the work and employment of the ſaints in heaven, chiefly conſiſts in ſeeing and enjoying Chriſt's glory: for it will be a poſſeſſive ſight; the language of every look will be, This happineſs is mine! This glory is mine! 3. That the top and height of the ſaints happineſs in heaven conſiſts in this, that they ſhall be with Chriſt; " Father, I will, that they may be with me, that they may behold my glory." (B.) See the notes on chap. xii. 26. and xiv. 3.

O righteous Father.] Obſerve here, 1. The appellation given to God: " O righteous Father." This is the ſixth time that Chriſt in this prayer has called God Father; it being ſo ſweet a relation, and producing all love, delight, joy and confidence in God, by him that practically improves it. Ver. 11. when Chriſt prayed for his people's ſanctification, he ſaid, " Holy Father;" making uſe of that attribute which is the cauſe of all holineſs in the creature: But now, praying for their glorification, he ſays, " O righteous Father;" righteous, in making good thy promiſes both to me and them. 2. What it is that our Saviour affirms, concerning the wicked and unbelieving world, that they have not known God, " The world hath not known thee:" Not as if the world had not known him at all, but not known him aright; the unbelieving and unſanctified part of the world, having no ſaving knowledge of God, not living anſwerable to what they know to be their duty. 3. What Chriſt confirms concerning himſelf: " But I have known thee, and theſe have known thee:" Intimating thus much unto us, that Jeſus Chriſt knows God immediately, and all others know him by the means of Chriſt. Chriſt is the original and fontal cauſe of all the ſaving knowledge that believers have of God: There is not the leaſt ray of ſaving illumination, that doth not deſcend from Chriſt and the Spirit of Chriſt; " I have known thee, and theſe have known that thou did'ſt ſend me." (Idem.) See the notes on chap. viii. 55. x. 15. and xvi. 3.

I have declared unto them.] See the notes on ver 6.

That the love.] That thou may'ſt love them, as being thy ſons by adoption; ſo as to make them partakers of an eternal inheritance, Rom. viii. 17. and ſo as to fill them with thy Spirit, Gal. iv. 6. and raiſing them from the dead, may'ſt crown them with eternal glory. (W.) The ſafety of a Chriſtian lies in this, that God loves him; but the joy, the comfort, and happineſs of a Chriſtian conſiſts in the knowledge, in the ſenſible apprehenſion and feeling of this love: Therefore Chriſt cloſeth his prayer for his members with this affectionate and comprehenſive petition, "Let the love wherewith thou haſt loved me be in them, and I in them." (B.) See the notes on chap. xv. 9.

CHAP. XVIII.

Chriſt goeth to Gethſemane. Judas cometh thither with officers to apprehend him. Chriſt meeteth them. The officers ſtruck down, with his word. Peter ſmiteth off Malchus's ear. Chriſt led bound to Annas and Caiaphas: Examined there: Smitten by the ſoldiers: Denied by Peter: Sent unto Pilate: Examined again by him: And rejected by the Jews.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. WHEN Jeſus had ſpoken theſe words, he went forth with his diſciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entred, and his diſciples. And Judas alſo, which betrayed him, knew the place; for Jeſus oft-times reſorted thither with his diſciples. Judas then, having received a band of men, and officers from the chief prieſts and Phariſees, cometh thither, with Lanterns, and torches, and weapons. Jeſus therefore knowing all things that ſhould come upon him, went forth, and ſaid unto them, Whom ſeek ye? They anſwered him, Jeſus of Nazareth. Jeſus ſaith unto them, I am he. And Judas alſo which betrayed him, ſtood with them. Aſſoon then as he had ſaid unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground. Then asked he them again, Whom ſeek ye? And they ſaid, Jeſus of Nazareth. Jeſus anſwered, I have told you that I am he. If therefore ye ſeek me, let theſe go their way: That the ſaying might be fulfilled which he ſpake, Of them which thou gaveſt me, have I loſt none.

When Jeſus had ſpoken theſe words.] No ſooner had our Lord ended his divine prayer, recorded in the foregoing chapter, but he goes forth to meet his ſufferings, with a willing chearfulneſs. He retires with his diſciples into a garden. Not to hide and ſhelter himſelf from his enemies: For if ſo, it had been the moſt improper place he could have choſen, it being the accuſtomed place where he was wont to pray, and a place well known to Judas, who was now coming to ſeek him. "Judas, which betray'd him, knew the place; for Jeſus oft times reſorted thither with his diſciples:" So that Chriſt repaired to this garden, not to ſhun, but to meet the enemy; to offer himſelf a prey to the wolves, which in the garden hunted him, and laid hold upon him; he alſo reſorted to this garden now for privacy, that he might freely pour out his ſoul to God. (B.) From this text, amongſt others, it is reaſonably concluded, That the foregoing divine prayer muſt have been uſed at the inſtitution of the Euchariſt; which was the laſt action of moment recorded by the other Evangeliſts, before our Lord's going over the brook Cedron, into the garden, where he was ſoon after apprehended. (Johnſ.) See the notes on chap. xvii. 19. and Matt. xxvi. 30.

Over the brook Cedron.] Cedron, or Kidron, was the name of the deep valley, as well as of the brook which ran through it, on the Eaſt between Jeruſalem and the mount of Olives. It is mentioned alſo 2 Sam. xv. 23. and 1 Kings ii. 37. Into this valley was conveyed the blood poured out at the foot of the altar; which, becauſe it made the water look black, gave it this name, as ſome think, from kiddar, ſignifying blackneſs. Others, from kedroi, the cedar-trees planted on each ſide; whence, they ſay, it is always in the Septuagint, as well as here, ſpoken of in the plural number, Jer. xxxi. 40. (Trem. and W.) This brook is here called Cheimarrhos, that is, a torrent flowing in winter. (Leigh.) And it is ſaid to run no longer than it is fed with ſhowers. (Sandys.) But be that as it will, this brook, over which David paſſed, at the time of his humiliation, and flight from his unnatural ſon Abſalom, may be inſtructive, to put us in mind, that the ingratitude of that perſon was but a type or ſhadow of that of the Jews here to Chriſt, and of all ſinners in after ages. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xix. 37.

A garden, into the which he entred.] Called Gethſemane, Matt. xxvi. 36. Mark xiv. 32. This he did, that as the ſin of the firſt Adam, which brought deſtruction upon his poſterity, was committed in a garden, ſo that ſalutary paſſion of the ſecond Adam, which was to reſcue us from that deſtruction, might begin in the like place. (Beza, Hayward, W. B. and Q.)

Knowing all things that ſhould come upon him.] Panta ta erchomena, all the things that were coming. (H.) This the Evangeliſt notes, to ſhew, that Chriſt fell not into the hands of the Jews, for want either of power; as he ſhews, ver. 6. or of wiſdom, to foreſee their machinations againſt him; but as freely giving up himſelf to the death, for the welfare of mankind. Vain therefore is the ſaying of Celſus, That a wiſe man, had he foreſeen the danger, would have avoided it, if he could do it: For if kings and captains have given themſelves freely to the utmoſt perils, and to death itſelf, for the temporary ſafety of their country, much more might our bleſſed Lord do this for the ſalvation of the whole world. (W. B. and Q.)

They went backward, and fell to the ground.] Here we may obſerve, That it was not man's power, but Chriſt's own permiſſion, which brought his ſufferings upon him. How eaſily could he have deliver'd himſelf out of his enemies hands, who with a word of his mouth cauſed them to "go backward, and fall to the ground"! Chriſt, in ſpeaking thoſe words, did dart out a ray of his deity; and this ſtruck them down: He only ſaid, "I am he;" and down they fell! the providence of God not ſuffering him to fall into their hands, without firſt giving them this further mark of his divine majeſty and power. If there was ſo much majeſty in the voice of Chriſt, in one of the loweſt acts of his humiliation, what will the voice of a glorified God be to ſinners, when he ſhall come as a judge to condemn the world! (Hayw. W. and B.) But, in this inſtance, there was a rare mixture of effects, as there was in Chriſt of natures: The voice of a man, and the power of God. For it is obſerved, That from the nativity of our Lord to his death, the divinity and humanity did ſo communicate in effects, that no great action paſſed, but they gave illuſtration and teſtimony to each other: He was born a tender crying infant, but adored by the Magi as a king, by the Angels as their God: He was circumciſed as a man; but by the name given him ſignified to be the Saviour of the world: He fled into Egypt, like a diſtreſſed child, under the conduct of his helpleſs parents; but no ſooner entred the country, than the idols fell down before him: He was preſented in the Temple as the ſon of man; but there celebrated, with divine praiſes, as the Son of God: He was baptized as a ſinner, but proclaimed to be the well-beloved of God: He was hungry in the deſart as a man, but ſuſtained himſelf forty days by the power of his divinity: He was tempted by Satan as a weak man, but miniſter'd to by angels as their Lord: And now, when he was to take upon him all the affronts and ſufferings of the moſt miſerable, he received teſtimonies from above, which were moſt wonderful. For he was transfigured on the mount; entred triumphantly into Jeruſalem, and had the acclamations of the people: When he was firſt nailed to the croſs, he made the earth to tremble: When he was dying, he darkned the ſun: When dead, he opened the ſepulchres: And here, when he ſuffered himſelf to be apprehended by the guard, he ſtruck them all down to the ground, only by replying to their anſwer; that the words of the prophet might be verified, "Therefore my people ſhall know my name; therefore they ſhall know in that day, that I am he that doth ſpeak, Behold it is I." (Tayl.)

Then asked he them again.] Note, 1. how voluntarily and freely Chriſt laid down his life! When his enemies were fallen to the ground, he ſuffered them to riſe again, and offers himſelf to them, to take him and carry him away. 2. How the ſight of this glorious miracle, of the ſoldiers falling to the ground, did not deter or diſcourage them from their wicked purpoſe: They get up again, and go on with their bloody deſign. Learn hence, That obſtinate and obdurate ſinners will not be reclaimed by the moſt evident and convincing, by the moſt miraculous and ſurpriſing, appearances of God againſt them. (B.) They all fall to the ground; and yet, not one of them perceives and owns the hand of God, or the omnipotent voice of Chriſt. Thus God often ruins the fortune, the deſigns, the health, &c. of the wicked: But none are converted, by making a good uſe of this judgment, but only thoſe whoſe hearts he vouchſafes to touch with the powerful influence of his love. Judas, an apoſtle, an eye-witneſs of Chriſt's miracles, nouriſhed ſo long with his word, and pre-obliged by ſo many favours, is thrown down, but not converted: Saul, a perſecutor of the apoſtles and of the church, who had never known Chriſt, who ſtill "breathed out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt his diſciples," Acts ix. 1. is no ſooner thrown down, but he yields and becomes meek and gentle as a lamb. The reaſon is, becauſe the latter is inwardly pierced with ſuch light and grace as it is in vain to reſiſt; and the former is abandon'd and given up to his own reprobate mind. (Q.)

Let theſe go their way.] Obſerve here, how mindful, in the midſt of his ſufferings, Chriſt was of his dear diſciples, to ſecure them, at this time, from death and danger: "If ye ſeek me, let theſe go their way;" that is, my diſciples, againſt whom ye have no warrant at this time. Learn hence, That Chriſt is ſo tender of his followers, that he will not put them upon trials, or call them forth to ſufferings, till they are ripe and ready fitted and prepared for them. The diſciples yet were weak and feeble, timorous and fearful, and Chriſt had much work and ſervice for them to do in the world; namely, to plant and propagate the Goſpel in foreign countries: He therefore reſolves, not to loſe any one of them by perſecution at this time: And thus was his word fulfilled; "Of them which thou gaveſt me, have I loſt none." (B.) But, that the ſaying, here refer'd to, could not relate to the eternal ſtate of Judas, or our Lord's apoſtles, as ſome have imagin'd, appears, 1. From the words "Let theſe go their way:" Which very words, the Evangeliſt aſſures us, were ſpoken by Chriſt on purpoſe, "that the ſaying might be fulfill'd, which he ſpake," viz. in chap. xvii. 12. And yet, Chriſt's deſire, that they might quietly be diſmiſs'd, was deſign'd only to ſecure their temporal preſervation. 2. From thoſe words themſelves, "Thoſe that thou gaveſt me I have kept: And none of them is loſt, but the ſon of perdition; that the ſcripture might be fulfilled," viz. Pſal. cix. 8. Now, this ſcripture St. Peter interprets of the temporal death of Judas, Acts i. 16, &c. 'Tis no objection againſt this interpretation, that the apoſtles were not always preſerv'd from a violent death; moſt of them being taken away by martyrdom: For, this our Lord could not intend, ſince he himſelf had told them, before he ſpake theſe words, that ſome of them ſhould drink of his cup, and ſome of them ſhould be put to death, Matt. xx. 23. and xxiv. 9. But only, that he, being preſent with them, had thus loſt none of them: And hence he prays, That, in his abſence, his Father would thus keep them. And accordingly, the apoſtle teſtifies, that when they were engaged in their apoſtolic function, they were wonderfully preſerv'd by the divine providence; inſomuch that even this was a teſtimony of the life and power of Jeſus, 2 Cor. i. 9, 10. iv. 10, 11. and xiii. 4. Eſpecially, they were ſo preſerv'd, that none of them fell from their apoſtolic office, as Judas did, Acts i. 25. (W.) See the notes on chap. vi. 39. x. 28, 29. and xvii. 12, 15.

Ver. 10, 11. Then Simon Peter having a ſword, drew it, and ſmote the high-prieſt's ſervant, and cut off his right ear. The ſervant's name was Malchus. Then ſaid Jeſus unto Peter, Put up thy ſword into the ſheath: The cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it?

Peter, having a ſword.] See the notes on Luke xxii. 38, 50.

Smote the high-prieſt's ſervant.] Chriſt could have commanded many "legions of angels" (as he ſays himſelf, Matt. xxvi. 53.) for his guard, if he had ſo pleaſed; and we read, that one angel ſlew 185000 armed men in one night, 2 Kings xix. 35. and Iſa. xxxvii. 36. And therefore he needs not ſuch low auxiliaries as an army of rebels, or a navy of pirates, to defend his cauſe: He firſt laid the foundation of our happineſs in his ſufferings; and hath ever ſince ſupported religion by patience and ſuffering, and in poverty, and all the circumſtances and conjunctures of improbable cauſes: Fighting for religion is certain to deſtroy charity; but not certain to ſupport faith. (Tayl.) Chriſt will thank no man for drawing a ſword in defence of him, without a warrant and commiſſion from him. (B.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 38, 50.

And cut off his right ear.] The right ear is an emblem of docility, obedience, and a true underſtanding of the ſcriptures; which will not be found any more, either in the prieſts, or the people, of the Jews, till Chriſt ſhall one day reſtore them to them by his grace. (Q.)

The ſervant's name was Malchus.] See the note on Luke xxii. 51.

Put up thy ſword.] No man wants authority to defend his life, againſt him who has no authority to take it away. But the caſe of St. Peter was very different. He drew his ſword indeed in his maſter's defence, but againſt lawful authority. The officers of the chief prieſts came with Judas, to the place where Jeſus was, to ſeize on him. This was a lawful authority, tho' imploy'd upon a very unjuſt errand: But authority muſt not be reſiſted, tho' in defence of the greateſt innocence. Men who draw their ſwords againſt lawful powers, "ſhall periſh with the ſword:" Which does not ſignify what the event ſhall always be, but what is the deſert and merit of the action. Rebels may ſometimes be proſperous; but they always deſerve puniſhment. And if they eſcape the ſword in this world, St. Paul tells us, they ſhall receive damnation in the next. If St. Peter might not uſe the ſword in defence of Chriſt's perſon, there is much leſs pretence to fight for his religion: For tho' ſome call this fighting for religion, it is only fighting for themſelves. Men may keep their religion, if they pleaſe, in deſpite of earthly powers; for no powers can hurt religion, tho' they may perſecute the profeſſors of it: And therefore, when men take up arms to avoid perſecution, it is not in defence of religion, but of themſelves; that is, to avoid ſuffering for religion. And if St. Peter might not fight to preſerve Chriſt himſelf, certainly neither he nor we might take up arms to defend ourſelves from perſecution. Again, if St. Peter were rebuk'd for this, how comes the pope to challenge the ſword in St. Peter's right, when our Saviour would not allow St. Peter to uſe it himſelf: And if St. Peter might not draw his ſword againſt an inferior officer, by what authority does the pope pretend to diſpoſe of crowns and ſcepters, and to trample on the necks of the greateſt monarchs? And I ſuppoſe, the preſbyter can challenge no more authority than the pope. Whether they will allow St. Peter to have been a biſhop or presbyter, this command to "put up his ſword," equally concerns him in all capacities, and ought to ſecure ſoveraign princes from the unjuſt uſurpations and treacherous conſpiracies both of Geneva and Rome. (Sherl.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 38, 50.

The cup which my Father hath given me.] See the notes on Matt. xx. 22, 23. and Luke xxii. 42.

Ver. 12, 13, 14. Then the band, and the captain, and officers of the Jews took Jeſus and bound him, And led him away to Annas firſt (for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas which was the high prieſt that ſame year) Now Caiaphas was he which gave counſel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man ſhould die for the people.

Then the band, and the captain.] At the time of the paſſover, it was cuſtomary, for the Roman preſident to ſend a whole band of a thouſand men, for a guard to the temple; the captain of which band is therefore here called Chiliarchos. (W)

Took Jeſus, and bound him.] By theſe ſacred bonds, 1. He expiates the ill uſe of our liberty. 2. He obtains for us the grace to uſe it well. 3. He ſets us free from ſin, and makes us become the ſervants of righteouſneſs, in which conſiſts the glorious liberty of the children of God And 4. He ſanctifies the impriſonment and confinement of his diſciples, and even of criminals. (Q.) See the notes on ver. 24.

Led him away to Annas firſt.] That by him, who was more aged and better experienced in the law, Caiaphas might be directed what to do in the caſe; or, becauſe he was the prince of the Sanhedrim: And from him he was ſent bound to Caiaphas the high-prieſt; as appears from ver. 24. Of his being ſent to Annas, the other Evangeliſts ſay nothing, becauſe nothing was done to Chriſt there, but all was performed at the palace of the high-prieſt: There was Chriſt examined, ver. 19. and there Peter denied him, Matt. 26. 57, 69 (W.) St. Cyril ſuppoſes, that Annas had promiſed payment of the money to Judas: And that they therefore led Jeſus to him firſt; his houſe being alſo in their way to that of Caiaphas. (Hayward.) See the notes on Luke iii. 2.

Father-in-law to Caiaphas.] There are in the world many of theſe fatal alliances, which engage men to have a hand in many acts of injuſtice, and ſometimes in the moſt heinous crimes. Of how great importance is it to contract an alliance only with virtuous perſons! An alliance is often attended with very great conſequences; and is ſometimes the occaſion of ſalvation or damnation. (Q.)

Now Caiaphas was he.] See the notes on chap. xi. 49, 50.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18 And Simon Peter followed Jeſus, and ſo did another diſciple. That diſciple was known unto the high-prieſt, and went in with Jeſus into the palace of the high-prieſt. But Peter ſtood at the door without. Then went out that other diſciple which was known unto the high-prieſt, and ſpake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter. Then ſaith the damſel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou alſo one of this man's diſciples? He ſaith, I am not. And the ſervants and officers ſtood there, who had made a fire of coals (for it was cold) and they warmed themſelves: and Peter ſtood with them, and warmed himſelf.

Peter followed Jeſus, and ſo did another diſciple.] That is to ſay, when he was ſent from Annas unto Caiaphas, ver. 24. (Tremel.) In vain does any man pretend to follow Jeſus, when he has no other guide but preſumption, and no other ſtrength beſides that of nature. The command Chriſt gave to the ſoldiers, that they ſhould let his diſciples "go their way," was an admonition to theſe to retire. But Peter has a mind to diſtinguiſh himſelf, by doing more than others, and will thereby plunge himſelf into a misfortune, which he would have avoided had he follow'd the reſt. He would not believe his maſter, when he told him that he could not follow him then; but he will find the truth of it by a ſad experience. (Q.) See the notes on ver. 25, &c. As to the other diſciple, Dr. Whitby thinks it could not be St. John, becauſe he being a Galilean, as well as St. Peter, they might have equally ſuſpected him on that account, But this is accounted for, by John's having ſold his poſſeſſions in Galilee to Caiaphas, and his coming to dwell near mount Sion; by the intervention of which bargain he was made known to the high-prieſt, and ſo brought Peter into the houſe. (Tayl. and Howel.)

It was cold.] The Jews, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, teſtify, That there might be ſnow or froſt at the paſſover: And Radulphus, That great dews fell then, which made the air cold, till the ſun had exhaled them. (W.)

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. The high-prieſt then asked Jeſus of his diſciples, and of his doctrine. Jeſus anſwered him, I ſpake openly to the world; I ever taught in the ſynagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always reſort, and in ſecret have I ſaid nothing. Why askeſt thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have ſaid unto them: Behold, they know what I ſaid, And when he had thus ſpoken, one of the officers which ſtood by, ſtroke Jeſus with the palm of his hand, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou the high-prieſt ſo? Jeſus anſwered him, If I have ſpoken evil, bear witneſs of the evil: But if well, why ſmiteſt thou me? (Now Annas had ſent him bound unto Caiaphas the high-prieſt.)

The high-prieſt then asked.] Our Saviour, being brought before Caiaphas, was there examined "of his diſciples and of his doctrine;" under pretence that he was guilty of hereſy in doctrine, and of ſedition in gathering diſciples and followers. (G. and B.) The learned Dupin and others ſuppoſe this firſt examination of Chriſt to have been at the houſe of Annas: But it ſeems clear to me, from the context here, and particularly from ver. 24. as well as from the relation of all the other Evangeliſts, that this examination was not till "Annas had ſent him bound unto Caiaphas the high-prieſt:" And that it was not Annas, but Caiaphas, "the high-prieſt," who here asked Jeſus of his diſciples and of his doctrine; for it was at his houſe, the ſcribes and the elders, and all the chief prieſts, were aſſembled" for that purpoſe; Matt. xxvi. 57. and Mark iv. 53. See the notes on ver. 24.

I ever taught in the ſynagogue.] Our Lord here clears himſelf from having any deſign to raiſe ſedition againſt the government. When therefore he ſays, "In ſecret have I ſaid nothing;" his meaning is not, that he never ſaid any thing in private to his followers; but that the doctrine he taught at all times was for ſubſtance the ſame: And what that was, there were great numbers, of whom they might enquire; he having, as often as any opportunity offer'd, taught publickly in the temple, and in the ſynagogues: And therefore it was fitter to "ask them who heard him," than to enquire of him, who was the perſon accuſed, and ſo might not be believed in his own caſe. He did not go about to conceal any thing, which thoſe who intend to raiſe ſedition are wont to do; but what he ſaid in private was the ſame he ſpake in publick. (Fox.) Learn hence, 1. That it is not unuſual for the beſt of doctrines, to paſs under the odious name and imputation of error and hereſy. Chriſt's own doctrine is here queſtioned. 2. That the miniſters of Chriſt who have truth on their ſide, may and ought to ſpeak boldly and openly. Truth bluſhes at nothing, except at its being conceal'd. (B. and Q.) This text alſo confutes them who ſay, Chriſt came not to Jeruſalem, leſt the Romans ſhould ſuſpect him of affecting a kingdom: For here he teſtifies, that he "taught daily in the temple:" After his firſt miracle done in Cana of Galilee, we find him going up to Jeruſalem to keep the paſſover; where he abode at leaſt eight days: And many, ſeeing the miracles that he did, believed on him, chap. v. 1. and chap. vi. 4. he aſcends again to the feaſt; ſo that we have reaſon to believe, he never declined that feaſt. He alſo went up to the feaſt of tabernacles, chap. vii. 10. and preached to the people in the temple, ver. 14. and wrought ſuch wonders, that the Jews cried out, "When Chriſt cometh, will he do more miracles than theſe?" ver. 31. This feaſt being ended, he goes to the mount of Olives, and returns the next day to preach in the temple, chap. viii. 1, 2. At the feaſt of Dedication, we find him again "walking in Solomon's Porch," chap. x. 23. and there declaring himſelf to be the Son of God. Chap. 11. He is at Bethany, but two miles diſtant from Jeruſalem, where he raiſes Lazarus from the dead; and from Bethany he goes to Jeruſalem, the people going before him, and crying, Hoſanna to the Son of David, chap. xii. (W.)

One of the officers.] Fearing, leſt he ſhould be ſuſpected a favourer of Chriſt or his doctrine. (G.) But if he who did this was Malchus, as is ſuggeſted by Biſhop Taylor, from the famous Vida, the indignity was extremely heightened, by his baſe ingratitude to the Holy Jeſus for his having miraculouſly healed that wretch's ear. For he

Stroke Jeſus with the palm of his hand.] The word rhapiſma hath been differently interpreted, according to the divers ſignifications put upon the verb rhapizo, from whence it is derived. Some will have it properly meant of a ſtroke given either with a rod, a ſtick, or a cudgel; becauſe rhapis is by Heſychius render'd a rod or wand. But the old Greek and Latin Lexicon renders it a box, or ſtroke with the hand: Agreeable to which it is underſtood by St. Auguſtine, Nonnus, Sedulius, Suidas, and Juvencus. (H.) Some again do make this diſtinction between colaphus and rhapiſma, that the former is given with the fiſt, or hand clenched; and the latter with the flat or open hand: Both which are expreſſed by Juvenal, where he ſays,

> ——— Nec pugnis cædere pectus
> Te veto, nec plana faciem contundere palma.

By the former of which is meant, what we call a blow on the breaſt, or box on the ear; and by the latter, a ſlap on the face. (Leigh) But of which ſoever of theſe indignities we underſtand it here, it muſt be a completion of the prophecies, where it is ſaid of Chriſt, "I gave my back to the ſmiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair," Iſa. l. 6. "They ſhall ſmite the judge of Iſrael with a rod upon the cheek," Mic. v. 1. "They have ſmitten me upon the cheek reproachfully," Job xvi. 10. And "he giveth his cheek to him that ſmiteth him," &c. Lament. iii. 30. Which very circumſtances of the paſſion, Lactantius affirms to have been foretold by the Erythræan Sybil. (Tayl.) And it was for this very reaſon that Chriſt choſe to ſuffer this, that he might confound and humble the pride of man, and leave the proud an example of patience; which if not imitated, will certainly condemn them. (Q.)

Why ſmiteſt thou me?] Here we may obſerve the meek and gentle reproof which the Lord Jeſus gives to this rude officer: He doth not ſtrike him dead upon the place, nor cauſe that arm to wither which was ſtretched forth againſt the Lord's Anointed; but only lets him know that there was no reaſon for his ſtriking of him. Where note, that tho' our Saviour doth not revenge himſelf, yet he vindicates himſelf, and defends himſelf both with law and reaſon: "If I have ſpoken evil, bear witneſs of the evil; but if well, why ſmiteſt thou me?" Hence we learn, 1. That to ſtand up in defence of our innocency, is not contrary either to the Chriſtian duties of patience and forgiveneſs, or to the practice and example of our Lord Jeſus. 2. That when the ſoldier had ſtruck Chriſt upon one cheek, he did not turn to him the other alſo, according to Matt. v. 39. Which evidently ſhews, that that precept, "If they ſmite thee on one cheek turn the other alſo," commands only this, that rather than take revenge we ſhould bear a ſecond injury. Chriſtians ought rather to ſuffer a double wrong, than to ſeek a private revenge. Chriſtianity obliges us to bear many injuries patiently, rather than to avenge one privately: But tho' it binds up our hands from private revenge, yet it doth not ſhut our mouths from complaining to publick authority. Chriſt's own practice here, expounds the precept elſewhere; for he complains here of the officer's injuſtice in ſmiting him before the judicatory, and challenges the man to bear witneſs of the evil. (W. and B.) It is the obſervation of Suidas and Phavorinus, that dero ſignifies to excoriate, but dairo to ſmite. And yet it is certain, that dero bears the ſenſe of ſmiting in the New Teſtament, Mark xii. 3. Luke xxii. 63. Acts xvi. 37. 1 Cor. ix. 26. 2 Cor. xi. 20. as well here, and ſo alſo in profane authors; Scholiaſt. Ariſtoph. in Veſpis, p. 463. F. (W.) So that, as Grævius juſtly remarks, no rule or determination of the criticks is ſo firmly eſtabliſhed, but that in ſome caſe it fails, and admits exceptions. (Blackw.) To which I may add, upon the former part of the verſe, that whereas the great St. Cyprian reads thoſe words exprobra de malo, that is, upbraid me with the evil, Biſhop Fell very reaſonably conjectures, that the word intended was exproba, that is, prove or make out fully the charge which ye alledge againſt me: For thus it will agree with the original word martyreſon, to which our tranſlation literally agrees, "Bear witneſs of the evil." (Marſh. Cypr.)

Sent him bound.] See the notes on ver. 19.

Ver. 25, 26, 27. And Simon Peter ſtood and warmed himſelf: They ſaid therefore unto him, Art not thou alſo one of his diſciples? He denied it, and ſaid, I am not. One of the ſervants of the high prieſt, being his kinſman whoſe ear Peter cut off, ſaith, Did not I ſee thee in the garden with him? Peter then denied again, and immediately the cock crew.

And Simon Peter.] All the four Evangeliſts give us an account of Peter's fall in denying his Maſter. And therein we have obſervable, 1. The ſin itſelf which he fell into, the denial of Chriſt, and this backed with an oath : He ſware that he “ knew not the man.” Lord ! how may the ſlaviſh fear of ſuffering drive the holieſt and beſt of men to commit the fouleſt and worſt of ſins. 2. The occaſion of his fall. 1. His preſumptuous confidence of his own ſtrength and ſtanding ; “ Tho' all men forſake thee, yet will not I.” Lord ! To preſume upon ourſelves is the ready way to provoke thee to leave us to ourſelves. If ever we ſtand in the day of trial, 'tis the fear of falling muſt enable us to ſtand ; we ſoon fall, if we believe it impoſſible to fall. 2. His being in bad company, amongſt Chriſt's enemies; Peter had better have been a-cold by himſelf alone, than warming himſelf at a fire which was compaſſed in with the blaſphemies of the ſoldiers, where his conſcience, tho' not ſeared, was yet made hard. Obſerve, 3. The reiteration or repetition of this ſin ; he denied Chriſt again and again ; he denied him firſt with a lie, then with an oath and curſe. Oh, how dangerous is it, not to reſiſt the beginnings of ſin ! If we yield to one temptation, Satan will aſſault us with more and ſtronger. 4. The heinous and aggravating circumſtances of Peter's guilt. 1. From the character of his perſon, a diſciple, an apoſtle, one of the chief apoſtles ; yet he denies Chriſt. 2. From the perſon whom he denies, his Maſter, his Saviour. 3. The time when he denied him, ſoon after that Chriſt had waſhed his feet ; yea, ſoon after he had received the ſacrament from Chriſt's own hand. How unreaſonable then is their objection againſt coming to the Lord's table, that ſome who go to it diſhonour Chriſt aſſoon as they come from it ! Such examples ought not to diſcourage us from coming to the ordinance, but ſhould excite and increaſe our watchfulneſs after we have been there, that our after-deportment may be ſuitable to the ſolemnity of a ſacramental table. (B.) See the notes on ver. 15. and chap. xiii. 38.

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. Then led they Jeſus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment : and it was early, and they themſelves went not into the judgment-hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the paſſover. Pilate then went out unto them, and ſaid, What accuſation bring ye againſt this man ? They anſwered and ſaid unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee. Then ſaid Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death : That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, ſignifying what death he ſhould die. Then Pilate enter'd into the judgment-hall again, and called Jeſus, and ſaid unto him, Art thou the king of the Jews ? Jeſus anſwered him, Sayeſt thou this thing of thyſelf, or did others tell it thee of me ? Pilate anſwered, Am I a Jew ? Thine own nation and the chief prieſts have delivered thee unto me : What haſt thou done ? Jeſus anſwered, My kingdom is not of this world : If my kingdom were of this world, then would my ſervants fight, that I ſhould not be delivered to the Jews ; but now is my kingdom not from hence. Pilate therefore ſaid unto him, Art thou a king then ? Jeſus anſwered, Thou ſayeſt that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould bear witneſs unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth, heareth my voice. Pilate ſaith unto him, What is truth ? And when he had ſaid this, he went out again unto the Jews, and ſaith unto them, I find in him no fault at all. But ye have a cuſtom, that I ſhould releaſe unto you one at the paſſover : will ye therefore that I releaſe unto you the king of the Jews ? Then cried they all again, ſaying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

Unto the hall of judgment.] There were two courts of judicature which our bleſſed Saviour was brought before and condemn'd by. 1. The eccleſiaſtical court or Sanhedrim ; in which the high prieſt ſat as judge : Here he was condemned to death for blaſphemy. 2. The civil court or Judgment-hall ; where Pontius Pilate the Roman governour ſat judge : Who, becauſe he was a Gentile, they would not go into his houſe, “ leſt they ſhould be defiled ;” for they accounted it a legal pollution, to come into the houſe of a Gentile. Where obſerve, The notorious hypocriſy of theſe Jews ; they ſcruple the defiling of themſelves by coming near the judgment-hall, where Pilate ſat, but make no ſcruple at all to defile themſelves with the guilt of that innocent blood which Pilate ſhed. When perſons are over zealous for ceremonial obſervations, they are often-times too remiſs with reference to moral duties. They “ brought him to the judgment-hall, but they themſelves went not in, leſt they ſhould be defiled.” (B.) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 1.

It was early.] How the foregoing night was mis-ſpent, may be ſeen in the notes on Matt. xxvi. 57, &c. Mark xiv. 53, &c. and Luke xvii. 54, &c.

Leſt they ſhould be defiled.] The Prætor's hall was full of Pilate's Roman ſoldiers : Now, theſe being Gentiles, are in that condition of which Maimonides ſaith, that they are to be accounted for ſuch as have a perpetual iſſue of blood upon them, whenſoever any thing is to be done, wherein the queſtion of cleanneſs or uncleanneſs is conſiderable ; as here in the eating the paſſover, of which no unclean perſon was to partake. So that, by preſence among the Gentiles, this legal uncleanneſs is contracted, as much as by any thing. Hence is that of Acts x. 28. “ It is unlawful for a Jew to be joined to, or converſe with an heathen :” So Acts xi. 3. “ Why did'ſt thou go in to thoſe that were uncircumciſed, and did'ſt eat with them ?” And Juſtin, out of Trogus, ſpeaking of the Jews, and affirming falſly, that they were baniſhed out of Egypt, for fear of infecting the Egyptians with ſome diſeaſe, Leſt, ſaith he, they ſhould be avoided, and hated by all other nations for the ſame cauſe, they took care never to communicate with ſtrangers, which being firſt done on this cauſe (ſo this heathen had reſolved to defame them) by degrees turned into diſcipline and religion ; that is, became a ſettled law among them. So Apollonius Molo, in Joſeph. l. 2. cont. Appion. They might not converſe with them which choſe to live after other cuſtoms of life. (H. and W.)

What accuſation bring ye againſt this man ?] See the accuſations our Lord was charged with, in the notes on Luke xxiii. 2, &c.

If he were not a malefactor.] When Pilate firſt ask'd theſe pious patriots, what accuſation they brought againſt the priſoner, they ſeem to ſtand very much upon their reputation ; “ If (ſay they) he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up to thee.” No ! Good men ! They were admired by the poor deluded multitude, for their imaginary holineſs, mortification, ſelf-denial, and all the ſhewy parts of religion ; And, ſure, they could be no deceivers ! They never knew what malice, jealouſy, faction, or ambition meant : And therefore, had they not been abundantly apprized of the priſoner's notorious guilt, they'd never have proſecuted him, before ſo juſt, and ſo diſcerning a judge as Pilate was ! (Milbourne.) That which was defective in proof, they would have ſupplied by their ſole authority. (G.) But there cannot poſſibly be a higher act of injuſtice, than to deſire that a judge ſhould ſuppoſe the accuſed perſon guilty of the crime, without any farther examination. It is no ſtrange and extraordinary thing, to ſee innocent perſons oppreſſed by arbitrary proceedings, without any legal proceſs : But for a man to be brought before a judge, in order to be deliver'd up directly to execution, without any proof of his crime, or any examination concerning it, is a new way of oppreſſion, firſt invented and contrived againſt the Saviour of the world. (Q.)

Judge him according to your law.] The Jews, being now under the power of the Romans, tho' they had a power of judging and cenſuring criminals in ſmaller matters, yet not in capital caſes. They could not pronounce a ſentence of death upon any perſon, ſay ſome : They might, and did, ſay others, puniſh blaſphemers by ſtoning them to death ; but then their ſentence was to be ratified by the Roman power. Accordingly, they had here, in their eccleſiaſtical court, condemned Chriſt for blaſphemy : And now they bring him to the Roman governor to confirm the ſentence of death. From hence it appears, that Chriſt was the true Meſſias ; being ſent into the world, when “ the ſceptre was departed from Judah,” according to that ancient prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10. The Jews had no power abſolutely to condemn any man, or to put him to death : But this power the Roman Emperor reſerv'd to his own deputy. This contributed to the fulfilling of our Saviour's words, Matt. xx. 19. that he ſhould be “ delivered to the Gentiles to be crucified ;” which was not a Jewiſh, but a Roman puniſhment. Had the Jews put him to death, they had ſtoned him. But Chriſt was to be made a curſe for us, by hanging upon a tree : And accordingly, the Jews executed the counſel of God, tho' they knew it not, by refuſing to put him to death themſelves. Learn hence, How willing Chriſt was to undergo a ſhameful, painful, and accurſed death, that he might teſtify his love unto, and procure a bleſſing for his people. For thus “ the ſaying of Jeſus was fulfilled, which he ſpake, ſignifying what death he ſhould die.” (B.) See the next note.

It is not lawful for us to put any man to death.] The Jews ſay, that the power of inflicting capital puniſhments upon offenders, was taken from them by the Romans forty years before the deſtruction of their city and temple. So we read in the Jeruſalem Talmud. L. Sanhedrim, chap. 7. in that of Babylon, Sanhedr. fol. 41. in aboda zara, fol. 2. in Maimonides, Tr. Sanhedr. cap. 14. ſect. 13 And if it had remained with them at this time, 'tis ſuppoſed they would have been more ſpeedy in cutting off our Saviour. But yet it ſeemeth evident, that the Jews ſtill retained the power of judging and condemning thoſe to death, who were Jews by nature and original, and by their laws deſerved to die. For after they were reduced to a Roman province, this privilege, ſaith Joſephus, was ſtill granted to them, to uſe the ſacred inſtitutions and cuſtoms derived to them from their fathers. And it was granted to Hyrcanus, their high-prieſt, That if any controverſy aroſe, touching the diſcipline of the Jews, the judgment of it ſhould be referred to him. Accordingly we find the high prieſt and his council ſtoning Stephen, not by the rage of Zealots, as ſome conceive, but according to the law, that the blaſphemer ſhould be ſtoned, Levit. xxiv. 16. Deut. xvii. 6, 7. For he is brought before the high-prieſt and his council, Acts vi. 15. and vii. 1. who were the proper judges in this caſe: Witneſſes are produced, who teſtify before them, that he had "ſpoken blaſphemous words againſt the temple and the law, againſt Moſes and againſt God," Acts vi. 11, 13. theſe witneſſes do alſo ſtone him firſt, according as the law required. Thus alſo Saul, armed with the power of the high-prieſt and elders, perſecuted the Jewiſh Chriſtians, "unto death, and led them bound to Jeruſalem to be puniſhed," Acts xxii. 4, 5. Thus alſo would they have "judged Paul after their own law," Acts xxiv. 6. and would have killed him, Acts xxiii. 37. had not Lyſias, the chief captain, reſcued him from their hands: This, ſay they, he did by violence, i. e. by an invaſion of their rights: This, ſaith he, I did, "knowing that he was a Roman;" and ſo would not have done it, had he been a Jew only. They therefore ſeem to ſay, they could not do this in the caſe of Chriſt, becauſe they had accuſed him before Pilate; not of crimes committed againſt their law, but of ſedition, and aſpiring to a kingdom, in prejudice to Cæſar and the Roman government; of which things it belonged to Pilate, not to them, to judge. But perhaps this matter may be compounded, by reflecting on Ananus the high-prieſt, who killed James the brother of our Lord, and ſtoned many other Chriſtians, as being tranſgreſſors of the law: This, ſaith Joſephus, they who beſt underſtood their laws diſliked, ſaying, that Ananus ſhould not have called a council, concerning life and death, without licenſe from Albinus the Roman preſident: Whence I infer, that the power of inflicting capital puniſhments, even upon the Jews converted to the Chriſtian faith, was then ſo taken from them, that they could not regularly do it, without leave firſt obtained from the Roman preſident; but with his leave they might inflict upon them any capital puniſhment denounced againſt malefactors by their law. And if it be here ſaid that Pilate gave them leave to inflict this death on our Lord, by ſaying "Take ye him, and crucify him," chap. xix. 6. To this the anſwer is, 1. That Pilate had given them no ſuch licence when he ſpake theſe words: 2. That crucifixion was none of the kinds of death aſſigned by their law: And, 3. That Pilate by theſe words ſeems not to authorize them to do this, but rather to ſay to them, Do it at your peril, for I judge him innocent. See the note there. (W.)

That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled.] But it was God, and not the Jews, who intended the fulfilling of theſe words of Chriſt. (Lukin) See the notes on chap. xii. 32. and Matt. xx. 19.

My kingdom is not of this world.] And ſo hath nothing to do with, or oppoſite to the Roman government: It is not of human or mundane original, but from heaven; and ſo it meddles not with the affairs of this world: It hath none of the pomp or ſplendor of the world, none to fight for it with any carnal weapons, Luke ix. 56. It exerciſes no dominion over mens bodies, but their ſouls only. So the phraſe "not to be of this world," ſignifies, chap. viii. 23. xv. 19. and xvii. 14. Eſpecially when 'tis oppoſed to being "from the Father," 1 John ii. 16. and "from God," 1 John iv. 4, &c. So when Domitian enquired of the kingdom of Chriſt, of what nature it was, and when, and where it was to be ſet up; the nephews of Jude, who was the brother of our Lord, anſwered, It was not an earthly, but an heavenly kingdom, to be ſet up at the end of the world, as Euſebius relates. (W.) The kingdom of the Meſſiah, ſo often ſpoken of by the prophets, is the kingdom of God, and of heaven, the dominion of Chriſt, the city of God, &c. Dan. ii. 44. vii. 14, 27. Hebr. i. 8, &c. The end of its rule on earth is for the ſalvation of ſouls. It conſiſts of the elect of God, called out from the world, and "tranſlated from the power of darkneſs into the kingdom of his dear Son," Col. i. 13. "A peculiar people, zealous of good works; for whom Chriſt gave himſelf, that he might purify them to himſelf from all iniquity, Tit. ii. 14. For which purpoſe, grace and the Holy Spirit of God are neceſſary: Not the arm of fleſh, or ſecular power, Acts ii. 47. xx. 28. Eph. i. 21, 22. And if the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, or the parables and promiſes of the New, have truth, its dominion ſhall be enlarged, till all the kingdoms of the earth ſhall become ſubject to the ſceptre of Chriſt, without detriment to the rights and powers of the governors of this world; but confirming their juſt authority, wherever the kingdom of Chriſt ſhall be eſtabliſh'd in truth and righteouſneſs. But now, concerning this kingdom of our bleſſed Saviour and Redeemer, there are two fatal errors: The one calculated for diſturbing the peace, and invading the rights of mankind, under pretence of a claim from Chriſt, or perhaps of his vicar, to earthly dominion and property. To theſe, as well as to Pilate, our Lord ſays, "My kingdom is not of this world." The other is no leſs pernicious, in a contrary way: For it brings the kingdom of Chriſt, even as to thoſe things wherein it conſiſts, under ſubjection to the ſtate; and will not allow the powers of the one to be diſtinct from the authority of the other: That religion which the prince commands, tho' of the Leviathan, inſtead of the Goſpel, is to be profeſs'd, and not that which Jeſus Chriſt hath inſtituted. Theſe, and ſuch like errors, in Eraſtus, Mr. Hobbs, and later authors, ariſe in general from hence, that there is no coercive power in the kingdom of Chriſt; but that, contrary to earthly dominion and worldly wiſdom, the faith of the Goſpel is founded upon ſufferings. In anſwer to which kind of doctrines, it may ſuffice to ſhew, 1. That Jeſus Chriſt, as King and Lawgiver, hath given proper laws to his church, and enforced them with penal ſanctions. 2. That he hath appointed a diſtinct order of men, to miniſter in holy things in his church. And, 3. That he hath inveſted theſe his miniſters with the ſole authority of admitting members into his church, and of excluding from its communion. (Whitſ.) The kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt "is not of this world:" And ſhall a Chriſtian then ſeek after honour, riches, and power here below? We are called indeed to reign; but it is in heaven, and not upon the earth. As the kingdom of Chriſt, being "not of this world," doth not intrench upon the kingdoms of earthly princes; ſo theſe are not of the ſpiritual world, which is the church. We muſt not be "of this world," if we deſire to belong to the kingdom of Chriſt: And he receives us into the number of his ſubjects by baptiſm, only on condition that we renounce the world and all its pomps and vanities. (Q.) See the notes on chap. vi. 15. and Luke xii. 14.

Then would my ſervants fight.] That is, my ſubjects. For ſervants are not here to be underſtood, as ſome would inſinuate, to ſignify ſlaves and vaſſals, but ſubjects in general; who as ſuch, owe all duty and ſervice to their prince, as far as he needs them. (Sherl.) The ſubjects, or ſervants, of all lawful princes, are obliged, by the very nature of government, and the agreement of all mankind, to endeavour, by force of arms, if otherwiſe they cannot, to reſcue and defend their ſoveraigns from any injuries offer'd them by any of their enemies. (Milb.) And the original word agonizomai here uſed, ſignifies ſomewhat more than is expreſs'd in our verſion by fighting; viz. ſuch a furious fighting, as brave ſoldiers and loyal ſubjects are wont to exerciſe, when their king himſelf is with them in battle, and they ſee his ſacred perſon in the extremity of danger. (Maſſey.)

To this end was I born.] Chriſt was indeed a King, in more ſenſes than one. He was next heir in lineal deſcent to the throne of David; as well as appointed by God King or Protector of the faithful to the world's end (Chandl.) And therefore his anſwer to Pilate is in the affirmative, viz. (as the original words import) "Thou ſayeſt true; for a King I am." (Maſs.) But, whereas the Socinians infer, that Chriſt was born before he came into the world, becauſe he ſays, "To this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world," &c. and that this latter phraſe only denotes his entrance on his publick miniſtry, chap. iii. 17, 19. ix. 39. and xi. 27. This does not at all follow from theſe words; which only may import the ſame thing, viz. That Chriſt was born, and came into the world, to this end, "that he might bear witneſs unto the truth." See the notes on the text here cited. (W.) See thoſe alſo on chap. vi. 15. Mark xv. 2. and Luke xxiii. 3.

What is truth?] Obſerve here the queſtion Pilate put to Chriſt, "What is truth?" A moſt noble and important queſtion, had it been put with an honeſt heart, with a mind fairly diſpoſed for information and ſatisfaction: But it is evident, Pilate's enquiry was not ſerious: Nay, it is generally thought that Pilate asked this queſtion in ſcorn, contempt and deriſion; for he ſtays not for our Lord's anſwer, but as ſoon as he ſtarted this query, went off the bench in haſte. Learn hence, That this queſtion, "What is truth"? or How may we come to the knowledge of the truth? is of unſpeakable uſe and importance; and a queſtion whereon the whole frame and conſtitution of religion depends; becauſe truth is claimed by all parties of men, by all profeſſors of religion. Ask the different parties, from the Pope at Rome, to the pooreſt Quaker and Muggletonian, Where is truth? and they will all tell you, they are in the poſſeſſion of it: Every ſect hath thus much of popery with it, that the profeſſors of it think themſelves infallible, and every one cries out, Here is truth. But God has given us a twofold light to ſearch for truth by; namely, the light of reaſon, and the light of ſcripture, or divine revelation. The former, Solomon calls "the candle of the Lord," ſet up in our breaſts by God, on purpoſe to diſcover truth unto us. God allows us, yea, enjoins us, the free and impartial uſe of our underſtandings and judgments, in order to the finding out of divine truth: But becauſe nature's light, or the light of natural reaſon, is not clear and bright enough to give us a proſpect of ſupernatural truths; (for nature and reaſon can never dictate thoſe things which depend wholly upon God's free-grace and good pleaſure;) ſuch are the doctrines of a Saviour and Redeemer, and the method of man's ſalvation by the ſufferings of the Son of God: (It had been blaſphemy once to have ſuppoſed ſuch things, had not God revealed them in ſcripture:) Therefore the ſecond ſtandard of divine truth, is the infallible word of God. The Goſpel of Chriſt is the way and the truth: "Truth came by Jeſus Chriſt." And would men be ruled and conducted by theſe unalterable ſtandards of truth, namely, right reaſon and divine revelation, they would eaſily agree in their Judgments, what is to be believed, and all diſputes and controverſies would vaniſh. Right reaſon and inſpir[illegible] ſcriptures are the beſt judges of controverſies: They, being the fixed ſtandards and meaſures of divine truth, can beſt reſolve Pilate's queſtion here, and tell us, "What is truth." Then cried they all again.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 22. and Luke xxiii. 18, 23.

Not this man, but Barabbas.] We compare and prefer Barabbas to Jeſus Chriſt, whenever we chuſe to follow our own paſſions rather than the Goſpel; the Spirit of the world rather than that of God; and the inclinations of the firſt Adam, a ſinner, rather than thoſe of the ſecond who is holineſs itſelf. We abhor that which the Jews did but once: And yet we do the ſame every day, without any remorſe or concern, and even without conſidering what it is we are doing. The Jews renounced Chriſt; but it was before they had received his Spirit, or were made members of his body. The ingratitude of a Chriſtian, who has taſted his heavenly gifts, and yet, by his actions, ſeems continually to cry out, We will not have Jeſus Chriſt, that is, we will have none of his humility, his poverty, his mortification, his croſs, &c. has nothing which comes near it. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 18.

C H A P. XIX.

Chriſt is ſcourged, crown'd with thorns, mock'd and ſmitten. Pilate, tho' deſirous to releaſe him, is prevail'd upon, by the Jews importunity, to deliver him up to them to crucify him. The ſoldiers caſt lots for his garments. Chriſt recommendeth his mother to John. His Death and burial.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. THEN Pilate therefore took Jeſus, and ſcourged him. And the ſoldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe, and ſaid, Hail king of the Jews: And they ſmote him with their hands. Pilate therefore went forth again, and ſaith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him. Then came Jeſus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe: And Pilate ſaith unto them, Behold the man. When the chief prieſts therefore and officers ſaw him, they cried out, ſaying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate ſaith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: For I find no fault in him. The Jews anſwered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God.

Took Jeſus and ſcourged him.] See the notes on Luke xxiii. 16.

A Crown of Thorns, &c.] All theſe things were enſigns and marks of ſoveraignty: And Almighty God cauſed the royal dignity of his Son to ſhine forth, even in the midſt of his greateſt abaſement. Whence was all this jearing and ſport, but to flout majeſty? And why did the Son of God undergo all this ignominy, diſgrace, and ſhame? But to ſhew what was due unto us for our ſins: As alſo to give us an example, to bear all the ſcorn, reproach, and ſhame imaginable, for the ſake of him, "who, for the joy that was ſet before him, deſpiſed the ſhame, as well as endured the croſs." (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 29. Mark xv. 15. and Luke xxiii. 11

I find no fault in him.] See the notes on Luke xxiii. 4, 14.

Crucify him, crucify him.] See the notes on Luke xxiii. 21.

Take ye him, and crucify him] Pilate does not yet give them leave to do this: But rather ſeems here to ſay, If ye will have it ſo, do it yourſelves at your peril; for I cannot condemn a man without a fault. (G. and W.) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 23.

By our law he ought to die.] The Jews could not here mean the law againſt falſe prophets, Deut. xviii. 20. partly becauſe the reaſon here aſſign'd doth not prove Chriſt a falſe prophet; partly becauſe Chriſt neither tempted them to worſhip himſelf, and much leſs to worſhip falſe Gods; nor did he give them any falſe ſign; which are the only reaſons aſſigned in that chapter for putting the falſe prophet to death. How much more probable is it, that they meant the law againſt blaſphemy?" Levit. xxiv. 16. becauſe they do not only ſeek to kill him as a blaſphemer, for theſe very words, John v. 18. but to ſtone him, which was the very kind of death aſſigned by that law to the blaſphemer. See John x. 33, 36. Hence, in the other Evangeliſts, they charge him with blaſphemy, and judge him worthy of death for this confeſſion, that he was the Son of God, Matt. xxvi. 64, &c. Mark xiv. 61. Luke xxii. 70, 71. as judging, that by this aſſertion, he "being a man made himſelf equal with God." Schilictingius owns this; but then he adds, that the Jews miſ-underſtood, and calumniated him in this inference; Chriſt meaning no more by this aſſertion, than that he was the true Meſſiah. But, againſt this mitigation of the import of the words, there lies a plain objection, That tho' Chriſt was ſo much concerned for the honour of his Father, whoſe honour muſt be much impaired by the advancement of the beſt of men to an equality with him; and tho' this blaſphemy, if truly laid to his charge, was a ſufficient evidence that he was not the Chriſt, yet neither in the 5th or 10th of John doth he ever plainly ſay he was not God, or that he never did intend to ſignify by this expreſſion that he was equal to God, (as is ſhewed in the notes on thoſe two places;) which yet had he been only man ſeems more neceſſary to have been done, for the honour of God, and for the removal of ſo juſt a prejudice againſt him, than to remove any other calumny they falſly charged upon him. (W.) See the notes on chap. v. 18. and x. 33, 36.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, he was the more afraid; And went again into the judgment-hall, and ſaith unto Jeſus, Whence art thou? But Jeſus gave him no anſwer. Then ſaith Pilate unto him, Speakeſt thou not unto me? knoweſt thou not, that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to releaſe thee? Jeſus anſwered, Thou could'ſt have no power at all againſt me, except it were given thee from above; therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater ſin. And from thenceforth Pilate ſought to releaſe him: but the Jews cried out, ſaying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæſar's friend: Whoſoever maketh himſelf a king, ſpeakeſt againſt Cæſar. When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, he brought Jeſus forth, and ſat down in the judgment-ſeat, in a place that is called the pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha. And it was the preparation of the paſſover, and about the ſixth hour: And he ſaith unto the Jews, Behold your king. But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate ſaith unto them, Shall I crucify your king? The chief prieſts anſwered, We have no king but Cæſar.

He was the more afraid.] When a man knows his duty, and has not yet ſold himſelf to iniquity, he cannot do a wicked action without ſome remorſe: But theſe remorſes are only ſo many witneſſes againſt the ſinner. (Q.)

Jeſus gave him no anſwer.] Here our Saviour himſelf practiſes his own precept, Matt. vii. 6. (G.) When Pilate asked him, "Whence art thou?" Chriſt, being unwilling to obſtruct his own ſufferings, or to diſcover any thing that might hinder Pilate from proceeding againſt him, would "give him no anſwer," having before made a reaſonable and ſufficient defence (B.) Had he juſtified himſelf, and avoided death, we could never have been juſtified, or delivered from that which is eternal. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. vii. 6.

Knoweſt thou not that I have power.] Obſerve here, 1. How offended Pilate was at Chriſt's ſilence, and how unreaſonably he boaſts of his power and authority: "Have not I power to crucify thee, and power to releaſe thee?" It is the great ſin and ſnare of men in power, to forget from whom they derive their power, and to think that they may employ their power as they pleaſe. 2. The piety and meekneſs of our Saviour's anſwer: " Thou could'ſt have no power againſt me, except it were given thee from above." That is, thou haſt no power over me, nor could'ſt thou inflict any puniſhment upon me, were it not that my Father had, in his great wiſdom, divine counſel, and for glorious ends, permitted it ſo to be. Learn, That Chriſt's being under the power of any man, how great and eminent ſoever, did flow from the peculiar diſpenſation of God, who in his wiſe and wonderful counſel ſo ordered it, and ordained it for the redemption and ſalvation of his people; he was above all human power as God, and no ways obnoxious to Pilate's power, being a perfectly innocent man. 3. How Chriſt charges his death more upon Judas and the Jews, than upon Pilate and the Gentiles: " They that delivered me unto thee have the greater ſin." Not that Pilate was excuſed from ſin, in delivering Chriſt to be crucified: He ſinned heinouſly in abuſing his power; but Judas ſinned more in delivering him up to the chief prieſts, and the chief prieſts in delivering him up to Pilate, than Pilate himſelf, whom they made a tool to ſerve their malice and revenge: They had better means of knowledge than he, and ſo ſinned againſt more light than he; and conſequently their guilt was greater, and their condemnation heavier, than his. (B.) Pilate, forgetful of his duty, boaſts of what he has power to do. And, at the ſame time, condemns himſelf, as having ſo much power, and yet baſely abuſing it, in compliance with the humour of an outrageous multitude. (G.) A good judge ought never to make himſelf fear'd by his power and authority; but rather to tremble himſelf, through the fear of abuſing it: Great authority, with little or no virtue, is a very dangerous ſtate. (Q.) Neither Pilate himſelf, nor the devil whoſe part he acted, could have had any power againſt our Lord, had it not been derived from above. Thus, in Luke xxii. 53. Chriſt tells the Jews, " It was their hour," and preſently ſubjoins, " and the power of darkneſs;" Both in conjunction were agreed to oppreſs him. (Fell's Cypr.)

Hath the greater ſin.] I take the meaning of the whole verſe to be this; I readily acknowledge thy power over malefactors and common men: But thou could'ſt have no power over me, who am the Son of God, and free from thoſe crimes which are laid to my charge, unleſs " it were given thee (or permitted) from above." Therefore he, who knew my perſon, and was a witneſs of my innocent and inoffenſive behaviour, and notwithſtanding " delivered me unto thee," that I might be crucified as a malefactor, is guilty of a greater ſin, than thine will be in condemning me. (Fox) See the notes on Luke xxii. 22. and xxiii. 23.]

Speaketh againſt Cæſar.] Or rather, oppoſeth Cæſar. (H) For the word antilego is not only uſed to ſignify a contradiction in words, as Hoſea iv. 4. Luke ii. 34. xx. 27. and Acts xiii. 45. and elſewhere, but alſo a real contradiction, or oppoſition; as Iſa. l. 5. Rom. x. 21. (Leigh) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 2.

Gabbatha.] The word is Syriac, or Chaldee, and ſo called Hebrew here, according to the cuſtom of the New Teſtament, which calls the Syriac language (being at that time the vulgar of the Jews) " the Hebrew." (H.) See the notes on Luke xiii. 34.

The preparation of the paſſover.] That is, the day immediately before it; when they prepared every thing needful for the ſolemnization. (B.) All that paſſed here was truly the preparation of the grand paſſover; the paſſover of the Chriſtians, which was juſt going to be ſacrificed. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 62.

About the ſixth hour.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 45. and Mark xv. 25.

We have no king but Cæſar.] That is, We do not acknowledge any other. It was the cuſtom of the Greeks and Helleniſts, to call thoſe kings, whom the Romans called emperors, becauſe their authority was the ſame: God's providence thus directing their actions and words, ſo that the Jews ſhould both renounce all hopes of the Meſſiah, and condemn themſelves of rebellion for the wars which they afterwards maintained againſt Cæſar. (G. and W.)

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jeſus, and led him away. And he, bearing his croſs, went forth into a place called the place of a ſkull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha. Where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either ſide one, and Jeſus in the midſt. And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the croſs: And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS. This title then read many of the Jews; for the place where Jeſus was crucified was nigh to the city; and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin. Then ſaid the chief prieſts of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The king of the Jews; but that he ſaid, I am king of the Jews. Pilate anſwered, What I have written, I have written.

Then delivered he him therefore unto them.] That is, to the ſoldiers. (G.) See ver. 23. and the notes on Luke xxiii. 21, 24.

Bearing his croſs.] Chriſt's carrying his croſs was a part of the Romans cuſtom of crucifying; as we learn from Plutarch, Artemidorus, Plautus, &c. And whereas in the other Goſpels there is no mention of this, but only of their preſſing Simon of Cyrene to carry it for him, which is not mentioned here, the way of reconciling that difficulty is very eaſy, by affirming that he firſt bare it himſelf, according to the Roman cuſtom, which St. John, according to his wont, mentions, becauſe it was omitted by the reſt; but after, meeting Simon by the way, they made him bear it for him. (H.) It is generally ſuppoſed, that Jeſus bore the whole croſs; that is, the long part, and tranſverſe or croſs part: But to him that conſiders this, it will ſeem impoſſible. This, Lipſius, in his treatiſe De ſupplicio crucis, ſeems to ſet in a true light, ſaying, That Jeſus only carried the tranſverſe beam, the long piece of timber being before fixed in the ground. This is indeed more likely, and more agreeable to the old manner of crucifying malefactors, and that Jeſus only carried the croſs part, the body of the croſs being upon the place, either already fixed, or prepared for its ſtation. And therefore, ſays the ſame author, painters are very much miſtaken in their deſcription of Jeſus carrying the whole croſs. (Howel)

In the Hebrew, Golgotha.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 33. and Luke xxiii. 33.

Pilate wrote a title.] See the notes on Mark xv. 26. and Luke xxiii. 38.

Ver. 23, 24. Then the ſoldiers, when they had crucified Jeſus, took his garments (and made four parts, to every ſoldier a part) and alſo his coat: Now the coat was without ſeam, woven from the top throughout. They ſaid therefore among themſelves, Let us not rent it, but caſt lots for it, whoſe it ſhall be: That the ſcripture might be fulfilled, which ſaith, They parted my raiment among them, and for my veſture they did caſt lots. Theſe things therefore the ſoldiers did.

Took his garments.] The ſoldiers aſſigned to this command were four, each of which had a part of our Lord's upper garment. This diviſion of it into four parts was very eaſy, becauſe this habit was compoſed of four parts or quarters, Deut. xxii. 12. (G.) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 34.

The coat was without ſeam.] As the upper garment, divided into four parts, repreſented the vaſt extent of the church into the four parts of the world; ſo the under garment without ſeam, and preſerved entire, denoted the unity of the church. Thoſe who divide the church are worſe than theſe heathen ſoldiers, who would not divide the ſeamleſs coat of Chriſt. (Q.)

Ver. 25, 26, 27. Now there ſtood by the croſs of Jeſus, his mother, and his mother's ſiſter, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene. When Jeſus therefore ſaw his mother, and the diſciple ſtanding by, whom he loved, he ſaith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy ſon. Then ſaith he to the diſciple, Behold thy mother. And from that hour that diſciple took her unto his own home.

Mary, the wife of Cleophas.] Or Alphæus. For this Mary was " the mother of James the leſs," Mark xv. 40. whoſe Father's name was Alphæus, Matt. x. 3. (W.)

The diſciple.] See the note on chap. xiii. 23.

Woman.] See the notes on chap. ii. 4.

Behold thy ſon.] Theſe words contain our Saviour's affectionate recommendation of his diſtreſſed mother to the care of a dear diſciple. It was an argument of Chriſt's wonderful love to her, that when he was nailed to the croſs, and ready to die, he was more concerned for his Mother's ſorrows, than for his own ſuffering: Now was Simeon's prophecy fulfilled. Luke ii. 35. " A ſword ſhall paſs thro' thine own ſoul alſo." Her Soul was pierced for him, both as his natural Mother, and alſo as a myſtical member of him her head; Therefore Chriſt applies theſe comfortable words, as a ſalve to her wounds, even whilſt his own were bleeding unto death. " Woman, behold thy Son." Where note, He calls her Woman, and not Mother: He doth not ſay, Mother, behold thy

Son; but Woman, behold him: Not that Chriſt was aſhamed of, or unwilling to own her as his mother; but either, 1. Fearing that calling her by that name ſhould augment and increaſe her grief and trouble: Or elſe, 2. To intimate his change of ſtate and condition; that being ready to die and return to his Father in heaven, he was above all earthly relations, and knew no one after the fleſh, no not his very Mother: Yet ſee at the ſame time, when he was above her, and about to leave her, how his care manifeſted itſelf for her, when his ſoul and body were full of anguiſh to the very brim; yet all this makes him not in the leaſt unmindful of ſo dear a relation. Thence learn, That Chriſt's tender care of his Mother, even in the time of his greateſt diſtreſs, is an excellent pattern for all children to imitate and follow, to the end of the world. St. John here obeyed Chriſt's command, and imitated his example; he took her to his own home; that is, he treated her with all that dutiful regard that a tender and indulgent mother challenges from a pious and obedient Son. No perſonal trial or trouble upon ourſelves, doth exempt us from the performance of our duty towards others, eſpecially towards our near and dear relations: Chriſt in the extremity of his ſufferings, accounted it his duty to take care of and provide for his dear Mother; teaching us by his example; that children ought to evidence, that they honour their parents, by taking care of them in their decayed and deſolate condition. Again, inaſmuch as St. John took care of the holy Mother after her dear Son's death, "That diſciple took her to his own home;" We learn, That the Lord never removes one comfort, and takes away the means of ſubſiſtence from his people, but he raiſes up another in the room of it. It is very probable, that Joſeph her huſband was before this time dead, and Jeſus her Son was now dying: But ſtill God provides; he raiſes up St. John to take care of her; he takes her to his own home, and looks upon her as one of his family. But how comes St. John above the reſt to have this honourable ſervice put upon him, and this high truſt repoſed in him? The text tells us, he was "the diſciple whom Jeſus loved;" that is, in a more particular manner, treating him with greater freedom and familiarity than the reſt: He alſo evidenced more love unto, and more courage and reſolution for, Chriſt, than the reſt of the diſciples, he ſtanding by the croſs, when they got afar off, Mark xv. 40. Thence we learn, That ſuch as are beloved of Chriſt, as do keep cloſe unto him, and expreſs moſt zeal and reſolution for him, ſhall be peculiarly honoured by him, and be employed in the higheſt ſervices for him. (B.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. After this, Jeſus knowing that all things were now accompliſhed that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, ſaith, I thirſt. Now there was ſet a veſſel full of vinegar: And they filled a ſpunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyſſop, and put it to his mouth. When Jeſus therefore had received the vinegar, he ſaid, It is finiſhed: And he bowed his head, and gave up the ghoſt. The Jews therefore, becauſe it was the preparation, that the bodies ſhould not remain upon the croſs on the ſabbath-day (for that ſabbath-day was an high day) beſought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away. Then came the ſoldiers, and brake the legs of the firſt, and of the other which was crucified with him. But when they came to Jeſus, and ſaw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs: But one of the ſoldiers with a ſpear pierced his ſide, and forthwith came there out blood and water. And he that ſaw it, bare record, and his record his true: And he knoweth that he ſaith true, that ye might believe. For theſe things were done, that the ſcripture ſhould be fulfilled, A bone of him ſhall not be broken: And again another ſcripture ſaith, They ſhall look on him whom they pierced.

I thirſt.] Our Saviour, finding that all was accompliſhed, which he was to do before his death, but only the fulfilling that one ſcripture, Pſal. lxix. 21. "They gave me vinegar to drink," he, for the accompliſhment thereof, "ſaid, I thirſt!" Whence note, 1. That ſuch were the agonies of our Lord upon the croſs, that they drank up his very ſpirits. 2. That when he cried, "I thirſt!" it was to ſhew, that whatever was foretold by the prophets concerning him was exactly accompliſhed, and even to a circumſtance fulfilled (B.)

Filled a ſpunge with vinegar.] The vinegar and the ſpunge were in executions, ſet ready to ſtop the too violent flux of blood, in order to prolong the death: But to the bleſſed Jeſus they were exhibited in ſcorn; for, being mingled with gall, the mixture was more horrid and unpleaſant. (Taylor and Howel.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 34, 48.

It is finiſhed.] That is to ſay, 1. "It is finiſhed; that is, Now, is my Father's eternal counſel concerning me accompliſhed, and the promiſe that he made, of my becoming a ſacrifice for ſin, fulfilled; both are now receiving their final accompliſhment. 2. "It is finiſhed;" that is, the ſcriptures are now fulfill'd: All the types that did prefigure me; all the prophetical predictions that were made of me; all the Jewiſh ſacrifices that pointed at me, have now received their final accompliſhment in me, and are aboliſh'd in my death. 3. "It is finiſhed;" that is, my ſufferings are now ended; my race is run; my work is done; I am now putting my laſt hand to it; my death is before me; I have finiſh'd the work, the whole work which I came into the world for; all is upon the completing; it will be inſtantly finiſhed. 4. "It is finiſhed;" that is, the fury and malice, the rage and revenge of my enemies is now ended; they have done their worſt: The chief prieſts and ſoldiers, the judges and witneſſes, the executioners and tormentors, have all tired out themſelves with the exerciſe of their own malice; but now their ſpite and ſpleen, their envy and enmity is ended, and the Son of God is at reſt. And 5. "It is finiſhed;" that is, the glorious work of man's redemption and ſalvation is perfected and perform'd, conſummated and completed: The price is paid, ſatisfaction is given, redemption is purchaſed, and ſalvation inſured to a miſerable world. (B.) See the notes on chap. xvii. 4.

Bowed his head, and gave up the Ghoſt.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 50. and Luke xxiii. 46.

The Jews therefore.] Theſe verſes contain ſeveral paſſages, tending to the confirmation of our faith, in the belief of the certainty and reality of our Saviour's death; in which the Jews, the ſoldiers, and St. John, do all give their ſeveral and ſufficient evidences. Obſerve 1. The Jews part in clearing up this truth: They deſire Pilate (who had power alone to diſpoſe of the dead bodies of condemned perſons) that the legs of the crucified perſons might be broken, to haſten their death, that ſo they might be taken away, and buried; becauſe, according to the law, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. the land was defiled with thoſe that were hanged, if not timely buried; and they judged, if the bodies of theſe perſons did remain on the croſs all that night, and the next ſabbath-day, which "was an high day," (the ordinary ſabbath, and the firſt day of the paſſover, or feaſt of unleavened bread, meeting together) it might pollute both them and their feaſt. Where note, The curſed hypocriſy of theſe Jews: They look upon themſelves as ſtrictly bound to obſerve an outward ceremony, but their conſciences never ſcruple to violate the moſt weighty precepts of the moral law: They ſtrictly obſerve the ceremonial precept, that the dead bodies ſhould not remain upon the croſs; but they ſcruple not to crucify the Son of God, and to uſe him with the utmoſt rigour, deſiring his bones may be broken. Obſerve, 2. The ſoldiers part, contributing to clear the truth of Chriſt's death: They execute what the Jews had deſired, and Pilate granted, breaking the legs of the two thieves, but not of Jeſus, becauſe he was already dead; but one of the ſoldiers, reſolving to make ſure work, thruſts a ſpear into his ſide, and there came out ſtraightway blood and water, proving that he was really dead. All which points out to us, that it "is he who came by water and blood," 1 John v. 6. and that from the merit and efficacy of his death, there floweth out blood for the obtaining remiſſion of ſin, and water to regenerate and waſh us from our uncleanneſs. From the barbarous ſoldier's piercing of Chriſt's ſide after he was dead, we learn, that no cruelty was omitted towards Chriſt either dead or alive, which might teſtify the great deſert of our ſin; nor was there any needful evidence wanting, which might make clear the truth of his death: The ſoldier's piercing of our Saviour's ſide, was at once an exerciſe of their cruelty, and an evidence of the certainty of Chriſt's death. Obſerve, 3. St. John's part in this evidence: He avouches, That Chriſt really died, and expreſly affirms, that he ſaw it with his own eyes, for the confirmation of our faith; "He that ſaw it bare record, and his record is true:" And farther ſhews, That by theſe actions of the ſoldiers, that was done, by which ſeveral ſcripture-prophecies were fulfilled, and received their accompliſhment particularly that of Exod. xii. 46. concerning the paſchal lamb, which was a type of Chriſt, that "a bone of it ſhould not be broken;" and that of Zach. xii. 10. "They ſhall look on him whom they have pierced." (B.) But David being alſo a type of Chriſt, we may as probably refer that, of not breaking his legs, to the words, Pſal. xxxiv. 20. "He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken;" that promiſe, which reſpects all righteous perſons, being more eſpecially to be fulfilled in this juſt one. (W.)

He that ſaw it bare record.] This ſpeech of the Evangeliſt, and his ſo much care in teſtifying this fact, from his own ſight of it, is an argument that he looked on it as a very weighty and conſiderable paſſage. And ſo, 1 John v. 6. he makes uſe of it as ſuch; "This is he that came with water and blood; not by water only, but by water and blood." And ver. 8. "There are three that bear witneſs on earth, the ſpirit, and the water, and the blood, and theſe three agree in one." What the particular is, wherein the weight of this paſſage lies, will be worth conſidering. And firſt, It is ordinarily affirmed, that there is a capſula on the left ſide of the heart, called the pericardium, which hath water in it, of continual uſe for the cooling of the heart; and that the coming out of water with the blood here, was a teſtimony of the wounding his very heart, the entring of that iron, the ſpear, into his ſoul. Againſt this others have framed an objection, that it was not the left, but the right ſide of Chriſt, which was at this time wounded by the ſoldier, and that the Arabic texts generally expreſs it ſo; (See Kirſtenius Arab. Gram. p. 5.) and conſequently that the waters flowing out together with the blood, could not be any natural effect of that wound. But that objection is of little force. For, 1. Such is the poſture of the heart in the body, rather in the middle, than inclining to the left ſide; And, 2. So great is that pericardium, as anatomiſts find, eſpecially after death, when the water much increaſeth, that if the right ſide were pierced ſo deep as to the heart, it would ſend out water. And therefore this may firſt be reſolved, that this being an evidence of the wounding of the heart, and the phyſicians maxim being certain, He that is wounded in the heart muſt certainly die, and Sanantur nulla vulnera cordis ope.

Wounds in the heart are abſolutely incurable; This flowing of water with the blood was an evidence and demonſtration of his being truly dead (this one wound being ſufficient to ſecure that, if he had not been dead before, ver. 33.) and to the confutation of moſt hereticks of the firſt ages, which affirmed him to have ſuffered death only in appearance. But beſide this, another concluſion St. John, in his Epiſtle, is willing to draw from it, viz. That "believing Jeſus to be the Son of God," is an effectual means of "overcoming the world," 1 John v. 5. for to the proving of that it is, that this obſervation is made uſe of by him, "This is he that came with water and blood," ver. 6. And that argument lies thus, The baits, or temptations, which the world uſeth, are of two ſorts, allurements of carnal pleaſures, and terrors from apprehenſion of perſecutions. The Gnoſticks, at the time of his writing that Epiſtle, made uſe of both theſe to ſeduce the orthodox Chriſtians; the all kind of carnal pleaſures which they profeſs'd, was one bait, and the perſecutions from the Jews upon the orthodox Chriſtians, which the Gnoſticks, by complying with them, avoided, was the other temptation. Againſt theſe two St. John ſets up purity, and patience, as the two prime doctrines, and commands of Chriſt (which every true believer is ſtrictly concerned in) exemplified by himſelf, (who was, 1. pure and ſinleſs, and yet 2. ſuffered death, the death of the croſs) and moſt lively adumbrated by the water and blood, which he had obſerved to come from Chriſt's ſide in this place. The water was the emblem of all ſpotleſs purity, and the blood was the evidence of his fortitude and conſtant patience, laying down his life for the truth of God; and theſe two teſtify, and declare the neceſſity of thoſe two (and ſo of "overcoming the world") in every one that believes aright in Chriſt. And whereas 'tis there added, that the Spirit teſtifies alſo, and that the Spirit (i. e. the Spirit, as a witneſs, i. e. the teſtimony of the Spirit) "agrees in one" with theſe two, i. e. with the teſtimonies of the water and blood; That is thus to be interpreted, not only that the Spirit, coming down on Chriſt, who was after crucified by the Jews, did teſtify that he was the "beloved Son of God, in whom he was well pleaſed," i. e. perfectly innocent, tho' he ſuffer'd for ſin, but alſo that the Spirit, after the reſurrection of Chriſt, coming on the apoſtles, came as Chriſt's advocate, to defend him, and convince the world, both in that action concerning righteouſneſs, proving that Chriſt was a moſt innocent and righteous perſon, and that other concerning judgment, in puniſhing and retaliating his crucifiers, the Jews, and Satan himſelf, deſtroying their kingdom for their deſtroying of him. Beſide this importance of the water and blood, the ancients have obſerved another alſo; that by a ſpecial act of God's providence there flowed at this time from Chriſt's ſide the two ſacraments of his church, baptiſm, and the ſupper of the Lord. (H.) The covenant of the old law was confirmed by blood mixed with water, to keep it from congealing, Hebr. ix. 19. So alſo was the covenant of the New Teſtament, 1 John v. 6. Dr. Lightfoot farther ſaith, That, according to a tradition of the Jews, when Moſes ſmote the rock, there came forth firſt blood, and then water: Now "that rock was Chriſt," 1 Cor. x. 4. (W.) But wherefore did they pierce his ſide? For two principal reaſons, 1. That the ſcripture might be fulfilled: And, 2. To make his death without all queſtion; which if doubtful, his reſurrection alſo had remained doubtful; which is the greateſt aſſurance we can have, both of our reſurrection and glory with him. (Hayw.)

Ver. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. And after this, Joſeph of Arimathæa (being a diſciple of Jeſus, but ſecretly for fear of the Jews) beſought Pilate, that he might take away the body of Jeſus; and Pilate gave him leave: He came therefore and took the body of Jeſus. And there came alſo Nicodemus (which at the firſt came to Jeſus by night) and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight. Then took they the body of Jeſus, and wound it in linnen clothes, with the ſpices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury. Now, in the place where he was crucified, there was a garden; and in the garden a ſepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid: There laid they Jeſus therefore, becauſe of the Jews preparation-day; for the ſepulchre was nigh at hand.

Joſeph of Arimathæa.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 57. Mark xv. 43. and Luke xxiii. 50.

A diſciple of Jeſus.] See the notes on chap. xii. 42.

Nicodemus.] See the notes on chap. iii. 1

An hundred pound weight.] This was an indication, not only of the wealth, but alſo of the great affection of Nicodemus, to the bleſſed Jeſus. Theſe alſo do not only anoint him, as they commonly uſed to do others; but they bury him, with ſo great a mixture of ſpices, as was done at the funerals of great men. Thus Jacob was embalmed, Gen. l. 2. and Aſa, 2 Chron. xvi. 14.

In the garden a new ſepulchre.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 60. and Luke xxiii. 53.

CHAP. XX.

Mary Magdalene cometh early to the ſepulchre; and ſo do Peter and John, all ignorant of the reſurrection. They find the ſepulchre empty. Jeſus appeareth to Mary; And to his diſciples. Thomas, at firſt incredulous, but is fully convinced. The ſcripture is ſufficient to ſalvation.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. THE firſt day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early when it was yet dark, unto the ſepulchre, and ſeeth the ſtone taken away from the ſepulchre. Then ſhe runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other diſciple whom Jeſus loved, and ſaith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the ſepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him. Peter therefore went forth, and that other diſciple, and came to the ſepulchre. So they ran both together: and the other diſciple did out-run Peter, and came firſt to the ſepulchre. And he, ſtooping down, and looking in, ſaw the linnen clothes lying; yet went he not in. Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the ſepulchre, and ſeeth the linnen clothes lie; And the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linnen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itſelf. Then went in alſo that other diſciple which came firſt to the ſepulchre, and he ſaw, and believed: For as yet they knew not the ſcripture, that he muſt riſe again from the dead. Then the diſciples went away again unto their own home.

The firſt day of the week.] See the notes on Matt. xxviii. 1. Mark xvi. 1. and Luke xxiv. 1.

Mary Magdalene.] More women, and more Maries too, came to the ſepulchre, as appears, Luke xxiii. 55. and xxiv. 1, 10. But, as the other Evangeliſts begin ſtill with this Mary, ſo St. John, by naming her, who only ſpake, and looked down into the ſepulchre, left the reſt to be underſtood. (W.) He names one of the chief, inſtead of naming all. (G.)

Cometh to Simon Peter.] All the interpreters that I have met with, ſay, That Mary ran not preſently to Peter and John, but only after "ſhe had ſeen the Lord," ver. 18. And this they prove, from Luke xxiv. 10, 11. But this cannot conſiſt with the words of St. John, who ſaith, She came to Peter and John only; whereas St. Luke and the other Evangeliſts ſay, She came to all the reſt of the apoſtles, Matt. xxviii. 8. Mark xvi. 10. When ſhe came to St. Peter and St. John, ſhe came alone, complaining to them, that Chriſt's body was taken away, not thinking that he was riſen: So here. When ſhe came to the reſt of the apoſtles, ſhe came with the meſſage from the angels, and from Chriſt himſelf, that he was riſen, Matt. xxviii. 7, &c. and was ſeen of her, Mark xvi. 10, 11. Luke xxiv. 23. So here, ver. 18. which plainly ſhews, that all the other Evangeliſts ſpeak only of this ſecond coming, mentioned ver. 18. Object. St. Luke ſaith, They came "to the apoſtles;" and then adds, ver. 12. that "Peter (edramen) ran to the ſepulchre." Anſw. That word may be thus render'd, Peter had run, and ſtooping down had ſeen: As if he ſhould have ſaid, The woman told the words of the angels to the diſciples; and Peter alſo, to his admiration, had ſeen the body gone, and the linnen clothes wrapt up by themſelves: Which, by the way, is an evidence, that Chriſt's body was not ſtolen away by his diſciples, ſince they would have carried it away, embalmed as it was, and not have ſtay'd to wrap up the napkin. (W.)

Diſciple whom Jeſus loved.] See the note on chap. xiii. 23.

Wrapped together.] Obſerve, 1. That there was ſuch clear evidence about Chriſt's grave, as made it apparent that he was indeed riſen from the dead, and not conveyed away either by friends or foes: It cannot be ſuppoſed that any of his friends (could they have come at it) would have ſo handled his holy body, as to carry it away naked; and for his foes, had they ſtole away the body, they would never have left the fine linnen behind them. 2. That when Chriſt aroſe from the grave, he left his grave-cloaths behind him; whereas when Lazarus aroſe, he came forth with his grave-cloaths about him: It teaches us, That Chriſt roſe, never to die more, but to live and reign for ever; therefore he left his grave-cloaths in the grave, as never to make uſe of them more: But Lazarus was to die again; death was once more to have dominion over him; he therefore came forth with his grave-cloaths about him. (B.)

He ſaw, and believed.] Epiſteuſen. Peter only ſaw and admired at what was done, Luke xxiv. 12. but John "ſaw and believed:" Not the words of Mary, for we find not that either of them had ſuſpected her of falſhood; but the reſurrection of Jeſus, or thoſe words of his, "After three days I will riſe again. (W.) But Mr. Maſſey would have the words read thus, "And he ſaw," (to wit, the linnen clothes lying) and thought ſo too;" (that is, that the body of our Lord was taken away. For, as it follows, in the next verſe,

As yet they knew not the ſcripture, that he muſt riſe again from the dead.] So infirm was the faith, not only of the Jews in general in that age, but of the apoſtles alſo, that they believed not the two fundamental articles of the Chriſtian faith, the death and reſurrection of the Meſſiah: As for the Jews, a contrary tradition had obtained among them, That their Meſſiah ſhould not die, John xii. 34. And tho' our Saviour ſpake oft to his diſciples of his death and reſurrection, this tradition, and the thoughts of his temporal kingdom, were ſo fixed in their heads, that his diſciples underſtood not what he ſaid; and this ſaying was concealed from them, Mark ix. 32. Luke ix. 45. xviii. 34. Whence Chriſt, after his reſurrection, upbraids them with their ſlowneſs to believe the ſcriptures; and ſhews them, from them, that "Chriſt ought to ſuffer, and riſe again the third day," Luke xxiv. 25, 45. And hence it follows, that the Jews then underſtood not, that any of their ſacrifices were types of our Saviour's paſſion, or availed to procure the remiſſion of their ſins on that account; and ſo could have no explicit faith in his blood, or expect juſtification by it. Whence St. Paul, in that whole chapter, Hebrews xi. in which he ſpeaks ſo much of the faith of the patriarchs, hath not the leaſt intimation of any relation that it had to the death of the Meſſiah. (W.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 26.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. But Mary ſtood without, at the ſepulchre, weeping: And as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped down, and looked into the ſepulchre, And ſeeth two angels in white, ſitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jeſus had lain: And they ſay unto her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? She ſaith unto them, Becauſe they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. And when ſhe had thus ſaid, ſhe turned herſelf back, and ſaw Jeſus ſtanding, and knew not that it was Jeſus. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? whom ſeekeſt thou? She ſuppoſing him to be the gardener, ſaith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid him, and I will take him away. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Mary. She turned herſelf, and ſaith unto him, Rabboni; which is to ſay, Maſter. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet aſcended to my Father: But go to my brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God. Mary Magdalene came and told the diſciples, that ſhe had ſeen the Lord, and that he had ſpoken theſe things unto her.

Mary ſtood without] Here we have a deſcription of the great love of Mary Magdalene, which ſhe expreſſed towards Chriſt after his reſurrection: She went to his ſepulchre early, when it was yet dark; ſhe haſtily calls the diſciples, Peter and John, to the ſepulchre; and ſhe ſtays behind weeping at the ſepulchre, when they were gone away to their own home: And as Mary firſt ſought him, and longeſt ſought him, ſo ſhe firſt found him. Here note, 1. Mary's carriage and behaviour towards her Saviour. This is diſcovered by her patient attendance; ſhe "ſtood without at the ſepulchre:" By her paſſionate mourning; ſhe "ſtood at the ſepulchre weeping:" By her unwearied diligence, "She ſtoop'd down and look'd into the ſepulchre:" Here was great love indeed in this poor woman; a love ſtronger than death; a love which did out-ſtrip and go beyond the greateſt apoſtles. Learn thence, 1. That true love to Chriſt ſuffers not itſelf to be ſtinted or limitted, no not by the greateſt examples: The weakeſt woman, that truly loves Chriſt, may piouſly ſtrive with the greateſt apoſtle in this point: Tho' he be learneder, wiſer, more uſeful, and more eminent than any of us, yet it is holy and wiſe, not to ſuffer ourſelves to be exceeded by any in our love to Chriſt; every Chriſtian may ſtrive to exceed any one in grace, and to attain the higheſt place in the kingdom of heaven. 2. That ſtrong love is valiant and undaunted; it will grapple and encounter with the ſtrongeſt oppoſition: Mary fears nothing in ſeeking of her Lord, neither the darkneſs of the night, nor the terror of the ſoldiers, nor the malice of the Jews; love is ſtrong as death, and the flames thereof are vehement. Note farther, The ſucceſs of Mary Magdalene's love to Chriſt, and unwearied attendance on his ſepulchre: She found not the dead body of Chriſt, and it was well ſhe did not; for if death could have held him, it would not have let us go. But tho' ſhe found not her Lord in the grave, ſhe found two of his ſervants there, two angels. Of all things in the world, one would leaſt have expected to find an angel in a grave, ſpirits in the place of dead bodies, and immortality in the place of corruption. But from hence we learn, That ſuch as ſincerely ſeek the Lord, ſhall certainly find, if not the very thing which they ſeek, yet that which is much fitter and better for them: Mary did not find Chriſt's dead body, but ſhe finds that which was more comfortable for her to find; namely, two angels to teſtify that he was riſen. (B.)

And ſeth two Angels in white.] Here we may perceive how Chriſt affords comfort, by degrees, to thoſe who are his, and do faithfully ſeek him. 1. He gives them conſolation by his angels and his ſervants. 2. By his own preſence, tho' unknown. 3. By his word. 4. By making himſelf known to them. 5. By diſcovering to them the ſecret and the ſpirit of his myſteries. And, 6. By giving them grace, to make thoſe myſteries known to others. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xxviii. 2, &c. and Luke xxiv. 4.

Knew not that it was Jeſus.] Obſerve here, 1. That the beſt company in the world will not ſatisfy or content ſuch as are ſeeking for Jeſus Chriſt, when they find not him whom their ſouls ſeek: Mary now enjoyed the preſence and company of two angels; but this did not ſatisfy her in the abſence of Chriſt himſelf. 2. How paſſionately did Mary mourn for the loſs and want of Chriſt's bodily preſence, thereby giving teſtimony of her great affection towards him: But truly our love to Chriſt is beſt ſhewn, not by our paſſionate deſires for his bodily preſence, but by our holy longings after his ſpiritual preſence, in his word and ordinances here on earth, and his bleſſed and immediate preſence in heaven. 3. How Chriſt may be preſent with, and very near unto his people, and yet not be preſently diſcerned by them; Jeſus ſtood by Mary, but ſhe "knew not that it was Jeſus:" Her not expecting a living Chriſt, was one cauſe why ſhe did not diſcern him. 4. How exceedingly Mary's thoughts were taken up with Chriſt: She ſaith to the gardener, "If thou haſt borne him hence." What him? She doth not ſay whom; but her heart was ſo taken up with Chriſt, and her mind ſo full of him, that ſhe concluded every body would underſtand whom ſhe meant, though ſhe did not ſay whom ſhe meant. Hence note, That the ſoul of a ſincere believer is full of earneſt and longing deſires after Jeſus Chriſt. 2. That ſuch a ſoul is yet ſometimes at a loſs for Chriſt, and cannot tell where to find him. 3. That whilſt the ſoul is at a loſs for Chriſt, its deſires are often quicker and more ſtirring after Chriſt. This was the caſe of Mary here, with the ſpouſe by night on her bed, and early in the morning, ſhe "ſought him whom her ſoul loved." (B.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 16, 31.

Woman, why weepeſt thou?] This ſhews, That the reſurrection of Chriſt is the chief thing, and the only thing indeed, which ſhould "wipe away all tears from our eyes." And it is worth the noting, That this was the firſt word which Chriſt ſpake after his reſurrection: And it is an exceeding comfort to us all; for what he ſpake to her, he ſpeaks to every one of us, "Why weepeſt thou? As if he ſhould ſay, Tho' God highly hateth the leaſt ſin, yet now, ſeeing I have ſuffer'd for your ſins, and am riſen again for your juſtification, you have no cauſe to weep, but rather to rejoice and be glad; to rejoice more for my glorious reſurrection, than to weep for my ignominious death: And truly, if we did but rightly conſider our own ſtate, this is the only cauſe we have of joy; we have no other cauſe of joy but this. (Biſhop Grift. Williams.)

Touch me not; for I am not yet aſcended.] That is, Thou needeſt not to be ſolicitous to touch or hold me now: Thou wilt have time ſufficient, to converſe with me, and to experience the truth of my reſurrection; for I ſhall not immediately aſcend, but ſtay ſome time with you here on earth. (W) It is concluded by interpreters, that Mary Magdalene was now fallen at Chriſt's feet, and embraced them; that having found him whom her ſoul loved, ſhe hugs him now, and hangs about him: But Chriſt forbids, and rejects ſuch teſtimonies of her love; as if he had ſaid, Altho' I will allow you as much as ſhall ſatisfactorily convince you of the verity of my reſurrection, yet ye muſt not expect to converſe with me in that bodily manner which ye did before my death; for I am aſcending to my Father, and muſt be enjoyed no longer after a corporal, but ſpiritual manner. Learn hence, That our love to Jeſus Chriſt is beſt ſhewn, not by our human paſſionate affections to his bodily preſence, but by our ſpiritual communion with him by faith here on earth, in order to an immediate communion with him face to face in heaven. Chriſt now after his reſurrection was advanced to a more ſpiritual condition; therefore refuſes the offices of human converſation, but expects the duties and ſervices of ſpiritual devotion. (B.)

Go to my brethren.] Here note, 1. The endearing title given to his diſciples; "My brethren." Chriſt had, before his death, called them his ſervants, his friends, his children: But now, after his reſurrection, he calls them his brethren. He became our brother, by aſſuming our nature in his incarnation; and he continues our Brother, by reſuming our nature at his reſurrection. 2. That Chriſt calls his diſciples brethren after his exaltation; thereby ſhewing, That the change of his condition had wrought no change in his affection towards his poor diſciples; but thoſe who were his brethren before, in the time of his humiliation and abaſement, are ſo ſtill, after his exaltation and advancement. (Idem.)

To my God, and your God.] Here the Socinians do falſly infer, That becauſe Chriſt ſtiles God his God, therefore it is evident that Chriſt himſelf is not God: But from theſe words it only follows, that he was not God, according to that nature which aſcended. Thus, Pſal. xlv. 7. it is ſaid of Chriſt, "God, even thy God, hath anointed thee:" And yet, at the ſame time, it is alſo ſaid of the ſame perſon, ver. 6. "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." (W. and B.) See the notes on chap. xvi. 28.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Then the ſame day at evening, being the firſt day of the week, when the doors were ſhut, where the diſciples were aſſembled for fear of the Jews, came Jeſus and ſtood in the midſt, and ſaith unto them, peace be unto you. And when he had ſo ſaid, he ſhewed unto them his hands and his ſide. Then were the diſciples glad when they ſaw the Lord. Then ſaid Jeſus to them again, Peace be unto you: As my Father hath ſent me, even ſo ſend I you. And when he had ſaid this, he breathed on them, and ſaith unto them, Receive ye the holy Ghoſt. Whoſe ſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſe ſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained. But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jeſus came. The other diſciples therefore ſaid unto him, We have ſeen the Lord. But he ſaid unto them, Except I ſhall ſee in his hands the print of the nails, and thruſt my hand into his ſide, I will not believe. And after eight days, again his diſciples were within, and Thomas with them: Then came Jeſus, the doors being ſhut, and ſtood in the midſt, and ſaid, Peace be unto you. Then ſaith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thruſt it into my ſide: And be not faithleſs, but believing. And Thomas anſwered and ſaid unto him, My Lord, and my God. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, thou haſt believed: Bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed. And many other ſigns truly did Jeſus in the preſence of his diſciples, which are not written in this book. But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt the Son of God; and that believing, ye might have life through his name.

The firſt day of the week.] The day is thus ſpecified for ſome eſpecial end: Which could be no other, but to ſhew the tranſlation of the ſabbath, from the ſeventh to "the firſt day of the week," by Chriſt's own appointment, in commemoration of his reſurrection. For, on this day "he appear'd firſt to Mary Magdalen," Mark xvi. 9. and here, ver. 11. 2. to Cleophas and another, Luke xxiv. 13. and to all the apoſtles, except Thomas. Then he appear'd not again till the eighth day after, ver. 26. which was alſo "the firſt day of the week," to all the apoſtles together: Neither do we read of the apoſtles meeting together again till that day. On the ſame day of the week alſo was that viſible deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, Acts ii. 1. From all which, and other inſtances, it appears, 1. That Chriſt preferr'd the firſt day before the ſeventh, and tranſlated the ſabbath from the ſeventh to the firſt: As likewiſe, 2. From the diſciples of Chriſt having their moſt ſolemn aſſemblies on this day, Acts xx. 7. and 1 Cor. xvi. 2. And 3. It is called "the Lord's day," Rev. i. 10. St. John ſuppoſing, that the day was well known by that name at the time of his writing. It was alſo call'd Sunday, without any ſcruple, by Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, &c. Whereas the name of Sabbath was, by ſcripture, antiquity, and all eccleſiaſtical writers, conſtantly appropriated to Saturday; and never till of late years uſed to ſignify the Lord's day. (Bever. and Nelſ.)

When the doors were ſhut.] Here note, 1. That it has been no ſtrange thing in the church, that the beſt members of it have been put to frequent their aſſemblies with great fear, and been forced to meet in the night with great caution, becauſe of the fury of the perſecutors: Here Chriſt's own diſciples were forced to meet together in the night, "when the doors were ſhut, for fear of the Jews." 2. Let Chriſt's diſciples meet together ever ſo privately, and with ever ſo much hazard and jeopardy, they ſhall have Chriſt's company with them; neither bolts, nor locks, nor faſten'd doors, ſhall hold Chriſt from them; "When the doors were ſhut, came Jeſus, and ſtood in the mid'ſt" of them. (B.) Tho' it be an antient opinion, That Chriſt made his body penetrate through the doors; yet it is both groundleſs and abſurd, and contrary to the very deſign of Chriſt in his coming to them. 1. It is groundleſs: For why might not he, by his power, ſecretly open the doors, his diſciples not perceiving it? as the angel opened the priſon-doors and gates, to let out Peter, Acts xii. 10. 2. It is abſurd: For, ſince Chriſt roſe in that natural body which was crucified and laid in the grave, philoſophy informs us, that ſuch a body could not penetrate through another more ſolid body. And to this agree thoſe words of Cyril of Alexandria, That it is impoſſible, that one body ſhould go through another, without cutting it, or being cut. And 3. This fancy deſtroys not only the end of Chriſt's then coming to them, but of all that he had ſaid and done, to convince them it was the ſame body that was crucified, in which he appeared to them. When he came the firſt time, his diſciples were troubled, "ſuppoſing they had ſeen a ſpirit:" Now, to convince them of the contrary, Chriſt ſaith, "See my hands and my feet, that it is even I; handle me, and ſee; for a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones, as ye ſee me have." His ſecond appearance, when the doors were ſhut, was to convince Thomas of the truth of the reſurrection of his body, and this he does, by calling him to "put his finger to his pierced hands, and his hands into his pierced ſide:" And yet, this ſuppoſed penetration through the doors, deſtroys both theſe arguments; it being as certain, that fleſh and bones cannot penetrate through a door, as that a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones; and that his body muſt have paſſed through the doors after the manner of a ſpirit, as that it afterwards appeared after the manner of a body; and that the ſame power which made a natural body penetrate through a door, could make a phantaſm or aerial body appear like fleſh and bones to the touch, and ſeem to have the marks and prints of a crucified body: So that, unleſs our Saviour deſigned to invalidate the ſtrength of what he ſaid and did, to convince them of the truth of his reſurrection, he could not at the ſame time do a thing known to them, which did evacuate the force of all his proofs: Nor would the Evangeliſt have twice recorded this circumſtance, when ſpeaking of the reſurrection, had he imagined the words bore ſuch a ſenſe, as turned his body into a ſpirit, and miniſter'd occaſion to all that read it, to ſuſpect the ſtrength of any of theſe arguments to confirm this fundamental article. (W.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 36.

He ſhewed unto them his hands, and his ſide.] Chriſt appealed to, and admitted of, the judgment of their ſenſes, to aſſure them that it was his real body. And if we muſt not be allow'd to believe our ſenſes, (as the Romaniſts would perſuade us) we ſhall want the beſt external evidence we can have, to prove the truth of the Chriſtian religion; namely, the miracles of our Saviour: For, how can we be aſſured thoſe miracles were true, but by the judgment of our ſenſes? Now, as our ſenſes tell us, that Chriſt's miracles were true; ſo they aſſure us, that the Popiſh doctrine of tranſubſtantiation is falſe. (B.) See the notes on ver. 27. and Luke xxiv. 39.

Again, peace be unto you.] Here our Saviour repeats this endearing ſalutation to his diſciples: And it was no more than might be needful, to ſignify his firm reconciliation to them, notwithſtanding their late cowardice in forſaking him, and flying from him, when the ſtorm fell upon him. (Idem.)

Even ſo ſend I you.] To ſend, in holy ſcripture, generally ſignifies to authorize and impower, to advance and prefer to ſome office, or dignity. Accordingly, when kings, judges, and Saviours were appointed by God to govern his people, or reſcue them from their enemies, they are ſaid to be ſent by him. Thus were Moſes and Gideon ſent, to deliver Iſrael, Exod. iii. 10. and Judges vi. 14. Saul, to be anointed their king by Samuel, 1 Sam. ix. 16. And prophets likewiſe, who had authority from God, to declare his will, are ſaid to be ſent by him, Jer. vii. 25. xiv. 14. and xxiii. 21. The perſons therefore, whom our Saviour ſent, muſt be underſtood, to have been authorized and commiſſion'd by him, to govern in his name, and to act by his power. (Chalmers) The Jews have a ſaying, That a man's apoſtle is as himſelf; that is, he is his vicarius or proxy: For the Jews had their apoſtles, whom they ſent on their affairs into the countries; and who are not to be looked on as bare meſſengers, but as their proxies, or deputies, to receive their dues, and to act for them. So Saul was an apoſtle of the Conſiſtory to Damaſcus, Acts ix. 2. with letters of commiſſion from the rulers. Thus the twelve, after Chriſt's departure, had others, whom they ſent on ſome parts of their charge; and then they were called their apoſtles: So Paul and Barnabas had John, Acts xiii. 5. Paul had Timothy and Eraſtus, Acts xix. 22. and Mark, 2 Tim. iv. 11: Theſe, when they were employed in preaching the Goſpel to them that had not yet received it, the ſcripture calls Evangeliſts; that is, diſciples of the apoſtles, ſent with commiſſion by them to publiſh the Goſpel, where the apoſtles could not go; and therefore are by St. Paul placed next the apoſtles, 1 Cor. xii. 28. Epheſ. iv. 11. Thus Philip the deacon, being employed by the twelve to preach at Samaria, is called "Philip the Evangeliſt," Acts viii. 5, 12. and chap. xxi. 8. So was Stephen to the Jews, Acts vi. 9. and ſo Timothy, 2 Tim. iv. 5. Phil. ii. 19. and ſo Luke and others are called "apoſtles of the churches," 2 Cor. viii. 18, 19, 23. and, as ſuch, doxa Chriſtou, "the glory of Chriſt;" the word which is uſed to denote the preſence of God in any place, and ſo there intimates the preſence of Chriſt in them his ſubſtitutes or proxies. Thus St. Peter preached at Rome by himſelf, at Alexandria by St. Mark, his apoſtle: St. Paul at Rome by his apoſtles; of whom Andronicus and Junias were the moſt eminent, Rom. xvi. 7. which ſeems to be the reaſon of the difference among the Eccleſiaſtical writers, about the next ſucceſſors of the apoſtles in ſome ſees. By all this appears the meaning of this ſpeech of Chriſt, That as he was God's apoſtle or meſſenger, and ſo his proxy or vicarius on the earth; ſo the diſciples were now made his, mathetai, diſciples; attendants of his, before, ver. 20. but now by this ſending, apoſtoloi, apoſtles, for ever after; ſent as commiſſioners to ſupply his place, to perform thoſe offices over the world, to plant a church, which he, being now about to return to his Father, could not corporally do; and ſo to ſucceed him in his office; and they again to ſend or conſtitute others in the like manner. (H.) See the notes on chap. xvii. 18. Matt. xxviii. 18, 19. and Luke vi. 13.

He breathed on them.] This viſible ſignificant ſign he made uſe of, 1. To ſhew, that the ability to execute their office aright, came originally from the Holy Spirit: And, as breath, which is an emblem of the ſpirit, was uſed by God, at the firſt creation, when he put the ſoul and ſpirit into man; ſo Jeſus uſed the ſame ſymbol, when ſpiritual power and energy was to be put into theſe newly created officers. (Comb.) And 2. To ſhew, That the Holy Spirit proceeds as well from the Son as from the Father. (B.)

Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt.] This expreſſion ſignifies here not the actual giving of the Holy Ghoſt, (for that came not on them till Acts ii. and they are appointed to ſtay at Jeruſalem, Luke xxiv. 49. "till they were endued with power from above," which therefore, now before his aſcenſion they had not received, and when the Spirit came "he would lead them into all truth:" And as yet it appears, by their queſtion, Acts i. 6. that they were not thus led into all truth) but only the confirming to them his former promiſe, and, by the ceremony of breathing on them, to expreſs the to pneuma, the eternal breath, and Spirit of God, ſealing it, as it were ſolemnly unto them, and preparing and fitting them for the receiving of it. So, ſaith Theophylact, the words ſignify, Be ye ready to receive him. And again, He breathed on them, not now diſtributing the perfect gift of the Holy Ghoſt, for that was to be done at Pentecoſt, but fitting them for the receiving of it. For tho' in the next words, Whoſe ſins, &c. the power of the keys, or ſtewardſhip in the church, were actually inſtated on them; yet was not this to be exerciſed by them, till the Holy Ghoſt came down upon them: As Epheſ. iv. 8. it is firſt, "he gave gifts unto men," (at the deſcent of the Spirit) and then, "gave ſome apoſtles," &c. ver. 11. This interpretation of this place will direct to the full importance of thoſe words, Luke ii. 4, 49. "I ſend the promiſe of my Father upon you," ſo as to render them directly parallel to this. "The promiſe of the Father" was the Holy Ghoſt, John xv. 26. and the "I ſend upon you," all one with "Receive him:" And then the "power from on high," in the end of the verſe, clearly ſignifies that viſible miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt: And all this moſt aptly delivered for the proof of the words here immediately precedent, "As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you;" intimating, that as at his miſſion from his Father to his office, he was anointed, or conſecrated with, or by, the Holy Ghoſt, Acts x. 38. by deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt on him at his baptiſm, Luke iii. 22. ſo the apoſtles at their miſſion or entrance on their power ſhould be conſecrated alſo. (H.)

Whoſe ſoever ſins ye remit.] Here is the power of abſolution, that is, an authority left by our bleſſed Saviour to his apoſtles, and miniſters in ſucceſſion from them (lawfully ordained) to forgive ſins, upon ſincere repentance and ſtedfaſt faith. This certainly is the leaſt that can be meant by theſe words of Chriſt; where we ſee plainly, that Chriſt gave this power to his apoſtles: And that it was not to die with them, is as clear, from his promiſing to be "with them always, (viz. in the exerciſe of their miniſtry) even unto the end of the world," Matt. xxviii. 20. Nor was the power of abſolution any part of the extraordinary miraculous power, which the apoſtles had; for the Holy Ghoſt was not given, in the fulleſt meaſure, till ſome time after this commiſſion. And tho' the inſpiration, which the apoſtles, and firſt diſpenſers of the abſolving power, were endow'd with, enabled them better to diſcern, who was qualified for abſolution, and who not; that does not infer, that the power itſelf died with them: For, ſince all the power that even they had, was only to abſolve upon repentance and faith, there is no reaſon, why Chriſtians now ſhould be deprived of the comfort of that ordinance, becauſe we cannot infallibly determine, who is a true penitent believer, and who is an hypocrite. (Barclay) See the notes on Matt. xvi. 19. and xviii. 18.

Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus.] Why he was call'd Didymus, ſee the notes on chap. xi. 16. But, whereas it is here ſaid, that Thomas "was not with them when Jeſus came," it may be objected, That Thomas was with the reſt of the apoſtles, this very firſt time that Jeſus appeared to them: For ſo St. Luke ſaith, That the two diſciples, "returning to Jeruſalem, found the eleven gathered together; and, as they ſpake, Jeſus himſelf ſtood in the midſt of them," Luke xxiv. 33, 36. Therefore it ſeemeth ſtrange, that St. John, ſpeaking of this ſelf-ſame apparition, which was the firſt immediate night after his reſurrection, (as both the Evangeliſts agree) ſhould notwithſtanding ſay, that Thomas "was not with them:" For St. Luke ſays, Eleven were there; and as yet there were but eleven in all, becauſe Judas was hanged, and Matthias not yet elected. To which I anſwer, That St. Luke puts down eleven, in a certain number, for all of them who were there, becauſe they were eleven in all: As if, in a court, where there are four judges appointed, a man ſhould ſay, he brought his cauſe before the four judges, tho' but three of them were indeed ſitting there when his cauſe was heard. See the notes on ver. 26. Or elſe, St. Luke and St. John may well be thus reconciled, That, when the two diſciples came, Thomas might be with the reſt, and all the eleven might be there together; and yet, when Jeſus came, Thomas might be abſent. For St. Luke doth not ſay, that Jeſus found the eleven together, but that the two diſciples found the eleven together: And ſo they might be, and yet St. John might ſay true, that Thomas "was not with them when Jeſus came;" becauſe he might depart after they came, and before Jeſus appeared. For the Evangeliſt doth not ſay, how ſoon, or how late Chriſt came, after the arrival of the two diſciples; but that he came this night, as they were talking of him; and it is very probable, it was a good while after the coming of the two diſciples: For before Jeſus is ſaid to ſtand among them, it is ſaid, that thoſe two diſciples had "told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread;" all which declaration could not be delivered without ſome length of time, in which time Thomas might take his leave and depart: And ſo, Thomas might be there when the two diſciples came, but not be there when our Saviour came. (Bp. Gr Will.) But whether he did not come at all that evening, or not ſtay ſo long as the reſt, the cauſe of his abſence is not declared; tho' 'tis evident he "was not with them when Jeſus came:" And his abſence had like to have coſt him no leſs than the loſs of his faith. Learn hence, That the letting ſlip one opportunity of religious worſhip or holy converſation, may prove exceedingly prejudicial to the ſoul's advantage. It is wiſe and ſafe to embrace every opportunity of enjoying communion with God and his church. Thomas's abſence loſt him the ſight of Chriſt, which the other diſciples got by being aſſembled together; and for want thereof he is left under many doubts and fears. Verily, we know not what we loſe, when we abſent ourſelves from the aſſembly of God's people: Such views of a crucified and raiſed Jeſus may be communicated to others while we are abſent, as would have confirmed our faith, and eſtabliſhed our joy, had we been preſent. (Stanh. B. and Q.) However, ſo God's providence ordered it, that this very accident proved of great advantage to us Chriſtians; as will appear by the following notes.

Except I ſhall ſee.] Here was a ſtrange piece of unbelief in Thomas, after he had ſeen our Saviour's miracles, and had ſo long converſed with him, who had frequently and plainly aſſerted, that he muſt riſe again the third day. (Nelſ.) Chriſt permits the incredulity of one apoſtle, in order to ſtrengthen the faith of the whole church; by ſhewing, that his moſt intimate friends did not believe, till they were forced, as it were, by the evidence of the cleareſt proofs, and moſt indiſputable teſtimonies. (Q.) Therefore, ſays St. Gregory very well, Thomas's doubting was more profitable to us, than Mary's believing. Had not he doubted, we had not been ſo fully aſſured, as we now are, of the truth of the reſurrection. (B.)

After eight days.] For a right underſtanding of this, and the like phraſes, we muſt obſerve the manner of reckoning in the ſcripture; and therein, 1. That numbers are to be underſtood ſometimes exclusively, ſometimes incluſively. So that which is ſaid to be "after ſix days," Matt. xvii. 1. and Mark ix. 2. is ſaid to be "about eight days after," Luke ix. 28. In the former, the firſt and laſt days are excluded, and thoſe only reckoned which came between; in the latter, they are both included. So here, "eight days after" muſt be underſtood incluſively, it being on the firſt day of the week next following. So phyſicians uſe to reckon, when they ſpeak of agues; a tertian intermitting only one day, and a quartan but two. So notes alſo are reckoned in muſick. And ſo alſo the French, for, within a week or two weeks, ſay, within eight days, or fifteen days. 2. The ſcripture ordinarily ſets down an even number, without taking notice of a ſmall matter under or over. This the Latins call rotundatio numeri; and we in Engliſh, a round reckoning. So Gen. xv. 13. mention is made only of "four hundred years;" Exod. xii. 40. of "four hundred and thirty years." Numb. xxv. 9. we read of "twenty and four thouſand;" 1 Cor. x. 8. but of "three and twenty thouſand." It is likely there were between both; and the odd perſons are not number'd. In 2 Sam. v. 5. it is ſaid, David reigned in Hebron "ſeven years and ſix months;" 1 Chron. xxix. 27. the ſix months are not reckoned. So the "ten days," reckoned, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. are not counted, 2 Kings xxiv. 8. So, 2 Chron. iv. 2. it is ſaid, Solomon's ſea was "ten cubits from brim to brim, and a line of thirty cubits did compaſs it round about:" Whereas, if it were ten cubits broad, it would require a line of almoſt one and thirty cubits and an half to compaſs it; there being the ſame proportion betwixt the diameter and the circumference, that there is between ſeven and two and twenty. And this manner of reckoning was very ordinary among the Jews. We ſee Matthew, in his firſt chapter, will make three fourteens, tho' he omit ſome in his account, to make the number even. So the number Twelve is retained, 1 Cor. xv. 5. tho' Judas was gone: And the patriarchs reckon themſelves twelve, Gen xlii. 13. tho' they ſay in the ſame place, that "one of them is not." So, Judges ix. 18, 56. it is ſaid, Abimelech ſlew ſeventy perſons, tho' Jotham, one of that number, eſcaped, ver. 5. (Lukin.)

Reach hither thy finger.] Here our Saviour refers to the words before ſpoken by Thomas, as a proof of his omniſciency. (G.) The means uſed for convincing Thomas were the very ſame which himſelf had deſired: And there is no doubt, but he made uſe of all the methods of conviction, which our Lord was pleaſed to afford him. From hence we may aſſure ourſelves, that whatſoever changes our Saviour's glorified body might undergo after his reſurrection, yet it was not alter'd as to the properties of a body, but ſtill ſuch as the ſenſes of men were competent judges of. To theſe ſenſes it is, that our Lord appeals: By theſe he compoſes the terrified diſciples, who fear'd a phantom: By theſe he ſatisfies the doubtful and incredulous: And by theſe the apoſtles make it their buſineſs to perſuade the world; affirming, that they "had eaten and drank with him," Acts x. 41. and had ſeen and heard him; and that they went upon ſure grounds, having ſeveral ſuch demonſtrations as they could not poſſibly be deceived in. Whereas, if the body of our Lord be not ſubject to the ſame laws with all other corporeal ſubſtances, what ſatisfaction had Thomas by this indulgence of our Lord? Why ſhould he lay aſide his ſcruples, for the ſeeing and touching that body, which our ſenſes may be, and are very often deceived in? And how poor an argument was that of St. John, that he declared to his proſelytes, "that which he had ſeen and heard, and his hands had handled of the word of life," 1 John i. 1. if neither eyes, nor ears, nor hands, are to be truſted in their judgment of this matter, nor can, with any ſafety or piety, be depended upon? (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 20. and Luke xxiv. 37.

My Lord, and my God.] Theſe words may be conſidered two ways, 1. As an abrupt ſpeech, importing a vehement admiration of Chriſt's mercy towards him, and of his own ſtupidity and dulneſs to believe. Learn hence, That the convincing condeſcenſion of Chriſt turns unbelief into a rapture of holy admiration and humble adoration. 2. This expreſſion of Thomas, "My Lord, and my God," contains a ſhort, but abſolute confeſſion of faith. Thomas rightly collects from his reſurrection, that he was Lord, God bleſſed for evermore, the true Meſſias, the expected Redeemer; and accordingly, with an explicite faith, he now profeſſes his intereſt in him, ſaying, "My Lord and my God." Yet note, That this reſurrection could not make him God, and render him then the object of divine worſhip, if he had been only a creature before. And farther, That Chriſt doth not reprove Thomas for owning him as God; which ſhews, that Thomas did not miſtake in owning the divinity of Chriſt. (B.) This is the firſt time, that theſe words, "my God," are met with in the Goſpel, as applied to Chriſt by his apoſtles, after he had proved, by his reſurrection, that it was he by whom eternal life was to be expected, chap. xi. 25. (G.) St. Thomas was the laſt in believing, but he is the firſt of the apoſtles who diſtinctly confeſſes, the divinity of Chriſt ſince his death. He beholds him in his human nature, and he therein diſcovers his Lord: He opens his eyes to miracles, and in them he finds the proofs of his divine nature. (Q.) And this we may call alſo the nobleſt confeſſion: Becauſe the Catholic interpreters of ſcripture have underſtood by it, That St. Thomas did not only recognize Jeſus for the Meſſiah, the very ſame Lord, to whom he had been a ſervant and companion during the ſpace of his miniſtry; but that he moreover owned his divine nature, and drew the conſequence to himſelf, which St. Paul did afterwards to the Romans, That the reſurrection of Jeſus from the dead, and the power he exerted in it, did abundantly "declare him to be the very Son of God," Rom. i. 4. Accordingly, the original here is in terms ſo ſtrict, and with ſuch an addition of the Greek article, as the very hereticks and enemies of the truth confeſs to be a character of the word God, being taken in its proper and natural ſenſe, and intended of the only true God. (Stanh.)

Becauſe thou haſt ſeen me.] Here we have Chriſt's reprehenſion of Thomas, for not believing without ſuch ſenſible evidence as he deſired. He believed now that Chriſt was riſen from the dead; but it was upon the teſtimony of his ſenſes only: Therefore Chriſt tells him, That his faith would have been more excellent and more eminently rewardable, if he had believed without ſuch demonſtrative evidence: "Faith is the evidence of things not ſeen." Therefore to give credit to a thing upon the evidence of ſenſe, is not properly believing. Obſerve farther, How Chriſt pronounces them bleſſed, who ſhould hereafter believe on him through the preaching of the Goſpel, tho' they did not ſee him as Thomas did, or handle him as he might. This is a ſure rule, That by how much our faith ſtands in leſs need of the external evidence of ſenſe, the ſtronger our faith is, and the more acceptable it is, provided what we believe be revealed in the word of God: "Bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed." (B.) For faith is not praiſe-worthy upon this account, that we believe what we ſee with our eyes, and therefore can no longer doubt of; but on this account, that we yield to arguments highly probable, and againſt which we have nothing ſolid to object, and ſuch evidence as wiſe men conſent to, and act by, in the moſt important concernments of this preſent life: Becauſe this ſhews a greater affection to the objects of our faith, and a better inclination to obey the will of God. (W.) Faith, the more it is abſtract, and taken away from the ſenſe, is more pure: And the more it doth tranſcend and ſurmount all reaſon, is more perfect; which gave to Abraham's faith a nobleneſs, and to us a pattern in his faith. Reaſon is above ſenſe: But faith is above reaſon, becauſe it builds upon God's word, whoſe thoughts are above the reach of our minds. (Brough) We, at this day, have ſufficient arguments to oblige us to believe and adhere to the religion of Jeſus Chriſt, tho' we never ſaw the original proofs he gave of it. For, if thoſe proofs were good and concluſive at the firſt to them who ſaw them, and were witneſſes of them, they are ſo to us now, who receive them upon their teſtimony. And as for the difference that may be alledged in point of evidence, between a man's ſeeing a thing, and receiving it upon the report of others, all that is in a great meaſure out of doors as to this matter. For the report, upon which we receive the Goſpel, being ſo authentic, ſo unexceptionable, and likewiſe ſo confirmed by matters of fact, ſtill viſible to us, it amounts to as ſtrong a proof, as if we had evidence of ſenſe. And I do in my conſcience believe, that there is not a man in this nation now ſtands out againſt the religion of Jeſus Chriſt, but who would have done ſo, if he had lived in the time of our Saviour, and heard him preach the Goſpel. (Sharpe.)

Many other ſigns] See the notes on chap. xxi. 25.

Theſe things are written, that ye might believe.] Obſerve here, 1. The true end for which the miracles of Chriſt were ſo carefully recorded; namely, "that we might believe." By believing that "Chriſt is the Son of God," we have life; and by the evidence of his miracles, we know and believe him to have been the Son of God: The miracles which Chriſt wrought were the beſt external evidence of his miſſion. 2. That all Chriſt's miracles, both before his paſſion and after his reſurrection, were not recorded by the Evangeliſts. 3. The great point concerning Chriſt, to be known and believed from the ſcriptures, is this, That Jeſus, the Son of the Virgin, is the promiſed Meſſiah, the Anointed of the Father, he in whom all the types and ſhadows of the law are accompliſh'd; and that this Jeſus is for nature co-eſſential, for dignity co-equal, and for duration co-eternal, with the Father; one in eſſence, equal in power and glory. Thus, believing that Jeſus is the Son of God, and accompanying that belief with a holy life, if we believe well, and live well, we ſhall have life through his name." (B.) All the things which our Lord did "are not written in this book;" but ſuch only as the writers thought ſufficient for the rule of faith and manners. (Stratem.)

That Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God.] Hence the Socinians argue, That they muſt err, who think 'twas the intendment of this Goſpel, to ſhew that Jeſus Chriſt was the Word of God, begotten of the Father before all worlds, and therefore a divine perſon; whereas the apoſtle here plainly ſpeaks only of the miracles wrought by Chriſt, which we acknowledge to be done, to prove him the Meſſiah promiſed to the Jews, and that prophet which was to come into the world, as St. John here ſpeaks. But yet, this hinders not his being God, or the Word of God, co-exiſtent with the Father before all worlds: Moreover the Apoſtle adds, Theſe things were done to prove he was "the Son of God:" Now this even the Jews interpreted, as a form of words by which Chriſt "made himſelf equal with God." (See the notes on chap. x. 33. and xix. 7.) Some alſo think, That St. John ended here his Goſpel; and that the following chapter was written by ſome other hands: But theſe words give no ground for this imagination, ſince other apoſtles, after they ſeemed to have concluded their Epiſtles, add ſome new matter; as may be ſeen in the concluſions of the Epiſtle to the Romans, and to the Hebrews. See the note on chap. xxi. 24. (W.)

CHAP. XXI.

Chriſt appeareth again to ſeveral of his apoſtles; and having made himſelf known to them by a miraculous draught of fiſhes, dineth with them: He ſtrictly chargeth Peter to feed his lambs and ſheep; foretelleth him of his death; and rebuketh his curioſity concerning John. The concluſion.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. AFTER theſe things, Jeſus ſhewed himſelf again to the diſciples at the ſea of Tiberias; and on this wiſe ſhewed he himſelf: There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the ſons of Zebedee, and two other of his diſciples. Simon Peter ſaith unto them, I go a fiſhing. They ſay unto him, We alſo go with thee. They went forth, and enter'd into a ſhip immediately; and that night they caught nothing. But when the morning was now come, Jeſus ſtood on the ſhore; but the diſciples knew not that it was Jeſus. Then Jeſus ſaith unto them, Children, have ye any meat? They anſwered him, No. And he ſaid unto them, Caſt the net on the right ſide of the ſhip, and ye ſhall find. They caſt therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fiſhes. Therefore that diſciple whom Jeſus loved, ſaith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fiſher's coat unto him, for he was naked, and did caſt himſelf into the ſea. And the other diſciples came in a little ſhip, for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits, dragging the net with fiſhes. Aſſoon then as they were come to land, they ſaw a fire of coals there, and fiſh laid thereon, and bread. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Bring of the fiſh which ye have now caught. Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fiſhes, an hundred and fifty and three: and for all there were ſo many, yet was not the net broken. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the diſciples durſt ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord. Jeſus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fiſh likewiſe. This is now the third time that Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to his diſciples, after that he was riſen from the dead.

To the diſciples.] That is, not to all, but to the greateſt part of them; there being but ſeven together at this time, as appears, ver. 2.

The Sea of Tiberias.] See the notes on chap. vi. 1. and Matt. iv. 18.

Go a fiſhing.] Obſerve here, that, after Chriſt was crucified, the diſciples returned, for a time, to their trade and imployment of fiſhing: Though they were called to be fiſhers of men, yet, churches not being gathered and conſtituted at preſent, nor being able to maintain them, they labour with their hands to ſupply their preſent neceſſities. Afterwards, when, at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, they had received thoſe viſible gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, which did furniſh them for preaching the Goſpel to all nations, and they went forth to plant and propagate the Goſpel, we may believe, they then gave over the labours of their ſecular callings, and applied themſelves wholly to the work of the miniſtry. That may be done in a church which is conſtituting, or about to be conſtituted, which is not convenient to be done in a church already conſtituted. (B.) Theſe Apoſtles, as ſuch, had nothing in charge to do, till the Holy Ghoſt ſhould deſcend upon them: And, among the Jews, it was accounted a diſgrace to be idle. Beſides, the Apoſtles themſelves were deſtitute of food at that time; as appears, ver. 5. (G.)

That night they caught nothing.] Chriſt being then abſent: But when he is preſent, they, having his command, incloſe a very great multitude of fiſhes; To teach them, That tho' in preaching of the Goſpel they were "inſufficient to do any thing as of themſelves," 2 Cor. iii. 5. yet, having his command to go and teach all nations, and the promiſe of his preſence with them, they ſhould be wonderfully ſucceſsful in bringing many to the faith. 'Tis alſo very likely, they went then a fiſhing to ſupply their own want of neceſſaries: Chriſt therefore, by this draught of fiſhes, not only works a miracle, to confirm them in the belief of his divine power; but to inform them alſo, that, while they were imployed in doing what he did command them, they ſhould never want what was convenient for them: And as, by miraculouſly providing bread and fiſh broiling on the fire, ver. 9. he ſhewed his ability to do ſo; ſo, by this numerous draught of fiſhes, he ſupplied them with neceſſaries till the Holy Ghoſt ſhould come upon, them to fit them for their miniſtry. (G. W. and B.)

Jeſus ſtood on the ſhore.] Signifying thereby, that he, by his reſurrection, was ſafely got to land, but they were ſtill amongſt a ſea of troubles. (G.)

Knew not that it was Jeſus.] See the notes on chap. xx. 14. and Luke xxiv. 16. 31.

Children.] This word is not here to be underſtood ſtrictly; but as a kind of friendly compellation. (Gerh.) Thus, in our language, a commander ſays to his ſoldiers, Come on, my boys; and the like, in other familiar inſtances. See the notes on chap. xiii. 33.

Caſt the net.] Obſerve here, 1. That, tho' they had labour'd all the night in vain, yet, at Chriſt's command, they go to work again, and with great ſucceſs; they were not well "able to draw the net, for the multitude of fiſhes." When Chriſt is about to do great things for his people, he will yet have them exert all their own endeavours; and the want of former ſucceſs muſt not diſcourage them. 2. What a proof Chriſt here gives of his divinity! How were all the fiſhes in the ſea at his pleaſure, and obedient to his command! He knew where they ſwam, and brought them from one part of the lake to another. (B.)

That diſciple whom Jeſus loved.] See the notes on chap. xiii. 23.

He girt his fiſher's coat about him, for he was naked.] The words tranſlated naked, or to be naked, very often ſignify the having only ſome part of the body uncover'd; alſo, the being without an upper garment. Both the Jews and Romans, when they ſpeak of a perſon's being naked, mean his having only a ſhirt on, or ſome linnen garment, or other inner cloathing next the ſkin; not that he was abſolutely naked, without any covering at all: They therefore call him naked, who had put off his upper garment. In this ſenſe I conceive, Iſa. xx. 2, 3. is to be underſtood. For, is it to be imagin'd, that God, who would not ſuffer, that his altar ſhould be made to go up by ſteps, leſt the nakedneſs of his prieſts ſhould be diſcover'd thereon, Exod. xx. 26. would command the prophet to go publickly naked, without any covering whatſoever, for the ſpace of three years? Nor is his being order'd to put off his ſackcloth an argument that he went quite naked: For, tho' ſackcloth was worn next the skin, in times of humiliation, it might notwithſtanding be worn on the like occaſions as an outward garment too. In this ſenſe alſo, I ſuppoſe, Saul is ſaid to have propheſied before Samuel, "and to lie down naked," 1 Sam. xix. 24. And David to have been uncover'd, when he danced before the ark, 2 Sam. vi. 20. The meaning is, that they laid aſide their royal robes: For, of David it is expreſly ſaid there, ver. 14. that "he was girded with a linnen ephod." (Willet, G. H. W. B. Howel and Fox) Obſerve here the great zeal and forwardneſs of Peter. Hearing that it was Chriſt, "he caſt himſelf into the ſea," to get to him. It is not a ſea of water, nor ſeas of blood, that can keep a zealous ſoul at a diſtance from Chriſt. (B.)

Dragging the net with fiſhes.] Or rather full of fiſh. (Maſs.)

A fire of coals there, and fiſh.] What a complication of miracles was here! After a miracle at ſea, they meet with another at land; viz. "A fire of coals, and fiſh laid thereon, and bread;" all created and produced by Chriſt out of nothing, at this time, as an evidence of his divine power: For, before they could get their fiſh to ſhore, they ſaw fiſh broiling upon coals; which makes it evident, that thoſe were none of the fiſh they had caught. (G. H. W. B. How. and Q.)

Come, and dine.] A twofold reaſon may be aſſign'd, why Chriſt did at this time invite and call his diſciples to dine with him; 1. To evidence to them the reality of his reſurrection, and to aſſure them of the truth of his manhood, that they might not think him an apparition only. By the miracle in catching the fiſhes, he prov'd himſelf to be God: By his preſent eating of the fiſh, he evidenced himſelf to be man; and conſequently, teacheth us, that our exalted high-prieſt continues our kinſman in heaven. 2. To ſhew his tender care over the bodies of his dear diſciples, as being the tabernacles of his own ſpirit, "the temples of the Holy Ghoſt;" and therefore he encourages the refreſhing, tho' not the pampering of them. (B.) To which may be added, 3. That no perſon has any ſhare in the heavenly banquet of Chriſt riſen from the dead, unleſs he be invited thereto by his word, and drawn by his grace The Apoſtles do not of themſelves take their food; but it is Chriſt who gives it, and diſtributes it among them, in what proportion he thinks fit, as the ſole maſter of his own gifts. (Q.) As the father of the family he both makes proviſion for them, and gives to every man his portion. That he himſelf did eat is not ſaid; yet, ſince St. Peter ſaith, "They did eat and drink with him after his reſurrection," Acts x. 41. and St. Luke ſaith, that "he did eat before them," Luke xxiv. 42, 43. as he did that for confirmation of his reſurrection, ſo is it probable he might eat here for the ſame end. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 29. and Luke xxiv. 30, 43.

This is now the third time.] St. John ſpeaketh here of Chriſt's public appearances, to his apoſtles in a body; and not of any of his private appearances unto any particular perſons. For, ſo the words are, "This is now the third time that Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to his diſciples, after that he was riſen from the dead;" that is, publickly and ſolemnly, to all, or moſt of them, together. (Bp. Griff. Williams, G. H. W. and Howel) Whereby, 1. He ſeems to deſign to make his apoſtles amends, for the three days, wherein they were deprived of the comfort of his preſence. And, 2. He obviates all ſuſpicions of miſtake and deluſion; it being impoſſible, that ſo many perſons could be deceived all at once, and at ſo many different times. (Q.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. So when they had dined, Jeſus ſaith to Simon Peter, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me more than theſe? He ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knoweſt that I love thee. He ſaith unto him, Feed my lambs. He ſaith to him again the ſecond time, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? He ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knoweſt that I love thee. He ſaith unto him, Feed my ſheep. He ſaith unto him the third time, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? Peter was grieved, becauſe he ſaid unto him the third time, Loveſt thou me? And he ſaid unto him, Lord, thou knoweſt all things; thou knoweſt that I love thee. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Feed my ſheep. Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, When thou waſt young, thou girdedſt thyſelf, and walkedſt whither thou wouldſt: but when thou ſhalt be old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldſt not. This ſpake he, ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorify God. And when he had ſpoken this, he ſaith unto him, Follow me.

Simon, ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me?] Obſerve here, 1. Chriſt puts Peter upon a threefold profeſſion of his love unto him, anſwerable to his threefold denial of him: His threefold denial required a threefold confeſſion. True repentance ought, and will be as eminent in the fruit and effects of it, as the ſaints fall hath been. A threefold denial of Chriſt ſhall be attended with a threefold profeſſion of love unto him. 2. The ſolemn queſtion put by our Saviour unto Peter, "Loveſt thou me? Loveſt thou me more than theſe?" That is, more than thy occupation and employment; more than thy nets and fiſhing-boats? If ſo, leave them, and wholly employ thyſelf in feeding my ſheep and lambs: Or, more than theſe? that is, more than the reſt of my diſciples? Doſt thou love me more than thou loveſt them? Or, more than they love me? If ſo, evidence the ſincerity of thy love to me, by thy care of mine. Thence note, That miniſters, who are called to take care of Chriſt's flock, had need of much love to Jeſus Chriſt, and great compaſſion for ſouls; by which they will be animated and fortified to go through with the labours and difficulties, as well as to encounter the dangers and ſufferings, which do accompany their calling. "Simon, loveſt thou me? Feed my flock." Note farther, That the ſureſt argument and beſt evidence of a miniſter's love to Jeſus Chriſt, is his conſciencious care to feed, that is, to teach, inſtruct, and govern the whole flock of Chriſt, lambs and ſheep, weak and ſtrong: The feebleſt in the fold were purchaſed by the great Shepherd: And if he judged them worth his blood, well may we judge them worth our ſweat. Note again, That ſuch as would be faithful in their miniſterial charge, ought to look upon their people as committed unto them by Chriſt himſelf, as loved of him, and committed to their care by him, and for which they muſt be accountable to him. Chriſt calls them, three times over, his lambs and his ſheep, and as often charges Peter to feed them. Obſerve next, Peter's threefold anſwer to Chriſt's queſtion, "Simon, loveſt thou me more than theſe? Lord! thou knoweſt that I love thee." Where note, 1. The great modeſty of Peter in his reply; "Loveſt thou me more than theſe?" ſays Chriſt; Peter replies, "Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee." He doth not ſay, Lord! I love thee above them all, and before them all; here is no boaſting now: Once it was ſaid, and Peter vaunted, "Tho' all men forſake thee, yet will not I:" but now, his fall had taught him humility; he boaſts not of his love above others, and makes no compariſon with others, but only ranks himſelf among the true lovers of Chriſt: "Lord, I love thee." Note, 2. The evidence that Peter gives of his ſincere love to Chriſt: He dares appeal to Chriſt himſelf, "Lord! thou knoweſt that I love thee;" yea, thou that art omniſcient, the all-knowing and heart-ſearching God, "Thou that knoweſt all things, knoweſt that I love thee:" Oh! it is a bleſſed thing, when we can and dare appeal to God's knowledge; and it is matter of high conſolation to know that God knoweth our ſincerity and love unto him, and that he knoweth and approveth us as ſuch. "Lord! thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee." Note laſtly, from theſe words, "Lord! thou knoweſt all things," an argument of Chriſt's divinity. He that knows all things, and particularly the hearts of all men, is God, 1 Kings viii. 29. But ſo doth Chriſt, if St. Peter's teſtimony here be true; ſaying, "Lord! thou knoweſt all things:" That is, ſay the Socinians, very many things: But this would have deſtroyed St. Peter's argument at once; for it follows not that Chriſt knew the ſincerity of St. Peter's heart, unleſs he knew the ſecrets of all hearts; and if he knew the ſecrets of all hearts, he is really God. (Burkitt) They who hence argue for the ſupremacy of Peter above the reſt of the apoſtles, are vain in their imaginations: For if, by theſe words Chriſt required Peter to feed all his ſheep and lambs, 'tis certain, he was wanting in his duty; for he never exerciſed one act of ſupremacy over the reſt of the apoſtles; but, being ſent by them, obey'd, Acts viii. 14. And, being reprov'd by St. Paul, he held his peace; and was ſo far from feeding all Chriſt's ſheep, that he never fed any of the province of St. Paul. Did he feed thoſe apoſtles on whom the ſame Holy Ghoſt fell, who had the ſame commiſſion given, at the ſame time, and in the ſame words, to preach the Goſpel to all nations, or to every creature? If not, they were not in the number of the ſheep whom Peter is here bid to feed. Or did all other paſtors receive commiſſion from St. Peter to feed Chriſt's ſheep? Did St. Paul, who doth ſo ſolemnly declare, that he had not his commiſſion from "man, neither by man," Gal. i. 1. Did any of the biſhops of Aſia? No. St. Paul aſſures us, "the Holy Ghoſt had made them overſeers of the flock of Chriſt," Acts xx. 28. No, ſaith Pſeud-Ambroſius, Not Peter only, but we with him, have receiv'd commiſſion to feed Chriſt's ſheep: And what is here ſaid to Peter, "Feed my ſheep," is, ſaith St. Auſtin, ſaid to all: And St. Baſil ſaith, Chriſt here gave the ſame power to all enſuing paſtors and teachers. Had St. Peter underſtood this of any new privilege, or enlargement of his power, he would not have been grieved at our Lord's repeating the queſtion, unto him the third time, "Loveſt thou me?" But, in his anſwers thereto, he is very far from preferring himſelf before any one; remembring, that it was his advancing himſelf above all the reſt of the apoſtles, which was the occaſion of his fall. (Beza, G. H. Comber, W. Marſhal, Nelſon, Barker, B. and Q.)

When thou waſt young.] In theſe words our Saviour forewarns Peter of his future ſufferings, intimating that he ſhould prove more ſtout than in his former trial. When he was young and unexperienced he enjoyed his liberty; but when he was grown older in years, and ſtronger in grace, he ſhould willingly ſtretch forth his hands, and quietly ſuffer himſelf to be bound to the croſs; for Peter (ſay ſome) was not nailed, but tied and bound to the croſs only, and ſo, as a martyr or witneſs for the truth of Chriſt, glorified God by his death. Learn hence, 1. The miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, when they undertake the charge of his flock, muſt prepare for ſuffering; and therefore this prediction of Peter's ſufferings is join'd with the foregoing injunction, "Feed my ſheep." 2. That human nature, in Chriſt's miniſters, as well as other men, has a reluctancy againſt ſufferings; They ſhall "carry thee whither thou wouldſt not." 3. From the time of St. Peter's ſufferings, "when thou ſhalt be old," learn, That the time of the ſaints ſufferings is in Chriſt's hands. He can, and, when he pleaſeth, doth ſcreen them from ſuffering, till old age; and when their work is almoſt done for God, they cloſe their days with ſuffering for him. And 4. That the ſufferings of the ſaints in general, and of the miniſters of Chriſt in particular, do redound much to the glory of God; which is a conſideration that ought to reconcile them to the croſs of Chriſt, and ſupport them under it: "This ſpake he, ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorify God." (B.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 4, 36.

Follow me.] This was ſpoken, when Chriſt aroſe from his place, and began to put himſelf again in motion. (Stanh.)

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Then Peter turning about, ſeeth the diſciple whom Jeſus loved, following; which alſo leaned on his breaſt at ſupper, and ſaid, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee? Peter ſeeing him, ſaith to Jeſus, Lord, and what ſhall this man do? Jeſus ſaith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Then went this ſaying abroad among the brethren, that that diſciple ſhould not die: Yet Jeſus ſaid not unto him, He ſhall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? This is the diſciple which teſtifieth of theſe things, and wrote theſe things: And we know that his teſtimony is true. And there are alſo many other things which Jeſus did, the which, if they ſhould be written every one, I ſuppoſe that even the world itſelf could not contain the books that ſhould be written. Amen.

What ſhall this man do?] Our Saviour, having foretold the manner of Peter's death, in the foregoing verſes; here in theſe, Peter is inquiſitive after, and very ſolicitous for, the knowledge of what kind of death St. John ſhould die. Chriſt checks him for his curioſity, as meddling with that which did not concern him; yet intimates to him, that John ſhould live till he came to take vengeance on the Jews, and deſtroy Jeruſalem: "If I will that he tarry till I come;" that is, till I come to execute judgment upon Jeruſalem. Here we may note, There are two great vanities in men with reference to knowledge; the one, a neglect to know what is our duty to know; the other, a curioſity to know what doth not belong to us to know. Chriſt tells Peter, it was none of his buſineſs to enquire what John ſhould do; but he ought rather to be preparing for what he himſelf ſhould ſuffer: "If I will that he tarry, what is that to thee?" (B.) The occaſion of St. Peter's asking this queſtion is variouſly conjectur'd by divers expoſitors. Some think, he did it out of his ſingular love to St. John: Others, for the ſtrengthening of his own faith; becauſe he durſt not promiſe himſelf the ſtability and perſeverance of his own will, to ſuffer and die for Chriſt; he having ſo much experience before, of his own imbecility and weakneſs, when Chriſt told him he ſhould deny him: And therefore he might now fear the more, when Chriſt tells him he ſhould die for him; which might make him more deſirous to know, whether St John ſhould alſo die the ſame death or not. And others again think, That St. Peter, conſidering with himſelf, how dearly Chriſt loved St. John, he thought that he ſhould obtain this privilege, not to ſuffer death for Chriſt: But, when, upon theſe words, he ſaw St. John following Chriſt, then, on the other ſide, he ſuppoſed that he might likewiſe drink of the ſame cup; and therefore, being thus doubtful what to think of him, and deſirous to be reſolved of his doubt, he ſaith, "And what ſhall this man do?" So it is apparent, it was curioſity in St. Peter, that moved him to ask this queſtion; and ſo the major part of the beſt writers do conclude the ſame: For honeſt Ferus, the beſt of the friers, ſaith, The human frailty did manifeſtly ſhew itſelf in St. Peter, becauſe fleſh and blood doth always love rather to look into another man's ſtate, than his own: And ſo St. Cyril, Cajetan, Baronius, Janſenius, and divers others, that are as much devoted to St. Peter, as any other of the wiſer ſort of Papiſts, do all yield, it was an infirmity in him, to move this queſtion. Yet cardinal Tolet ſeems to juſtify him: And the reaſon is, that he was ſo lately, ſo highly advanced by Chriſt to ſuch tranſcendent prerogatives, that we have no reaſon to believe ſo eaſily, he ſhould ſo ſuddenly fall into curioſity. But to this I anſwer, (as St. Auguſtine hath obſerved in the like caſe) that, within a moment, after the ſpeaking of few words, the ſame man, the ſame St. Peter that was called bleſſed, is termed Satan: And therefore, tho' I do moſt willingly yield to Bellarmine, that in regard of St. Peter's love to St. John, the care of his fellow, the comfort of his heart, the confirming of his faith, and many other conſiderable circumſtances that might induce him to ask this queſtion; this curioſity of St. Peter, if you will call it curioſity, may be placed in the loweſt rank of the moſt venial ſins; and ſo the apoſtle may be well freed a tanto, from a great ſin, tho' not a toto, not wholly from all fault; yet I muſt confeſs this curioſity can be no leſs, than a human frailty in this divine apoſtle. And this is the comfort of God's ſaints, that when they ſee their own infirmities, how ſubject they are to many falls, and ſometimes to foul miſtakings; yet they ſhould not deſpair, nor caſt down their ſouls from all hope; becauſe they may conſider, how the beſt men failed, and attained not unto perfection: And therefore, if the ſtrong winds of man's temptation have ſhaken the great oaks of Baſhan, and the tall cedars of Libanus, what wonder is it if they do much more ſhake the ſmall and low ſhrubs of Cades? If St. Peter ſtumble, it is no marvel if I do fall. (Bp. Gr. Will.)

If I will that he tarry till I come.] Here we may obſerve a twofold Syriaſm. The one in the word menein, to tarry, which here ſignifies to live; in which ſenſe it is alſo uſed, 1 Cor. xv. 6 and elſewhere. The other in the word erchomai, I come; wherein conſiſts all the ambiguity of the place. Now, theſe words muſt here be properly underſtood of Chriſt's coming to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, after which this apoſtle lived a long time; and he alone did ſo, the other apoſtles being dead before. Of this coming the prophet Joel ſpeaks, ſaying, "The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, before the great and terrible day of the Lord cometh," Joel ii. 31. (See ver. 1.) So Mal. iii. 1, 2. "Behold he cometh; but who ſhall abide the day of his coming?" And chap. iv. 1. "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, which burneth as a furnace:" And ver. 6. "Leſt coming he ſmite the land with a curſe." In the New Teſtament we have frequent mention of this coming of our Lord. For when our Lord ſpake of the deſtruction of the temple, the apoſtles ask, What is the ſign of thy coming? Matt. xxiv. 3. And he tells them that "the coming of the Son of man will be as lightning," ver. 27. and "then ſhould they ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven," ver. 30. That "as it was in the days of Noah, ſo ſhould it be at the coming of the Son of man," ver. 37, 39. bidding them "watch, becauſe they knew not when their Lord cometh," ver. 42, 44. See Matt. xvi. 28. Hebr. x. 37. James v. 9. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 1. And note here, that whereas 'tis ſaid, That the ſcripture mentions only two comings of our Lord, one when he came and lived on earth, the other at the day of judgment, when he ſhall come "a ſecond time without ſin unto ſalvation," Heb. ix. 28. this is indeed no objection againſt this intermediate advent, ſo frequently, and plainly mentioned in the New Teſtament; this being not a perſonal advent, by a deſcent of Chriſt from heaven, but only a coming of our Lord by the Roman army, and by ſigns from heaven, and in the clouds of their approaching ruin. (Heinſ. Tayl. H. and W.) Let us uſe our utmoſt endeavours to follow Chriſt in diſcharging our own duty, and to render ourſelves worthy of his croſs; This is our proper buſineſs: It belongs to God, to diſpoſe of others according to the good pleaſure of his will. St. Peter, being as yet imperfect in his friendſhip, is drawn aſide to curioſity, to teach us to avoid it. This was a very unſeaſonable curioſity: For that which Chriſt had juſt told him concerning his martyrdom, ought to have engaged him to employ his whole mind in paying him the great duties of thankſgiving, humiliation, and acceptance of his croſs, &c. Let us take great care that we do not receive the graces of God negligently. Inſtead of ſeriouſly reflecting upon them within ourſelves, we often ſuffer our minds to wander abroad in vain and impertinent curioſity. (Beza, Stanh. and Q.) See the notes on Matt. xvi. 28. Matt. xxiv. 3. and Luke xxi. 7, 20.

Then went that ſaying abroad.] Obſerve here, how ſtrangely our Saviour's words were miſtaken and miſunderſtood by his own diſciples: They apprehend preſently that John ſhould not die; and ſo it paſſed current among them. From hence we may note, how much the wiſdom of God is, and ought to be, admired, in giving us a written word, and tying us to it, when we ſee erroneous tradition ſo ſoon on foot in the world, and our Saviour's own ſpeeches ſo much miſtaken; and that by wiſe and holy men themſelves in the pureſt times: Much more may the words of others be miſreported, and wreſted contrary to their ſenſe and meaning. How great then is the vanity and uncertainty of oral tradition! men are naturally prone to miſtake; to miſtake themſelves, and to miſtake one another: The more to be admired is their over-daring ignorance, who think they cannot err. Such an haughty opinion of a man's ſelf, concludes him to be neither good nor wiſe. (B.) 2. The care our Evangeliſt takes here, to prevent any miſtakes concerning himſelf, which might, and did, ariſe, from a miſconſtruction of thoſe doubtful words concerning himſelf, "If I will, that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" Upon this occaſion he acquaints us, "there went a ſaying abroad among the brethren, that That diſciple ſhould not die." But, how weak and ungrounded ſuch ſaying was, the next period informs us; "Yet Jeſus ſaid not unto him he ſhall not die; but if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" To make this opinion look more probable, the particular affection of Jeſus, the extreme old age, by which St. John long ſurvived the reſt of the apoſtles, and the want of any particular account of the manner of his death, might in ſome meaſure contribute: But ſtill all theſe arguments, when cloſely conſidered, will be found to import no ſuch matter. (Stanh.) The firſt aſſertor, and that but obliquely, that I find of this opinion, was Hippolytus, biſhop of Porto, and ſcholar to Clemens of Alexandria, who ranks him in the ſame capacity with Enoch and Elias: For, ſpeaking of the two-fold coming of Chriſt, he tells us, That his firſt coming in the fleſh had John the Baptiſt for its forerunner, and his ſecond to judgment ſhall have Enoch, Elias, and St. John. Ephrem, patriarch of Antioch, is more expreſs. He tells us, there are three perſons, anſwerable to the three diſpenſations of the word, yet in the body, Enoch, Elias, and St John: Enoch before the law, Elias under the law, and John under the Goſpel: Concerning which laſt, that he never died, he confirms both from ſcripture and tradition, and quotes St. Cyril (I ſuppoſe he means him of Alexandria) as of the ſame opinion. The whole foundation upon which this error is built, was that diſcourſe that paſſed between our Lord and Peter concerning this apoſtle; which we have already accounted for. (Cave)

We know, that his teſtimony is true.] Theſe words are by ſome interpreters ſuppoſed to be ſpoken in the name of the church of Epheſus, expreſſing their entire ſatisfaction in this point: By others as a ſolemn profeſſion of his own veracity, made by St. John himſelf. The conſequence of determining either way is of no great account; ſince the words, in either acceptation, offer an argument for the truth of this Goſpel, conſiſting of two parts: The one referring to the perſon who wrote it; The other to the meaſure of that which is written. (Stanh.) But whereas that firſt concluſion is drawn from the word oidamen, "we know," being of the plural number, Dr. Lightfoot here obſerves, that "we know," in the Chaldee dialect, is often uſed of one. So Mary Magdalene ſaith of herſelf, "They have taken the Lord out of the ſepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him:" So St. Paul often, "For we know that the law is ſpiritual, but I am carnal," 1 Theſſ. ii. 18. So "We would have come to you; I Paul," So this apoſtle ſaith of himſelf, "We teſtify," 3 John 12. And that here it is only one that ſpeaketh, is demonſtrated from the following word, oimai, "I ſuppoſe." Nay even theſe words ſhew, that all the preceding words of this chapter were writ by this diſciple; and therefore were not written by the Aſiatick biſhops. (W.) See the notes on chap. xix. 35. and Luke xxiv. 48.

Many other things which Jeſus did.] Leſt it ſhould be ſuſpected, that a favourite diſciple had allow'd himſelf too great a liberty of enlarging on this occaſion, he tells us here in the cloſe, that it is not for want of matter that his hiſtory ends ſo ſoon: So far from this, that it is not to be conceived, much leſs to be told, how many of our Lord's actions are ſtill left unrehearſed. (Stanh.) See the notes on chap. xx. 30. and Acts i. 1.

If they ſhould be written every one.] There is as much deliver'd down to us in writing, as is neceſſary for us to know, in order to our eternal ſalvation: And this acquits the author of partiality. It was his deſign to ſatisfy, but not to oppreſs, us with evidence. Had not the former been done, St. John could not have ſaid, as he does, chap. xx. 31. "Theſe are written, that ye might believe." And when enough was written for that purpoſe, why ſhould we deſire, why ſhould we fondly obtrude, that which is not written, for more? Tho' many of Chriſt's Sermons, Conferences, Miracles, and Actions, be not recorded; yet it cannot be inferr'd from thence, than any neceſſary doctrine is omitted, or not ſufficiently prov'd. (Idem, B. and Q.) Scripture, and not tradition, is preſcrib'd by our Saviour to his diſciples, as the rule for them to walk by; and which we are all neceſſarily to adhere to, for the guidance of our faith and worſhip, and our behaviour in all reſpects. "To the law and to the teſtimony (ſays the prophet Iſaiah:) If they ſpeak not according to this word, it is becauſe there is no light in them," Iſa. viii. 20. And again, "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read," chap. xxxiv. 16. And ſo, in the New Teſtament, "Search the ſcriptures," ſays our Saviour, John v. 39. And, in the Acts of the apoſtles, the Jews at Beræa are commended, as "more noble," of a milder and better temper and diſpoſition than thoſe at Theſſalonica; and for this reaſon, becauſe "they received the word with all readineſs of mind, and ſearched the ſcriptures daily," chap. xvii. 11. And indeed, that not tradition, but ſcripture, is the rule for our direction, is a doctrine ſo agreeable to our moſt holy profeſſion, and has been ſo fully prov'd, from time to time, that, whenſoever any competition ariſes between them, I thought there was no room for doubting, which of them were chiefly to be relied upon. As to rites and ceremonies, and all matters of indifferency, it is, and muſt be, in the choice of every church, to determine what they ſhall ſee proper, for their own people and circumſtances: Unleſs it be reſolv'd, that they ſhall have no power left them, to order any thing in relation to the worſhip of God; which would be highly unreaſonable, when every maſter of a family may do it in his own houſe. But, in all the eſſentials of religion, the caſe is very different. For here we are obliged to keep to the laws of God, and the directions of our bleſſed Saviour and his apoſtles, recorded in the holy ſcripture: Nor could I ever learn, that bare tradition was ſufficient of itſelf, to make any thing a neceſſary indiſpenſable duty, that has no foundation at all in ſcripture. St. Paul teaches, That the church is "built upon the foundation of the apoſtles and prophets;" and eſpecially upon our bleſſed Lord and Saviour, "Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner-ſtone," Eph. ii. 20. Our Saviour confuted the Sadducees from ſcripture, Matt. xxii. 31, 32. St. Paul confuted the falſe apoſtles from ſcripture, Gal. iii. 10. And the fathers, in their diſputations with hereticks, appealed to ſcripture. But now, we are taught to betake ourſelves, not to ſcripture, but to tradition, the fathers, and the Jewiſh Rabbies; which, tho' all of uſe in their proper place, are yet by no means to be compared to ſcripture, or ſet in oppoſition to it. Tradition may be of uſe, for confirming what is deliver'd in ſcripture, tho' not ſo fully and clearly as ſome other doctrines are: But how it can ever make ſuch things eſſential to Chriſtianity, and of abſolute neceſſity in order to ſalvation, as neither our Saviour himſelf makes any mention of, nor his apoſtles have given any manner of direction about, is a paradox too hard to be maintain'd. That "whatſoever is not read in ſcripture, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it ſhould be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requiſite or neceſſary to ſalvation," is undoubtedly the doctrine of the church of England, Art. vi. And not ſo only, but moreover of the Auguſtan, the Helvetick, the Wirtenburgh, and the Bohemian confeſſions: And indeed, it is the true baſis of the whole reformation. And the truth hereof might be eaſily evinced, by a plentiful cloud of witneſſes, both from ſcripture and other eccleſiaſtical writers, both in former and later ages, were there any need of it: But, that tradition ſhould be ſet in competition with it, to be received pari pietatis affectu, is a doctrine of the council of Trent; but not to be met with in ſcripture, nor the doctrines of the primitive church. So that I may well affirm, in the words of our great archbiſhop Laud, That ſome traditions I deny not to be true and firm, and of great authority and uſe in the church, as apoſtolical, but yet not fundamental in the faith: And again, That not the church of England only, but all Proteſtants agree, moſt truly and moſt ſtrongly in this, That the ſcripture is ſufficient to ſalvation, and contains in it all things neceſſary to it: And have not we reaſon then, (ſays that great prelate) to account it, as it is, the foundation of our faith? It is well known, that the apoſtle St. Paul denounces a ſevere Anathema, againſt either man or angel, who ventures to teach any other doctrine than what our Lord himſelf and his apoſtles had taught, Gal. i. 8, 9. Which deſerves to be ſeriouſly attended to, and well conſider'd, by all ſuch as ſet up tradition againſt ſcripture; whereby to make thoſe doctrines or uſages neceſſary to ſalvation, which the word of God has not made ſo: The word of God, (I ſay) "which is able to make a man wiſe unto ſalvation, and perfect to every good work," 2 Tim. iii. 15, &c. For to make it effectual to ſalvation, it muſt contain in it all things that are of abſolute neceſſity to be believed or practiſed by us: Becauſe, if only ſome of our duty is to be found there, and we muſt depend upon tradition for the reſt, then ſcripture is but a partial imperfect rule to us, and not ſuch as the apoſtle repreſents it to be. Nor have we ſcripture only to this purpoſe; but tradition itſelf too. Ut quæ ſcripta ſunt non negamus, ita ea quæ non ſcripta ſunt renuimus, ſays St. Jerome, adv. Helvid. c. 9. As we do not deny the things which are written, ſo we do reject thoſe that are not written. And the ſame might eaſily be prov'd from numbers of others; all from time to time unanimouſly confirming the ſame doctrine. Thus Irenæus, diſputing againſt the Valentinians, and other Hereticks, ſets up ſcripture in oppoſition to their blaſphemous conceits, and promiſes to diſprove their tenets from ſcripture: And, upon another occaſion, ſpeaking of the Goſpel, he teaches, That the apoſtles deliver'd it to us in the ſcriptures, to be the foundation and pillar of our faith: As he alſo complains, of the Hereticks ticks againſt whom he was writing, That, when they were confuted out of ſcripture, they ſet themſelves to accuſe the ſcriptures, as if we had them not right; or as if they wanted authority; or as differently expreſs'd; and becauſe truth cannot be found out by their help, except by ſuch as are acquainted with tradition. Where we ſee, his charge againſt them was, their depending more upon tradition than upon the holy ſcriptures: And, treating of their new erroneous and blaſphemous Goſpel, he adds, That they who will, may learn, how it differs from the Goſpel of truth; as is ſhewn out of the ſcriptures: And, at another time, diſcourſing of our bleſſed Saviour's incarnation, he tells them, They are confuted from thoſe things which are related in the ſcriptures, concerning the coming of Chriſt. Agreeably whereto Tertullian declares himſelf: And ſo do Clemens Alexandrinus, St. Cyprian, St. Athanaſius, St. Cyril of Jeruſalem, St. Baſil, St. Gregory Nyſſen, St. Ambroſe, St. Auguſtin, St. Chryſoſtom, St. Cyril of Alexandria, Theodoret, Vincentius Lirinenſis, &c. too long to be here particularly cited. (Spinckes) When we build upon what has no foundation in the word of God, this is not faith, but preſumption: For the ſcripture teaches us, That there is no faith but what is derived from the word of God: And "Whatſoever is not of faith is ſin," Rom. xiv. 23. (Brett.)

I ſuppoſe.] See the notes on ver. 24.

The world itſelf could not contain the books.] Here moſt interpreters ſay, the apoſtles words contain a great Hyperbole with a Catechreſis: But Origen avoids them both, declaring that the apoſtle ſaith, the world would not receive the books written; not for the multitude of the books, but for the greatneſs of the works recorded in them. So the word is uſed by this Evangeliſt, introducing Chriſt ſaying to the Jews, "My word (ou chorei en humin) is not received by you:" So Euſebius ſaith, that the men of former ages were not able to receive Chriſt's doctrine, l. 1. c. 1. p. 8. So Chriſt ſaith, "All men cannot receive this ſaying," Matt. xix. 11. And Philo ſaith, there are very many things in the world, which for their greatneſs human reaſon cannot comprehend. See many other examples of this ſenſe of the word in Stephanus, and in Grotius, on Matt. xix. 11. (Trem. Heinſ. and W.)

Amen.] This Hebrew word is moſt commonly uſed adverbially: And, 1. It is an adverb of affirming; ſignifying the truth and certainty of the thing which is ſpoken: And ſo it is the ſame with truly, or verily; as appears by comparing, Luke ix. 27. with Matt. xvi. 28. and Mark ix. 1. 2. It is an adverb of wiſhing, and hath the ſame ſenſe with utinam fiat, or ſo be it; as it is uſed at the end of the Lord's Prayer, and other petitions. And, 3. It is only an expreſſion whereby we teſtify our aſſent to what is ſaid before. In which ſenſe it is uſed, 1 Cor. xiv. 16 (Leigh) If that to which the Amen is added be a prayer; then the ſaying this muſt needs be a joining in the prayer: But if that to which it is added be a Creed, or any other affirmative propoſition, then the Amen is only an affirmation, as that is to which it is annexed. (Sparrow) Which diſtinction, if duly conſider'd, would ſoon ſet people right, with reſpect to the curſes in our Commination-office, which are ſolemnly denounced every Aſh-wedneſday, and to each of which all the people are commanded to "anſwer, and ſay, Amen." For, the end of this is not, that the people ſhould curſe themſelves and their neighbours, as ſome have ſimply imagined; but only, that they ſhould acknowledge, that ſuch as are guilty of the ſins there mention'd have deſerv'd a curſe. For it is not ſaid, Curſed be he, or May he be curſed: But "Curſed is he:" And conſequently, any one that anſwers Amen, does not ſignify his deſire, that the thing may be ſo, as he does when he ſays Amen to a prayer; but only his aſſent to the truth of what is affirm'd, as when he ſays Amen to the Creed The man who ſays it, verily believes, that idolaters, and all thoſe other kinds of ſinners mention'd in theſe ſentences, are expoſed to the curſe of God: And his believing this is, or ought to be, the cauſe of his repentance and begging pardon for his ſins; ſince he muſt be a deſperate ſinner indeed, who will not fly from ſuch ſins, for which he affirms with his own mouth ſo great and heavy a judgment to be due. In ſhort, theſe curſes, and the anſwers to them, are, like our Saviour's woes in the Goſpel, not the cauſes or procurers of the evil they denounce, but compaſſionate predictions of it, in order to prevent it. And one would indeed think, when we conſider, that this manner of anſwering was originally appointed by God himſelf, Deut. xxvii. 15, &c. People ſhould be cautious, how they charge it with being a wicked or fooliſh inſtitution. (Wheatly)

The CLOSE, from Mr. BURKITT.

THE deſign of the foregoing notes upon the holy Evangeliſts, being to recommend the inſtructive life of our bleſſed Redeemer to our obſervation and imitation; although I have, upon all occaſions, propounded his example to be followed by us in all the ſteps of an imitable virtue, as the matter every where occurred: Yet judging it may be profitable to ſum up together the ſeveral graces and virtues which were ſo orient in the life of Chriſt, that, having them daily before our eyes, we may be continually correcting and reforming of our lives by that bleſſed pattern; I ſhall therefore briefly offer at it. Becauſe nothing is ſo proper to form us to holineſs, as the example of the mediator; it being abſolutely perfect, and thoroughly accommodated to our preſent ſtate: There is no example of any mere man that is to be followed without limitation; but the life of Chriſt was, as the pureſt gold, without the leaſt allay. His converſation was a living law; and Chriſtianity, which is the beſt and holieſt inſtitution in the world, is nothing elſe but a conformity to his precepts and pattern. The univerſal command of the whole Goſpel is this, "To walk as Chriſt walked." This denotes a ſincere intention, deſign, and endeavour, to imitate and follow him in all the paths of holineſs and obedience.

Particularly, let us imitate Jeſus.

I. IN his early piety.] We find him at twelve years old, "about his Father's buſineſs, ſitting in the midſt of the doctors, both hearing and asking them queſtions." Luke ii. 46. An early piety gives both the perſon and the ſervice a peculiar pre-eminency; no comfort in life, no happineſs in death, like the happineſs and comfort of being good betimes.

II. In his obedience to his earthly parents. See on St. Luke ii. 51. "He went down to Nazareth, and was ſubject to them." He paid homage to the womb that bare him, and to his ſuppoſed and reputed Father that provided for him: Let a perſon be never ſo high above others, he is ſtill below his parents: If the higheſt upon earth think their parents beneath them, and themſelves above their parents commands, our Saviour did not ſo. What ſhall we think of thoſe monſters of ingratitude, the reproach of human nature, who are aſhamed to own their parents, becauſe of their poverty; or deſpiſe them becauſe of the infirmities of their age! Prov. xxiii. 22. "Hearken to thy father that begat thee, and deſpiſe not thy mother when ſhe is old."

III. In his unwearied diligence in doing good, Acts x. 38. "Who went about doing good." This was his meat and drink by day; his reſt and ſleep by Night. He fed the hungry, cloathed the naked, viſited the ſick, was eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, and adminiſter'd to ſuch as were in neceſſities and ſtreights. And he has declared, that he will judge us at the great day, according to our imitation of him in doing good to all mankind. See Matt. xxv. the ten laſt verſes.

IV. In his humility and lowlineſs of mind, Matt. xi. 29. "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart:" Witneſs his ſtooping to the meaneſt office; even that of "waſhing his diſciples feet," St. John xiii. 5. He that came in the form of a ſervant, performs the office of the meaneſt ſervant to his diſciples. And all this was to ſet us an example of mutual condeſcenſion each to other; "If I, your Lord and maſter, have waſhed your feet, ye ought alſo to waſh one another's feet:" Which precept, though it doth not bind us to the ſame action, yet it obliges us to the ſame condeſcenſion; namely, to think no office of love beneath us, which the neceſſities of our brother call for from us.

V. In the unblameableneſs and inoffenſiveneſs of his life and actions. He injured none, and juſtly offended none, but was harmleſs as well as holy: He wrought a miracle to pay tribute-money, rather than give occaſion of offence to the government. See on Matt. xvii. 27. Accordingly, let us be harmleſs and blameleſs; wiſe as ſerpents, and Innocent as doves: Piety without policy is too ſimple to be ſafe; policy without piety is too ſubtle to be good.

VI. In his eminent ſelf-denial. He emptied himſelf and became poor. When he was rich as God from all eternity, he impoveriſhed himſelf by becoming man. Oh! what did he not deny, when he left the boſom of his Father, with the ineffable delight and pleaſure which he there enjoyed from all eternity; and inſtead thereof to drink the cup, the bitter cup of his Father's wrath for our ſake. Lord! how can we enough debaſe ourſelves for thee, who thus denyedſt thyſelf for us?

VII. In his contentment in a low and mean condition in this world; yea, in a ſuffering and afflicted condition: He would not honour the world ſo far as to have any part of it in his own hand, and was therefore of himſelf leſs provided of comfortable accommodations than the birds of the air, or the beaſts of the field. See Luke ix. 58. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have neſts, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Let us learn from him to manage an afflicted condition with a contented ſpirit: Let there be no murmurings, complaints, or fooliſh chargings of God, heard from us, whatever ſtraits or troubles we may be brought into: "But in whatſoever ſtate we are, let us be therewith content," Phil. iv. 11.

VIII. In his frequent performance of the duty of private prayer and faſting. He ſometimes ſpent a whole night in prayer, Luke vi. 12. "He went into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." And Mark i. 35. "In the morning riſing up a great while before day, he went into a ſolitary place and prayed." It is certain, that we have much more buſineſs with almighty God in prayer, than Chriſt had: He had no ſins to confeſs, no wants of grace to make known; yet did he delight, with frequency and fervency, to perform this homage to his heavenly Father. Lord! how doth thy zeal and forwardneſs condemn our remiſſneſs and lukewarmneſs in praying to our heavenly Father!

IX. In his affectionate performance of the duty of praiſe and thankſgiving. Our bleſſed Saviour was a great pattern of thankfulneſs. Matt xi. 25. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth," &c. John xi. 41. "Father I thank thee, that thou haſt heard me:" When he was to eat common bread, he received it with thankſgiving. What a pattern of thankfulneſs then was Jeſus to his followers! There is hardly any one external duty which we do not find the hypocrite performing in ſcripture, except this of thankſgiving and praiſe! We find Judas repenting, Ahab humbling himſelf, Saul ſacrifiſing; but rarely do we find any wicked man bleſſing and praiſing God: Need will make us beggars; but grace only thankſgivers.

X. In his compaſſion towards thoſe that were in diſtreſs and miſery, Matt. xx. 34. "Great was his compaſſion to the bodies of men:" He healed all that came unto him; he healed many undeſired; with great condolency and tender ſympathy, he exerciſed acts of mercy and compaſſion, when the object of compaſſion was before him; and did perfectly abhor, and ſeverely condemn all acts of cruelty: How great was his compaſſion to the ſouls of men; what pains did he take, and what hazards did he run, in preaching the Goſpel to loſt ſinners, in his fervent prayers for them; but eſpecially in dying for them! Let us imitate Chriſt herein; as his compaſſion was univerſal to all mankind, to the whole man, ſoul and body; as it was active and operative; as it was exerciſed with marvellous complacency and delight; as it was a preventing compaſſion, and an unwearied compaſſion; ſo let ours be alſo.

XI. In his holy and fruitful diſcourſe; "His lips dropt as the honeycomb, and his tongue was as choice ſilver." When walking with his diſciples to Emaus, with what heavenly diſcourſe did he entertain them in the way! See Luke xxiv. 13. &c. A good pattern for our imitation, when providentially caſt into ſuch company as will bear it. Lord! what a ſhame and reproach is it to us, that in common converſation we ſpend ſo many hours together, in talking over the news of city and country, and part without ſpeaking one word of Jeſus Chriſt, our beſt friend!

XII. In his free converſation: "The Son of man came eating and drinking," Matt. xi. 19. That is, was of a free and familiar converſe, affable and ſociable, nor ſour or moroſe, never ſhunning the ſociety of the worſt of men, even of the Phariſees themſelves; but complying with their innocent cuſtoms, and accompanying them at their feaſts. See Luke v. 29. We do not find, when Chriſt was invited to any publick entertainment, that ever he refuſed to go; not ſo much for the pleaſure of eating, as for the opportunity of converſing and doing good: Chriſt converſed with bad men; but as their phyſician, not as their compaſſion: Let us go and do likewiſe.

XIII. In his patience under ſufferings and reproaches, "When he was reviled, he reviled not again." But underwent the burden of his ſufferings with admirable patience and meekneſs of ſpirit; when his name and honour ſuffered the vileſt indignities, blaſphemies, and reproaches, that the malice of Satan, and the malignity of wicked men, could belch out againſt it; when he was called a blaſphemer, a ſorcerer, a devil, a wine-bibber, a glutton, a friend of publicans and ſinners. For an innocent perſon, and a dignified perſon, to bear all this, when he could have looked all his enemies into hell, and have frowned them into nothing; verily, to bear all this, without the leaſt diſcompoſure of ſpirit, is the higheſt triumph of patience that ever the world was acquainted with. And why all this, but to leave us an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps, 1 Pet. ii. 21, 22.

XIV. In his readineſs to forgive injuries. One of his laſt words upon the croſs, was a prayer for his murderers; "Father, forgive them," Luke xxiii. 34. He offered up his blood to God on behalf of them that ſhed it. Thus, to forgive our enemies, and to beg forgiveneſs of them, will be an evidence of a Chriſt-like frame and temper; when the grace of God calms thoſe tumultuous and outrageous paſſions, which at any time we find raging in our breaſts, moulding our ſpirits into ſweetneſs and gentleneſs, freeing us from all malicious deſires of revenge, which are ſo far beneath a Chriſtian, that it is the baſeneſs of a man: Yea, as jealouſy is the rage of a man, ſo malice is the rage of the devil; it is the ſpirit of the apoſtate nature.

XV. In his laying to heart the ſins, as well as the ſufferings of others, Mark iii. 5. "He was grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts." Such was his zeal for his Father's glory, ſuch his compaſſion to the ſouls of men, ſuch his antipathy againſt, and hatred of ſin, that he was grieved for ſin wherever he found it, and mourned over thoſe, who had no hearts to mourn for themſelves. Lord! how far are they off from a Chriſt-like ſpirit and temper, who, inſtead of mourning for other mens ſins, rejoice in iniquity, and take pleaſure to ſee their brother ſtab at once the Chriſtian name and his own ſoul!

XVI. In his zeal for the publick worſhip of God, John ii. 17. "The zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up." Now as Chriſt was, ſo Chriſtians ought to be, intenſely zealous for the glory of God, the honour of his houſe, and the purity of his publick worſhip: "The zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up." Our zeal for the publick worſhip of God glorifies him moſt, and he accepts it beſt: Now we own that God, whom we ſerve, in the face of the world; and this creates a veneration and eſteem of God in the minds of men.

XVII. In his glorifying of his Father in all he did, John xvii. 4. "I have glorified thee on earth." The whole life of Jeſus, when here on earth, was a glorifying of his Father: He glorified his Father by the doctrine which he taught, by the miracles which he wrought, by the unſpotted purity of his life, and by his unparallel'd ſufferings at his death. In like manner ſhould we glorify God in all we do, in all we deſign, in all we deſire; in our natural actions of eating and drinking; in our civil employments, buying and ſelling; in our lawful recreations, taking care that too much of our time be not conſumed therein: Recreation is not to be our buſineſs, but to fit us for buſineſs; but eſpecially let us ſeek to glorify God in our religious duties, publick, private, and ſecret.

XVIII. In his impartiality in reproving of ſin. He feared the faces, and ſpared the faults of no offenders: The Phariſees were a proud and haughty ſort of people, who diſhonour'd God above moſt, when they pretended to glorify him above any: Therefore we find Chriſt denouncing a bead-roll of woes againſt them, in one chapter, Matt. xxiii. "Woe unto you, ſcribes, Phariſees, hypocrites:" Eight ſeveral woes are denounced againſt them, for ſo many ſeveral ſins committed by them. Thoſe to whom God has given his authority to reprove the ſins of others, ought to imitate their pattern in his impartiality in reproving ſin. His very enemies gave him that character, Matt. xxii. 16. "Thou careſt not for any man, thou regardeſt not the perſon of men; that is, Thou ſpareſt none, but telleſt all men of their faults.

XIX. In his univerſal obedience to his Father's will, and chearful ſubmiſſion to his Father's pleaſure. He obey'd the will of his Father univerſally, voluntarily, ſincerely, and with a ſingle eye to his glory, perſeveringly, and to the end: And as he was, ſo muſt we be, faithful to the death, if ever we expect the crown of life. And in like manner did he ſubmit to the will of his providence, "Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt; not my will, but thine be done." O let us keep this example continually before us, and every day obey the will of God's precept univerſally, and ſubmit to the will of his providence very chearfully; this is heaven on earth.

XX. In his love and practice of univerſal holineſs, both in his heart and life. He was holy in nature, holy in his principles and motives, holy in his aim and ends; he was perfectly holy, preciſely holy, uniformly holy, exemplarily holy: He delighted only in holy perſons and holy things: It concerns us to imitate him herein, if ever we expect to be where he is: Heaven is the habitation of holineſs, the company is holy, the employment holy, the enjoyments holy: No unclean thing can enter into heaven, or could be happy in heaven: Heaven is rather a nature than a place: It is not the place of heaven can make us happy, but the diſpoſition and temper of our minds in heaven; without conformity to the nature of God, there can be no communion with him, nor delight in him. What a diſcourteous courteſy would it be, to turn a filthy ſwine into a garden of curious flowers, to lodge it in a bed of ſweet perfumes, to bathe it in a clear and cryſtal fountain? Alas! its unclean temper and ſordid inclinations would rather chuſe to lie down in a kennel, and to wallow in the mire, its proper element. Thus unſuitable would heaven be; that place of greateſt happineſs would be the greateſt uneaſineſs, to an unholy heart. Let us then pray and endeavour, that the temper of our minds, and the actions of our lives, may be a lively tranſcript of the mind and life of the holy Jeſus; that we may be like him in purity and holineſs, in juſtice and righteouſneſs, in patience and meekneſs, in charity and univerſal goodneſs: That as he was, we may be in the world, holy, humble, harmleſs, heavenly-minded, glorifying God on earth, that we may be glorified with him and by him in his eternal kingdom.

XXI. Yet, before I cloſe this exhortation to an imitation of Jeſus, I muſt ſubjoin this cautionary direction: Take heed that you do not ſo imitate Chriſt for your pattern, as to diſown him for your prieſt. This is the dangerous error of thoſe, who affirm, that the great end of Chriſt's death was to give the world an example of patience, humility, meekneſs, and the fore-mentioned Chriſtian graces; and that his ſufferings were exemplary, but not properly ſatisfactory. We acknowledge that Chriſt's giving us an example, was one end of his coming into the world, and dying for us, but not the great end: A ſubordinate end, but not the ultimate. God preſerve us from the contagion of this growing error; other errors only ſcratch the face, but this ſtabs the heart, of the Chriſtian religion, in that it deprives us of the choiceſt benefit of Chriſt's death; namely, the expiation of ſin, by a proper ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God. But bleſſed be God, we "have not ſo learn'd Chriſt:" As we are taught, ſo we believe, that the holy Jeſus, by the ſacrifice of his death, has redeem'd us from death and hell, and ſaved us from the wrath to come; by a full and adequate payment to divine juſtice, and by the redundancy of his merit, has purchaſed an eternal inheritance for us: And as we are taught and believe, ſo we pray;

Almighty God, who haſt given thine only Son to be unto us both a ſacrifice for ſin, and alſo an example of godly life; give us grace that we may always moſt thankfully receive this his ineſtimable benefit, and alſo daily endeavour ourſelves to follow the bleſſed ſteps of his moſt holy life; through the ſame Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Almighty and everlaſting God, who, of thy tender love towards mankind, haſt ſent thy Son, our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to take upon him our fleſh, and to ſuffer death upon the croſs, that all mankind ſhould follow the example of his great humility; Mercifully grant that we may both follow the example of his patience, and alſo be made partakers of his reſurrection, through the ſame Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

The END of the FOUR EVANGELISTS.

ANNOTATIONS
UPON THE Acts of the Holy Apoſtles.

ALL that is neceſſary to be here premiſed, concerning The Acts of the Apoſtles, may be reduced to theſe general heads;

I. That this book was undoubtedly written by St. Luke, the phyſician and Evangeliſt; of whom ſome account has been already given, in the introduction to his Goſpel. But tho' (as it is there obſerv'd) he wrote that, not of his own knowledge, as an eye-witneſs of the facts, but out of a "moſt ſure belief, and a perfect underſtanding of all thoſe things," as they were declared and delivered to him, by thoſe "who from the beginning were eye-witneſſes, and miniſters of the word:" Yet this, which was deſign'd as a continuation of the former, he wrote partly from the like undoubted relations, and partly from his own certain knowledge; being a companion with St. Paul in his travels for ſome time, and very dear to him, conſequently preſent at many of the tranſactions here recorded, and privy to the reſt.

II. That this hiſtory, tho' entituled The Acts of the Apoſtles, does not treat of the whole college of apoſtles, but particularly of St. Peter and St. Paul: And of theſe two, more eſpecially of the latter; the reſt being only mention'd occaſionally. Concerning St. Peter, there are but few of his actions here recorded, in compariſon of the very many not mention'd: For nothing is here ſaid of him, later than his deliverance from Herod, and the death of that perſecutor, which happen'd, A. D. 44. tho' he is known to have ſurvived that period twenty-four years. Nor are the acts of St. Paul much inſiſted upon, except during ſome part of that time when St. Luke himſelf accompanied him. Thus, from his miraculous converſion, A. D. 34. here is very little ſaid of him, till his coming to Iconium, about A. D. 46. And his acts are here recorded no farther than to his firſt coming to Rome, A. D. 58. After which he lived ten years: And having preach'd the Goſpel in Spain, and other parts of this weſtern world, at laſt he return'd to Rome again, and ſuffer'd martyrdom there, (after the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Ceſtius Gallus, and the retreat of the Chriſtians from thence to Pella, but before the taking and deſtruction of it by Titus) as St. Peter alſo did, viz. A. D. 68.

III. That, tho' this book does not pretend to give us a full account of the plantation of Chriſtianity in all parts, to which the other apoſtles went out, as to their reſpective provinces: Yet we have here a ſufficient light into, 1. What was done, in order thereto, among the Jews in Judæa and Samaria, and other parts of Syria, Aſia, Macedonia, &c. and even ſo far as Rome itſelf: And, 2. The revealing the Goſpel to the Gentiles; as at firſt to ſome ſingle families, and afterwards to whole cities and nations, where they were aſſured of better ſucceſs than among the obſtinate Jews. And what the Holy Ghoſt has here thought fit to record of theſe, is ſufficient for us to judge of the reſt. For if we had the like account of the progreſs made therein by all the other apoſtles, we could draw no other inſtructions from thence, than we may from what we have: Our curioſity indeed would be the more ſatisfied; but that is one of the paſſions which the Goſpel teaches us to mortify.

IV. That St. Luke is generally agreed to have wrote theſe Acts at Rome, and to have finiſh'd them at the end of St. Paul's two years impriſonment there, with which he concludes his book; being the fourth year of Nero, and A. D. 60. In which the hiſtory of the original of the church, the marvelous effects of the Holy Ghoſt, the conſtancy of the apoſtles, and the holineſs of the primitive Chriſtians, are ſenſible objects, which ſtrike the mind, touch the heart, and incite men to the practice of the Chriſtian virtues. For, who will not be ſeized with fear, in reading the dreadful puniſhment of Ananias and Sapphira? Who will not be animated with a ſpirit of courage, at the zeal and holy confidence of the apoſtles, who "rejoiced that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for the name of Chriſt?" Who will not look upon the good things of this world with contempt, when he conſiders the generoſity, with which the firſt Chriſtians "ſold all their poſſeſſions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need? Who will not entertain a love for prayer, when he reflects upon the aſſiduity and fervency, with which the apoſtles and diſciples perſevered in a continual courſe of prayer and ſupplication? Who will not be fill'd with a ſpirit of charity, in ſeeing the perfect union which was among them? In ſhort, Who can contemplate the plain and natural portraiture, which St. Luke draws of the manners and virtues of the firſt Chriſtians, without feeling a violent inclination to imitate them? This made St. Jerome ſay, That all the words of St. Luke in the Acts are ſo many remedies for a ſick and languiſhing ſoul. But whoever deſires to ſee a more particular ſummary of the many beauties of this divine book at large, may have recourſe to Dr. Whitby's excellent preface to it.

V. That however juſt certain criticks have been, in allowing, that St. Luke has wrote up to the propriety and purity of the Greek language; yet they have, I think, very partially, and with want of judgment, heap'd thoſe praiſes upon him, excluſive of the other inſpired writers: For the proof of which I appeal to Mr. Blackwall's Defence of the Sacred Claſſicks. To which I ſhall only add, That, notwithſtanding what is alledged to the contrary, from ſeveral authors, there is good reaſon to believe, that St. Luke was a married man, and at laſt a Martyr.

CHAP. I.

Chriſt taketh leave of his apoſtles: Commandeth them to wait at Jeruſalem, for the coming of the Holy Ghoſt; whom he promiſeth to ſend them. He aſcendeth to heaven. They are warned by angels, of his coming again in like manner. They return to Jeruſalem, to prayers with the other diſciples. Matthias choſen into the place of Judas.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. THE former treatiſe have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jeſus began both to do and teach, Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghoſt had given commandments unto the apoſtles whom he had choſen. To whom alſo he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion by many infallible proofs, being ſeen of them forty days, and ſpeaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God: And being aſſembled together with them, commanded them that they ſhould not depart from Jeruſalem, but wait for the promiſe of the Father, which, ſaith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, not many days hence. When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, ſaying, Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael? And he ſaid unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye ſhall receive power, after that the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you: And ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me, both in Jeruſalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermoſt parts of the earth.

The former treatiſe.] Meaning his Goſpel; from which this is a tranſition to the Acts of the Apoſtles, as a continuation of the former.

O Theophilus.] This is ſuppoſed to have been a perſon of eminence and authority, and poſſibly one of Antioch, converted by St. Luke, to whom he dedicates both his books. (Stanh. Cave, W. Nelſ. and Howel.) But, ſee the notes on Luke i. 3.

Of all.] St. John hath left on record many things which the bleſſed Jeſus did and taught, which are not in St. Luke: Yea, St. Luke himſelf doth, about ten times, ſay, "Jeſus taught the people;" and yet has not recorded the words which he taught, Luke iv. 15, 31. v. 3, 17. vi. 6. xiii. 10. xix. 47. xx. 1. xxi. 37. and xxiii. 5. It is neceſſary therefore to limit the generality of theſe words. Now, tho' the word all doth ſometimes ſignify the chief of all the things related to; as when our Saviour ſays, "I have made known unto you all things," John xv. 15. and yet adds, chap. xvi. 12. "I have yet many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now:" Notwithſtanding, ſince all the excellent diſcourſes of our Saviour, mentioned by St. John, and two of his great miracles, viz. the cure of a man born blind, John ix. 1. &c. and the raiſing of Lazarus, chap. xi. 43. are not recorded by St. Luke, tho' theſe deſerve well to be reckoned among the chief things which Jeſus did and taught, I prefer this expoſition of the words, "All that Jeſus began both to do and teach," ſo far as I thought needful for the inſtruction of a Catechumen; this being, in effect, the expoſition, which the Evangeliſt's own words do afford, Luke i. 4. (W. and B.) And it is obſervable, that, even here, he does not ſay, Of every thing, but "Of all things;" for, if every particular word and action of Chriſt had been recorded, the world could not have received them. See the notes on John xx. 31. and xxi. 25.

Began both to do and teach.] That is, what he did. For St. Luke's Goſpel contains what Jeſus did, from the beginning of his miniſtry to the time of his aſcenſion. And that the word archomai, to begin, is frequently uſed only as an expletive, appears plainly, Matt. xii. 1. xvi. 22. and xviii. 24. Mark ii. 23. and xi. 15. Luke iii. 8. and xv. 24. Acts xi. 15. and elſewhere. But no where without its particular beauty. (Heinſ. H. and W.)

He through the Holy Ghoſt had given commandments.] Theſe words admit of ſeveral conſtructions; as, 1. That he had choſen his apoſtles by the Holy Ghoſt: But againſt this it is objected, that the ſcripture no where ſays, that Chriſt choſe his apoſtles by the Holy Ghoſt. 2. That he was taken up into heaven by the Holy Ghoſt; as "by the ſame ſpirit he was led into the wilderneſs," Luke iv. 1. Or, 3. That he gave commandments to his diſciples by the Holy Ghoſt; which again is capable of divers conſtructions: As, 1. That he gave them theſe commandments by the inward operations of the Holy Ghoſt, which he had breathed into them, John xx. 22. But this ſenſe ſeems not very probable; 1. Becauſe, after his breathing of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, he ſtill ſaith, "He will ſend the promiſe of his Father upon them," viz. the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt; and bids them ſtay at Jeruſalem, till they had received him, Luke xxiv. 49. and here, ver. 4. And, 2. Becauſe he is ſaid, ver. 3. to "ſpeak unto them the things which belonged to the kingdom of God." Or, 2. As he did all his miracles, and delivered all his doctrines by virtue of the Holy Ghoſt, whilſt he diſcharged his Prophetick office: So, being yet on earth, he ſpake theſe things, and gave theſe commands to his apoſtles, touching his kingdom by the ſame ſpirit. And his paſſion, mentioned in the verſe following, renders it probable, that St. Luke ſpeaks of the commands relating to his kingdom, which he had given them before his paſſion. (W.) But, why may not this text rather have a particular reference to the new commiſſion (or commandment) which Chriſt gave to his apoſtles after his reſurrection, when he enlarg'd their former commiſſion, advancing the eleven, from the ſecond, to the firſt and higheſt order of the miniſtry in his church, and giving them the epiſcopal authority, to govern both the laity and inferior clergy, to cenſure offenders, to confirm the faithful, and to ſend (or ordain) others, as they were ſent by Chriſt, and he by the Father, to exerciſe, as they did, the like ſpiritual powers, even to the end of the world? Matt. xxviii. 16. Mark xvi. 14. Luke xxiv. 36. and John xx. 21.

By many infallible proofs.] For, by ſpeaking to, by walking, and by eating with them, he gave them certain indication that he lived: That he was ſeen, and handled by them, was a ſure evidence that he had a true and natural body: That he permitted Thomas to view the ſcars of his feet and hands, and put his hand into his ſide, was a certain token that the body raiſed was the ſame which was crucified, and pierced by the ſoldiers lance. (Beza, H. W. and B.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 30, 39. and John xx. 20, 27. and xxi. 13.

Being aſſembled together with them.] The Greek word ſynalizomenos, here tranſlated "being aſſembled together," is ſaid to be deriv'd from hals, which ſignifies ſalt, and ſo to import eating together. (Leigh) But it is underſtood in general, of aſſembling, or gathering together, by Phavorinus: And ſo it is uſed by Herodotus. (W.) However, whereas this aſſembly is, by Dr. Lightfoot, thought to have been in Galilee; this is contrary both to the text in Luke, and here: For Luke xxiv. 49. he commands them to "abide in the city of Jeruſalem;" here "not to depart from Jeruſalem, but to abide there;" and it is added in both places, that having ſpoken this, "he led them out (of Jeruſalem) to Bethany," ver. 9. Luke xxiv. 51. and there "was taken up into heaven," and that thence "they went back (from Bethany) to Jeruſalem," ver. 12. and Luke xxiv 52. They muſt be therefore at Jeruſalem, when Chriſt thus converſed with them; and there abiding, were to expect the promiſe of the Father, Luke xxiv. 49. (Idem.) To clear up this matter, we muſt underſtand; that when our Lord met the eleven apoſtles, by his appointment, on mount Tabor (as it is believ'd) in Galilee, he did not aſcend to heaven immediately from thence; but having given them the commiſſion before-mention'd, Matt. xxviii. 16, &c. they return'd from thence to Jeruſalem: After which, at another time, he appear'd to them again; and from thence, leading them out as far as Bethany, Luke xxiv. 49. (that is, to mount Olivet) he was there "taken up into heaven," viz. On Thurſday, May 14. A. D. 33.

Should not depart from Jeruſalem.] Of all places, the apoſtles would leaſt have choſen Jeruſalem to tarry in, had not Chriſt commanded them to wait there. For Jeruſalem was now a juſtly abhorred and deteſted place; reeking afreſh with the blood of the holy and innocent Jeſus: Yet Jeruſalem is the place choſen by Chriſt, for the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit upon his apoſtles: Becauſe, 1. There had been his greateſt humiliation: There Chriſt had ſuffered the greateſt ignominy; therefore there will he ſhew forth his power and glory. 2. Becauſe at Jeruſalem there was the greateſt company of ſpectators to behold this noble work, and to be wrought upon by it: Such as would not be convinced by our Saviour's death and reſurrection, might probably be convinced by this miraculous effuſion of the Holy Spirit deſcending upon the apoſtles, in fiery cloven tongues. Lord! What an inſtance was this of thy love to thine enemies! How deſirous wert thou of the converſion and ſalvation of thy very murderers! In and at Jeruſalem, where our Lord was crucified, the Holy Ghoſt firſt deſcended: And when Chriſt appointed where the Goſpel-combination ſhould begin, Jeruſalem is the firſt place in nomination by him. St. Luke xxiv. 47. "And he ſaid unto them, that repentance and remiſſion of ſin ſhould be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem." (B.)

The promiſe of the Father.] That is the Holy Ghoſt. See the notes on Luke xxiv. 49. John xiv. 16, 18, 26. and xvi. 7.

Baptized with the Holy Ghoſt.] That is, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt ſhall be largely poured forth upon you, as water upon the baptized perſons; which was fulfilled on the day of Pentecoſt. (B.) The word ye, and the time affixed to this baptiſm, the day of Pentecoſt, ſhew that this baptiſm relates only to the diſciples then preſent, and converſing with the Holy Jeſus. And to them the Holy Spirit was given, 1. To render them powerful, or able witneſſes of our Lord's reſurrection, Luke xxiv. 48. Acts i. 8. and conſequently that he was the true Meſſiah, or that prophet which was to come into the world, and was to be the Saviour of it: And therefore Peter ſpeaks thus to the Jews, "Ye have killed the prince of life, whom God hath raiſed from the dead, of which we are witneſſes," Acts iii. 15. And he, with the apoſtles, ſays to them, "The God of our fathers hath raiſed Jeſus from the dead, whom ye killed and hanged on a tree; him hath God exalted to his own right hand to be a prince, and a Saviour, to give repentance to Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins. And we are his witneſſes of theſe things, and ſo is the Holy Ghoſt, whom he hath given to them that obey him," Acts v. 30, &c. 2. To render them able to give us an exact account, as far as divine wiſdom ſaw it neceſſary, of what our Saviour did, and taught. "The Spirit (ſaith he) ſhall bear witneſs of me, and ye alſo ſhall be my witneſſes, becauſe ye have been with me from the beginning," John xv. 26, 27. And becauſe, were they ever ſo faithful, yet could we not ſo truſt to the ſtrength of their natural memories, as to depend on thoſe long diſcourſes we meet with in the Goſpels of St. Matthew, St. Luke, and St. John, as the very words of Chriſt, or to be aſſur'd thence, that they deliver'd all the circumſtances of Chriſt's miracles, exactly as they were tranſacted; therefore hath he aſſur'd us, that he would ſend the "Spirit of truth to them, to bring thoſe things to their remembrance, which he had ſaid unto them," John xiv. 26. 3. To make them able miniſters of the New Teſtament, able to acquaint all Chriſtians with all ſaving truths, and teach them all things which he had commanded to be obſerv'd throughout all ages of the church; and to declare unto them, by the ſpirit of prophecy, what ſhould be hereafter. And hence he promis'd them this ſpirit, to "teach them all things," John xiv. 26 to "lead them into all truth," chap. xvi. 13. and to teach them things to come: And, upon the ſtrength of this promiſe, all Chriſtians, of all ages, have believ'd, that the apoſtles, and writers of the New Teſtament, both ſpake and wrote, as they were moved, or directed, by the Spirit of God; and receiv'd thoſe doctrines they taught and indited, "not as the words of man, but, as they were in truth, the word of God," 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. (W.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 11.

Reſtore again the kingdom.] Obſerve here, The diſciples queſtion, and our Saviour's anſwer, 1. The queſtion propoſed by the diſciples, "Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael?" That is, Wilt thou repair the ruinous condition of the Jewiſh ſtate, and reſtore it to that great dignity and ſplendour which we have always expected ſhould be done by the Meſſias? Where obſerve, That notwithſtanding Chriſt had ſo often rebuked the Jews in general, and his diſciples in particular, for their conceit of a temporal kingdom, (who were ſo full of ambitious expectations to receive great honours and preferments here on earth) yet it evidently appears, that this notion ſtill ran in their minds, and that, their maſter being now riſen from the dead, this was the time both for his and their dignity and advancement. Learn hence, That it is no wonder, that unbelievers ſtumbled at the poverty and meanneſs of Chriſt's outward condition when he was here on earth, ſeeing it was ſo hard for the diſciples themſelves to be convinced, and believe that his kingdom was not of this world. The diſciples not only all the time whilſt Chriſt was with them, but even now, when upon the point of departing from them, when he was juſt aſcending, yea, in part aſcended, having one foot upon the earth, and the other in the cloud which took him up to heaven, ſtill asked him, "Wilt thou now reſtore the kingdom?" That is, ſettle upon us thy followers, ſecular power, and temporal dominion here on earth. But mark, 2. Our Lord's anſwer, "It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons, which the Father hath put only in his own power." Our Saviour's anſwer doth not in the leaſt imply that any ſuch kingdom ſhould ever be granted as they dreamt of; but he checks their curioſity in enquiring into the times and ſeaſons, and nature of God's ſecrets, which it no ways concerned them to pry into. Here note, 1. Something implied; namely, That there are certain times and ſeaſons, the knowledge of which only belongs to God, which yet man's curioſity has an itching deſire to ſearch and pry into. There is nothing more natural to man, than a deſire to know both what ſhall be hereafter, and when that hereafter ſhall be. We are very careleſs in ſeeking out the ſeaſon of that which we ourſelves ſhould do; but over careful and curious in ſeeking out the ſeaſon of what God will do. 2. Here is ſomething expreſſed; namely, That God has times and ſeaſons for executing his own purpoſes, which it is neither proper, or profitable, nor poſſible, for us to know. Not proper, becauſe none of our buſineſs: Not profitable, becauſe no part of our intereſt: Not poſſible, becauſe out of our reach. It is not poſſible for us to know either what God is about to do, or when he will do it: It is not poſſible for us to know it, as men by a natural ſagacity; nor as Chriſtians by a ſupernatural illumination; no, nor as miniſters and apoſtles, without divine inſpiration and extraordinary revelation, which we have no warrant to expect, and ſhould have no curioſity to deſire. Learn hence, That it much better becomes us with an awful ſilence to adore, than with a bold curioſity to pry into God's hidden and unrevealed ſecrets. Yet though it be not for us to know God's times and ſeaſons, it is our duty to expect them, and be prepared for them. We know not when our Lord will come to us by death and judgment, whether "in the evening, or at midnight, or at cock-crowing, or in the morning." But it is our own duty to believe and expect it, to wait and prepare for it, and be always ready to receive him. Finally, though it is not for us to know the times and ſeaſons which God hath put in his own power, yet it is for us to know the times and ſeaſons which God has put in our power; namely, the preſent time to improve it, and the time paſt to bewail our miſimprovement of it: To improve the time of affliction, for conſideration and humiliation; and the time of proſperity, mercy, and deliverance, for gratulation and thankfulneſs; and to improve both in farther meaſures and increaſe of holineſs and ſanctification both of heart and life. (Andrews, Donne, W. B. and Q.) See the notes on Matt. xvii. 11. Mark xiii. 32. and Luke xvii. 20.

Ye ſhall receive power.] Viz. The power of the Holy Ghoſt coming upon you, to enable you for the execution of your office. For dunamis in the New Teſtament, when it relates to any perſon of the Holy Trinity, imports generally ſome miraculous or extraordinary power. (H. W. B. Q. and F.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 40.

And ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me.] When ye have receiv'd the power of the Holy Ghoſt, then "ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me," enabled to confirm what ye ſay of my words and actions, and eſpecially of my reſurrection, with miracles, and divers diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, "both in Jeruſalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermoſt part of the earth;" that is, to the Jews firſt, then to the Samaritans, and laſtly, to all the nations of the world. And yet, it is evident, the apoſtles, and other converted Jews, underſtood this at firſt, of their preaching "to the Jews only, who were diſperſed through the earth, chap. xi. 19. and thought it unlawful to preach to the Gentiles, till, by a viſion from heaven, they were taught otherwiſe. (W.) Here we may note, what is the ſpecial work of Chriſt's miniſters; namely, to bear witneſs to Chriſt; "ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me:" And this they do, by the purity of their doctrine, by the piety of their lives, and by their patience under ſufferings, both for Chriſt, and from Chriſt. (Donne and B.) Thus his apoſtles preach'd in the moſt conſiderable cities of the then known world; as at Antioch, Alexandria, and even at Rome itſelf, as well as at Jeruſalem and Samaria: They taught at Athens, and Corinth, and throughout all Greece; in ſuch towns as were moſt learned, moſt corrupted, and moſt idolatrous: It was in the preſence of all nations, of Greeks and Barbarians, of the learned and the ignorant, of Jews and Romans, of princes and their people, that the diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt gave witneſs of the wonders they "had ſeen with their eyes, heard with their ears, and touch'd with their hands;" and particularly, of the reſurrection: They ſupported their teſtimony, without any intereſt, and againſt all the reaſons of human prudence, even to the laſt breath, and ſeal'd it with their blood. Such was the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity. (Fleury) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 48. and John v. 34.

Ver. 9, 10, 11. And when he had ſpoken theſe things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their ſight. And while they looked ſtedfaſtly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men ſtood by them in white apparel; Which alſo ſaid, Ye men of Galilee, why ſtand ye gazing up into heaven? This ſame Jeſus which is taken up from you into heaven, ſhall ſo come, in like manner as ye have ſeen him go into heaven.

While they beheld, he was taken up.] It was neceſſary, that the apoſtles ſhould be eye-witneſſes of Chriſt's aſcenſion, in order to the confirmation of the certainty and reality of it. For tho' this was not neceſſary in his reſurrection, becauſe whatever was a proof of his life after death was a demonſtration of his reſurrection; yet, the apoſtles not being to ſee him then in heaven, it was neceſſary they ſhould be eye-witneſſes of his act of aſcending, that ſo they might be able to bear their teſtimony to it. (Nelſ.) See the notes on Mark xvi. 19. and Luke xxiv. 51.

A cloud received him out of their ſight.] The appearance of angels is ordinarily deſcribed by a cloud; and ſo here, the "clouds receiving him," ſignifies the angels receiving him. Thus, when it is ſaid, of the covering of the ark, Exod. xxv. 22. "There I will meet thee, and I will commune with thee, from between the two cherubims;" Levit. xvi. 2. it is ſaid, "I will appear in the cloud." (H.)

Two men ſtood by them, in white apparel.] That is, angels in the appearance of men. See the notes on Luke xxiv. 4. and John xx. 12.

Shall ſo come, in like manner.] We are told, 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8. that "the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire;" and 1 Theſſ. iv. 16, 17. that he "ſhall deſcend from heaven, and catch us up in the clouds." As therefore here the angels attended on him aſcending to heaven, ſo the cloud that receiv'd him, muſt be ſuch a cloud of fire, in which God was wont to appear with the attendance of his holy angels: And this makes out the parallel; he being then to come alſo with a cloud of glory, in the body, and with the attendance of his holy angels. And thus Elias was taken up to heaven in "a chariot of fire," 2 Kings ii. 11, 12. (W.) But Chriſt needed no chariot for his conveyance; being the author of life and motion. 'Tis true, the angels attended him; but they did not aſſiſt him. (B.) A very learned critick has given us a long diſſertation, wherein he argues, from very ancient manuſcripts and other authorities, That our Saviour aſcended towards the eaſt; and that his coming again will be, in like manner, from the Eaſt: That, as he aſcended from the mount Olivet, ſo the ſeat and tribunal of the laſt judgment ſhall be there; for the which he refers to that prophecy, Joel iii. 2. But, this being matter of curioſity, the reader if he pleaſes, may conſult Mr. J. Gregory's notes, under this title, Oriens nomen ejus. See the notes here, on ver. 7. 9. Matt. xvi. 28. and Luke xxi. 27.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Then returned they unto Jeruſalem, from the mount called Olivet which is from Jeruſalem a ſabbath-days journey. And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James. Theſe all continued with one accord in prayer and ſupplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jeſus, and with his brethren. And in thoſe days Peter ſtood up in the midſt of the diſciples, and ſaid (the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty) Men and brethren, this ſcripture muſt needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghoſt by the mouth of David ſpake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jeſus. For he was number'd with us, and had obtained part of this miniſtry. Now this man purchaſed a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burſt aſunder in the midſt, and all his bowels guſhed out. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jeruſalem; inſomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to ſay, The field of blood. For it is written in the book of Pſalms, Let his habitation be deſolate, and let no man dwell therein: And, His biſhoprick let another take. Wherefore of theſe men which have companied with us, all the time that the Lord Jeſus went in and out among us. Beginning from the baptiſm of John, unto that ſame day that he was taken up from us, muſt one day be ordained to be a witneſs with us of his reſurrection. And they appointed two, Joſeph called Barſabas, who was ſirnamed Juſtus, and Matthias. And they prayed, and ſaid, Thou Lord, which knoweſt the hearts of all men, ſhew whether of theſe two thou haſt choſen. That he may take part of this miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was number'd with the eleven apoſtles.

Then returned they.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 52.

A ſabbath-days journey.] St. Luke does not here intend to give us the exact diſtance of the place of Chriſt's aſcenſion, that being, from Bethany, which was from "Jeruſalem about fifteen furlongs," (See the notes on Luke xxiv. 50. and John xi. 18.) But only from the foot of mount Olivet, (whereon Bethany ſtood) which was not above ſeven or eight furlongs; that is about one of our meaſured miles. (Trem. W. and Fox) But the reaſon St. Chryſoſtome gives, why St. Luke here ſo particularly mentions "a ſabbath-days journey," viz. becauſe it was on the ſabbath-day, is very unaccountable; and ſhews, that the day of Chriſt's aſcenſion was either not then preciſely aſcertain'd, or elſe that this great father did not conſider it with his uſual exactneſs; for we know aſſuredly, that the aſcenſion was not on the Saturday, but Thurſday. (W.) See the notes on ver. 4.

Into an upper room.] Where, and what this upper room was, as it is not much material, ſo is it difficult to determine. 1. That it was not the room in which Chriſt celebrated his laſt ſupper, appears from this, that that is called anogeon, Mark xiv. 15. Luke xxii. 12. which difference of names argues a difference in the thing itſelf: For anogeon is any room above ſtairs, be it only one ſtory high; but huperoon is the higheſt room in the houſe, Acts xx. 8, 9.

9. Note, 2. That there was, huperoon, an upper room in the ſecond temple, in which Ezra ſat with the chief of the fathers of the people, Joſephus teſtifies; 'Tis therefore ſuppoſed, there might be many ſuch; in one of which Chriſt's apoſtles, and the other Chriſtians with them, might abide. It was alſo common among the Jews, not only for their Rabbins to have an upper room for their Beth-Midraſh, but alſo for others to have ſuch an upper room; where they diſcourſed of the law, or exerciſed other parts of religion: Now, in which of theſe two the apoſtles, and diſciples, abode, is the queſtion. That it was an upper room in the temple is argued, 1. Becauſe St. Luke tells us, that, after their return to Jeruſalem, they were always in the temple, Luke xxiv. 52, 53. and here, that, after their return to Jeruſalem, they went up into this upper room; that they were abiding there: And chap. ii. 46. it is ſaid of them convened, and remaining in this upper room, that they were daily abiding in the temple. But to this it is anſwered, 1. That the phraſe, they were always "in the temple," doth not prove this: For Chriſt ſaith of himſelf, John xviii. 20. I taught always in the temple; and yet he had no habitation in any part of it. 2. We read, Chap. iii. 1. that Peter and John "went up into the temple at the hour of prayer;" whereas, had they been in an upper room of the temple, it ſhould have rather been ſaid that they went down into it. 'Tis alſo ſaid, that they continued there day after day; which ſeemeth to import that they lodged not there by night. 3. It follows, That they broke bread, cat oicon, that is, ſaith Dr. Hammond, "in the temple:" But both theſe, and the former, words are ſpoken of the whole number of Chriſtians, which were, now, at leaſt three thouſand one hundred and twenty; too many ſure to lodge together in one upper room. Moreover, that cat oicon refers to houſes diſtinct from the temple, we learn from this Evangeliſt, ſaying, Chap. v. 42. they were teaching all the day "in the temple, and from houſe to houſe." And, 4. That they were huperoa, upper rooms in the temple, is granted: But then, that they belonged to any beſides the prieſts and Levites, is not proved: The huperoon, mentioned by Joſephus, was that of Jonanan the ſon of the high-prieſt. And Maimonides, in his book de Ædificio templi, mentions ſixteen Conclavia, or Chambers; but ſaith, they were all appointed for ſacred things, or perſons: How improbable therefore is it, that poor fiſhermen, and Galileans, odious for their maſter's ſake, ſhould be permitted to croud in ſuch numbers into one of theſe rooms? See the note on Luke xxiv. 53. (Idem.) 'Tis certain, that the Jews uſually had their private oratories in the upper parts of their houſes, called alijoth, for the more private exerciſe of their devotions. Thus Daniel had his alijoth, which the Septuagint render hyperoa, his upper chamber, Dan. vi. 10. whither he was wont to retire to pray to his God: Such was that wherein St. Paul, preach'd at Troas, chap. xx. 8. And ſuch probably this, where the apoſtles were met together; and in all likelihood the ſame, where our Lord had lately kept the paſſover, Luke xxii. 12. where the apoſtles and the church were aſſembled on the day of Pentecoſt, and which was then the uſual place of their religious aſſemblies (Cave and J. Greg.) For, notwithſtanding Dr. Whitby's objection, from the difference of names, anogeon, there, is the very ſame with hyperoon here; both ſignifying an upper-room, or a room in the uppermoſt part of the houſe. (J. Greg. and Leigh) An upper-room, a cell, a hole, or corner, unknown to men, contains ſometimes that which is of the greateſt value in the ſight of God. (Q.)

With one accord.] See the notes on chap. ii. 1.

With the women, and Mary.] The particle and hath divers ſignifications in ſcripture: Yet not ſo many in our language as in others. In the Greek, which is ſuch a copious language, it hath three and twenty ſignifications: But in the Hebrew, which is more barren, they reckon up thirty-ſeven. In this, and many other places, it doth not join ſeveral things together, but denotes ſomething of ſpecial remark, or obſervation, in what is added. So 2 Chr. xxvi. 10. "In the mountains, and in Carmel;" which Carmel was itſelf a principal mountain. Neh. viii. 15. "In all their cities, and in Jeruſalem." Mark xvi. 7. "Tell his diſciples, and Peter." And ſo here, mention is made of "the women" in general, "and Mary, the mother of Jeſus," in particular. (Lukin) Where we may remark, That this is the firſt, and laſt time, that the ſcripture makes mention of her after Chriſt's death. None of the Evangeliſts record one word of our Lord's appearing once to her, during his forty days ſtay and continuance upon earth after his reſurrection. Doubtleſs, the Spirit of God in the holy ſcriptures, by ſpeaking ſo ſparingly of her life, and nothing at all of her death, took care, that all thoſe fabulous reports of her aſſumption, which have ſince ariſen, ſhould find no footſteps in the word of God. God dealeth with her, as with Moſes; of whoſe ſepulchre no man knoweth unto this day, leſt it ſhould be abuſed to idolatry. The learned Dr. Lightfoot is of opinion, that ſhe continued under the care of the beloved diſciple, unto whom Chriſt committed her, for ſome time; and at laſt was taken away by martyrdom, according to Simeon's prophecy, Luke ii. 25. "A ſword ſhall paſs through thine own ſoul alſo." Which prophecy, he thinks, pointed at the manner of her death: But notwithſtanding the ſilence of the ſcriptures, the church of Rome confidently affirms, that the Virgin lived ſixty-three years, and that all the apoſtles were at her funeral, except St. Thomas; who deſiring afterward to ſee her holy corps, the ſepulchre being opened the third day, the body was gone, being aſſumed and taken up into heaven! (W. and B.)

And with his brethren.] See the notes on John vii. 5.

In thoſe days Peter ſtood up.] During the ten days ſtay and continuance of the apoſtles at Jeruſalem, before the feaſt of Pentecoſt, a motion was made amongſt them, for filling up the vacancy in the ſacred college of the apoſtles; which was occaſioned by the death of the traytor Judas. And here we have obſervable, 1. The perſon that made this motion, St. Peter, "In thoſe days Peter ſtood up, and ſaid. Whence the church of Rome would infer his ſupremacy, but very groundleſly. For St. Peter's being the chief ſpeaker, and ſometimes the ſole ſpeaker, is not to be attributed to his ſuperiority; but, 1. To his ſeniority; he being probably elder than the reſt. 2. To his apoſtolical office; he was appointed to be the firſt and chief miniſter of the circumciſion, to preach among the Jews; and therefore no wonder that Peter is firſt mentioned, when any thing relating to the Jewiſh affairs is recited. His forwardneſs to ſpeak and act for Chriſt and his intereſt, may be imputed to his repentance, it being but neceſſary, that he, who had ſo ſcandalouſly fallen, ſhould by his future zeal convince the world both of his repentance and recovery: And accordingly he ſpeaks, acts, and labours more abundantly: Not that the reſt were idle or inſignificant; for they were equal with him, having an equal authority, an equal gift of miracles, an equal number of tongues, an equal power to preach the Goſpel, and equal wiſdom in preaching of it. For the reaſons above-mentioned, St. Peter ſpake and did ſo much; having diſhonour'd Chriſt before, by his cowardly denial of him, he now reſolves to ſignalize himſelf by ſhewing extraordinary meaſures of zeal and activity for him. (Cave and B.)

The number of the names together.] That is, of the perſons. Thus is onoma uſed, Rev. iii. 4. "Thou haſt a few names, even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments." So alſo in Æſchylus, Cicero, and Virgil. (W.) And ſo it is in St. Cyprian, and St. Chryſoſtome. (H.) And the ſame was a receiv'd way of ſpeaking among the Jews. (Idem and G.) Epi to auto is the Greek expreſſion which is uſed here, as well as in the Old Teſtament, to interpret the Hebrew word, which is render'd together. So in Pſalm ii. 2. "The rulers take counſel together;" that is, they aſſemble together; as in a counſel, all about the ſame buſineſs and deſign, all as one man. And ſo here, and chap. ii. 1. and 1 Cor. xi. 20 the phraſe ſignifies and notes theſe aſſemblies for the ſervice of God, to be deſigned for the uniting of the prayers and ſervice of all into one; every action being to be accounted not the action of private men, but of the whole body: And therefore, 1 Cor. xi. 21. the "eating every one his own ſupper," is ſet in oppoſition to the "eating the Lord's ſupper," ver. 20. or the church-meal, which is to be eaten "when they come together," to one, or the ſame; that is, all to be as one, and not as ſeveral. (H.)

This ſcripture muſt needs have been fulfilled.] Obſerve here, 1. That St. Peter, mentioning the fact for which Judas periſhed, does it in theſe terms, "Judas, who was guide to them that took Jeſus." We cannot reaſonably imagine this apoſtle, or any to whom he ſpake, to be wanting in a juſt indignation at the treachery of this fallen brother; and yet this moſt villanous of all crimes could not have been expreſſed in ſofter words. Whence we may learn to check that liberty men are apt to take, in ſpeaking of ill actions and ill men, with the moſt aggravating terms of infamy and reproach. The virulent language, ſo often poured out upon profligate and wicked people, is many times the effect, not of zeal, but ill-nature. But, how barbarous and wicked a pleaſure is it, to upbraid, expoſe, and inſult over, the faults of our brethren; which we ought to pity, and be ſorry for, even then, when we ought to condemn and deteſt them? 2. That St. Peter, referring the audience to an ancient prophecy, foretelling that crime of Judas, many hundred years before, makes it thereby appear, that, in the whole matter, there was a ſecret over-ruling providence, without whoſe knowledge and permiſſion none of thoſe things are done: And that we ſhould ſatisfy ourſelves, that he who always orders that which is beſt, and can at pleaſure put an effectual ſtop to the moſt daring and potent offenders, forbears to do ſo, for no other reaſon, but becauſe he knows it, tho' we ſhort-ſighted mortals cannot tell why, to be better, that their impieties ſhould not be more reſtrain'd. But then thoſe offenders ſhould obſerve, 3. That St. Peter, together with the crime, does alſo relate the puniſhment of Judas; as a thing no leſs foreknown and foretold. And the natural conſequence of this would be, that wickedneſs ſo foreſeen, and connived at, does involve the actors in no leſs degree of guilt. For, "God hath left men in the hand of their own counſel," Ecclus. xv. 14. And tho' the divine omniſcience do perfectly underſtand all their doings, and all their thoughts, long before; yet are thoſe thoughts and doings ſtill their own: And therefore he deals with them, not according to events, but intentions; and conſiders, as a judge, the miſchief they actually did, or deſign'd, without any regard to the benefit he turn'd it to, which it was not any part of their meaning to promote. (Stanh.)

Obtained part of this miniſtry.] See the notes on ver. 25. Luke vi. 13. and John xiii. 18.

Purchaſed a field with the reward of iniquity.] That is, he gave occaſion for purchaſing the potter's field. (Lukin) As in the Old Teſtament, Men are ſaid to get or purchaſe to themſelves ſhame, Prov. ix. 7. and in the New, to “ receive to themſelves damnation,” and in prophane authors, to purchaſe enmity, and calamities; and we in our language are ſaid, to create trouble to ourſelves, when this is the event, tho' 'tis not the intention of the action: So is Judas here ſaid to “ purchaſe this field, by the wages of his iniquity,” which was bought with the money he received as the reward of his iniquity, tho' he neither intended this, nor was he inſtrumental to it. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 7. But, if we conſider theſe words in another light, as alluding more immediately to the reward which this covetous wretch got by his iniquitous bargain, and ask, What did he get by it? St. Luke here tells us, Chorion ecteſato: A little ſpot of ground, juſt big enough to hold him; meaning, his length and breadth in the duſt. Thus, we may underſtand it, in the ſame ſenſe, as the Satyriſt ſpeaks of the end of Alexander,

Unus Pellæo juveni non ſufficit orbis.
Æſtuat infelix anguſto limite mundi,
Ut Gyaræ clauſus ſcopulis, parvaque Seripho:
Cum tamen a figulis munitam intraverit urbem,
Sarcophago contentus erit. Mors ſola fatetur,
Quantula ſint hominum corpuſcula. Juv.

Great Alexander, when he has conquer'd all,
Thinks this one world alone for him too ſmall:
He frets and foams, and pants for want of room,
As if ſome forlorn iſle had been his doom.
But, when at Babylon he lays him down,
Depriv'd of life, diſburthen'd of his crown,
A narrow grave will ſerve. Death makes it plain,
How little earth the great man's body will contain.

Falling headlong, he burſt aſunder.] How to reconcile this with what is related of Judas, Matt. xxvii. 5. hath been a matter of ſome doubt and difficulty. That he hanged himſelf is affirmed by many of the ancients, Origen, and St. Chryſoſtome, and his followers, and Juvencus, and Leo; but eſpecially by the Epiſtle that bears the name of Ignatius to the Philippians, but ſure was not written by him. And ſome reverence is due to theſe authorities. Otherwiſe that which the words moſt eaſily and promptly bear, and which they might poſſibly mean, by thoſe words which we interpret hanging, is this, That he fell into a violent ſuffocating fit of ſadneſs or melancholy, and grieved ſo exceſſively as to wiſh himſelf dead; and then ſuddenly fell flat upon his face, (for ſo Heſychius renders it only falling on the face, not down any ſteep place) and then burſt. And Phavorinus ſaith, Prenes, ſignifies falling forward, on the mouth, on the face; and he is ſaid to lie prenes, who lieth upon the face; and oppoſite thereto is lying on the back. This ſeems to be Theophylact's underſtanding of it: Who, ſpeaking of the exceſſive ſorrow that the inceſtuous Corinthian, if not timely abſolved, might probably fall into, expreſſeth it by coming to a ſuffocation, as Judas did. And this ſeems to have cauſed Oecumenius on the Acts, having reſolved that he died not by hanging, to fly to ſome fables of Papias, of his being ſo ſwoln that he could not paſs by a chariot in the way, &c. In which fable, I ſuppoſe, there might probably be ſo much truth, that by this fit of extreme melancholy he was ſo ſwoln that, as the text ſaith, “ he burſt aſunder, and his bowels guſhed out.” So in Ælian; where 'tis ſaid of Poliager, being reproach'd, he was ſuffocated, that is to be interpreted by theſe words immediately precedent, Scoffs have not only grieved men often, but alſo killed them with grief. Thus, in Chryſoſtome, it is to be ſuffocated through grief; ſtrangled as it were, or miſerably affected with conſcience. And though it ſignify not in this ſenſe to die, yet it doth note a violent diſeaſe; ſtifling and ſuffocating for want of vent, and affecting the patient, ſo, as to produce that death which Judas ſoon came to after this, “ falling upon his face;” and then, as upon a violent ſtopping all natural paſſages, which the violence of deſpair had wrought in him, “ burſting aſunder,” his guts breaking out at his navel; that exceeding horrour and grief being the only thing there mention'd by St. Matthew, as that which came in naturally at that point of the ſtory; the death itſelf following, it is not certain how long after, is ſo particularly mention'd here by St. Luke, on the occaſion of the election of a ſucceſſor into his place. Thus the Hebrew word that is render'd in the Old Teſtament by apengzato, ſignifies to be choaked or ſuffocated; not only with an halter, but with an exceſſive grief or trouble on the ſoul: And in the Arabick, among the phyſicians, it ſignifies an Angina; and the ſuffocating of the mother in Avicen: So alſo that ſuffocation of the body in time of ſleep, which they call incubus, or the night-mare. And for the uſe of it in the Bible, 'twill be obſervable, how 'tis uſed, Tobit iii. 10. Where the woman that had been ſo reproached, for killing her ſeven husbands, hearing it, grieved extreamly, ſo as, not to hang herſelf ſure, for the ſtory ſhews ſhe did not ſo, but ſo as to fall into a deep melancholy, a ſpice of this diſeaſe of ſuffocation; a conſequent of which was her wiſhing herſelf dead, as ſhe expreſſes it, ver. 13. I deſire that thou wouldeſt “ take me away from the earth,” and, “ Why ſhould I live any longer?” ver. 15. and, If thou do not think good to kill me, &c. And tho' one paſſage, ver. 10. ſeem to incline the other way, as when, upon conſideration of the reproach and ſadneſs that would come upon her father, ſhe expreſſeth her deſign, “ If I ſhall do this, it ſhall be a reproach,” &c. yet this is not of much validity: Becauſe this conſideration might be made uſe of to diſpel her melancholy, that grew ſo violently upon her, and to divert her to a more profitable courſe, commending of her ſtate to God in prayer, as ſhe did ver. 11. and this as fitly and as properly as from the intention of hanging herſelf. Add to this, That ſhe that was ſo pious a perſon, and prays ſo heartily, ver. 11. 12. and in that prayer confeſſes no ſuch guilt, but only, I have deſired thee to releaſe me from the earth, and in her prayer continues of that mind, “ Why ſhould I live any longer?” cannot reaſonably, without evidence, be accuſed of ſo foul intentions of hanging or murthering of herſelf. A parallel place and condition is that of Job vii. 15. “ My ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling.” There the Hebrew is by Aquila render'd angchone; but by the Septuagint 'tis expreſs'd by a kind of ſuffocating and depriving of breath, ſtrangling of the ſoul. The ſame word is, by the prophet Nahum, uſed of the Lion killing his prey, Nah. ii. 12. and is render'd epipnigein, ſuffocation. The Syriack and Arabick uſe it, Matt. xiii. 7. of “ the thorns choaking the corn:” And ſo, Luke viii. 7. And 2 Cor. iv. viii. ſuffocated, inſtead of brought to thoſe great ſtreights or anguſtiæ: And ſo in the Syriack, Mark v. 13. They were ſuffocated; not hang'd, but drowned in the water. And in Matt. xxvii. 5. the Syriack reads of Judas, that, going away, ſuffocavit animam ſuam, he ſuffocated his ſoul; which ſurely may be taken in that larger ſenſe of the word, and not neceſſarily in the ſtricter, for that of “ hanging himſelf,” when the ſacred ſtory in another place mentions another death for him. 'Tis true, That very phraſe is uſed of Achitophel, 2 Sam. xvii. 23. who, as 'tis generally reſolved, “ hanged himſelf;” But perhaps, it might be probable enough, that this ſtate aſſigned to Judas at this time, viz. a ſuffocation, and with it a wiſhing to die, and a huge melancholy growing into a mortal diſeaſe, might be applied to Achitophel alſo: And the rather, becauſe 'tis there added, after apengzato he was ſuffocated, cai apethane, “ and he died;” which may argue, that his death ſucceeded or followed the apengzato, not that that itſelf was the particular notation of the kind of his death. But however, there will not be altogether the ſame reaſons of applying this obſervation to Achitophel as to Judas: Becauſe Achitophel's death is not, in any other place, deſcribed to be another kind of death, as Judas's is, viz. “ falling down flat on his face,” and then “ burſting, and letting out his bowels;” which kind of death is that which men oppreſs'd with this diſeaſe of grief do moſt frequently fall under. (H.) Thus is the very ſame Greek phraſe uſed, by the great Athanaſius, (Epiſt. ad Serap.) to deſcribe the death of Arius, the arch-heretick. (D. Heinſ.) Notwithſtanding all which, ſince ſeveral learned men do ſtill contend, that Judas did actually “ hang himſelf,” the method taken to reconcile that conſtruction with St. Peter's relation of it, is to ſuppoſe, that what is here recorded, is a farther account of what happen'd to Judas, after he had hang'd himſelf. Thus, they take the ſenſe of both places together to be, That Judas, having faſten'd the rope, threw himſelf from the place where he ſtood, and ſo “ hanged himſelf:” After which, either the rope, or that to which he faſten'd it, breaking, he “ fell down headlong,” and with the force of the fall, “ he burſt aſunder in the midſt, and all his bowels guſhed out” (Fox)

It is written in the book of Pſalms.] That the firſt of theſe paſſages, Pſal. lxix. 25. “ Let their habitation be deſolate,” refers to the Meſſiah, of whom David was a type, we learn from ver. 21. where 'tis ſaid, “ They gave me gall for my meat, and in my thirſt they gave me vinegar to drink;” which was true only of Chriſt; and is applied to him, John xix. 22. (where ſee the notes:) As well as from ver. 9. where it is ſaid, “ The zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up, and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me;” which is alſo applied to Chriſt, John ii. 17. and Rom. xv. 3. And therefore, what is ſaid, ver. 25. of the enemies of David, may reaſonably be applied to Judas, the great enemy of Chriſt. The other paſſage, Pſal. cix. 8. “ Let another take his office,” or, as it is expreſs'd here, “ His biſhoprick let another take,” if it primarily relate either to Doeg, or Achitophel, the mortal enemies of David, might, by the Holy Spirit, be intended to have its full completion in the betrayer of the ſon of David; and this intention might be ſuggeſted to St. Peter by the ſame Spirit. (W.) See the note on ver. 25.

Ordained to be a witneſs.] Here 'tis declared, That it was highly neceſſary, that another ſhould be ſubſtituted in the room of Judas: And eſpecially, ſuch a one as had been familiarly converſant with our Saviour, from firſt to laſt; that ſo he might be a competent witneſs both of his doctrine and miracles, his life and death, but eſpecially of his reſurrection, and be able to concur in the ſame teſtimony with the other eleven, in all the material points of the Chriſtian faith. (Stanh. Cave, W. and B.) But now, the reaſon why eleven was not a ſufficient number to anſwer the end of the apoſtolical inſtitution, ſeems to be this, That as Moſes and Joſhua, each a type of Chriſt, had next under them twelve, who were called the princes of the Tribes, Numb. i. 44. vii. 3. xiii. 2. and Joſh. iii. 12. iv. 2. repreſenting thoſe patriarchs from whom thoſe tribes had their deſcent and denomination: And as theſe were particularly diſtinguiſh'd from the reſt, by ſpecial acts of authority and divine deſignation: So had our deliverer and leader his twelve apoſtles, the patriarchs and princes of this new people of God, to gather, to govern, and to act in their behalf, as appointed by their common Head. And hence it is, that this agreement in the Jewiſh and Chriſtian polity is ſo often inſinuated, to the honour of theſe apoſtles, Matt. xix. 28. Luke xxii. 30. Rev. xii. 1. and xii. 12, 14. (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 8. and Luke xxiv. 48. and John v. 34.

Joſeph called Barſabas, who was ſirnamed Juſtus.] Of this Joſeph we meet with no other account in ſcripture. Some reckon him the ſame with Joſes, one of the brothers of our Lord. (Cave) Grotius ſuppoſes him to have been ſirnamed Juſtus, by the Romans; in reſpect of the integrity of his manners. And it is reported, that having once drank poiſon, it had no effect upon him; as our Saviour had promiſed to thoſe who ſhould believe in him, Mark xvi. 18. (Fleury) But whether he was the ſame Juſtus, whom we find afterwards biſhop of Jeruſalem, I have not yet diſcover'd

And Matthias.] The ſcripture takes notice of him only in this place, and on this occaſion. That he had been one of our Saviour's diſciples, and conſtant attendants, is not to be doubted, from the qualifications here mentioned, ver. 21, 22. in order to his nomination to the apoſtleſhip: And that he had been alſo one of the ſeventy is affirm'd both by Euſebius and St. Jerome; the latter of whom ſays, the province afterwards aſſign'd him was one of the Ethiopia's. But Dr. Cave thinks that to have been a miſtake for Cappadocia. However, the people among whom he preach'd being very barbarous, he was by them crown'd with martyrdom; and that moſt probably upon a croſs, A. D. 61. or, as ſome ſay, three years later; however, not till he had happily converted a great number to Chriſtianity. The writings father'd upon him are all apocryphal and ſpurious. (Stanh. and Cave) Tho' Clemens Alexandrinus relates a ſaying of his, of great uſe in the life of a Chriſtian; That we ought to mortifie and ſubdue the fleſh, and maintain a continual oppoſition to it, by granting it nothing whereby its irregular and ſenſual deſires may be gratified; but that we ſhould, on the contrary nouriſh and fortify our ſouls with faith and divine knowledge. (Nelſ.)

And they prayed, and ſaid.] Here Woltzogenius truly notes, that they pray'd to the Lord Jeſus; becauſe the apoſtles were at firſt choſen by him, were his apoſtles, and were to be his witneſſes: And ſurely therefore they muſt aſcribe to him the "knowledge of the hearts of all men:" which is the property of God alone. (W.) In imitation of this apoſtolical pattern, the church appoints faſts in the Ember weeks for leſſer ordinations. And did we conſider, how much the ſafety of our ſouls depends upon good biſhops and prieſts, we would not fail to faſt and pray when the church gives thoſe orders. (Brough) See the notes on Mark iii. 13. and John ii. 25.

This miniſtry and apoſtleſhip.] The apoſtolic office and authority conſiſted, 1. In propagating and eſtabliſhing the kingdom of the Meſſiah, our Lord Jeſus; by bringing men to the belief and obedience of his Goſpel. 2. In a power of ordering and making ſuch laws and conſtitutions in matters ſpiritual, as ſhall from time to time be found neceſſary, for the good government of all the ſubjects in this kingdom; for admitting into, puniſhing in, and caſting out of it, as occaſion ſhall require. And, 3. In appointing ſucceſſors with the like powers, for continuing the orders,and adminiſtring the ſacred offices, of the church. (Stanh.)

That he might go to his own place.] The meaning of theſe words being much controverted amongſt expoſitors, I ſhall collect the ſubſtance of what is ſaid on both ſides. Dr. Hammond ſays, What is meant here by ho topos ho idios, "his own place," may be beſt collected from the cleros diaconias cai apoſtolees, the lot, or portion "of miniſtry and apoſtleſhip," in the beginning of the verſe; the taking of that being preparative to the going to this. That when a part or portion falls to any, and particularly a province, that belongs to any governor, or biſhop, he who ſucceeds in it is ſaid, labein, to take it; as here, labein cleron, to "take part of this miniſtry," &c. And then, that which is thus become a man's aſſigned province cannot more fitly be expreſs'd, than by idios topos, "his own place;" that is, the place or province ſo properly aſſign'd to him. That therefore Judas having "by tranſgreſſion fallen from," and forfeited his part, Matthias is now to ſucceed him in it; to take that part, or lot, or portion, and to go to it as "his own place" or province. That the words, ex hees parebe Joudas, "from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell," being incloſed between two commas, as in a parentheſis, ſhews that what is here ſaid of his fall is only by the by, and no part of the context. That there are many prejudices againſt underſtanding this phraſe to be meant of hell, as the place whither Judas was to go, viz. 1. That hell is not "his own place," proper to Judas, but common to all damned ſpirits. 2. That it was not St. Luke's office, to paſs ſentence on Judas, any farther than by ſetting down the heinouſneſs of his crime, which he had already done, ver. 16. &c. and was not to proceed to judge of God's ſecrets: And therefore St. Chryſoſtome applauds the wiſdom of that Evangeliſt, for his not reproaching or inſulting over Judas, but barely ſetting down the matter of fact, without any deſcant, and diſcourſing of the vengeance which befell him in this world, and ſo excluding all enlargements to his future damnation. 3. That there is no propriety in ſaying of Judas, that he ſinned, or "by tranſgreſſion fell, that he might go to" hell; but of Matthias it is moſt proper to ſay, that he was choſen to ſuch a portion, "that he might go to (that, as being then) his own place." For which interpretation he vouches Theophylact, Oecumenius, Didymus, and the ordinary gloſs; all conſenting to apply the place here mentioned to the apoſtolical office, and conſequently referring it, not to Judas, but to Matthias. Notwithſtanding all which, Doctor Whitby having obſerved, 1. That St. Peter does not expreſly ſay, Judas went to hell; but into a place proper for him; ſuch as St. Ignatius ſaith, there is appointed for every man, viz. a place worthy of him, or agreeable to his actions; and ſuch a one as Plato ſeems to have had a notion of: He expreſſes his wonder, 2. That it ſhould be thought a diving into God's ſecrets, after what Chriſt had pronounced of Judas, Matt xxvi. 24. John vi. 70, 71. and chap. xvii. 12. to ſay, that he went into a place prepared for, or due to, ſuch miſcreants: Or after St. Peter had here applied thoſe ſcriptures to him, and St. Luke had recorded the dreadful iſſue of his iniquity upon his body, to ſay, that he went to a place proper for him. 3. He inſiſts, that the ſaying, ſuch a one ſinned, that he might go to hell, is no impropriety of ſpeech, but even ſuch as God himſelf is pleaſed to uſe, Hoſea viii. 4 Mic. vi. 16. and Chriſt, Mark iv. 12. and John xii. 39, 40. By all which places it appears, that, in divine conſtruction, any man may be ſaid to do an action, to that end which he knows will be the event of it, and which by God is threatned to the doers of it. Moreover, he argues upon the whole, 1. That the cleros diaconias, &c. being the province which fell to Judas, in the diſtribution of them among the apoſtles, and that this is here called the proper place, from which Judas fell, and to which Matthias is ſaid to go, is founded upon a miſtake; there being no ſuch diſtribution of provinces among them, before they were filled with the Holy Ghoſt; for which he vouches Stillingfleet's Irenicum. 2. That to ſucceed in the office of Judas, is not poreuthenai, "to go into his place," but lambanein, to "take his place," according to Pſalm cix. 8. And, 3. That if this had been intended, a conjunction copulative ſhould have been put before poreuthenai, to make the words run thus, To take the part of his apoſtleſhip, and to go into his place. After all this, I ſhall not enlarge it further, by engaging between theſe two criticks: But, for the ſake of the common reader, I think it neceſſary to obſerve, That tho' there was no diſtribution of the reſpective provinces among the apoſtles before the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, yet there was a vacancy in the college of the twelve apoſtles to be filled up, after the fall of Judas: And therefore, when a proviſion was made for that ſupply, it might very properly be called, the giving the perſon choſen a "part of this miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell," and a right to go, among the other eleven, to that which was now become properly "his own place," tho' once it had belonged to Judas. And, by the way too, whatever may be ſaid of the future ſtate of Judas, I would be glad to know, By what authority thoſe Jews, whom Dr. Whitby mentions here, did preſume to expound Numb. xxiv 25. by ſaying, that Balaam went to hell? Surely, it was not believed that he came from thence,when it was thus tranſlated, that "Balaam roſe up, and went, and returned to his place!" See the notes on ver. 16. and 22.

He was numbred with the eleven apoſtles.] The word ſyncatepſephiſthe is acknowledged to come from pſephos, calculus, a ſtone, or the like, of which there were two uſes; One in choices, or judgments, wherein they gave their votes by this means, Rev. ii. 17. the other in accounting or numbring. Hence pſephos is expreſſed in Heſychius by logos, as that ſignifies counting, and by criſis, judgment. Now for the uſe of it in this place: 1. It is evident, that Matthias, being here choſen by lot, was not choſen by the ſuffrages or votes of men. 2. That catapſephizo, proportionably to pſephos, ſignifying originally two things, numbring, as well as chuſing, it may moſt probably in this place ſignify, being numbred, bred, and ſo "he was numbered together with the eleven apoſtles," will be all one with "he was numbred with us," ver. 17. or with "to be with us," ver. 22. and that is explained by elache cleron, he obtained his portion of this miniſtry, that is, the office apoſtolical: Or, if it ſhould poſſibly refer to the notion of election, it muſt then denote God's choice of him, ver. 24. by the diſpoſing of the lot, and not any votes, or ſuffrages of others, which had nothing to do in this matter. For, though Joſeph and Matthias were by the eleven nominated, or choſen, to prepare for the lot, yet that Matthias was pitched on, and added to the eleven, it was merely the deciſion of the lot, and ſo the diſpoſition of the Lord. So vain is the pretenſion of thoſe, that will have this rendered, Communibus calculis annumerabatur, he was, by common votes, or ſuffrages, added to that number; and then make their own deductions from thence! (H.)

The Apoſtles filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpeaking divers languages, are by ſome admired, by others mocked. Peter preaching that Chriſt was the Meſſiah, three thouſand converts are added to the church by baptiſm. The Apoſtles work miracles. The zeal, unity, charity, and wonderful increaſe of the church.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. AND when the day of Pentecoſt was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And ſuddenly there came a ſound from heaven, as of a ruſhing mighty wind, and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it ſat upon each of them: And they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and began to ſpeak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jeruſalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noiſed abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, becauſe that every man heard them ſpeak in his own language. And they were all amazed, and marvelled, ſaying one to another, Behold, are not all theſe which ſpeak, Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Meſopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Aſia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and ſtrangers of Rome, Jews and proſelytes, Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them ſpeak in our tongues the wonderful works of God. And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, ſaying one to another, What meaneth this? Others mocking ſaid, Theſe men are full of new wine.

The day of Pentecoſt.] This day is in Greek called Pentecoſt, (that is, fifty) becauſe it is fifty days after the paſſover. As there were fifty days from the Jews paſſover to the giving of the law to Moſes on mount Sinai, ſo from the true paſſover, which was celebrated when Chriſt was offered up for us, are fifty days to this time: But we muſt not count from the very day of the paſſover, but from the Sunday following; for ſo God directed the Jews, Lev. xxiii. 15, 16. It was alſo called "the feaſt of weeks;" becauſe it was juſt ſeven weeks interval between theſe two great feſtivals, Deut. xvi. 9. And the feaſt of firſt-fruits; becauſe on this day the Jews were commanded to offer the firſt-fruits of their ſecond, or Wheat-harveſt, Exod. xxiii. 16. as on the former feſtival they did thoſe of their firſt, or barley-harveſt, called on that account, "the time they began to put the ſickle to the corn," Deut. xvi. 9. It is with us called Whitſunday, as 'tis commonly thought, partly from the glorious light which was now ſent down from the Father of lights, and partly from the white garments which the perſons baptized at this ſolemn and ſtated time were anciently wont to wear, as emblems of purity; or rather yet, perhaps, as being Huit-Sunday, that is, the eighth incluſively from Eaſter. (Biſhop Alley, Biſhop Sparr. Stanh. and Nelſ.) From the preciſe time thus explained, we may obſerve, 1. That Jeruſalem now being full of people from all quarters, obliged to reſort thither on a religious account, this gave opportunity for an event ſo extraordinary to be more generally obſerved, more nicely examined, and more ſpeedily publiſhed abroad: And beſides, thoſe very perſons, who, at the laſt great feaſt, had been eye-witneſſes of our Lord's ſufferings and ſhame, would now have the ſame evidence of his truth and glory, by ſuch divine powers, as were an over-ballance to the ſcandal of the croſs. 2. That the foundation of thoſe Jewiſh feſtivals being laid in ſome extraordinary mercy, as the time of Chriſt's death and reſurrection correſponded with that of killing the paſſover, and offering the firſt-fruits, ſo did the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, to publiſh the new law, comport with the day of God's proclaiming the old: And as then too the firſt-fruits of the ſecond harveſt were brought in, ſo now, in like manner, did God increaſe and crown the attainments of theſe diſciples under the conduct of his Son; pouring upon them "the firſt-fruits of the Spirit," Rom. viii. 23. and enable them to bring him the ſame day a noble offering of the firſt-fruits of their preaching. And, 3. That this miracle fell out on the firſt day of the week; God ſo ordering it, that the old Jewiſh ſabbath, of the ſeventh day, ſhould be paſſed over, and this firſt be honoured with two ſuch glorious miracles, as the reſurrection of Chriſt, and the coming of the Holy Ghoſt; the one to juſtify, the other to enlighten and ſanctify us; the former to finiſh and prove, and the latter to proclaim and qualify us for, ſalvation. (Stanh.) And here it may be farther noted, that as the aſcenſion of our Lord was in that year, on the 14th of May, ſo the coming of the Holy Ghoſt was on the 24th, viz. A. D. 33.

Was fully come.] The compound word ſympleroustbai here is all one with the ſimple pleroustbai in other places: And that is taken in a peculiar notion, when 'tis applied to times; ſignifying, that ſuch a time is come. So, Gen. xxv. 24. "When her days to be delivered were fulfilled;" that is, when her time of child-birth was come: For which the Evangeliſt reads, Luke i. 57. The time of her bringing forth was filled; or (as we tranſlate it) Her "full time came, that ſhe ſhould be delivered." So Gen. xxix. 21. "My days are fulfilled;" that is, The time agreed upon is now come. So Mark i. 15. "The time is fulfilled;" that is, Now is that due ſeaſon come, the critical point, wherein, if they repent not, they ſhall periſh. So. Luke xxi. 24. "Jeruſalem ſhall be troden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled;" that is, 'Till the peculiar ſeaſon, concerning the Gentiles, do come. And this very ſympleroustbai is ſo uſed, Luke ix. 51. "When the time was come, that he ſhould be received up." And accordingly here it is no more than "when the day of Pentecoſt was come;" or, upon that day. (H.)

All with one accord, in one place.] That is, all the apoſtles. (H.) Grotius and Dr. Lightfoot think, all the "hundred and twenty," mentioned chap. i. 14, 15. This is a queſtion of ſome importance. For, if the whole "hundred and twenty" be here intended, the cloven tongues muſt ſit upon every one of them, as well as upon the twelve apoſtles; and ſo muſt give them a right, tho' not an equal power, to be Chriſt's witneſſes: For a tongue ſat upon every one of them, ver. 3. who were met together in the houſe. The arguments of Dr. Lightfoot ſeem only probable: But, this is certain, that there were many, beſides the apoſtles, of their company, who had theſe gifts of the Holy Ghoſt: For, when the apoſtles come to appoint ſeven deacons, they command the aſſembly "to look out among them ſeven men, full of the Holy Ghoſt and wiſdom." There muſt therefore be many ſuch perſons among them, known to them by the exerciſe of theſe gifts; who therefore muſt have received them either at this time, or when they praying, that "God would ſtretch forth his hands to heal, and to work ſigns and wonders by the name of Jeſus, were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpake the word with great freedom," ch. iv. 30, 31. Now, if theſe gifts were given then to others for this end, we may reaſonably conceive, that when that great promiſe of him was to be fulfilled, they might be given to others alſo. And, if we conſider, what multitudes, of ſeveral languages, were then met, and even living at Jeruſalem, it ſeems but rational to conceive, this gift ſhould be confer'd on many, to enable them to diſcourſe intelligibly for their converſion, in the ſeveral ſynagogues, in which men of ſo many diverſe languages muſt meet for divine ſervice. Moreover, ſeeing the apoſtles themſelves imparted the ſame gift, by the impoſition of hands, to thoſe whom they ordain'd miniſters in particular churches, it ſeems unreaſonable to think, that thoſe extraordinary perſons, who had been all along in company with Chriſt and his apoſtles, and were to be the great preachers of the Goſpel in ſeveral parts of the world, ſhould not be enriched with the ſame gifts. And laſtly, This ſeems to have obtained, as a tradition, or a received opinion in the church, as appears from St. Jerome, St. Chryſoſtome, and Oecumenius, that the Holy Ghoſt fell upon the hundred and twenty. (W.) But how to underſtand this, I own myſelf at a loſs. For if he fell upon them all, he muſt fall upon the women, as well as the men; for the text tells us expreſly of "the women, and (by name) Mary, the mother of Jeſus," being at that former aſſembly; and yet we never read of their being deſigned for preaching the Goſpel. Or if we underſtand it of all ſuch as had a deſignation to that holy office, it can't amount to more than the apoſtles themſelves, and the ſeventy diſciples ſubordinate to them; who together will come far ſhort of the number of an hundred and twenty. But, to leave this point at preſent, We are here well aſſured, the perſons ſpoken of "were all with one accord, in one place." Whence we may obſerve, 1. That the Greek word, homothumadon, which we tranſlate "with one accord," is expreſſive of the greateſt unity and unanimity imaginable; as if the whole church had had but one ſoul or mind among them: As that other word, ſymphoneſoſin, by which our Saviour expreſſes the condition of his promiſe to grant our requeſts, Matt. xviii. 19. emphatically deſcribes ſuch an agreement in all our petitions, as is like to harmony in muſick, which will not admit of any one jarring note. And, 2. That this unity draws the Spirit of God to us; the houſe of unity being the only temple of the Spirit of unity: Whereas that ſoul which breaks the bond of unity, and divides itſelf from the church of Chriſt, that is, from the company of the apoſtles, and their regular ſucceſſors, is really broken off from that body in which only the Spirit moves.

As of a ruſhing mighty wind.] The wind here is a fit emblem of the divine Spirit; by whoſe efficacy the Goſpel was to have a ſpeedy and unexpected ſucceſs. To this our Saviour had compared it, in his diſcourſe with Nicodemus. And it ſignifies to us, That the publication of the Goſpel was attended with the ſame divine preſence and power that the giving of the Law was; but not with the ſame circumſtances of terror. (Stanh. Frank, Nelſ. and Q.) And its "filling all the houſe where they were ſitting," was a preſage, that the Holy Spirit was to fill the whole world, throughout which the church was to ſpread itſelf. (G.) See the notes on John iii. 8.

Cloven tongues, like as of fire.] By this was ſignified the ability given to the apoſtles, to accommodate themſelves to hearers of all nations. in as many languages, as might render what they deliver'd, intelligible to all they had occaſion to treat with. The diverſity of the languages was intimated by the clefts in theſe tongues, as the readineſs and aptneſs of their expreſſions was by the tongues themſelves: And poſſibly, the ſitting of theſe tongues might ſignify, that this was no tranſient effect, but ſuch as ſhould continue, ſo long as the neceſſities of the church ſhould require it. Thus it pleaſed God, who introduced variety of languages, as a curſe, and cauſe of ignorance, in the world; by a turn of events, peculiar to him, to render the ſame variety an inſtrument of attaining to the beſt knowledge, and a means of eſtabliſhing the moſt perfect order and happineſs of mankind. And theſe tongues having the reſemblance of fire, was an emblem of the light theſe apoſtles receiv'd, by the acceſſion of the Holy Spirit; as alſo of that zeal and fearleſs courage, which now, like fire, had ſpread itſelf into their hearts; and from them did ſpread itſelf, in a proportionable degree, among their hearers, (G. Brough, Stanh. Frank, Cave, Nelſ. B. and Q.) See the notes on Matt. iii. 11.

Filled with the Holy Ghoſt.] As in a long war it happens, when the war is ended and peace concluded, pledges and hoſtages are mutually ſent, both as tokens of, and ſecurities for, the mutual agreement and peace: So was it between God and man. After our Lord Jeſus had ended the long war betwixt God and man, and finiſh'd the reconciliation, he ſent, or rather carried, up himſelf, our hoſtage, our fleſh and nature, ennobled by the union with his divine Perſon, as a Royal pledge to his Father. On the other ſide, God ſent his Royal hoſtage, his Holy Spirit, a ſecurity for our future peace, 1 John iv. 12, 13. Chryſ. Hom. 1. in Pentecoſt. Edit. Savil. Tom. v. The devil had taken us captive, our Lord Chriſt undertakes the quarrel, his death was his battle, wherein he ſeem'd to be overcome: But, up he got again at his reſurrection; that was his victory, and his aſcenſion was his triumph. And, as the antient cuſtom was, for conquerors to ſcatter gifts among the beholders, eſpecially on the laſt and great day of the triumph: So did our Lord caſt abroad the new gifts and graces of the Spirit; "giving to one the word of wiſdom, to another the word of knowledge, to another faith, to another the gifts of healing, to another the working of miracles, to another prophecy, to another diſcerning of ſpirits, to another divers kinds of tongues, to another the interpretation of tongues; but all theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame ſpirit," the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. xii. 8. &c. whom our Lord, as he promiſed, ſent down with theſe gifts. (Sparr.) See the notes on chap. i. 5.

Out of every nation under heaven.] The fame of the foregoing miraculous operation of the Holy Spirit being inſtantly ſpread abroad in Jeruſalem, and there being preſent at that time great multitudes of Jews, who had come up from all parts of Judea, to the feaſt of Pentecoſt, and alſo many other Jews and proſelytes born in other nations, in Meſopotamia, Cappadocia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, who were now come up to worſhip the true God at Jeruſalem: When they heard the apoſtles ſpeak in their own language, which they never underſtood before, "the wonderful works of God," in the death, Reſurrection, and aſcenſion of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; ſome of them wondered to hear illiterate men ſpeaking all languages; others derided the miracle, and imputed it to drunkenneſs. Here note, 1. The Wiſdom and providence of Almighty God, in ſo ordering the firſt publication of the Goſpel, that the fame thereof, and of that convincing miracle which gave authority thereunto, might be carried unto all nations by ſo many eye and ear witneſſes, as were worſhipping at Jeruſalem at this time: For there were now ſojourning at Jeruſalem, "Men out of every nation under heaven;" that is, Of every nation where any Jews were ſcattered at this time throughout the world, there were ſome particular perſons come up now to Jeruſalem to worſhip God. 2. The commendatory character given of thoſe perſons, who from their ſeveral countries came up to the houſe of God in Jeruſalem to worſhip him there: They are ſtyled "Devout men:" And they received from God the reward of their piety and devotion. Had they ſtaid at home, as many of their brethren no doubt did, they had not been witneſſes of ſo wonderful a miracle for the confirmation of their faith as now they were. Yet note, 3. The different influence and effect which this miracle of the Holy Spirit's deſcent in fiery cloven tongues, had upon the minds of the people in Jeruſalem. Some were ſtruck into an extaſy of admiration and awful wonder; others (the Scribes and Phariſees probably) ſcornfully deride, and impute the miracle to drunkenneſs, ſaying, "Theſe men are full of new wine." (B.) But, to be ſomewhat more particular, let us obſerve, 1. For the word catoicountes, which I tranſlate ſojourning, rather than dwelling; for ſo I underſtand it, that they were not proper "dwellers at Jeruſalem," but ſuch as came to worſhip there, from thoſe far countries here named, at the feaſts of the Paſſover and Pentecoſt, and ſo had been continuing there ſome time. It is true, that, in the uſual Greek, oiceo, and catoiceo, ſignify a durable manſion: But with the Helleniſts, in whoſe dialect the ſcripture ſpeaketh, they are uſed indifferently for a ſtay of a ſhorter, or longer time; that is, for to ſojourn, as well, as to dwell; as theſe two examples out of the Septuagint will make manifeſt, Gen. xxvii. 44. oicein is to tarry but "a few days:" And in 1 Kings xvii. 20. catoicein is to ſojourn only; in a word, oiceo, and catoiceo anſwer to the Hebrew verb, which ſignifies any ſtay, or remaining in a place. 2. For the perſons here ſpecified, "Jews out of every nation under heaven," we are to know, That, before the laſt diſperſion of the Jews by the Romans, when their temple and city were deſtroyed by Titus, which at this time it was not, nor many years after, there had been already two captivities, and great diſperſions of that nation, beſides ſome ſmaller ſcatterings. The firſt was of the ten tribes, by Salmanaſſar, king of Aſſyria, who is ſaid to have planted them "in Hala, and Habor, by the river of Gozen, and in the cities of the Medes," 2 Kings xvii. 6. and theſe (I mean any conſiderable part of them) never returned, to dwell again in their own country: Of theſe therefore we are, chiefly, to underſtand thoſe to have been, whom St. Luke here calls "Parthians, Medes, and Elamites;" that is, Perſians, of the province of Elymais. For, in thoſe countries which theſe names comprehend, were the ten tribes placed by the Aſſyrian; and there ſtill dwelt, and thereabouts, in our Saviour's and his apoſtles time, and long after. St. Jerome tells us thus much, upon Joel iii. 6. The ſecond captivity was by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, of the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, more than a hundred years after that of the ten: Now, a good part of theſe, at ſeventy years end, returned again, under Cyrus, and his ſucceſſors, to dwell again in their own land; re-edified the temple, and city of Jeruſalem, re-erected their common-wealth, which continued till our Saviour's time, and a little after. Notwithſtanding, all thoſe that were captives in Babylon returned not: It may be, not much more than the half of them; certain it is, that a great number of them ſtayed there ſtill; thoſe eſpecially which were rich, and well accommodated, having no mind to ſtir: Whence, in our Saviour's, and the apoſtles times, there were an innumerable company of them in thoſe parts, where they flouriſh'd with academies, and ſchools, and had doctors not inferior to thoſe of Jeruſalem itſelf: Yea, from them proceeded the Chaldee paraphraſe; and that great doctor and patriarch of Rabbies, R. Hillel. Of theſe therefore, we have reaſon to think, were thoſe which are here enumerated by the name of "dwellers in Meſopotamia;" Where note, by the way, that theſe are comprehended in the number of thoſe, who are here ſaid to be "dwelling at Jeruſalem;" which confirms my interpretation, that catoicountes there ſignifies, ſojourning, and not dwelling; for that they could not be ſaid to dwell in both places. Beſides theſe two captivities, by Salmanaſſar, and Nebuchadnezzar, the firſt whereof never returned into their own land, and the ſecond but in part, there happened a third captivity and diſperſion, in the days of Ptolomeus Lagi, one of the Greek kings, reigning in Egypt: Who, ſurpriſing the city of Jeruſalem, carried many people of the country, of the off-ſpring of thoſe who returned from Babylon, captives into Egypt, planting them at Alexandria, and the places thereabouts, whom many others followed of their own accord, partly allured by the king's favour, and partly by the fertility of the country; ſo that this colony became a very great one. Theſe were called Helleniſts, becauſe they ſpake the Greek tongue, and uſed the tranſlation of the Septuagint (which was made in Egypt) in their ſynagogues. Of theſe three princpal diſperſions, came thoſe leſſer ſcatterings in all parts of the Roman empire, and elſewhere. From that of Babylon and Meſopotamia, was ſpread that of "Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bythinia," to which St. Peter, as an apoſtle of the circumciſion, writes his two epiſtles; which may be gathered, becauſe, in his former epiſtle, he ſalutes them from Babylon, which was their metropolis: "The church (ſaith he, 1 Pet. v. 13.) at Babylon, elected together with you, ſaluteth you;" that is, the church of the circumciſion there. From thoſe of Alexandria and Egypt, were derived thoſe plantations in Lybia, and Cyrene; and all other Helleniſts whatſoever in ſeveral parts of the Roman empire. Add to theſe, that many of Judea itſelf, that could not live well at home, upon ſome occaſion or other, either alluring them or conſtraining them, ſeated themſelves abroad among the Gentiles, and in their cities, being together with themſelves under the ſame dominion of the Roman empire: Inſomuch that king Agrippa, in his oration mentioned by Joſephus, before that laſt ſiege, diſſuading them of Judea from rebelling againſt the Romans, in regard of the evil they might bring thereby, not upon themſelves only, but upon their whole nation, whereſoever living among the Gentiles, ſticks not to ſay, There is no people in the whole world, which hath not ſome part of ours dwelling amongſt them. Marvel not therefore, that St. Luke ſays, "Jews of every nation under heaven." All this is confirmed out of the New Teſtament itſelf; foraſmuch as before the laſt captivity by Titus, which was not till almoſt forty years after our Saviour's aſcenſion, and whilſt their common-wealth in the holy land was yet ſtanding, we read that almoſt in every city of the Gentiles, whither the apoſtles came to preach the Goſpel, they found Jews with their ſynagogues in them: To which add, that St. James directs his epiſtle, "To the twelve tribes ſcattered abroad;" or, as the Greek hath it, To the twelve tribes which are in the diſperſion; as St. Peter doth his, Unto the diſperſion of Aſia. (Prid. and Mede.)

Are not all theſe which ſpeak, Galileans?] It could not but exceedingly increaſe the wonder, to reflect upon the meanneſs and inconſiderableneſs of the perſons, neither aſſiſted by natural parts, nor poliſh'd by education, nor improv'd by uſe and cuſtom; which three things philoſophers require, to render a man accurate and extraordinary in any art or diſcipline: For, ſays Plutarch, natural diſpoſition without inſtitution is blind, inſtruction without a genius and diſpoſition is defective, and exerciſe without both is lame and imperfect. Whereas, theſe diſciples had not one of theſe to ſet them off: Their parts were mean, below the rate of the common people; the Galileans being generally accounted the rudeſt and moſt ſtupid of the whole Jewiſh nation. (Cave)

Proſelytes.] See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 15.

Theſe men are full of new wine.] It ſeems incredible, that they who ſaid this ſhould be ſo fooliſh as to think, that new wine ſhould enable them to ſpeak all languages, or to declare "the wonderful works of God." 'Tis therefore well conjectured, by Dr. Lightfoot, That they who ſaid this were men of Judea; who, not underſtanding what the apoſtles ſpake in other languages, imagined, they had babbled ſome fooliſh gibberiſh they could make nothing of, as drunken men are uſed to do. (W.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. But Peter ſtanding up with the eleven, lift up his voice, and ſaid unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jeruſalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words: For theſe are not drunken, as ye ſuppoſe, ſeeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was ſpoken by the prophet Joel, And it ſhall come to paſs in the laſt days (ſaith God) I will pour out of my Spirit upon all fleſh; and your ſons and your daughters ſhall propheſy, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dream dreams: And on my ſervants, and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in thoſe days of my Spirit, and they ſhall propheſy: And I will ſhew wonders in heaven above, and ſigns in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of ſmoke. The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come. And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved. Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words; Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, by miracles and wonders, and ſigns, which God did by him in the midſt of you, as ye yourſelves alſo know: Him, being delivered by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain: Whom God hath raiſed up, having looſed the pains of death: becauſe it was not poſſible that he ſhould be holden of it. For David ſpeaketh concerning him, I foreſaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I ſhould not be moved. Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad: moreover alſo, my fleſh ſhall reſt in hope. Becauſe thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, neither wilt thou ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruption. Thou haſt made known to me the ways of life; thou ſhalt make me full of joy with thy countenance. Men and brethren, let me freely ſpeak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his ſepulchre is with us unto this day: Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had ſworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the fleſh, he would raiſe up Chriſt to ſit on his throne; He, ſeeing this before, ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt, that his ſoul was not left in hell, neither his fleſh did ſee corruption. This Jeſus hath God raiſed up, whereof we all are witneſſes. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, he hath ſhed forth this, which ye now ſee and hear. For David is not aſcended into the heavens: But he ſaith himſelf, The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footſtool. Therefore let all the houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly, that God hath made that ſame Jeſus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt.

Peter ſtanding up with the eleven.] How great is the difference betwixt Peter, ſo lately denying Chriſt, at the voice of a ſervant-maid, and Peter now publiſhing the glory of Chriſt to thoſe who crucified him, and to all the different people of the earth aſſembled at Jeruſalem! (Q.) This ſhews the power of the Holy Spirit from his very firſt deſcent upon them. (Beza.)

Not drunken, as ye ſuppoſe.] See the notes on John ii. 10.

But the third hour of the day.] Obſerve here, 1. How St. Peter argues, negatively, from the time of the day: It was "but the third hour of the day;" that is, nine o'clock in the morning; which was the hour for the morning ſacrifice and prayer, and the worſhippers of God, at the great feaſts eſpecially, were never wont to eat or drink, before thoſe holy ſervices were performed. In thoſe times they went to their public devotions faſting; they ſerved God before they ſerved their bellies: The firſt-fruits of the day were offered in the temple. 2. How he argues poſitively: He aſſures them, that the apoſtles were full of the Holy Ghoſt, and not full of wine; filled with the Spirit of God; and that what was now done, was the completion of a prophecy uttered by Joel; That "in the laſt days," that is, in the days of the Meſſias, there ſhould be a moſt plentiful effuſion of the Holy "Spirit upon all fleſh;" that is, upon Jews and Gentiles, and upon all ſorts of perſons, without diſtinction, old and young, ſons and daughters, bond and free. Learn thence, That the Spirit of God is a free ſpirit, not confined to any party, to any order or degrees of men, but plentifully and abundantly poured forth, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, upon all believers; even upon ſervants and handmaids, to ſhew, that he doth not deſpiſe perſons of the loweſt rank and condition in this world, but that the promiſe of the Spirit is made unto them alſo. 3. What is here foretold that ſhould come to paſs after this great effuſion of the Holy Spirit; namely, "Wonders in the heaven, and ſigns in the earth, the ſun turned into darkneſs, and the moon into blood." Which expreſſions ſignify the great miſeries and troubles, the calamities and deſolations which ſhould befall the Jews before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, for their crucifying the Lord of life and glory: Unto which is ſubjoined the only way to eſcape and avoid them; namely, Calling upon the Lord in fervent prayer and ſupplication; "Whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved:" Intimating, that prayer makes us ſhot free, and is a ſure defence in all ſtorms, that no evil ſhall fatally touch our perſons, or come near our dwellings, whilſt we take hold of God by faith, and approach unto him by prayer. Lord! How happy is it, when ſtrong afflictions from Thee raiſe ſtrong affections in us towards Thee! (B.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 45. and Mark xv. 25.

In the laſt days.] Eſchatai hemerai, “the laſt days,” do, in Joel ii. 28. &c. the place here refer'd to, literally ſignify the laſt days of the Jews, immediately preceding their deſtruction, called there, “the great and terrible day of the Lord:” And accordingly, “the laſt days” have, among the Jews, proverbially ſignified the days of the Meſſias; which they call “the laſt days;” and both theſe notions are very reconcileable. For, as the coming of the Meſſias ſignifies, beſide the coming of him in the fleſh, his entring on his kingdom, and, as a branch of that, his coming to be avenged on his crucifiers, Matt. xxiv 1. &c. ſo “the laſt days” here ſignify peculiarly the time beginning after the reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt, as here appears by the pouring of the Spirit, and the prodigies, “before the great and terrible day of the Lord,” that is, this deſtruction of Jeruſalem. So 2 Tim. iii. 1. “In the laſt days,” that is, not long after the reſurrection of Chriſt, ſhould come thoſe hard times; to wit, before the deſtruction of the Jews: And ſo “in the latter times,” 1 Tim. iv. 1. So Hebr. i. 2. and i. Cor. x. 11. So, James v. 3. ſpeaking of the wealthy Jews, ſaith, that they have treaſured up their wealth, as fire, in, or againſt, “the laſt days;” that is, againſt thoſe times of deſtruction, when their wealth ſhould but do them miſchief, and mark them out for prizes and preys before other men. So 1 Pet. i. 5. “In the laſt time;” noting, no queſtion, that time then at hand, wherein the incredulous Jews ſhould be deſtroyed, and the believers reſcued out of their perſecutions and dangers, which is there denoted by “deliverance ready to be revealed,” (according to the notion of ſoteria formerly mentioned, Luke xiii. 23.) after a little time yet of temptations or ſufferings. So again, for the time of Chriſt in general, 1 Pet. i. 20. and 2 Pet. iii. 3. and Jude 18. So 1 John ii. 18. “It is the laſt hour,” to the ſame ſenſe of that approaching judgment, which was then yet nearer at hand: And all this taken from that prophecy of Moſes, Deut. xxxi. 29. “Evil will befall you in the latter days.” In reciting this parcel of Joel's prophecy, it may not be unworthy our notice, that where the prophet mentions “the great and terrible day of the Lord,” the Hebrew word, being regularly derived from fear, and accordingly render'd by the Chaldee fearful, and ſo by the Syriac alſo, yet the LXX there render it conſpicuous, or notable: So Deut. i. 19. where the Hebrew hath, “that great and terrible wilderneſs,” the LXX read illuſtrious, or notable: So 2 Sam. xiv. 15. for “made me afraid,” they read, ſhall ſee me: And yet from them St. Luke here retains it, megalen cai epiphane, “great and (conſpicuous, or) notable.” The account of this is clear; 1. Becauſe thoſe, for whoſe uſe he wrote this book, made uſe of the LXX, for whom therefore he was to recite it, as there he found it: 2. Becauſe this Greek did very fully expreſs what was deſigned in the Hebrew, the word epiphanes, obſervable, notable, illuſtrious, being perfectly applicable to fearful, as well as grateful appearances; and when it is ſo, expreſſing the great terribleneſs and dreadfulneſs of them. (H. W. and Q.)

I will pour out of my Spirit upon all fleſh.] I do not underſtand this promiſe, as if every particular man and woman, in the times of the Meſſiah, ſhould, have the Spirit in an extraordinary manner poured out upon him: But the meaning thereof ſeems to be, That ſome of all ſorts of men, ſome of every rank, of both ſexes, and ſeveral ages, conditions, and circumſtances, ſhould have the Spirit in a plentiful manner poured out upon them; ſo that it ſhould be more eaſy to attain to the knowledge of the will of God, than in any other age or time before. The taking theſe words in two large a ſenſe has led ſome well-meaning people into great inconveniencies and miſtakes. (W. and Fox) See the notes on John vii. 38, 39.

I will ſhew wonders.] See the notes on Luke xxi. 11.

Whoſoever ſhall call.] To “call on the name of the Lord,” here does not only ſignify praying to him; ſaying, Lord have mercy upon me! and the like: But it denotes the embracing the religion of Jeſus Chriſt, owning him for our Lord and King, and obeying his laws (Fox) Putting our truſt in none but him, and expecting from him alone the grace to perform his will. The true worſhip is no longer confined to one people. Chriſtianity is an univerſal religion. (Q.)

Shall be ſaved.] The word ſaved here probably relates to the being preſerv'd from the deſtruction which came upon Jeruſalem, when it was taken by the Romans; as the Chriſtians were, in an extraordinary manner; being warned, by particular revelations, to depart from the city, and go over Jordan to Pella. This the Roman general (Ceſtius Gallus) gave the Chriſtians an opportunity of doing: For, without any cauſe, he raiſed the ſiege, and went from before it, when he might have taken it; at which time the Chriſtians departed, and eſcaped the deſtruction which afterwards came upon it. No encouragement can be drawn from hence, to defer our repentance to a ſick or death-bed. Not only the great uncertainty of our lives, and the uncertainty of our being in a condition to repent then, ſhould deter us from this; but the expreſs declarations in the Goſpel, that we ſhall be judg'd according to our works, and the aſſurances given us by our Saviour and judge, that it is not the calling him “Lord, but the doing of his Father's will,” that will gain us admittance into heaven, and that he will bid all the “workers of iniquity to depart from him, Matt. vii. 21, 23. (Fox, and Fleury) See the notes on Luke xiii. 23.

Delivered by the determinate counſel.] Here note, 1. That, in ſcripture, that is ſaid to be done “by the determinate counſel of “God,” which is done according to what he had written, and declared in his word; all his predictions, concerning things future, being declarations, and determinations, that they ſhall come to paſs; “The Son of man goeth, as it is written of him,” ſaith St. Matthew, chap. xxvi. 24. “As it is determined” by God concerning him, Luke xxii. 22. 2. That, in order to the completion of this prediction, it was neceſſary that God ſhould ſuffer Chriſt to fall into the hands of wicked men; for they “could have no power over him, unleſs it were thus given them from above,” John xix. 11. and that he ſhould lay no reſtraints upon them, from executing their malicious deſigns upon him: And this unreſtrained permiſſion is all that is, or can be, ſignified by God's delivering Chriſt up into their hands. 3. That this permiſſion doth neither hinder, nor abate, their ſin in crucifying Chriſt: For, notwithſtanding this, 'tis plainly ſaid, that they “by wicked hands had crucified him.” Hence therefore it doth only follow, 1. That God foreſaw, what he foretold, that Chriſt would ſuffer by the hands of wicked men. 2. That, when their malice ſhould incline them to bring him to theſe ſufferings, he had determined not to interpoſe by his immediate power, to hinder them from doing it, but rather to permit them ſo to do: But then it muſt be noted, that every divine permiſſion of what God hath forbidden men to do, and what he requires them to repent of when they have done it, as God doth by St. Peter here, is a permiſſion of what he would not have done by them, whom he forbids to do it, and a permiſſion of that which cannot be done by them without ſin, for of that only are we called to repent. Hence therefore it muſt follow, 1. That this “foreknowledge, and determinate counſel of God” can be no intimation of his will, that any man ſhould do what he forbids him to do; but only of his will to permit the action to be done: For God cannot will that any one ſhould do what he forbids, i. e. wills he ſhould not do: Nor, 2. Can it lay on any perſon a neceſſity of doing, what he thus determines to permit; for then it muſt remove the ſin, becauſe it takes away the freedom of the action, and renders it not mine, but his that laid upon me the unavoidable neceſſity of doing it: It only doth ſuppoſe, that God can ſee and foretel, what man, not hinder'd by him, but left to his own inclinations, will do; and if that foreſight hath any influence upon the will to make the action neceſſary, then, 1. Not only all our actions muſt be neceſſary, they being all foreſeen, but alſo 2. God muſt foreſee that they are neceſſary, for he foreſees them as they are in their cauſes, and doth not by foreſeeing make them, i. e. cauſe them, ſo to be; ſince that muſt neceſſarily make him the cauſe of all the ſinful actions he foreſees. (W.) What God determined, was to give his Son to die, as a ſacrifice, for the ſins of the world: But he did not determine, that Judas ſhould betray him to the ſcribes and Phariſees, and that they ſhould deliver him to the Romans to be crucified; that was the effect of their own wicked malice, as is manifeſt from Mark xiv. 21. and from the purport of St. Peter's diſcourſe here. (Beza and Fox) There was not any one particular action or circumſtance relating to the death of Chriſt, but what came under the holy counſel and wiſe determination of God: Yet this foreknowledge and counſel of God, as it did not neceſſitate and enforce them to it, ſo neither doth it excuſe them in it. God's foreknowledge and determinate counſel did no more compel or force their wicked hands to do what they did, than the mariner's hoiſting up his ſails to take the wind to ſerve his deſign, can be ſaid to compel the wind to blow. God's end in acting was one; their end in acting was another: His moſt pure and holy; theirs moſt malicious and daringly wicked. In reſpect of God, Chriſt's death was juſtice and mercy: In reſpect of man, it was murder and cruelty; In reſpect to himſelf, it was obedience and humility. (B.) We muſt obſerve, That St. Peter does not make uſe of the verb, paradidomai, which would expreſs the action of Judas, or the crime of the Jews, in betraying of our Saviour, and delivering him to Pilate; but of a participle, ecdotos, which denotes the gift and preſent, which God had made of his Son to the Jews, to reclaim them from their error and vice. So that the words ſhould be thus render'd, That, having taken him who had been given them “by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God,” they had “crucified and ſlain him with wicked hands.” For they contain the ſame reproach, which we find in the following chapter, ver. 13, 14. of their having “delivered up Jeſus, and denied him in the preſence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go.” (Howel) See the notes on Luke xxii. 22.

Whom God hath raiſed up.] Chriſt, though laid, was not loſt in the grave; but revived and roſe again, and roſe by the power of his Godhead. True, God is here ſaid to raiſe him, and the Spirit elſewhere: But we are not to underſtand it ſo, as if they raiſed him by their power, without his own power; for he declares it expreſly, John ii. In three days I will raiſe up the temple of my body: And if he had not raiſed himſelf by his own power, how could he be ſaid, Rom. i. 4. To be "declared to be the Son of God, by the reſurrection from the dead?" What more had appeared in Chriſt's reſurrection than in any other, if that were all? For others were raiſed by the power of God, as well as he. Now, becauſe the Jews, to whom St. Peter here preaches, were filled with prejudice againſt Chriſt, the apoſtle thought fit to tell them, that God had raiſed him from the dead; yet by conſequence it ſufficiently appears in the following diſcourſe, that Chriſt raiſed himſelf from the dead. Learn hence, That the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by the omnipotent power of the Godhead, the Father's, the Spirit's, and his own, Godhead, revived, and roſe again from the dead, to the terror and conſternation of his enemies, and the unſpeakable conſolation of all believers. As by the eternal Spirit, or the power of his own Godhead, he offered up himſelf to God when he died; ſo when he was put to death in the fleſh, he was quickened by the Spirit; that is, by the power of his divine nature: The ſame Spirit enabled him to do both. Obſerve alſo, The reaſon annexed, why God raiſed up Jeſus Chriſt; becauſe it was impoſſible that death ſhould hold him: But how impoſſible? 1. 'Twas naturally impoſſible upon the account of that divine power which was inherent in his Perſon as God. 2. 'Twas legally impoſſible, becauſe divine Juſtice, being fully ſatisfied by his ſufferings, required, that he ſhould be raiſed to life; as when a debt is paid, the priſoner is diſcharged, and the priſon door opened. (B.) See the notes on John ii. 19, 21. and x. 17, 18.

Looſed the pains of death.] The Hebrew word ſignifies both a cord or band, and pang; ſuch eſpecially as of women in travail. Hence the Septuagint, meeting with that word, Pſal. xviii. 4. where it certainly ſignifies ſchoinia, cords or bands, have yet render'd it, odines, pangs; and ſo again, 1 Kings xx. 32. and in other places: And, from their example, here St. Luke hath uſed tas odinas thanatou, the pangs, or "pains of death;" when both the addition of the word, luſas, looſing, and crateiſthai, being holden faſt, do ſhew, that the ſenſe is bands, or cords. (H.)

Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell.] Eis hadou, which ſignifies not the place of the damned, but the grave; or the ſtate or place of death. (G. H. W. Leigh, B. and Fox) See the notes on Matt. xi. 23. and Luke xvi. 23.

Thy holy one to ſee corruption.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 46.

That his ſoul was not left in hell.] Dr. Mill is confident, that the words he pſyche autou (his ſoul) were inſerted from ver. 27. becauſe they are wanting in Irenæus l. iii. c. 12. p. 229. in the vulgar, Syriac, and Alexandrian code. But, as theſe words are own'd by the Arabic, Chryſoſtome, and Oecumenius, upon this place, and by Origen, in his commentary upon the Kings, where he ſays, They are read in the Pſalms, and interpreted in the Acts of the apoſtles; ſo is it evident, 1. From the very words, that they ought to be retain'd. For the words of the Pſalmiſt being theſe, "Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell," Pſal. xvi. 10. the apoſtle, here ſaying, that "David ſpake this of the reſurrection," ought to uſe the words that David ſpake. And, 2. This is farther evident, from the words following, "Neither did his fleſh ſee corruption;" they having a plain relation to he pſyche autou going before. (W.)

Whereof we all are witneſſes.] See the notes on chap. i. 8. and Luke xxiv. 48.

Having received of the Father the promiſe.] That is, The Spirit promiſed by the Father, and therefore ſtiled his promiſe, Luke xxiv. 49. and receiv'd from him by Chriſt, who, as Mediator betwixt God and man, is to convey all bleſſings to man, from that Father of lights, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift," James i. 17. And thus, this one Mediator betwixt God and man, "the man Chriſt Jeſus," 1 Tim. ii. 5. is fitly ſaid to have receiv'd this Spirit from the Father; tho' as to his divine nature, he alſo is "the Spirit of Chriſt," 1 Pet. i. 11. And he receives of his to give unto us, John xvi. 14, 15. Yea, he hath ſo received him, as to be the Lord of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 18. and of all his adminiſtrations, 1 Cor. xii. 5. So that all Chriſtians ever did receive him "according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt," Eph. iv. 7. (W.) See the notes on chap. i. 4. Luke xxiv. 49. and John xiv. 16, 26.

David is not aſcended.] That is, with his body, as Enoch and Elias did: But that Jeſus, who is the Son, and Lord, of David, and was to ſit upon his throne, "and reign over the houſe of Iſrael for ever," Luke i. 32, 33. muſt have aſcended thither. For thus did David propheſy concerning him, when he ſaid, "The Lord ſaid unto my Lord," &c. Pſal. cx. 1. (Idem and B.)

Sit thou on my right hand.] Chriſt's "ſitting on the right hand of God" imports, 1. The unſpeakable felicity which Chriſt, according to his human nature, now enjoys: For God's right hand is repreſented as the place of everlaſting happineſs and joy, Pſal. xvi. 11. 2. The glorious majeſty to which our Saviour is advanced; God's right hand being ſtiled in ſcripture, "the right hand of Majeſty," Heb. i. 3. And, as the moſt honourable place among men is the right hand, and Solomon ſhewed his mother Bathſheba the higheſt honour, when he made her ſit on the right hand of his throne, 1 Kings ii. 19. So hath the Father advanced Chriſt's human nature to the higheſt dignity, by cauſing it to "ſit on the right hand of the throne of majeſty in heaven," Heb. viii. 1. 3. That fulneſs of power with which he is inveſted over all things in heaven and earth, Matt. xxviii. 18. For ſo the ſcripture repreſents the greatneſs of his divine power by "the ſtrength of his right hand," Pſal. xx. 6. and lxxxix. 13. And hence our Lord, is ſaid to "ſit on the right hand of power," Mark xvi. 62. and Luke xxii. 69. 4. Becauſe princes ſit on their thrones to execute judgment, and exert that dominion which God hath given them over their ſubjects: Therefore this ſeſſion at the right hand of God imports his authority to judge both the quick and dead, as being by it conſtituted "Lord of the dead, and of the living," Rom. xiv. 9. (W.) And whereas Woltzogenius notes, That this proves that Chriſt is not God, becauſe he is here diſtinguiſh'd from God by "ſitting on his right hand;" This we grant, according to that human nature, from which alone he is ſaid to ſit there. And tho', as he replies, the human nature is no Perſon, whereas it is the perſon of Chriſt which ſits on the right hand of God; This is nothing to the purpoſe: For, tho' it be Chriſt, perſonally taken, who "ſits at the right hand of God;" yet he is not ſaid to ſit there, according to his divine, but human, nature. Thus it is "the Lord of glory" who was crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 8. and yet he was not crucified as the Lord of glory. (Idem.)

Therefore God hath made.] That is, God the Father hath ordained and appointed this Jeſus whom ye have crucified, to be the head and Saviour of his church; he being the true and promiſed Meſſiah. Learn hence, That the Lord Jeſus Chriſt was conſtituted and appointed by his Father, to be the ſupreme governor and only Saviour of his church. God had "made Jeſus both Lord and Chriſt;" both a prince and a Saviour. Note farther, How very cloſe and home the apoſtle is, in applying what he ſaid to his auditors: He doth not reſt in generals; but ſays plainly, Ye are the men; that is, "That ſame Jeſus whom ye have crucified," whom "ye with wicked hands have ſlain?" Had not the application been ſo cloſe, it is probable the ſucceſs of the ſermon had not been ſo conſiderable. Thence learn, That the ſucceſs and efficacy of the word preached, depends upon a particular and warm application of it to every man's conſcience; generals will not affect. See an inſtance of it in what follows. (B.)

Ver. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and ſaid unto Peter, and to the reſt of the apoſtles, men and brethren, What ſhall we do? Then Peter ſaid unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. For the promiſe is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God ſhall call. And with many other words did he teſtify and exhort, ſaying, Save yourſelves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: And the ſame day there were added unto them about three thouſand ſouls. And they continued ſtedfaſtly in the apoſtles doctrine and fellowſhip, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every ſoul: And many wonders and ſigns were done by the apoſtles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common, and ſold their poſſeſſions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from houſe to houſe, did eat their meat with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart, praiſing God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily ſuch as ſhould be ſaved.

They were pricked in their heart.] Here the ſucceſs of St. Peter's ſermon is recorded. The auditors were not only affected, but their hearts were touched with a kindly remorſe: They mourn for ſin, and enquire, What they ſhould do to be ſaved? Some, in our days, would have been offended at ſuch an enquiry, and told them, It was not doing, but believing only, that God expected; That Chriſt had done all for them; and that they had nothing to do, but to believe ſtrongly that all was done to their hands: But St. Peter reproves them not for their inquiry, but puts them upon doing; namely, the exerciſe and practice of repentance, in the next verſe. Here note, 1. That converſion, where it is in truth, begets and occaſions a very great and ſenſible change. 2. That the preaching of the word is the inſtrumental means for the effecting and accompliſhing of this change. 3. That the beſt preaching is that which pricks mens hearts, wounds and convinces their conſciences, and makes them thoroughly ſenſible both of their ſin and danger, and of the great neceſſity of a change. 4. That when men are once convinced of their bad ſtate and dangerous condition, their firſt enquiry will be, yea ſhould, and ought to be, What they ſhould do to be ſaved? They ſaid, "Men and brethren, what ſhall we do?" The apoſtle liked that enquiry very well; and anſwers it in the next verſe. (B.)

Repent, and be baptized.] Obſerve, 1. St. Peter exhorts them to repentance. But did they not repent already? Were they not now pricked at their hearts? And will the apoſtle add grief to grief, and pain to ſmart? Know, that the apoſtle adviſes them to join to their legal ſorrow, Evangelical repentance; ſuch as is attended and accompanied with owning Chriſt to be the true Meſſias, with believing in him, with deſire and hope of pardon from him. Where, by the way, obſerve, That St. Peter preſcribes the ſame phyſick for them, which he had very lately taken himſelf with good ſucceſs; when, upon his hearty ſorrow, he obtained pardon for denying his Lord, and Maſter, Matt. xxvi. 75. "He went out and wept bitterly." No ſermons are ſo ſovereign and ſo ſucceſsful, as thoſe which proceed from the miniſter's perſonal and comfortable experience. St. Peter preſſes upon his auditors the doctrine of repentance, which he himſelf had practiſed. 2. Upon their repentance, their owning of, and believing in Chriſt, he directs them to be baptized in his name, and then they ſhould be capable of the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; even of thoſe miraculous gifts which they now ſaw and admired in the apoſtles. Learn hence, That baptiſm is a ſolemn ordinance and ſacred inſtitution of Jeſus Chriſt, which is not to be adminiſter'd to any out of the Chriſtian church, till they profeſs repentance and faith in Chriſt, and ſincere obedience to him: "Repent and be baptized every one of you." 3. The argument which the apoſtle uſes with them, by way of encouragement, to perſuade them to repent and be baptized; for (ſays he) "The promiſe is unto you and to your children:" To you Jews of the ſeed of Abraham, and to your ſeed; and to as many of the Gentiles, and their ſeed, as ſhall be called, by the preaching of the Goſpel, to profeſs faith in Chriſt, and ſubjection to him. Where, by the promiſe, is meant the gracious covenant of God, whereby he offers pardon and peace to ſuch as will accept them. Now this acceptance is two-fold: 1. Cordial; which entitles a perſon to all the benefits of the covenant, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal. And, 2. Profeſſional only; which entitles a perſon and his ſeed to church privileges only. Hence learn, That when God takes believing parents into covenant with himſelf, he takes alſo their children or ſeed into covenant with himſelf likewiſe: And if ſo, then the ſeal of the covenant, which is baptiſm, ought to be applied to them. It is evident, that under the Old Teſtament, children were in covenant with God as well as their parents: And do we any where find that ever they were caſt out under the Goſpel? The apoſtle doth not ſay, the promiſe was to you and to your ſeed; but ſtill is: For otherwiſe, children would be in a worſe condition under the Goſpel of Chriſt, than they were under the law of Moſes; but ſurely, the privileges of the Goſpel are not ſtraiter and narrower, than thoſe of the law. And laſtly, how St. Peter cloſes all with an exhortation to his auditors, to "ſave themſelves from that untoward generation:" That is, from the Scribes and Phariſees, that four ſort of men, who deſperately and maliciouſly oppoſed Chriſt and his Goſpel, and, by their authority and example, kept people from embracing the only way of ſalvation revealed by Jeſus Chriſt. (Idem.)

In the name of Jeſus Chriſt.] In the firſt inſtitution of baptiſm, Matt. xxviii. 18, 19. "the names of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt" are all expreſly mention'd. We cannot therefore think, that St. Peter here intended to exclude the Father and the Holy Ghoſt. And tho' they are not here particularly ſet down, thoſe who were baptized might notwithſtanding be baptized in their names, as well as "in the name of Jeſus Chriſt;" for 'tis certain, that, from the apoſtles times, the names of all the three were uſed. Dr. Lightfoot's account of this matter is, That, among the Jews, the apoſtles "baptized in the name of Jeſus Chriſt" only, becauſe they already believ'd in the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, "who ſpake by the prophets;" for the point controverted among them was, Whether Jeſus Chriſt was the Son of God, and the true Meſſiah, which thoſe who were baptized by the apoſtles profeſs'd to believe: But, among the Gentiles, or Heathens, they "baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt;" by which they were inſtructed in the knowledge of the true God, of whom, before, they were ignorant. (Fox) See the notes on Matt. xxviii. 19.

Ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.] What "the gift of the Holy Ghoſt," ſignifies, in relation to the perſons that here are ſpoken to, as many as ſhould now repent, and believe on Chriſt, is apparent by the proceſs of the ſtory. There were that day three thouſand which received the faith of Chriſt, ver. 41. and theſe aſſociated, and joined themſelves with the apoſtles, ver. 42. and that in a wonderful charitable manner, "had all things common," &c. ver. 44. In the third chapter, the apoſtles work that cure on the impotent man, and, on that occaſion, preach Chriſt to the Jews again: And, chap. iv. the Sanhedrim, &c. apprehend them, and upon conſultation diſmiſs them again, and they return to their auditors, the believers foremention'd, ver. 23, 24. And they bleſſing and praiſing God, and applying the Pſalmiſt's predictions to their preſent condition, and praying to God for his powerful aſſiſtance to propagate the Goſpel, it follows, ver. 31. that "as they prayed, the place was ſhaken," (in like manner, as chap. ii. 2. when the Holy Ghoſt deſcended on the apoſtles) "and they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt;" that is, certainly all the believers foremention'd, not the apoſtles, who were thus filled before. And ſo this promiſe of St. Peter's was punctually fulfill'd upon them. What the effect of this gift was among them, is no farther there ſet down, than that "they ſpake the word of God with boldneſs;" that is, they were wonderfully confirmed by this means, in their aſſurance of the truth of the Goſpel: And ſo, making no queſtion of the truth of what they had learnt from the apoſtles, they ſpake of it among themſelves, and to others, with all chearfulneſs and confidence, deſpiſing the terrors of the Jews, as they did their worldly poſſeſſions, ver. 32. and continuing that high pitch of charity, which had before been obſerved to be among them, chap. ii. 44. And ſo thus far this "gift of the Holy Ghoſt" ſignifies no more than a miraculous confirmation of theſe believers, formerly baptized, in the faith, and Chriſtian practices, which they had received; but this no doubt then attended with other extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, in reſpect of which they are ſaid to be "fill'd with the Holy Ghoſt." And then, the only difficulty will be, what kind of gifts theſe were; whether inward or outward: For both theſe are promiſed indefinitely to believers. To the inward, that ſpeech of Chriſt," John vii. 38. ſeems to pertain," "He that believeth on me, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living waters;" where the belly denoting the heart, or inward part of the man, the "flowing of the living water" from thence, denotes ſome effects of the Holy Spirit's deſcent upon, and in the hearts of believers; the Evangeliſt there diſtinctly referring thoſe words to the then-future deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 39. "This he ſpake of the Spirit, which they that believe on him ſhould receive; for as yet the Holy Ghoſt was not given (among, or upon them) becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorified." Where 'tis evident, That that ſpeech of Chriſt belong'd to ſome inward gifts in the hearts of men, which upon the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon the apoſtles, ſhould be pour'd upon the Chriſtian world, convey'd by the preaching, baptizing, confirming, and other miniſtry of the apoſtles, their farther inſtructing them in the Goſpel, which is therefore elſewhere call'd diaconia pneumatos, the miniſtration of the Spirit, or means of communicating it to believers. What this inward gift is, appears in ſeveral places; Wiſdom, chap. vi. 3. Knowledge, 1 Cor. xii. 8. And ſo likewiſe the aſſiſtances of God's Spirit, join'd with his word, enabling humble, ſincere, Chriſtians, for the duties of Chriſtian life, which are required of them, called "the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt," and joined, as here, to "the waſhing of regeneration," Tit. iii. 5. and ſo "the earneſt of the Spirit in our hearts," 2 Cor. i. 22. The outward gifts are thoſe chariſmata, gifts of tongues, of healing, &c. And thoſe are evidently call'd "the gift of the Holy Ghoſt," Acts x. 45. And that was there poured upon the Gentiles of Cornelius's family, immediately on their receiving the faith, even before baptiſm. And to theſe belongs another promiſe of Chriſt, Mark xvi. 17. "Theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe; They ſhall take up ſerpents," &c. Now, for the reſolving of the query, what ſort of gift it is which is here meant; the ſureſt way will be, not ſo to define of either as to exclude the other, but to comprehend both under this phraſe: Not that both, and every branch of each, ſhould be poured on each believer, but that they all ſhould be ſcatter'd among them; the inward by baptiſm, or confirmation, ſigned on all, and the outward beſtow'd on ſome of them, to teſtify to all the truth and excellency of the Goſpel, and to fit and prepare ſome perſons for ſacred employments: Not all the outward again, upon each, on whom the outward were beſtowed; but ſome on one, ſome on another, the gift of tongues to one, of healing to a ſecond, of propheſying to a third; and they that had moſt, or the higheſt degrees of theſe, are call'd "full of the Spirit." (H.) See the notes on Mark xvi. 17. and John vii. 38, 39.

As many as the Lord our God ſhall call.] That is, whoſoever ſhall obey the call: For in expreſſions which ſignify a benefit, the acceptance of that benefit is a condition oftentimes to be underſtood. (G.)

Teſtify and exhort.] Diemartyreto, which is here tranſlated "he did teſtify," ſignifies alſo to preſs the matter home to the point; as St. Paul does, when he uſes the ſame word, 2 Tim. iv. 1. ſaying, "I charge thee therefore, before God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge," &c.

Save yourſelves from this untoward generation.] That is, ſave yourſelves from that unavoidable ruin and deſtruction, which this wicked and untoward generation of obſtinate unbelieving Jews are ſhortly to be expoſed to. (Cave) See the notes on ver. 21. and Luke xii. 23.

They continued ſtedfaſtly.] Theſe words give us an account of the behaviour of the firſt Chriſtians, particularly in their religious aſſemblies; and of the way of worſhip uſed in the church of Jeruſalem, the true mother-church, in the time of the apoſtles: In which we may obſerve, 1. Their doctrine. 2. Their government and diſcipline. 3. Their ſacraments. And, 4. Their prayers. (B.) And theſe being the only eſſential properties or characters of a true church, in the apoſtles time, and derived from their infallible authority, the like whereof cannot be ſhew'd for any other; our church therefore deſires nothing more than to be tried by theſe tokens. (Lloyd) 1. As to the doctrine which they adhered to, it was "the apoſtles doctrine;" that is, the doctrine delivered by Chriſt, and taught by the apoſtles, and contained in the holy ſcriptures. This was the rule, by which the firſt Chriſtians govern'd themſelves, both as to faith and manners. 'Tis true indeed, theſe firſt Chriſtians received the apoſtles doctrine from the apoſtles mouths; and had no other way, for ſome time, of being acquainted with what they taught, but by being conſtant in their attendance on their preaching: But the apoſtles themſelves did afterwards ſet down in writing what they taught; that is, in the holy ſcripture: And it was infinite wiſdom in God, to inſpire holy men, for committing this doctrine to writing, and not to leave it to the hazardous and uncertain way of tradition; concerning which ſee the notes on John xx. 21. and xxi. 25. (Linford and B.) This doctrine the firſt Chriſtians "continued ſtedfaſtly in;" that is, they were conſtant hearers of it, and attendants upon it; they received it not upon truſt, but due examination. Whence we may learn, That religion being the great intereſt and common concern of mankind, he who eſpouſes it aright, muſt firſt examine and underſtand the fundamental principles of it, and then chuſe accordingly: For otherwiſe, our adherence to the beſt religion in the world will rather be the reſult of chance, than of judgment and choice. (B.) 2. As to the government and diſcipline: "They continued ſtedfaſtly in the fellowſhip:" Which may ſignify and import, either, 1. Their communion with the apoſtles, and their keeping cloſe to their own teachers, in oppoſition to ſchiſm, which is a cauſeleſs, and therefore a culpable ſeparation. Or, 2. Their ſociety among themſelves, and communion one with another. As the communion of ſaints in heaven is a conſiderable part of the happineſs of heaven, ſo the fellowſhip of ſaints on earth is a ſort of heaven upon earth: The comfort of our lives depends much upon ſociety, but more upon the ſuitableneſs of ſociety. The primitive ſaints were all of one mind; and therefore fit to make one body: For tho' man loves company, yet it is the company of thoſe he loves. Or, 3. The mutual aſſiſtance which they gave and received: A communication, or free diſtribution, to the neceſſities of each other; they by love ſerving one another, and parting with their poſſeſſions for the ſupport of each other: Which liberality, and mutual ſupplying one another's wants, did plainly ſhew, that they eſteemed themſelves as fellow-members of the ſame body; and that they were perfectly united in heart and affection. (Idem.) Now to "continue ſtedfaſtly in the apoſtles fellowſhip," or ſociety, conſidering that they were men deputed by Chriſt for the government of his church, could be no other, than to continue as members of that body, which Chriſt put under their government. And their government being to continue in a ſucceſſion "to the end of the world," Matt. xxviii. 20. whoſoever were ſent by the apoſtles, as our Lord ſent them, were even as themſelves; and whoſoever, in after ages, continued in the fellowſhip of ſuch their ſucceſſors, (as the biſhops in their reſpective churches are undoubtedly held to have been) were reckoned to continue in the fellowſhip of the apoſtles. (Lloyd) For if the church, of which we are members, be govern'd by lawful and canonical biſhops, and they act according to the rules of the catholic church, then to ſeparate from them is a damnable ſin, and a pernicious ſchiſm; 'tis a denying of Chriſt himſelf, who appointed them to rule the church in his ſtead: But if they are either not lawful biſhops (in reſpect of ſucceſſion) but intruders, or not orthodox (in point of doctrine) but heretical, then they who ſeparate are not only not ſchiſmaticks, but the true church, and they who cauſe the ſeparation are the ſchiſmaticks. (Altham) 3. Thoſe firſt Chriſtians "continued ſtedfaſtly in breaking of bread;" that is, in receiving the ſacrament of the Lord's-ſupper. So great and fervent was their devotion, that none of their religious aſſemblies paſſed, in which they did not make this ſolemn commemoration of our Saviour, and "ſhew forth his death;" looking upon their other religious ſervices as lame and defective without this. Our Saviour's blood was ſtill warm, and they kept it ſo, by their devout and frequent remembrances of it: And it was their conſtancy in thus "breaking of bread," which gave life to all their religious actions. This fitted them both for doing and dying: Their frequent drinking of the blood of Chriſt fired them with zeal for ſhedding their blood for him. What reaſon then can men now give for neglecting ſo holy an inſtitution? Are we above thoſe helps to a good life which they ſo conſtantly uſed? Have we not as much reaſon to arm ourſelves againſt ſin and temptation as they had? But the plain truth is, men are not willing to be ſo holy now, as they were then. Their conſciences tell them, this ordinance would engage them to greater ſtrictneſs of life than they are willing to undergo: They muſt leave their ſins, which they are loth to part with: They muſt forgive their enemies, whom they had rather to be revenged of: They muſt enter into new engagements, whereas they had rather be at liberty. So that thoſe things which make men loth to come to this ſacrament are indeed, if duly conſidered, the greateſt arguments to draw them thither; and, according to the example of the primitive Chriſtians, to "continue ſtedfaſtly in breaking of bread." (B.) And, 4, "They continued ſtedfaſtly in prayer;" that is, in the public and ſolemn addreſſes made to God in their religious aſſemblies; whereby they poured out their ſouls to God, both in prayer and ſupplication, and in praiſe and thankſgiving. The publick prayers and interceſſions of the church of Chriſt are greatly to be eſteemed by all Chriſtians: They glorify God moſt: He eſteems and accepts them beſt: This keeps up a ſenſe of God and religion in the world; and nothing delights God more than the joint prayers and praiſes of his people. (Idem.) See the notes on ver. 1. and Luke xxiv. 30.

All that believed were together.] Epi to auto. There being now added to the one hundred and twenty, three thouſand ſouls more, ver. 41. it ſeemeth inconvenient to ſay, they were all together in one place; unleſs it were in one of thoſe apartments in the towers of the Temple, which, ſaith Joſephus, would receive an hundred beds: And therefore it ſeems better to refer this to their communion in the ſame action; in which ſenſe all the Jews are ſaid to build, epi to auto, together, Ezra iv. 3. tho' they were "far ſeparated from one another," Neh. iv. 19. and Joab and Abner's men to be epi to auto, together, 2 Sam. ii. 13. tho' "one were on the one, the other on the other ſide of the pool;" See Pſalm xlix. 2. Iſa. lxvi. 17 Jer. vi. 12. (W.) This phraſe itſelf does not, by any Grammatical conſtruction whatſoever, ſo much denote a place, as it does a thing in general, according to the known rule of all ſuch neutral words as this is. Thus the learned Grotius, on chap. iii. 1. renders it circa idem tempus, i. e. about the ſame time: And Beza, on this text, explains it by, their mutual agreement in the ſame doctrine, and the great unanimity of their hearts. Agreeable to which conſtruction of it, is what we meet with in the Greek tranſlation of Pſalm xxxiv. 3. where that which the Septuagint render epi to auto, by Aquila is tranſlated homothumadon, that is, with one mind and one heart. (Slater.) See the notes on ver. 1. and chap. iv. 31.

And had all things common.] Theſe words here, and chap. iv. 32. do not ſignify, that they had no longer any propriety in what belonged to them; for then they could not ſell them afterward: But that they uſed and diſpoſed of them, as things common; freely imparting of them to all that had need. And that this making ſale of them was not done by command, St. Peter declares, by telling Ananias, he was under no obligation ſo to do, chap. v. 4. Nor was it ever intended for an example, or precedent, to other Chriſtians; as is evident from all the Epiſtles, in which we have frequent mention of the diſtinction betwixt rich and poor; and frequent exhortations to the wealthy, to be rich in good works: But not the leaſt intimation that they ought to ſell their poſſeſſions; this being now done on a particular account, either by them who had lands out of Judea, as Barnabas had his in Cyprus, and being reſolved not to return thither, but to cleave to the apoſtles, could make but little benefit from them there; or elſe in Judea, and therefore they knowing from our Saviour's propheſy of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and from his exhortation, that they were ſhortly to fly from, and quit them to the enemy, were willing to part with their eſtates for the benefit of the church, before they were ſnatch'd from them by the enemy. (W. and F.) Chriſt's Goſpel does not deſtroy the moral law, The eighth commandment is ſtill in force; which it could not be, if there were no property. The leſſon for our inſtruction, to be gather'd from this inſtance, is this, That they who have ability ought to abound always in ordinary, and ſometimes in extraordinary works of charity: We muſt always relieve the ſaints wants, as we are able; and ſometimes, upon an extraordinary occaſion, above what we are well able. (B.)

Continuing daily, with one accord.] See the notes on ver. i. 42, and Luke xxiv. 53.

From houſe to houſe.] Theſe words are, in the margin, at home. Or they may be tranſlated, in the houſe; that is, in the place where they were wont to meet together, to perform their publick worſhip as Chriſtians. See the notes on ver. 1. and chap. i. 13.

Having favour with all the people.] Echein ſignifies to uſe, or to exerciſe; as when Chriſt ſaith, "To him that hath ſhall be given;" and "Let us have grace," Heb. xii. 28. And as for charis, that is the very word charity, and is by Cicero ſo render'd; and frequently ſignifies liberality (as in Epicurus's book, entitled "Of gifts and charity, or liberality," mentioned by Sextus Emp. l. cont. Gramm.) and ſo is uſed 2 Cor. viii. 4. and ſo Acts iv. 33. where megale charis is by the Syriac render'd, great goodneſs, or benignity, (tho' Guido Fabritius renders it gratia magna; following the notion which, it ſeems, he had of the Greek, without conſidering the Syriac) and ſo the conſequents demonſtrate it to ſignify: And therefore the phraſe echontes charin is by the Syriac render'd, They gave alms before all the people; not, as Guido Fabritius again renders the Greek, rather than that, cum iniiſſent gratiam, when they got favour. (H.)

Such as ſhould be ſaved.] We cannot from hence conclude, that there is any determinate number of perſons appointed to ſalvation, and that the reſidue, which are the much greater part of mankind, are, by a peremptory decree of God, appointed to everlaſting deſtruction: For, the plain import of theſe words is this, That thoſe who, by the preaching of the apoſtles, were perſuaded that Jeſus is the Chriſt, and accepted of the ſalvation purchaſed by him, on the gracious and reaſonable conditions it was offered to them, were "added to the church;" being by baptiſm admitted into it: which conditions are faith, repentance, and ſincere obedience to the laws of Chriſt, the performance of which are promiſed and vowed in baptiſm. The ſtrict rendering of theſe words is, "The Lord added to the church daily the ſaved." (Fox) See the notes on ver. 42.

CHAP. III.

Peter and John, going to the Temple, cure a man who was lame from his birth. Peter preacheth to the people thereon in Solomon's porch.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. NOW Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour. And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to aſk alms of them that entred into the temple. Who ſeeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, aſked an alms. And Peter, faſtning his eyes upon him, with John, ſaid, Look on us. And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive ſomething of them. Then Peter ſaid, Silver and Gold have I none; but ſuch as I have, give I thee. In the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, riſe up and walk. And he took him by the right hand, and lift him up; and immediately his feet and ancle-bones received ſtrength. And he leaping up, ſtood and walked, and entred with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praiſing God. And all the people ſaw him walking, and praiſing God. And they knew that it was he which ſat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple; and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happen'd unto him. And as the lame man which was healed, held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondring.

Now Peter and John went up together.] Obſerve here, 1. The remarkable diligence and induſtry of St. Peter and the other apoſtles, in preaching the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. At the third hour of the day, on the feaſt of Pentecoſt, that is, at nine o' clock in the morning, St. Peter preached a ſermon, chap. ii. 14, which, by the bleſſing of the Holy Spirit accompanying it, converted three thouſand ſouls: Here, at three o' clock in the afternoon, on the ſame day, as the learned Dr. Lighfoot notes, he preached a ſecond ſermon, which converts five thouſand more. This affords at once a good precedent, and a good encouragement to the apoſtles ſucceſſors, the miniſters of Chriſt, to the end of the world, for the preaching twice upon the Lord's-day. If, in the room of three, and five thouſand ſouls, we be inſtrumental for the converſion of one ſingle ſoul, it is infinitely worth the indefatigable pains and diligence of our whole lives. 2. The place which the apoſtle preaches in, the Temple; thither the apoſtles went, not to offer ſacrifice, but to inform the Jews, that the law of ſacrifices was now aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt; not to communicate with them in their antiquated worſhip, but that they might have a larger field to ſow the ſeed of the Goſpel in. 3. The circumſtance of time, "at the hour of prayer." In all ages, ſince God had a church in the world, there have been ſtated times and places for ſolemn publick worſhip; by which means a ſenſe of God and religion has been preſerved and kept up in the world, which otherwiſe would be in danger of being loſt. The worſhip of God in the cloſet will not do this, becauſe it is unſeen; but ſtated, ſolemn, publick worſhip glorifies God moſt, and he accepts it beſt, Pſalm lxxxvii. 2. "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion, more than all the dwellings of Jacob." (B.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 53.

At the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.] Among the Jews there were three ſtated hours of prayer: The firſt at "the third hour of the day," chap. ii. 15. which anſwers to our ninth; at which time they offered their morning ſacrifice, Exod. xxix. 39. Numb. xxviii. 3, 4. At "the ninth hour," or at three in the afternoon, when they offered their evening ſacrifice, Acts x. 3, 30. Of theſe two, the Hebrew doctors ſay, The continual ſacrifice of the morning made atonement for the iniquities that were done in the night, and the evening ſacrifice for the iniquity that was done by day: But Philo ſaith, They were both ſacrifices of thankſgiving for the bleſſings God was pleaſed continually to confer upon mankind by day and night. At both theſe times, ſpecial favours were ſhewn by God to his people: Thus, "In the morning, when the Mincha was offered," the thirſty land was miraculouſly "filled with water," 2 Kings iii. 20. And, "about the time of the evening oblation," God anſwers Daniel's prayer, by ſending the angel Gabriel to him, Dan. ix. 21. Hence David ſays, "Let my prayer aſcend to thee as incenſe, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening ſacrifice," Pſalm cxli. 2. Either becauſe that alſo comprehends the morning ſacrifice, as Kimchi conjectures; or as R. Saadias, becauſe by that all things were atoned, there being no ſacrifice offer'd after that: And, upon this account it might be, that the apoſtles, and other pious perſons, went always up "into the temple at theſe hours of prayer," chap. ii. 46. The third time of prayer was "the ſixth hour;" that is, at twelve of the clock; before they dined, or after dinner: At which time we find Peter at his prayers, chap. x. 9. Of theſe three times, the Royal Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh thus, "At evening, and at morning, and at noon, will I pray to thee," Pſalm lv. 17. And of Daniel it is recorded, that "he kneel'd down three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks," Dan. vi. 10, 13. And the Jews ſay, they received theſe ſtated hours of prayer from Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob: But yet, as their going to the temple is no precedent for us Chriſtians to perform our private devotions in the church, which by our Lord's directions we rather are to do "entring into our cloſets;" God not being ſo preſent in our churches, as in a place of his perpetual and glorious reſidence, as he was in the tabernacle and the temple: So neither is their obſervation of theſe hours of prayer any warrant for our inſtitution of canonical hours of prayer; much leſs an evidence, that the apoſtles, by going thither, did inſtitute theſe canonical hours, as Baronius fanſies. Notwithſtanding, ſince we Chriſtians are as much obliged both to perform our publick and private devotions to God, as the Jews could be, it muſt be laudable in us alſo, to ſet apart ſolemn times for the performance of thoſe duties, as they did. And hence the Conſtitutions of the apoſtles, having cited the Lord's-prayer, ſay, Pray thus thrice a-day: And Tertullian ſays, That theſe three hours, morning, noon, and evening, were the moſt celebrated in their daily prayers: And theſe three times, ſaith Theodoret, we glorify God, uſing the ſacred liturgies in the churches. (W.) The Jews have a tradition, that thoſe times were ordained to that uſe; the morning by Abraham, noon by Iſaac, and evening by Jacob. (Bever. Cave, and Godw.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 45. and Mark xv. 25.

A certain lame man.] Obſerve here, 1. The condition of this perſon. 1. He was poor, even to beggary: But poverty is no ſign of God's disfavour, nor doth exclude any from partaking of the beſt of bleſſings. 2. He was born a cripple, not lamed by caſualty or accident; but "lame from his mother's womb." 3. He had continued a cripple forty years, chap. iv. 22. "The man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was ſhewed:" Conſequently the cure was the harder, and the perſon cured the more credible witneſs againſt them that cavilled at his cure. Obſerve, 2. The wonderful mercy and goodneſs of God towards this poor cripple: His miſeries and calamities, his lameneſs and poverty, are over-ruled by God for good to him; even for the beſt good; namely, for bringing him to the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſalvation by him. O! How good is God, at making up all our loſſes, and exceeding not only our deſerts, but our expectations alſo! This poor Man only begged an alms, God gives him his limbs; yea, gives him his Son, and ſalvation by him. Thus we receive of God daily more than we can either aſk or think. 3. The apoſtle's advice to the lame man, and his ready compliance with that advice. "Look on us," ſays St. Peter: He doth not ſay, Believe on us, but " look on us," and believe on Chriſt. This the apoſtle ſpake to quicken his attention and excite his hope: As if St Peter had ſaid, You look upon many others as able to relieve your neceſſities; now " look on us," and ſee what we can do for you: Accordingly he faſtened his eyes upon the apoſtles; and beheld them as expectant of relief. Here note, 1. The great mercy of God that was mingled with this poor man's affliction: Tho' he was lame, he was not blind. He could and did ſtedfaſtly behold the apoſtles with a fixed eye both of body and mind. 2. That what the cripple could do, he muſt, and did do, towards his own healing; he could not move a foot, but he could fix his eye: We are ſpiritual cripples labouring under a moral impotency: Being " without ſtrength," Rom. v. 6. But God expects the exerciſe of our faculties, and the uſe of our endeavours in order to our recovery, help, and healing. As the cripple look'd up to the apoſtles, ſo may we look up to the miniſters of God; hear them and apply to them; place ourſelves under the word diſpenſed by them: For he that made us without ourſelves, will never ſave us without ourſelves; but we muſt " work out our own ſalvation," Phil. ii. 12. (B.)

Which is called beautiful.] This gate, being the very front and entrance into the temple, was built with ſuch ſumptuouſneſs and glory as became the frontiſpiece of that place where the divine majeſty vouchſafed to dwell; and hence bare the name of the beautiful gate. The other three gates, belonging to the entrance into the court of the women, were, ſaith Joſephus, cover'd over with ſilver, and then gilt: But this gate, which he called the Corinthian gate, as being made of Corinthian braſs, was, ſaith he, much exceeding in glory thoſe of gold and ſilver. (W.)

Silver and gold have I none.] Obſerve here, the poverty of this great apoſtle St. Peter, and his holy contempt of the world; ſilver and gold he had none. The holieſt, the wiſeſt, and beſt men, are ſeldom the wealthieſt. " Silver and gold have I none, but ſuch as I have I give:" As if he had ſaid, I have no money to give thee; but that which is better than money: I have received power from Chriſt to cure and heal diſeaſes; and having received it freely, I will give it freely: Therefore, " In the name of Jeſus," that is, by the power of Jeſus, whom in contempt ye call Jeſus " of Nazareth," be healed, " riſe up and walk." 2 The nature of the miracle here wrought: It was, 1. publick and open, not done in a corner, but before all the people at a publick time, Pentecoſt; and at a publick place, the gates of the temple. 2. Inſtantaneous and ſudden;" immediately his feet and ankle-bones received ſtrength." This evidently ſhewed it to be God's work; he was perfectly cured, and inſtantly cured, tho' he was lame from his birth, and had continued lame above forty years. All things are eaſy, yea, equally eaſy to an almighty power: If God ſpeaks but the word, " the lame ſhall leap as an hart," Iſa. xxxv. 6. Obſ. 3. The humility and faith of this great apoſtle, diſcovered in the manner of the cure: His humility, in not diſdaining to touch and take hold of, and lift up, this poor cripple from the ground: His faith, in being fully perſuaded of Chriſt's preſence, relying upon his power, and depending upon his promiſe, Mark xvi. 18. " They ſhall lay hands on the ſick and they ſhall recover." The apoſtles had not a power at their pleaſure to work miracles; but when God pleaſed to work them, he made it known to them by inſpiration, and put them upon it. Obſerve 4. How the poor cripple piouſly aſcribes the praiſe of this miracle to God only; " leaping, and praiſing God," not the apoſtles. No inſtrument muſt rob God of his glory: We may pay and gratify the meſſenger; but muſt return our principal thanks to our benefactor. No doubt, the cripple returned thanks to the apoſtles; but his prayers unto God only: To conceal God's mercies is ingratitude; to attribute them to ſecond cauſes is ſacrilege. (B.) See the notes on Luke xvii. 15.

They were filled with wonder and amazement.] Obſerve here, the influence and effect this miracle had upon the minds of the multitude. It occaſion'd wonder, but did not produce faith. Miracles will confirm faith, but not alone beget it. The ſpirit's extraordinary works may produce aſtoniſhment; but it is the work of the ſpirit that muſt produce faith. (Idem.)

The porch that is called Solomon's.] See the notes on John x. 23.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. And when Peter ſaw it, he anſwered unto the people, Ye men of Iſrael, why marvel ye at this? Or why look ye ſo earneſtly on us, as though by our own power or holineſs we had made this man to walk? The God of Abraham, and of Iſaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers hath glorified his Son Jeſus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the preſence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go. But ye denied the holy One, and the juſt, and deſired a murderer to be granted unto you, and killed the prince of life, whom God hath raiſed from the dead; whereof we are witneſſes. And his name, through faith in his name, hath made this man ſtrong, whom ye ſee and know: yea, the faith which is by him, hath given him this perfect ſoundneſs in the preſence of you all. And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did alſo your rulers. But thoſe things which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled. Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out, when the times of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord, and he ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt, which before was preached unto you: Whom the heaven muſt receive, until the times of reſtitution of all things, which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, ſince the world began. For Moſes truly ſaid unto the fathers, A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you, of your brethren, like unto me; him ſhall ye hear in all things whatſoever he ſhall ſay unto you. And it ſhall come to paſs, that every ſoul which will not hear that prophet, ſhall be deſtroyed from among the people. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and thoſe that follow after, as many as have ſpoken, have likewiſe foretold of theſe days. Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, ſaying unto Abraham, And in thy ſeed ſhall all the kindreds of the earth be bleſſed. Unto you firſt, God having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

He anſwered.] See the notes on Luke xiv. 5.

By our own power or holineſs.] Obſerve here, How the apoſtle abaſeth himſelf and his fellow-diſciples, that he may exalt Chriſt. He will not ſuffer the leaſt part of the glory of this miracle to ſtick to them, but gives it all to Chriſt. The Jews had a conceit, that extraordinary holineſs would enable a man to work miracles. The apoſtle denies it. For tho' there be a great difference betwixt miraculous faith and juſtifying faith: Yet true juſtifying faith has a miracle in it, tho' not ſo obvious to ſenſe; requiring the ſame power to work it in us, which raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, Eph. i. 20. Learn hence, That Chriſt's power, not his apoſtles holineſs, was the cauſe of all the miracles that were wrought by them. (B.) Here is a plain evidence of the variation of the Roman doctrine from that of the apoſtles, aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt. For the apoſtles here plainly diſclaim any excellency or piety in them, which might make them worthy to be God's inſtruments, above any others, in working ſuch miracles as theſe. But the Catechiſm of the Trent council plainly declares, That God confers upon us many benefits, by virtue of the merits of the ſaints: And Lorinus, on the place, declares, that innumerable hiſtories, and the practice of the church, ſhew, that the merits of the Saints are prevalent for the working miracles. (W.)

Whom ye delivered up.] Obſerve here, How St. Peter rebukes them ſharply, for their contempt of Chriſt, and the horrible indignities offer'd to him. 1. They " denied him," tho' he was " the holy One, and the juſt." 2. They delivered him up to Pilate; to be crucified, tho' he was inclined " to let him go." 3. They preferr'd Barabbas, the worſt of men, and " a murderer," before Jeſus, the beſt of men and a Saviour. And, 4. They murder'd the Meſſias, called here " the prince of life," becauſe he came to bring life into the world. Where note, That tho', probably, none of the Jews then and there preſent, did actually nail Chriſt to the croſs; yet, they having given their conſent to it, they are charged with " killing the prince of life." A plenary and full conſent to the ſins of others, makes us deeply guilty of the ſins of others. (B.) See the notes on chap. ii. 23. and John xvii. 1.

Denied the holy One, and the juſt.] Theſe words I would render thus, Ye refuſed " the Holy One:" So ſtiled, Luke i. 35. by a good angel, and Luke iv. 34. by evil ones; and even, by Pilate's wife, " that juſt man," Matt. xxvii. 19. For ſo the verb arneomai doth often ſignify, both in ſcripture and prophane authors. Thus it is uſed, chap. vii. 35. " This Moſes whom they refuſed:" And, Hebr. xi. 24. He " refuſed to be called the Son of Pharaoh's daughter." And ſo it is render'd by Phavorinus, and Suidas. (W.) This denial or refuſal, ſeems properly applied to the common people, as the foregoing, of delivering up, is to their rulers. (G.) See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 20. Luke xxiii. 18. John xviii 40. and and xix. 15.

The prince of life.] That is, the perſon ſent by God, to lead you in the way to life eternal; having firſt declared it fully to the world, 2 Tim. i. 10. propoſed it to believers, John vi. 40. purchaſed it for them by his death; ſhew'd the way to it by his doctrine; and being appointed to give it to his faithful ſervants, John xvii. 2. Whence he is ſtiled "the Captain of our ſalvation," Hebr. ii. 10. And "a prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and forgiveneſs of ſins," chap. v. 31. Or, as Grotius here hath it, he is ſtiled "the prince of life;" as "having life in himſelf," and power to raiſe all men from the dead, John v. 26, &c. To which ſenſe this whole phraſe, "Ye have killed the Prince of life," ſeems to lead us. (W.) See the notes on chap. ii. 24, 32. Luke xxiv. 48. John i. 4. v. 21, 24. vi. 40. xi. 25. and xiv. 6.

The faith which is by him.] Di 'autou, "by him," is here uſed for en autou, in him: As the ſame prepoſition, dia, is alſo uſed, in chap. v. 19. and xxiii. 31. Rom. xiv. 20. 2 Cor. v. 10. 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. 2 Pet. iii. 5. (W.) Faith is twice named in this one verſe; becauſe of the apoſtle's faith in working the miracle, and the cripple's faith in receiving it, ſays Dr. Lightfoot. But, queſtionleſs, it was chiefly the apoſtle's faith: For the lame man ſhew'd no faith in Chriſt, before he was heal'd; he expected an alms, but little thought of receiving the uſe of his limbs: But the apoſtle, firmly relying on the power and promiſe of Chriſt, did believe that Chriſt could and would help and heal him. (B.)

Through ignorance ye did it.] Obſerve here, 1. How careful the apoſtle was, not to drive theſe murderers of Chriſt, and conſequently the worſt of men, to deſpair, but to draw them to repentance: In order to which, 1. He mitigates their ſin, imputing it rather to ignorance and blind zeal, than to malice. 2. He is ſo charitable as to impute it to the ignorance of the Phariſees, their rulers alſo. 3. He calls them brethren, tho' guilty of ſo great a miſtake in their judgment, and fault in their practice. Learn thence, That God uſed the ignorance of ſome, and malice of others, for his own glorious ends, in accompliſhing the fore-ordained, and foretold, death of our Redeemer. Obſerve, 2. St. Peter acquaints them, to keep them from deſpair, that God had decreed the ſufferings of Chriſt for man, and by his prophets foretold them; who, as they ſpake by one Spirit, did all ſpeak the ſame things, as if they had all ſpoken out of one mouth. So that what the Jews did, he tells them, was (tho' unknown to them) a fulfilling of ancient prophecies and promiſes for man's redemption. The death and ſufferings of Chriſt, with all the circumſtances relating thereunto, were all ordained by God, and foretold by the prophets: Which tho' it doth not excuſe his murderers from the guilt of a dreadful ſin; yet may be improv'd as an argument to keep them from deſpair. (Idem) Tho' the ignorance of the whole nation, and eſpecially of the rulers, in this caſe, was ſuch as took away all juſt excuſe in them on the account of their infidelity, John xv. 22, 24. Yet, becauſe it was occaſioned by thoſe prejudices they had contracted, through the meanneſs of his character and their imaginations that Chriſt ſhould not die, and that his kingdom ſhould be temporal, Chriſt bears with it till the time of the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt; and then calls them again by his apoſtles to repentance. (W.) See the notes on Matt xii. 31. Mark iii. 29. Luke xii. 10. xxiii. 34. and John vii. 26. xv. 22, 24. and xvi. 3.

He hath ſo fulfilled.] God fulfills whatever he foreſees and foretells; the good in doing it, and the evil in reducing it within the order of his wiſe deſigns. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 22, 24.

Repent ye therefore, and be converted.] The apoſtle, like a wiſe phyſician, having diſcovered to the Jews the danger of their diſeaſe, in the foregoing verſes; now directs them to the only effectual remedy, viz. repentance; "Repent and be converted;" that is, Repent of your rejecting Jeſus Chriſt, and be converted to true Chriſtianity. To repent, doth denote a change in the mind and judgment; and to be converted, a change in the life and converſation. The exhortation doth denote our duty, and ſuppoſes our ability alſo, by the aſſiſtance of that grace, which will never be wanting to ſincere endeavours. They were ſubjects recipient of that Vis gratiæ verticordiæ, as St. Auſtin calls it; the heart-changing power of the grace of God, which could and did enable them to convert and turn to God. Note farther, How this duty of repentance is urged from the effect and fruit, and profitable conſequents of it. 1. "Your ſins ſhall be blotted out;" a metaphor taken from creditors which have their books of accounts, in which all debts and reckonings are ſet down. 2. "The times of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord:" By which ſome underſtand more generally the times of the Goſpel, others more particularly underſtand it of the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction: As if St. Peter had ſaid, Know, O my brethren, that the time of Chriſt's coming to Jeruſalem, to execute vengeance on his murderers, is now at hand! Repent therefore ſpeedily of what ye have done! That thoſe dreadful days to his enemies, may be days of refreſhing to you. But the days of refreſhing are thought by moſt, to ſignify the day of judgment, which will be a day of refreſhing to all penitent ſinners; becauſe they ſhall then enjoy a compleat and full abſolution from all their ſins. Note here, 1. That almighty God has his book of remembrance in which he writes down all the ſins which every perſon commits, in order to their accuſation and charge. 2. That it is the great wiſdom, intereſt and duty of every perſon, to take care that he get his ſins now blotted out of God's debt-book, as ever he hopes that the reckoning-day may be a day of refreſhing to him. 3. That without repentance, converſion, and turning to God, there will be no forgiveneſs, comfort, or refreſhment from him. "Repent, that your ſins may be blotted out, when the times of refreſhment may come." 4. That a compleat abſolution, and full diſcharge from all ſin, is not enjoyed, till the day of judgment. We are in this life continually ſubject to new ſins; and conſequently are daily contracting new guilt, whereby ariſe new fears; ſo that a ſoul has not a full reſt till the final abſolution be pronounced at that ſolemn day. (B.)

When the times of refreſhing ſhall come.] The word here tranſlated when, is frequently, in other places, tranſlated that: And thus the ſenſe will be, That, or ſo that, "the times of refreſhing may come." And this time ſeems to be the ſecond coming of our Lord; when the dead ſhall be raiſed, and his faithful ſervants admitted to the enjoyment of the moſt compleat happineſs, in his preſence and kingdom for ever. (Fox) Dr. Lightfoot gives the import of the words thus, "Repent, &c. that your ſins may be blotted out, That the times of refreſhing from the Goſpel, may come upon you." But, againſt this interpretation there lies this objection, That theſe times of refreſhing were to come, by the ſending of that Jeſus, who was aſcended into heaven, and was not to come thence till the day of judgment, ver. 21, 22. Grotius, and Dr. Hammond, refer this to their deliverance from the deſtruction which ſhortly was to come on the obdurate Jews: But, tho' that was then future, and there is frequent mention of a parouſia, or coming of Chriſt, then; yet was it no coming of Chriſt from heaven, but only a coming by the Roman army. I therefore incline rather to the opinion of the ancients; which refers this to the time of Chriſt's ſecond coming, to give all his ſervants, after their troubles and perſecutions in this world, reſt with him, 2 Theſſ. i. 6. &c. which he ſhall do by deſcending from heaven, raiſing them from the dead, and cauſing them to enter into everlaſting reſt, 1 Theſſ. iv. 15. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 47. So the times of the reſurrection are, by the Jews, ſtiled, the days of conſolation. Targum in Hoſ. vi. 2. (W.) The whole courſe of our preſent life then is a time of labour and ſuffering, ſince the coming of Jeſus Chriſt is to be the time of refreſhment and of reſt: And how can thoſe make the leaſt pretenſion to it, whoſe life is nothing but idleneſs and luxury? (Q.) See the notes on Luke xvi. 25.

Whom the heaven muſt receive.] Here St. Peter enforces his exhortation to repentance with a ſtrong motive; namely, The certainty of Chriſt's coming to judge the world: God ſhall ſend Jeſus, this Jeſus whom we preach to you, viſibly, to juſtify and glorify all penitent and pardon'd ſinners, whom yet the heaven muſt contain, till the reſtitution of all things; that is, to the end of the world, when the whole creation, which now groaneth, will be deliver'd, and man particularly reſtored to God, to himſelf, and to a bleſſed immortality. Learn hence, That Chriſt, being aſcended into heaven in our human nature, ſhall abide and continue there until the reſtitution of all things; and his corporal preſence here on earth is not to be expected, until he has put all his enemies under his feet. Now, if his body be, and muſt continue, in heaven, ſurely then it is not in the ſacrament, as the Papiſts dream; who aſcribe to Chriſt's human nature the property of a Godhead, viz. to be in ten thouſand places, at one and the ſame time, contrary to the nature of a human body. If the heavens muſt contain Chriſt, Chriſt muſt be contained in heaven; and then his preſence in the ſacrament doth not draw him from heaven: His bodily preſence is in heaven; his ſpiritual preſence with his people in the ſacrament. (B.)

Reſtitution of all things.] That theſe words cannot be meant of a "reſtitution of all things" to their former ſtate, is certain: For ſure, 'tis very improper to ſay, There will be a reſtitution of all things to their former ſtate, "which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his prophets." For, ſince theſe things relate to the fore-runner of our Lord, Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, his life, death, reſurrection and aſcenſion, the preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, and the reign of Antichriſt, the calling of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles; theſe things may very well be ſaid to be exhibited, performed, accompliſhed, and conſummated: But I ſee not with what propriety or truth they can be ſaid to be reſtored to their former ſtates, or be renewed; and therefore 'tis, by the Syriac, render'd, Until the fulneſs of the time of all things; by the Arabic, Till the time in which all things ſhall be perfected, or finiſhed; by Tertullian, Aduſque tempora exhibitionis omnium; by Irenæus, Uſque ad tempora diſpoſitionis omnium; i. e. Till the time of the exhibition or diſpoſal of all things; by Oecumenius, Till the time that all things do come to an end: And for the confirmation of this import of the word, we have the ſuffrage of Heſychius and Phavorinus, that apocataſtaſis is the conſummation of a thing. Hence then I argue thus, againſt the doctrine of the Millenaries; ſince Chriſt is to continue in heaven till he completion or conſummation of all things ſpoken by the holy prophets; if the Millennium were any of them, Chriſt muſt continue in heaven till the conſummation of that alſo, and therefore is not to come down from heaven to reign on earth till the Millennium be ended; nor can that be contemporary with our Lord's ſecond coming, which is from heaven. (W.) See the notes on Matt. xvii. 11. and Luke i. 70.

A prophet.] Theſe words of Moſes are recorded, Deut. xviii. 15. and here by St. Peter pertinently applied unto Chriſt; to convince the unbelieving Jews, that he is the true and only Meſſiah, the great prophet and teacher of his church, whoſe doctrine it was highly dangerous to condemn, tho' out of the mouth of ſuch contemptible perſons, as he and St. John appear'd to them to be. Where note, 1. Chriſt, according to his prophetick office, is largely deſcribed; and that three ways, 1. By his title: "A prophet; one who by his office is to declare the whole will of God to man. 2. By his type; "A prophet, like unto Moſes:" One who went between God and the people, as Moſes did; carrying God's mind to them, and returning their mind to God. As Moſes was faithful in the execution of his office; ſo was Chriſt: As Moſes confirm'd his doctrine by miracles; ſo did Chriſt: As Moſes brought Iſrael out of literal Egypt; ſo Chriſt brings us out of ſpiritual Egypt, whereof the Egyptian bondage was a figure. 3. By his ſtock and original, according to the fleſh: "Of thy brethren:" Chriſt honour'd the nation of the Jews, and the tribe of Judah, with his nativity. Note 2. A ſtrict injunction to hear and obey this great prophet; hear him only, hear him univerſally. The word him is to be underſtood excluſively: Him, and none but him; that is, in the ſame manner that we hear him; him for his own authority's ſake; his miniſters for his ſake, as ſpeaking from him, and in his name: And we muſt hear him univerſally in all things, every command is to be obeyed, none to be diſputed; Be the duty commanded never ſo difficult, and the ſin forbidden never ſo tempting. Note, 3. A ſevere commination, "The ſoul that will not hear ſhall be cut off." That is, God will ſeverely revenge himſelf upon the ſtubborn and diſobedient. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jeſus Chriſt is conſtituted and appointed by God to be the great prophet and teacher of his church: He reveals the will of God perfectly, powerfully, perſuaſively, plainly, and infallibly. 2. That it is the duty of all to hear and obey the voice of this great prophet, and this under the penalty of eternal deſtruction, "Every ſoul that will not hear that prophet, ſhall be deſtroy'd from among the people." (B.) The word "A prophet," in the ſingular number, ſhews, That this prophecy doth primarily reſpect Chriſt; and not a ſeries of prophets, as ſome imagine. (W.)

All the prophets, from Samuel.] Samuel, ſaith Dr. Hammond, is here reckon'd the firſt of the prophets, becauſe the ſchools of the prophets were firſt inſtituted and erected by him; we reading in his time of a company or college, of prophets at Ramah, and Samuel ſtanding among them, 1 Sam. xix. 20. He is reckon'd, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, after Moſes, partly becauſe prophecy from Moſes to Samuel was very rare, 1 Sam. iii. 1, 2. and partly becauſe he was the firſt after Moſes that wrote his prophecy. (Idem.) Chriſt was the ſum of the law, as well as the ſubſtance of the Goſpel: All the legal ſacrifices pointed at him; all the prophets propheſied of him, and receiv'd their completion in him. He was Abel's ſacrifice, Iſaac's ram, Iſaiah's Immanuel, Daniel's Holy One, Zachariah's branch, and Malachy's Angel. (B.)

Ye are the children of the prophets.] The prophets being ſtiled ſpiritual fathers, 2 Kings ii. 12. and xiii. 14. they who were taught by them were called "the ſons of the prophets," 2 Kings ii. 3. And generally teachers were called Fathers; and they who were taught by them children. (W.) So great were the prerogatives of the Jews, that they are call'd "the children of the prophets," children of the promiſe, children of the covenant, children of the kingdom: But the higher a people are exalted by ſpiritual privileges, the lower they fall if they miſcarry. (B.) See the notes on Matt. ix. 15.

Unto you firſt.] Here note, 1. That the offer of Jeſus Chriſt, and eternal ſalvation by him, was firſt made to the people of the Jews, becauſe they were the children of the covenant; that is, the only people in viſible communion with God throughout the whole world. 2. The benefit offer'd; God's ſon is raiſed up; that is, either, 1. Authoriſed, conſecrated, and appointed to be a Saviour; or, 2. Raiſed from the Grave. Ye crucified him with wicked hands; but behold the divine clemency! He is firſt offer'd to you his crucifiers, God has ſent his Son in the preaching of the Goſpel firſt to you; and this not to take vengeance on you, but "to bleſs you:" He being the great high-prieſt, bleſſes you authoritatively and effectually; and the bleſſing he diſpenſes is not a temporal bleſſing, as ye expected, a pompous Meſſiah, a ſecular kingdom, but ſpiritual, in turning ſouls from ſin to God: He offers "to bleſs you, by turning every one of you from your iniquities." Learn hence, 1. That it is Chriſt's proper work to turn ſinners from their iniquities. Oh! That we would ſubſerve Chriſt in that great work! He is the principal agent; let us be ſubordinate inſtruments, by practiſing holineſs ourſelves, and promoting holineſs in others. 2. That to be turned by Chriſt from our iniquities, is the greateſt bleſſing we can receive from him; becauſe 'tis a ſpiritual bleſſing, a fundamental bleſſing, a comprehenſive bleſſing, an endearing bleſſing, an everlaſting bleſſing. (Idem.) It is matter of ſome queſtion, whether the turning here do refer to Chriſt, or to the Jews. It may fitly refer to Chriſt, as turning them by his grace, and ſo bleſſing them. But Oecumenius refers it to the Jews, If ye will turn every one from his iniquities: And ſo it may be alſo, as an effect of Chriſt's grace in us, and as a condition to qualify us to receive benefit, by his reſurrection and bleſſing of us. (H.) See the notes on ver. 19. and Matt. x. 6.

CHAP. IV.

The rulers of the Jews, offended at Peter's ſermon, impriſon him and John: Nevertheleſs, about 5000 of the hearers were converted by it. Upon their examination before the Sanhedrim, Peter boldly profeſſes Chriſt, and ſalvation only by him. The Jews, confounded, threaten them, and forbid them to preach the Goſpel. The apoſtles, aſſerting their authority and duty, are diſmiſs'd; and have recourſe to prayer with the church. God gives them a token of his acceptance; and confirms the church with the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, and particularly with mutual love and charity.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. AND as they ſpake unto the people, the prieſts and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees came upon them, Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead. And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day; for it was now even-tide. Howbeit, many of them which heard the word, believed; and the number of the men was about five thouſand.

The prieſts, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees.] Theſe were diſtinct perſons, and differently diſtaſted. The captain, who was placed, with the band of ſoldiers, near the temple, to guard it, was offended, for fear of a tumult: The prieſts were offended, becauſe the apoſtles, whom they look'd upon only as private men, went about publickly to teach and inſtruct the people: And the Sadducees were diſpleaſed, becauſe they preached the reſurrection from the dead; a doctrine which the Sadducees denied. (B.) Before our Saviour's paſſion, the chief agents againſt him were the ſcribes and Phariſees: But now, that the apoſtles do not only aſſert the reſurrection of our Lord, but alſo "preached thro' Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead," the Sadducees become their fierceſt enemies. (W.) For if that doctrine was made good, then their great controverſy with the Phariſees would be determined againſt them. (G.) How much is envy to be dreaded, which cauſes truths to become odious on the account of perſons, and perſons on the account of truths! (Q.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 52.

Put them in hold.] The great Caſaubon is miſtaken, when he charges St. Luke here with want of purity and propriety: He will not allow tereſis to be a claſſical Greek word for a priſon; and unwarily ſays, thoſe who ſpeak Greek with more purity, would have uſed the word phulace, inſtead of tereſis. But, if Thucydides be an author of pure Greek, this cenſure is wrong; for he uſes the ſame word, in the ſame ſenſe. (Blackw.)

About five thouſand.] Not the number of the auditors; for they are never reckon'd up in ſcripture; but the number of them who believed, on hearing Peter and John preach, and ſeeing the miracle done by them: For ſo the words run, "Many of them which heard the word, believed; and the number of the men, which believed, was about five thouſand." Note alſo, That the three thouſand, mentioned in chap. ii. 41. belong not to this number: But theſe were all new converts, by the word which Peter and John had now preached; for of them only is the diſcourſe, from chap. iii. 1. to this place. (W.)

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. And it came to paſs on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and ſcribes, And Annas the high-prieſt, and Caiaphas, and

John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high-prieſt, were gathered together at Jeruſalem. And when they had ſet them in the midſt, they asked, By what power, or by what name have ye done this? Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſaid unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Iſrael, If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole; Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Iſrael, that by the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raiſed from the dead, even by him doth this man ſtand here before you whole. This is the ſtone which was ſet at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there ſalvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.

The kindred of the high-prieſt.] What is meant by "as many as were of the kindred of the high-prieſt," will be reſolved by the context; where an aſſembling or meeting of the Sanhedrim is deſcribed, ver. 5. Which conſiſting of three ſorts of men, prieſts, elders, and doctors of the law, is oft-times expreſſed by the enumeration of thoſe parts, "high prieſts, ſcribes, and elders," Matt. xxvi. 3. and very often in the Goſpels. In this place there is another way of enumeration than is uſual, "The rulers, and elders, and ſcribes, and Annas the chief prieſt, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high-prieſt:' Where yet rulers ſeems to be a general word; denoting, as elſewhere, men in authority. Then Annas was the Naſi, or chief perſon, among them; and Caiaphas the perſon, by the Procurator put into the pontificate, inſtead of the Aaronical line: And ſo there remains only the elders and ſcribes, and hoſoi eſan; not indefinitely, "as many as were," but, in a more limited notion of hoſoi, thoſe that were, in the Sanhedrim, of this ſort, "of the kindred of the high-prieſt;" and of that number John and Alexander by name: Which therefore appear to be the ſame with high-prieſts, joined with the elders and ſcribes in other places; that is, that third ſort of the Sanhedrim, conſiſting of prieſts. Now, the reaſon of this title being applied to them is evident. For as of Aaron's poſterity, the lineal deſcendant only ſucceeded him in the high-prieſt's office; ſo, of his two ſons, Eleazar and Ithamar, ſprang twenty-four families, betwixt whom the prieſt's office was divided by David, 1 Chron. xxiv. which ſhould, by weekly turns, perform the ſervice of the ſanctuary; ſixteen of the ſons of Eleazar, and eight of Ithamar. Of every one of theſe families and courſes, there was a chief, the head of the family; and theſe are conſequently called chief prieſts, and "of the kindred of the high-prieſt," viz. as ſpringing from Aaron, and ſtill allied to the one high-prieſt's family, as inferiour branches of it: And many, if not all theſe, were members of the Sanhedrim; for here they ſit in judicature, with Annas and Caiaphas, as with Moſes and Aaron, and the elders, and the ſcribes; and being four and twenty in number, would make up a third part of the whole number of ſeventy-two, leaving the other two portions to be divided between the elders and the ſcribes, if there were, as it is not certain there was, this equal diviſion. (H.) Annas was the Naſi; that is, the preſident: He had been high prieſt ſome years before; for then they were continued but for a time, and at the pleaſure of the Roman governour, generally for a year: Caiaphas, who was ſon-in-law to Annas, had, however, continued in it for ſeven years; which only happen'd to him: John was the ſon of Annas; and Alexander, ſirnamed Lyſimachus, and brother to Philo (whoſe writings we have) was the richeſt of all the Jews. (Fleury.) See the notes on Mark v. 22. Luke i. 5. iii. 2. and xiii. 34.

Set them in the midſt.] When they had all taken their ſeats, which formed a ſemi-circle, the preſident being in the bottom of it, the apoſtles were brought into the midſt of the place. (Idem.)

By what power.] Some think, they ſuſpected the apoſtles to have wrought by the black art, being aſſiſted by the devil: But did not this miracle give a ſufficient convincing light, to demonſtrate, that it was heaven-born, and ſhew evidently that it was wrought by a ſupernatural and divine power? Was there any reaſon for their asking, "By what power?" when the thing itſelf proclaim'd it to be done by the power of God? (B.) How viſible ſoever the finger of God be, yet the world has no eyes to diſcover it. Theſe men were not to be blamed, for examining the apoſtles and their conduct; but becauſe they did it out of a bad principle, and becauſe they would not yield to the truth, and to the moſt inconteſtable proofs. (Q.)

Peter, filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſaid.] Behold here the ingenuous and holy boldneſs of a good Chriſtian, in a good cauſe' St. Peter, who formerly, when full of himſelf, was baffled by a damſel, and frightned into a denial of Chriſt by a ſilly wench, now, being "filled with the Holy Ghoſt," ſilences and confounds his moſt potent and malicious accuſers. (B.) How plainly does this ſhew, that even the moſt weak become pillars, when the Spirit of God fills and ſupports the heart. (Q.)

Jeſus of Nazareth, whom ye crucified.] See the notes on chap ii. 24.

This is the ſtone.] Tho' the Chaldee paraphraſt interprets this clauſe, of Pſalm cxviii. 22. of David; and Aben Ezra, of the congregation of Iſrael; yet R. Solomon Jarchi, on Micah v. interprets it of the Meſſiah, as our Saviour himſelf doth, Matt. xxi. 42. the Jews not contradicting, nor ſaying they belonged not to him. (W.) See the notes on Luke ii. 34.

Neither is there ſalvation in any other.] Obſerve here, 1. A poſitive aſſertion, That there is no ſalvation but by Chriſt; or, that beſides, or without him, there is no poſſibility of ſalvation, either for Jew or Gentile; both thoſe under the Old Teſtament had, and we under the New Teſtament have, one and the ſame common Saviour. 2. The ground and reaſon of this confident aſſertion, That there is no ſalvation but by Chriſt; namely, Becauſe "there is no other name given under heaven, by which we muſt be ſaved." That is, No other perſon deſigned, or appointed by God, to be the author of redemption to, and procurer of ſalvation for, a loſt and miſerable world, but only Chriſt. Take we good heed then, that we do not reject or ſet him at nought; for in rejecting of Chriſt, we reject the wiſdom of God, the authority of God, the love of God, yea, the ſalvation of God. (B.) But ſome interpret the words thus, That "there is no other name under heaven, by which health can be given to the diſeaſed, or feet to the lame, &c. And this interpretation will not be ſo ſtrange, as at firſt ſight it ſeems to be, if we conſider, 1. That it is very frequent in the Goſpels to ſay of them who were cured, they were ſaved. So the woman ſaith, Matt. ix. 21. "If I do but touch the hem of his garment, I ſhall be ſaved;" and Chriſt anſwers, ver. 22. "Thy faith hath ſaved thee; and the woman was ſaved from that hour." So the ruler of the ſynagogue prays Chriſt to "put his hand upon his daughter, that ſhe might be ſaved," Mark v. 23. And chap. vi. 56. "As many as touched the hem of his garment were ſaved." So to blind Bartimæus Chriſt ſaith, "Thy faith hath ſaved thee," Mark x. 52. And ſo to the Samaritan leper, Luke xvii. 19. 2. That this opinion had obtained among the Jews, and other nations, that there were ſome powerful names that could cure diſeaſes: This ſeems to be inſinuated in the queſtion of the Sanhedrim, ver. 7. "In what name have ye done this cure?" Joſephus ſpeaks of the doing this, by mention of the name of Solomon; the Talmud of doing it, by mention of the ſeparate name; the Chriſtians, by the name of the God of Abraham, &c. See note on Matt. xii. 27. 3. If we conſider St. Peter's anſwer, viz. "If the queſtion be, By what name this man is ſaved," i. e. healed; be it known unto you, that he is healed, through the name of Jeſus Chriſt; "nor is there any other name by which we can be ſaved." And from this ſenſe of the words it clearly follows, 1. That no true miracles have been ever done, ſince Chriſt's aſcenſion, by invocation of the names of ſaints: And, 2. That the diſputes of the ſchools from this place, concerning the ſalvation of the Gentiles, have been impertinent. If the common ſenſe be rather liked, yet muſt it be acknowledged, that "God is no reſpecter of perſons," as to their ſpiritual and eternal intereſts, "but in every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted of him," Acts x. 34, 35. (See the note there:) And that God would have all men diligently to ſeek, and to come to him with a firm belief, that "he is a rewarder of them that do ſo," Heb. xi. 6. And that he hath not ſuſpended that reward, on an impoſſible condition, tho' he will only give it with reſpect to what our Lord Jeſus hath done, or ſuffered for them: That he hath not left himſelf without a witneſs of his goodneſs to the heathen world; not only by doing good to their bodies, without regard to their ſouls; or by being good only to them, as we are to our hogs, by fatning them for a day of ſlaughter: It being, ſaith Maximus Tyrius, a thought unworthy of God, that he ſhould be liberal in beſtowing mean things on us, but penurious as to better. (W. and Maſſey.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Now when they ſaw the boldneſs of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled, and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jeſus. And beholding the man which was healed ſtanding with them, they could ſay nothing againſt it. But when they had commanded them to go aſide out of the council, they conferred among themſelves, Saying, What ſhall we do to theſe men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifeſt to all them that dwell in Jeruſalem, and we cannot deny it. But, that it ſpread no further among the people, let us ſtraitly threaten them, that they ſpeak henceforth to no man in this name. And they called them, and commanded them not to ſpeak at all, nor teach in the name of Jeſus. But Peter and John anſwered and ſaid unto them, Whether it be right in the ſight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard. So when they had further threaten'd them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might puniſh them, becauſe of the people; for all men glorified God for that which was done: For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was ſhewed.

Unlearned and ignorant men.] This, for three centuries, was the objection againſt the profeſſors of Chriſtianity; and theſe were the names given them by Lucian, Porphyry, Hierocles, Julian, and by all the heathens; as is teſtified by Juſtin, Tatian, Minutius, Tertullian, Arnobius, and Lactantius: And tho' that cenſure is not true of all, yet it is a great confirmation of the Chriſtian faith, and ſhews, as Juſtin Martyr well obſerves, that it was not of human, but divine original; and that the "having been with Jeſus" was ſufficient to make the ignorant and unlearned, wiſe. (W.) Idiotai, when uſed by way of diſtinction from magiſtrates, ſignifies private perſons; when with relation to arts and ſciences, it denotes perſons "unlearned and ignorant;" and when with reſpect to dignity or excellency, thoſe who are humble and obſcure. (Beza)

They could ſay nothing againſt it.] See here the fatal conſequences of hatred and envy, when the mind is once poſſeſſed by them. What a ſad ſtate, and ſtrange diſpoſition is this! And yet it is more common perhaps than we imagine, when men will not yield to the truth, and yet "can ſay nothing againſt it." (Q.)

A notable miracle.] See the notes on John xi. 47.

Speak henceforth to no man in this name.] For a prieſt not to know the truth is an inexcuſable ignorance: But to oppoſe it, when it is known, is the malice of the devil. Falſe zeal, ignorance of the law, and of the true ſpirit and deſign of it, and an ill-grounded accuſation of novelty, did not at all excuſe the Jews; will they then be ſufficient to excuſe Chriſtians? (Q.)

Whether it be right.] Obſerve here, The prudence and integrity of the apoſtles, in referring it back to the judgment of their very adverſaries, whether it was reaſonable to obey their commands, when they charged them to preach no more in the name of the Lord Jeſus: As if the apoſtles had ſaid, We have received a command from God to preach, "Go, teach all nations," Matt. xxviii. 19. and we have receiv'd a command from you, not to preach: Now we leave it with you, Whether it be fitteſt, and moſt reaſonable, to obey God, or you. It is a ſtrong way of conviction, to refer a matter to their judgment and conſcience, againſt whom we make oppoſition. Learn, That when the commands of God's vicegerents run counter to the commands of God himſelf, God is to be obey'd, and not man. (B.) See the notes on chap. v. 29.

They let them go.] They were ſet at liberty, but not acquitted: For, among the Jews, no diſcharge was peremptory; but they were ſtill liable to be remanded on any freſh proofs. (G.) See the notes on Luke xii. 5. and xx. 6, 19.

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. And being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief prieſts and elders had ſaid unto them. And when they heard that, they lift up their voice to God with one accord, and ſaid, Lord, thou art God, which haſt made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all that in them is: Who by the mouth of thy ſervant David haſt ſaid, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth ſtood up, and the rulers were gathered together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt. For of a truth, againſt thy holy child Jeſus, whom thou haſt anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Iſrael, were gathered together, For to do whatſoever thy hand and thy council determined before to be done. And now, Lord, behold their threatnings: and grant unto thy ſervants, that with all boldneſs they may ſpeak thy word, By ſtretching forth thine hand to heal; and that ſigns and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jeſus. And when they had prayed, the place was ſhaken where they were aſſembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and they ſpake the word of God with boldneſs.

They went to their own company.] See the notes on chap. i. 13. and ii. 1, 26.

They lift up their voice to God, with one accord.] In this place we are told, that the whole company "lift up their voice to God, with one accord, and ſaid," (that is, they join'd all together, with audible voices, in uſing theſe words) "Lord, thou art God," &c. Which they could not poſſibly have done, unleſs the prayer they uſed was a pre-compoſed ſett form. For, whatever may be ſaid, in favour of joining mentally, with a prayer conceiv'd extempore, I ſuppoſe, no-body will contend, that it is poſſible for a conſiderable congregation to join vocally, or aloud, as the apoſtles and their company are here ſaid to have done, in a prayer ſo conceiv'd. (Wheatly)

Who, by the mouth of thy ſervant David, haſt ſaid.] Here note, 1. Againſt ſome late innovators, That what was ſaid by David, is aſcribed to God himſelf, to ſhew, that David ſpake and compos'd theſe pſalms, by the prophetical afflatus of the Holy Spirit. And, 2. That tho' the later Jews will not admit, that this pſalm belongs to the Meſſiah, yet R. Solomon Jarchi confeſſes, that all their ancient Rabbins did ſo interpret it. (W.)

Determined before to be done.] Here note, what is not uſually obſerv'd, That the hand of God moſt frequently in the Old Teſtament relates not ſo much to his power, as to his wiſdom and providential diſpenſations. So Job xxvii. 11. "I will teach you by the hand of God," i.e. by his wiſdom, in his providential diſpenſations: Eccleſ. ii. 24. "That a man ſhould enjoy the good of his labours; this is from the hand of God." So "the good hand of God" is his favour, or his gracious providence, Ezra vii. 9. viii. 18, 22. Neh. ii. 8, 18. And being here join'd with God's counſel, and apply'd to what was done by Pontius Pilate, and the Roman ſoldiers, and by the Jews, towards the crucifixion of the holy Jeſus, to which actions ſo highly diſpleaſing to God, his power could not actually concur, or effectively incline them, we have great reaſon here to prefer this import of this phraſe before the other; and then the import of the words will be no more than this, That Jews and Gentiles were aſſembled to accompliſh thoſe ſufferings of our Saviour for mankind, which God had foretold, and by foretelling had determined ſhould come to paſs; according to thoſe words of St. Paul, Acts xiii 27. "They who dwelt at Jeruſalem, and their princes, not knowing the voices of the prophets, have fulfill'd them by condemning him, doing all things which were written of him," ver. 29. As therefore St. Peter and St. Paul, by calling the Jews to repentance, for this ſin in crucifying the Lord of life, do evidence, their ſin was not the leſs, becauſe they did by it fulfil the counſel of God's holy will, and kind intentions to mankind; ſo do they conſequently evidence, that God's foreknowledge, and determination of a thing future, does not impair the liberty of men's wills in the accompliſhment of it; as all the ancient fathers have declared in this particular. (Idem) This text, as it is tranſlated, makes the apoſtles attribute to God a deſign, which he every-where declares, he hates and abhors; and which the apoſtles do only aſcribe to the devil, and his inſtruments. But the terms of the original do plainly bear, That Herod and Pilate gather'd together, with the Gentiles, and people of Iſrael, againſt Jeſus, whom he had anointed, to do whatſoever his power and wiſdom had before determined to be done. Beſides, we need but conſider, That this place is not preciſely to be underſtood of the death of Chriſt, nor of the wicked conſpiracy to put him to death, for now Chriſt had been ſome time dead; but of the perſecution of the apoſtles and Chriſtian church by all thoſe infidels; Jeſus Chriſt looking upon the ſufferings of his diſciples and members as his own, according to what he himſelf ſays to Paul, when he perſecuted his church, "Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?" chap. ix. 4. This is ſtill more evident, from the following part of this diſcourſe. For the apoſtle, having ſpoken of the miraculous cure of the lame man, and of the prohibition of the council of the Jews, to preach in the name of Jeſus, and of the ſevere threatnings denounced againſt thoſe who ſhould continue to preach his doctrine, all the aſſembly unanimouſly lifted up their voice, and pronounced theſe words; which plainly ſhews, that they ſpake of ſome particular conſpiracy againſt themſelves. (How. and Fox) See the notes on chap. ii. 23. and Luke xxii. 22.

That with all boldneſs they may ſpeak thy word.] This is a moſt holy prayer of the church under perſecution. She does not beg to be ſecured from temporal evils: It is enough for her, that God knows her condition and her wants. She is ſolicitous for nothing but the intereſts of her Lord; and fears nothing ſo much, as to ſee her miniſters have too great an apprehenſion of the world, and grow cool and remiſs on the account of its threatnings or oppoſition. (Q.)

The place was ſhaken where they were aſſembled.] Obſerve here the ſpecial and ſpeedy anſwer which the Lord gave to his apoſtles prayer: As a teſtimony thereof, the place where they pray'd was miraculouſly ſhaken, and many eminent graces and ſpecial gifts of the Holy Spirit were poured out upon the apoſtles; particularly, a greater meaſure of boldneſs to preach the Goſpel, and, as ſome think, the wonderful gift of conferring the Holy Ghoſt was now conferr'd upon the Twelve. So Dr. Lightfoot. (B.) And 'tis probable, that now there came the like wind, as before, by which the place was ſhaken. (Howel) See the notes on chap. ii. 2.

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one ſoul: Neither ſaid any of them, that ought of the things which he poſſeſſed was his own, but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apoſtles witneſs of the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus; and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked: For as many as were poſſeſſors of lands, or houſes, ſold them, and brought the prices of the things that were ſold: And laid them down at the apoſtles feet; and diſtribution was made unto every man according as he had need. And Joſes, who by the apoſtles was ſirnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The ſon of conſolation) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, having land, ſold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apoſtles feet.

Of one heart and of one ſoul.] The heart is here, and in many other places of ſcripture, put for the will and affections; the ſubject being uſed for the adjunct. (Lukin) The miniſters and members of the pureſt and moſt primitive Chriſtian church were one in doctrine and opinion, and one in heart and affection. A ſingular pattern for ſucceeding Chriſtians to the end of the world, ſo to carry it one towards another, as members of the ſame body, and influenc'd by the ſame head. (B.) See the notes on John xv. 7. and xvii. 11, 20, 21.

They had all things common.] This communication of goods was not ſuch as the Anabaptiſts aſſert: For tho' the uſe of them was common, yet the right and property remain'd ſtill in their own power; as is plain, chap. v. 4. (Beza and W.) See the notes on chap. ii. 44. 45.

With great power gave the apoſtles witneſs.] Theophylact obſerves, that the word apedidoun here has ſome energy in it. He ſays it ſignifies ſomewhat to be intruſted with them, as a Depoſitum, which they were to reſtore; and ſo ſpeaks as of a debt. And accordingly, the vulgar Latin duly reads it, reddebant teſtimonium, they render'd teſtimony. (H.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 48.

Great grace was upon them all.] See the notes on chap. ii. 47.

Neither was there any among them that lacked.] See the notes on chap. ii. 45.

Surnamed Barnabas.] This being the firſt time of our meeting with the name of this good and faithful apoſtle, let us obſerve here, That he was by deſcent a Jew, and of the tribe of Levi, tho' born in the iſle of Cyprus; his anceſtors having probably fled thither, in the troubleſome times of Judæa, to ſecure themſelves from violence and invaſion. (Nelſ.) That his proper name was Joſes, which is a ſofter termination, familiar with the Greeks, for Joſeph, given him at his circumciſion, in honour of the great patriarch. (Idem) That his having land in Cyprus, is ſaid to be particularly mention'd, becauſe the Levites were to have no proper eſtates in Judæa; tho' that law was no barr to their enjoying the like properties with others, when they happen'd to ſettle in other countries. (Stanh. and Nelſ.) And yet we are aſſured, that the Levites might have lands, even in their own country; for Shemuel, a Levite, 1 Chron. vi 33. was born upon his father's land, which had been purchaſed by his great grand-father Zuph, 1 Sam. i. 1. and ix. 5. and that lands might fall to them by accident, which they might ſell. See Patrick on Lev. xxvi. 21. (W.) That he was now "by the apoſtles ſurnamed Barnabas," which is, being interpreted, The ſon of conſolation," either in alluſion to the word nabi, a prophet, and his eminent prophetick gifts, which qualified him ſo excellently for the great work he was deſign'd for; as St. Chryſoſtome, and others, ſeem to think: Or rather, perhaps, if we conſider the occaſion of impoſing this name; as an honourable acknowledgment of his liberal contribution to the relief of the poor brethren, and on account of the conſolation they receiv'd thereby. (Grot. Brough, Stanh. and Nelſ.) That, whether he had been, as ſome affirm, educated at Jeruſalem, together with St. Paul, in the ſtudy of the law, under that great Doctor Gamaliel, is not certain. (Stanh. and Nelſ.) Neither is the particular time, or occaſion, of his converſion certain; tho' by the ancients he is generally eſteem'd to have been one of the ſeventy diſciples choſen by our Saviour. (Nelſ.) But it is certain, that he was of ſuch credit with the apoſtles, that upon his report they received Paul as a brother, whom before "they were all afraid of," chap. ix. 26. &c. What great ſervices he did to the church, by his travels and miniſtry, will appear in the ſequel of the Acts. As to the other accounts, of his travelling to Alexandria, and Liguria, and other parts, and his having founded the church at Milan, writers are not agreed: Tho' it ſeems moſt probable, that his laſt labours were employ'd in his native country; where he is ſaid to have been ſtoned to death, by the malice of the Jews, at Salamis. He left only one epiſtle, which is called Apocryphal, as not having been admitted into the canon of ſcripture. Theſe notices I have here thought fit to lay before the reader; the rather, becauſe I do not find the life of this apoſtle particularly collected by the learned Dr. Cave, who has ſo well acquitted himſelf in what he has written of all the reſt. To all which I muſt add, That St. Barnabas could not have any view to the approaching deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the deſolation of that country, which is (ſomewhat uncharitably) imputed to others of the Jews, as a motive to their more eaſily parting with their lands and poſſeſſions there to the common benefit of the church; ſince his lands at leaſt were far enough out of the reach of that calamity, and therefore his ſelling them, and aſſigning the produce to the apoſtles, in truſt for the poor, could proceed only from his pious zeal, and true Chriſtian charity.

CHAP. V.

Ananias and Sapphira ſtruck dead, for their hypocriſy. The apoſtles, working many miracles, are impriſon'd; but deliver'd by an angel. They preach publickly in the temple, as the angel commanded them; for which they are again apprehended, and rebuked. The great council, perceiving them reſolv'd to perſiſt, conſult to put them to death: But, through the perſuaſion of Gamaliel, they are again ſet at liberty, tho' not without threatnings and ſtripes; under which they rejoice, and glorify God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. BUT a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, ſold a poſſeſſion, and kept back part of the price, his wife alſo being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apoſtles feet. But Peter ſaid, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lye to the Holy Ghoſt, and to keep back part of the price of the land? Whilſt it remained, was it not thine own? And after it was ſold, was it not in thine own power? Why haſt thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou haſt not lyed unto men, but unto God. And Ananias hearing theſe words fell down and gave up the ghoſt: And great fear came on all them that heard theſe things. And the young men aroſe, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him. And it was about the ſpace of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in. And Peter anſwered unto her, Tell me whether ye ſold the land for ſo much. And ſhe ſaid, Yea, for ſo much. Then Peter ſaid unto her, How is it, that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Behold the feet of them which have buried thy huſband are at the door, and ſhall carry thee out. Then fell ſhe down ſtraightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghoſt: And the young men came in, and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her huſband. And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard theſe things. And by the hands of the apoſtles were many ſigns and wonders wrought among the people; (and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch. And of the reſt durſt no man join himſelf to them: But the people magnified them. And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women) Inſomuch that they brought forth the ſick into the ſtreets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the leaſt the ſhadow of Peter paſſing by might overſhadow ſome of them. There came alſo a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jeruſalem, bringing ſick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean ſpirits: And they were healed every one.

A certain man named Ananias.] Ananias and his wife Sapphira, having taken upon them the profeſſion of the Goſpel, according to the free and generous ſpirit of thoſe times, had conſecrated and devoted their eſtate to the honour of God, and the neceſſities of the church: And accordingly they ſold their poſſeſſions, and turned them into money. But, as they were willing to gain the reputation of charitable perſons; ſo were they loth wholly to caſt themſelves upon the divine providence, by letting go all at once: And therefore they privately witheld part of what they had devoted, and, bringing the reſt, "laid it at the apoſtles feet;" hoping therein they might deceive the apoſtles, tho' immediately guided by the Spirit of God. (Cave.) It is generally here ſuppoſed, that they had conſecrated their eſtate to God by vow, ſo that they were guilty of the ſin of ſacrilege: But this may very well be doubted; 1. Becauſe in all the ſales of the lands or houſes, mention'd in this and the foregoing chapters, there is not the leaſt intimation of any ſuch vow: That there was ſome fraud in the caſe, may be fairly gather'd from the word noſphizaſthai; but that it was a ſacrilegious fraud, cannot be prov'd from this word. 2. St. Peter accuſes neither him, nor his wife, of any ſuch crime; but only of tempting, i. e. diſtruſting, and making trial of, the wiſdom of the Holy Ghoſt, and going about to deceive him by this artifice. And, 3. The apoſtle ſeems to own he had a right in his poſſeſſion, and in the money for which it was ſold, ver. 3. which yet he could not have, if he before had conſecrated it to religious uſes. But yet, they were guilty of a double fraud; 1. In laying down this part of the price at the apoſtles feet, as the others had done, and thereby tacitly implying they had now the ſame right to be relieved from the publick ſtock which others had, as having nothing of their own, when indeed they had money which they "kept back." 2. In preſenting this before them, as the whole price of the poſſeſſion they had ſold; when it was only a part of it: Which it appears they did, from St. Peter's queſtion to the wife, "Tell me for how much the land was ſold?" That the puniſhment of this ſin was ſo heavy, will not be admired, if we conſider, 1. That it was a direct ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, who was ſent down from heaven to propagate the Goſpel; an attempt to put a cheat upon him; and a queſtioning his wiſdom to diſcern things ſecret: And therefore deſerved the greater puniſhment, becauſe it did ſo plainly tend to the hindrance of the Goſpel; by declaring that the Spirit, which aſſiſted the apoſtles, was not able to diſcern things ſecret, and ſo might not be able to acquaint them with the ſecret things of God. 2. We find God under the law very ſevere in his puniſhment of thoſe who firſt offended in offering ſtrange fire, as in the caſe of Nadab and Abihu; and thoſe who violated the ſabbath, as in the caſe of the man that gathered ſticks upon that day; and eſpecially againſt thoſe who roſe up againſt Moſes the prophet, and Aaron the prieſt of the Lord, as in the caſe of Corah and his company: 'Twas therefore fit, that the firſt great offence of this kind ſhould receive exemplary puniſhment from the hand of God, that others might the more dread thoſe ſins which thus affronted that Holy Spirit, by whoſe power the Goſpel began to be propagated. (W.) See the notes on chap. iv. 37.

Why hath Satan filled thine heart.] The Greek phraſe, pleroun cardian, to fill the heart, is uſed, by the Hebrews in the Old Teſtament, for to make one bold. So, Eſth. vii. 5. "Who is he? "And where is he, that durſt preſume in his heart?" Which is agreeable to the Greek of the Septuagint: But in the Hebrew it is, Who has filled his heart to do this? Or, as our margin renders it, Whoſe heart hath filled him? And ſo, Eccleſ. viii. 11. "The heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil;" that is, emboldened to do evil; where the Greek renders it, by the ſame word, filled. (H.) As the devil doth ſometimes fill our hearts with evil thoughts, immediately by himſelf; ſo he ſometimes makes uſe of the world, and of outward objects, to caſt evil thoughts into us. Thus the world and the devil infect us from without; when we infect ourſelves faſt enough from within. For, as Nazianzen ſays, The ſpark is within us; the flame is from the evil ſpirit, which blows it up: So that, tho' there were no devil to tempt us, and tho' we were in the wilderneſs, where no worldly objects could allure us; yet we carry enough in our boſoms to corrupt ourſelves: Neither can we be ſafe, tho' we leave all the world behind us, ſo long as we carry our own hearts with us, ſaith St. Baſil. Now, of theſe, the aſcending thoughts within us are ſins; the other, that are ſent or injected into us, unleſs they infect us, or we give way to them, are our croſſes, not our ſins: Nay, Dæmon tentando, coronas nobis fabricat; by reſiſting theſe motions and temptations of Satan, we win the crown, and every temptation we reſiſt is a new flower to our garland. (Andr.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 3. and John viii. 44. and xiii. 27.

To lie to the Holy Ghoſt.] In many places of the New Teſtament we have this word pſeudo with a dative caſe; as particularly twice in the very next verſe: But we ſeldom find it with an accuſative caſe, but with a prepoſition following it; as in Col. iii. 9. "Lie not one to another." But ſince we have here no prepoſition denoting the particle to, the ſubſtantive muſt neceſſarily be govern'd by the verb, and the accuſative caſe be expreſs'd by an accuſative. I chuſe therefore to render theſe words, To belye the Holy Ghoſt, or to deceive the Holy Ghoſt. (H. and Maſſey.) See the notes on ver. 4.

Whilſt it remained.] There is ſome difficulty in this verſe. And the beſt way of clearing it, is, by ſetting the firſt word right; to menon, which is commonly render'd, "Whilſt it remained." That, ſure, ſignifies a poſſeſſion immoveable; an eſtate in land, which is call'd a Demean, in this very notion of, menein, remaining: Becauſe, when the fruit is taken off, the land remains; and ſo is applied here to ctema, a poſſeſſion, ver. 1. Upon the ſame account again, 'tis called an eſtate; as being a ſtanding, remaining, continuing poſſeſſion. Proportionable to this, to prathen is wealth in money, or land ſold, or put into money: And then the meaning of the whole is clear, "Was not the land, eſtate, demean, thy own land, eſtate, demean? And was not the price, for which it was ſold, wholly "in thine own power?" That is, in thy hand. For ſo that Hebrew word ſignifies, in the power; not as of an owner, but as a receiver: As, Gen. xxiv. 10. 'tis ſaid of Abraham's ſervant, that "all the goods of his maſter were in his hand;" as in the ſteward's hand, to receive and look to. So that, in both reſpects, the poſſeſſion being wholly thine, and the money coming wholly to thy hands, paid wholly to thee, (the contrary to either of which would have allow'd him ſome pretence and excuſe) there was no excuſe for thy not bringing, according to thy vow, the whole value of it. (H.)

Thou haſt not lied unto men, but unto God.] That is, not unto men only; or not ſo much unto men, as unto God. (Lukin) Hence it is argued, That if he that deceiveth, or lieth to, the ſpirit, attempteth to deceive, or "lie to God," the Holy Spirit muſt be God. To this Woltzogenius and other Socinians, anſwer, That the like phraſe is often uſed when this inference cannot be good; for the Jews murmuring againſt Moſes and Aaron, are ſaid to "murmur not againſt them, but againſt God," Exod. xvi. 8. And "he that deſpiſeth" the preaching of the apoſtles, is ſaid to "deſpiſe not man, but God, who had given them the Holy Spirit," 1 Theſſ. iv. 8. "Not them, but Chriſt," Matt. x. 40. Luke x. 16. But hence it will not follow, that either Moſes, or Aaron, or the apoſtles, were God. But, to this anſwer I reply, 1. That theſe examples rather do confirm, than infringe, this argument. For as they who murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron, murmured againſt God, becauſe they did it againſt them who were inveſted with the authority of God, and acted in his name, and by his power; and as they who deſpiſed the apoſtles, deſpiſed God for the ſame reaſon; ſo they who lied to the apoſtles, acting by the Spirit of God, or ſought to deceive them by lying, are ſaid to lie to God, becauſe they lied to the apoſtles, acting by the power and authority of God; and therefore the power and authority of the Spirit, muſt be the power and authority of God. 2. Moſes, and Aaron, and the apoſtles, ſent out by Chriſt to preach, did only act in the name of God and Chriſt, becauſe they did this by commiſſion from them, and by their command: But Ananias is here ſaid to "lie to God," becauſe he lied to the Spirit in the apoſtles, enabling them to diſcern the ſecrets of mens hearts and actions: Which being the property of God alone, he that doth lie to him, muſt therefore lie to God, becauſe he lies to one who hath the incommunicable property of God, and conſequently the divine eſſence. (W. and B.)

Fell down, and gave up the Ghoſt.] Obſerve here, 1. The juſtice of the puniſhment inflicted upon Ananias for his ſin: He is ſtruck dead upon the ſpot. Doubtleſs, it was a very heinous ſin, which God ſo ſeverely puniſhed; and it was the firſt ſin of this kind under the New Teſtament: The firſt ſin of this kind; and therefore the firſt perſons that were found guilty of it, met with this ſeverity, in terrorem, to make all others afraid of it. The firſt tranſgreſſors in any kind have been made publick examples. Thus the angels before the Jewiſh church; Nadab and Abihu at the beginning of the Jewiſh church; and here Ananias and Sapphira, at the beginning of the Chriſtian Church. 2. How Sapphira, the wife's ſubjection to her husband, doth not excuſe her from partaking in his ſin, nor exempt her from the ſeverity of the puniſhment. God's authority in commanding or forbidding, muſt be firſt obſerved and obeyed:

Otherwiſe we put the creature in God's place, debaſe him and ſet up an idol; which the jealouſy and holineſs of God will never endure. 3. How the ſame ſin meets with the ſame puniſhment. Husband and wife had here agreed, both what to do and what to ſay; and they that ſinned together, ſuffered together: God is no reſpecter of perſons, male or female, Jew or gentile, prince or ſubject, husband or wife: The ſoul that ſinneth it ſhall die: "Then fell ſhe down ſtraightway at his feet, and yielded up the Ghoſt," ver. 10. 4. That this miraculous way of puniſhing offenders, with immediate death, by the apoſtles, was not common: This is the only inſtance, in the New Teſtament, of ſo ſevere a puniſhment, inflicted by the mouth of the apoſtles, for any ſin whatſoever; and it ſeems accommodated and ſuited to that particular time, in which magiſtrates were ſo far from defending the church, that they further'd the perſecution, and endeavour'd the extirpation of it. Laſtly, The effect which this tremendous miracle had upon the whole church; it awfully affected them with fear and trembling: "Great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard theſe things." God's extraordinary providences, either judgments or mercies, towards ourſelves, or towards others, ought to affect us with holy fear, and that fear which works righteouſneſs. Iſa. xxvi. 9. "When his judgments are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteouſneſs;" That is, they ought to do ſo, and if ever they will do it, they will do it then: Judgments work fear, and fear works righteouſneſs. (Cave and B.)

Tempt the Spirit of the Lord.] As often as an evil conſcience has any influence, ſo often do men pronounce ſentence againſt themſelves, and as much as is in their power provoke God to anger; as if they induſtriouſly made it their buſineſs to try, whether he is juſt and omnipotent. (Beza)

Many ſigns and wonders.] See the notes on Mark xvi. 17, 18. and John xiv. 12.

All with one accord.] Here note, 1. Their unity and unanimity: There were no perſons among them guilty of ſchiſmatical ſeparation, in forſaking the public aſſembly; but with one mouth, as well as with one mind and heart, they glorified God. 2. Their prudential boldneſs and holy courage appeared in preaching to the people in Solomon's porch: For the Sanhedrim, or great council, ſat in, or very near, that place; even that council which in the former chapter impriſoned them, and in this beat them, ver. 40. Learn thence, That nothing better becomes the miniſters and meſſengers of Jeſus Chriſt, than an holy and humble, a wiſe and meek, a zealous and convincing boldneſs, in aſſerting the truths of the Goſpel, and in reproving ſin, and denouncing judgments againſt impenitent ſinners. Conſider we, how bold and zealous our Lord and Maſter was in his miniſtry, Luke xx. 21. "We know, thou teacheſt the way of God truly, and accepteſt not the perſon of any:" And the apoſtles learnt the ſame of their Maſter, Acts iv. 13. "When the high-prieſts ſaw the boldneſs of Peter and John, they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jeſus." (B.) See the notes on chap. ii. 1. and John x. 23.

Of the reſt durſt no man join himſelf to them.] That is, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, None of the hundred and eight durſt join to the Twelve, or equal themſelves to them in office or dignity: But as there is no mention of that number in this chapter, ſo did they never, before this, join themſelves to the apoſtles: Nor doth the word collasthai import any ſuch thing, but only to converſe, aſſociate with, or come to them: As when Philip is bid to "join himſelf to the chariot of the eunuch." chap. viii. 29. and when Paul aſſayed after his converſion "to join himſelf to the diſciples," chap. ix. 26. and when Peter ſaith, chap. x. 28. "Ye know that it is unlawful for a Jew, "collasthai," to join himſelf to one of another nation;" and laſtly, when it is ſaid that ſome men "joining themſelves to St. Paul, believed," chap. xvii. 35. Which ſeems to favour the opinion of Grotius and Beza, viz. That "great fear came on all the church," ver. 11. but "of the reſt," which were not yet of the church, "durſt no man join themſelves to," or aſſociate with them, as members of the church, for fear of the like puniſhment. But, notwithſtanding this, "the people magnified them, and multitudes of them were added to the Lord," i. e. believed in Chriſt, tho' they durſt not yet conſort with the apoſtles. (W.) But yet, 'tis obſerv'd, that there is not a word in all the Greek language, that ſignifieth a nearer conjunction, than this word collasthai here doth; which is uſed for being glued together: As it is metaphorically to be underſtood, Matt. xix. 5. of the near conjunction between man and wife. (Leigh) See the notes on chap. ii. 42.

The ſhadow of Peter paſſing by.] The church of Rome make a noiſe with this text, and produce it to prove St. Peter's ſupremacy over the reſt of the apoſtles, becauſe his very ſhadow cured the diſeaſed. But very groundleſly; for, 1. By the ſame argument they may prove St. Peter to be ſuperior to Chriſt himſelf; this being more than what Chriſt himſelf wrought, according to what he foretold; John xiv. 12. "Greater works than theſe ſhall ye do," &c. 2. The Papiſts might obſerve, that the napkins and handkerchiefs which were carried from St. Paul's body cured diſeaſes alſo, and diſpoſſeſſed devils, Acts xix. 12. 3. Beſides all this, it is not here expreſly ſaid, that any ſick were actually healed by St. Peter's ſhadow, but the diſeaſed were brought in hopes, that his ſhadow might produce ſuch effects: And if it did ſo, Almighty God thereby put honour upon the Goſpel, and upon all the apoſtles, without any particular reſpect, or ſpecial regard to the perſon of St. Peter. (W and B) See the notes on Mark xvi. 17, 18. and John xiv. 12.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. Then the high-prieſt roſe up, and all they that were with him (which is the ſect of the Sadducees) and were filled with indignation, and laid their hands on the apoſtles, and put them in the common priſon. But the angel of the Lord by night opened the priſon-doors, and brought them forth, and ſaid, Go, ſtand and ſpeak in the temple to the people, all the words of this life. And when they heard that, they entred into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high prieſt came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the ſenate of the children of Iſrael, and ſent to the priſon to have them brought. But when the officers came, and found them not in the priſon, they returned and told, Saying, The priſon truly found we ſhut with all ſafety, and the keepers ſtanding without before the doors; but when we had open'd, we found no man within. Now when the high prieſt and the captain of the temple, and the chief prieſts heard theſe things, they doubted of them, whereunto this would grow. Then came one and told them, ſaying, Behold, the men whom ye put in priſon, are ſtanding in the temple, and teaching the people. Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence; (for they feared the people, leſt they ſhould have been ſtoned) And when they had brought them, they ſet them before the council: And the high prieſt asked them, Saying, Did not we ſtraitly command you, that ye ſhould not teach in this name? And behold, ye have filled Jeruſalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us. Then Peter and the other apoſtles anſwered and ſaid, We ought to obey God rather than men. The God of our fathers raiſed up Jeſus, whom ye ſlew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with his right hand, to be a prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſins: And we are his witneſſes of theſe things; and ſo is alſo the Holy Ghoſt, whom God hath given to them that obey him. When they heard that, they were cut to the heart, and took counſel to ſlay them.

The ſect of the Sadducees.] See the notes on chap. iv. 1.

Were filled with indignation.] Or rather, with envy. The original word is zelos; which, when attributed to man, is taken, either, Firſt, In the bad part: As, 1. For envy. So it is uſed in this place; as well as in chap. xiii. 45. and xvii. 5. and elſewhere. 2. For a blind miſguided zeal: As chap. xxi. 20. and xxii. 3. Rom. x. 2. Gal. i. 14. and Phil. iii. 6. 3. For a quarrelſome contentious diſpoſition: As James iii. 16. And, 4. For a counterfeit jealouſy, which ſome ſeem to have of others they pretend a great love to: As Gal. iv. 17. Secondly, In the good ſenſe, it is uſed, 1. For an holy emulation, and a laudable deſire to imitate or exceed others in holineſs, without any hatred of them: As 1 Cor. xii. 31. and xiv. 1, 12, 39. 2 Cor. ix. 2. Gal. iv. 18. Tit. ii. 14. 2. For a godly jealouſy: As 2 Cor. xi. 2. And, 3. For an extreme heat of all the affections, for and towards one we eſteem; burning in our love to him, our deſire of him, our joy in him, our indignation againſt all that ſpeak or do any thing againſt him: And the object of this may be, either man; as 2 Cor. vii. 7. and Col. iv. 13. or, God himſelf; as John ii. 17. 2 Cor. vii. 11. and Rev. iii. 19. (Leigh)

Put them in the common priſon.] Obſerve here, how the perſecutions of the apoſtles did gradually advance and increaſe. In the former chapter they were only kept in hold for a night, and diſmiſſed with threatnings the next day: But now, being filled a ſecond time with the Holy Spirit, they are better enabled to grapple with ſufferings, and glorify God under them; and accordingly, here they are committed to the common priſon among malefactors, and afterwards beaten, and expoſed to public ſhame. God will evermore ſuit the ſtroke to his people's ſtrength, proportion their burden to their back, and never ſuffer them to be tempted above what they are able. (B.)

The angel of the Lord, by night, opened the priſon doors.] The apoſtles being priſoners for Chriſt and his Goſpel, they have an angel for their keeper and deliverer, who opens the priſon-door, and overpowers the devil. God could otherwiſe have deliver'd them: But he makes uſe of the miniſtry of angels, for the confirming of their faith, and to let them ſee by experience, that he had given his angels charge over them. Since the eſtabliſhment of the Goſpel, God will have us live more by faith, and to walk leſs by ſenſe; and therefore we muſt not now, ordinarily, ſee thoſe miniſtring and beneficent ſpirits: But, altho' their viſible apparitions be ceaſed, yet their inviſible operations, for the heirs of ſalvation, ſhall never ceaſe; Heb. i. 14. "Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation?" (B) 'Tis in vain to ſhut the doors, where God is reſolved to open them: The firmeſt bars, the ſtrongeſt chains, cannot hold, where once God has deſigned and decreed our liberty (Cave) Let us "reſiſt the devil," more eſpecially when he tempts us, by allurements or threatnings, to revolt and apoſtatiſe from our religion, and the oath of fidelity, whereby we were devoted unto God at our baptiſm. Daniel, and the other reſolute confeſſors, found the bleſſed angels then moſt ready at hand, for their wonderful deliverance, when they generouſly expoſed their lives and fortunes, rather than they would deny their God, withhold his worſhip from him, or give it to any other, Dan. iii 25. and vi. 22. And ſo did theſe apoſtles here too, when they freely hazarded all of this world, rather than deſiſt from preaching the Goſpel committed to them. (Camfield)

All the words of this life.] That is, Of this life, which I have commiſſioned you to preach; and which the Sadducees deny. (W. and B.) What "the words of this life" here ſignifies, will ſoon be diſcerned by the uſe of zoe, life, in the Goſpel, for that doctrine which is the ſetting down of the way, which will bring him that walks in it to eternal life. Thus, John xii. 50. "I know (ſaith Chriſt, of the meſſage which he brought from his Father) that his commandment is eternal life;" where "eternal life" muſt ſignify that way which leads to it. So John xvii. 3. "This is eternal life, that they may know thee, the only true God;" that is, their knowing, and performing faithful ſincere obedience to the only true God, is the ſure way to eternal life: And accordingly, "the words of this life" are the ſum of this Chriſtian doctrine; which, being obey'd, will bring any man to life eternal; and ſo 'tis all one with St. Peter's expreſſion to Chriſt, "Lord, to whom ſhall we go? Thou haſt the words of eternal life;" the word this being here emphatical, and denoting that more valuable, ſpiritual, and eternal life. (H.) See the notes on John vi. 68. xii. 50. and xvii. 3.

Captain of the temple.] See the notes on chap. iv. 1. and Luke xxii. 52.

They doubted of them, whereunto this would grow.] Or, concerning them, what this was, or would be (H) Or, to what this miraculous deliverance of the apoſtles would tend. (W.) The original, properly tranſlated, is, When they heard theſe words; meaning, what their officers had reported to them, they doubted, &c. (Maſſ.) The reaſon why men are generally under ſo little concern about the affairs of religion, or in unjuſt undertakings wherein they are engaged, is, becauſe they will not ſee and acknowledge their error. They are aſhamed to change their minds: They are unwilling to think they have taken any falſe ſteps, or undertaken any thing without cauſe: They doubt, and waver in their opinion; they ſpend their whole life in deliberating, and ſo die in that ſtate of uncertainty. (Q.)

Did not we ſtrictly command.] See the notes on chap. iv. 18.

Ye have filled Jeruſalem with your doctrine.] Obſerve here, the crimes which the holy apoſtles were unjuſtly accuſed of; namely, obſtinacy and ſedition. They are charged with obſtinacy, for perſiſting to preach the Goſpel, when they had ſtrictly, but very wickedly, forbidden them: And they are accuſed of ſedition, as if they endeavour'd to ſtir up the people to avenge the blood of Chriſt upon the rulers, as being unjuſtly ſhed by them. (B.) See the notes on chap. ii. 23. and iii. 13.

Peter, and the other apoſtles.] St. Peter anſwers, not for himſelf alone, but in the name, and as the mouth, of the reſt: And therefore 'tis here ſaid, "Peter, and the other apoſtles, anſwer'd;" which infers no ſuperiority in St. Peter over the other apoſtles. As the charge was equal againſt them all, ſo the defence was alſo in behalf of them all, equally.

We ought to obey God, rather than men.] In this anſwer, the apoſtles make not any undue reflection upon the power of the magiſtrates, and the obedience due to them; it being a ruled caſe, by the firſt dictates of reaſon, and the common ſuffrage of mankind, That parents and governors are not to be obey'd, when their commands interfere with the obligations under which we ſtand to a ſuperior power. All authority is originally derived from God; and our duty to him may not be ſuperſeded by the laws of any authority derived from him: And even Socrates himſelf, in a parallel inſtance, when perſuaded to leave off his excellent way of inſtitution, and to comply with the humour of his Athenian judges, to ſave his life, returned this anſwer, That indeed he loved and honoured the Athenians; but yet reſolved to obey God rather than them: An anſwer almoſt the ſame, both in ſubſtance and words, with that which was here given by our apoſtles. In all other caſes, where the laws of the magiſtrate did not interfere with the commands of Chriſt, none more loyal, more compliant, than they: As indeed no religion in the world ever ſecured the intereſts of civil authority like the religion of the Goſpel. (Cave) We are ſo to obey human authority, as to obey God in the firſt place. (Beza) The beſt and ſureſt way, for any Chriſtian to know the bounds of this authority, with regard to the reſpective rights of the church and ſtate, is to inquire, What power, authority, juriſdiction, and rights, the ancient prieſthood, I mean, the apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors, the biſhops, claimed and exerciſed, not only without, but againſt, the conſent and commands of the ſecular potentates, before the union of the church and ſtate. (Hickes) Now, the pure ſpiritual powers of the church are, To publiſh the Goſpel of Chriſt, and thereby to make converts to his religion, Matt. xxviii. 19. and Mark xvi. 15. To admit ſuch converts into the church by baptiſm, Matt. xxviii. 20. Mark xvi. 16. and Acts ii. 38. To impoſe hands on them for their reception of the Holy Ghoſt; which we call by the name of confirmation, Acts viii. 17. xix. 6. and Heb. vi. 2. To ordain biſhops, or other inferior paſtors, as there ſhall be occaſion, to feed and watch over the flocks committed to their charge, Acts vi. 3, 6. and xiv. 23. 1 Tim. iv. 14. 2 Tim. i. 6. and Tit. i. 5. To require the people to receive and obey the ſpiritual guides thus ſet over them, Phil. ii. 29. 1 Theſſ. v. 12, 13. 1 Tim. v. 17. and Heb. xiii. 7, 17. To give them a ſufficient maintenance, 1 Cor, ix. 6. &c. Gal. vi. 6 &c. and 1 Tim. v. 17, 18. To account of them "as the miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God," 1 Cor. iv. 1. and Col. i. 25. To keep ſtedfaſtly in the communion of their rightful paſtors; to aſſemble with them for religious worſhip; to offer up prayers and praiſes to God; and to receive from their hands the holy communion, Acts ii. 42. and xi. 26. 1 Cor. x. 16 and xi. 20. and Heb. x. 25. To excommunicate and repel notorious offenders from the communion of the church, and to re-admit them again, upon due teſtimonies of repentance, 1 Cor. v. 3. &c. and 2 Cor. ii. 6. &c. Theſe are plainly the ſpiritual powers of the church: And it is evident, from the ſcriptures, that Chriſt committed all this power to his apoſtles; that they likewiſe committed the ſame power to others, whom they ſet over the ſeveral churches which they founded; with authority to continue this ſucceſſion of faithful paſtors throughout all ages: And all this without any application to any civil magiſtrate whatſoever; yea, and ſo to be exerciſed, notwithſtanding any prohibition from the civil magiſtrate to the contrary. Therefore, to ſay, that any power, and particularly this ſpiritual power, cannot be exerciſed, independent on the ſupreme civil magiſtrate, is directly to contradict the ſcriptures, and muſt be falſe. (Brett) The apoſtles were not here required by the Jews to conform to their religion, nor yet to come to their ſynagogues; but only to hold their peace, and not to ſpeak, or preach, in the name of Jeſus; and yet, we find, they made it a matter of conſcience to obey God, and diſobey them: For, being apprehended again, and examined concerning their contempt, they anſwer'd, "We ought to obey God, rather than men;" As if they had ſaid, If they ſhould have complied, to diſſemble, and not to ſpeak openly, they ſhould have denied God, in obeying men more than him. See the notes on chap. iv. 19.

To be a prince and a ſaviour.] Theſe two words, in the ſtile of the Old Teſtament, ſignify ſuch an one as Joſhua and the Judges were; expreſſed chap. vii 27. by "a ruler, and a judge;" ver. 25. by "giving deliverance," bringing them out of their ſlavery in Egypt: And therefore ver 35. in ſetting down the Iſraelites miſtake, when they aſk'd Moſes, Who appointed him "a ruler and a judge?" St. Stephen tells them, "God had by the hand of an angel ſent Moſes," a captain and deliverer; by deliverer meaning the ſame as by deliverance, ver. 25. and by ſaviour here, one that leads and rules them, manages their military affairs, to the avenging them of their enemies, and preſerving them ſafe and quiet. Such an one was Chriſt to be unto the people of God, and was ſent to be ſuch, particularly to the Jews: But this, not in the manner that they expected, but as "his kingdom was not of this world," in a ſpiritual manner, to go in and out before them againſt their ſpiritual enemies, Satan and ſin. To which end it was, that after his exaltation and inſtalment to his regal office, the firſt thing was his ſending of his Spirit, thereby giving them, as here it follows, place of repentance, if upon the preaching of the apoſtles, they will come in, and believe on him. In this ſenſe is it, that, Heb. ii. 10. Chriſt is called "the captain of ſalvation," or deliverance; that is, a captain, deſigned on purpoſe to ſave, or deliver them; to lead them, as 'tis there, through ſufferings to bliſs, through the wilderneſs, and the land of the Anakims, to Canaan: as Moſes, and Joſhua, the captains and ſaviours of the Jews, did; Captain and Saviour being two words together to expreſs one thing; and ſo directly the ſame with this other expreſſion of "captain of ſalvation." (H.) And he is ſaid to be "exalted to give repentance and forgiveneſs of ſins," by giving the knowledge of that remiſſion of ſins, which is promiſed to the penitent, and of thoſe motives which ſhould induce them to repent. So the Baptiſt is ſaid to "go before him, to give knowledge of ſalvation unto his people, by the remiſſion of their ſins," Luke i. 76, 77. And ſo "God granted to the Gentiles repentance unto life," when he ſent Peter to them, to preach that word, by which they repenting "ſhould be ſaved," Acts xi. 14, 18. (W.) See the notes on chap. ii. 33, 36. iii. 15, 26. and iv. 12. and Luke xxiv. 47.

We are his witneſſes.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 48.

So is alſo the Holy Ghoſt.] See the notes on chap ii. 2, 4, 38. iv. 31. and John xv. 26.

They were cut to the heart.] What dieprionto here ſignifies, will be beſt reſolved from Heſychius's rendring of the word. The ordinary copy hath it diaprietai, diagorazei, mainetai. But that is a miſtake. It ſhould certainly be read agriazei, or diagriazei, grows wild, or angry; for that is all one with mainetai, is mad, which follows, but diagorazei is quite another matter, and would rather belong to diaprietai, which might be the cauſe of this miſtake by the nearneſs of the words, as priamenos and agoraſas are all one. By this then the word appears to ſignify rage, or vehement diſpleaſure, as agriazei is orgizetai; ſuch as is in bears, and other wild beaſts, when it makes them tear in pieces thoſe that are next to them, or againſt whom it is conceived; as here it follows, They conſulted to put them to death. (H.) This ſermon was for ſubſtance the ſame that St. Peter had preached before, when ſo many thouſands were prick'd at the heart, by ſorrow and compunction; whereas theſe men were cut to the heart with anger and indignation. Whence learn, 1. That the moſt ſound and ſacred doctrine is an intolerable torment to an unſound and unholy heart. 2. That the word of God diſpenſed by the ſame miniſter, and in the ſame manner, has not always the ſame ſucceſs. The ſubſtance of both theſe ſermons was the ſame, Jeſus, and the reſurrection; and the preacher, St. Peter, was the ſame, but the ſucceſs was not the ſame; to let the apoſtle know, that the excellency of the power was of God, and not of himſelf; as St. Paul ſpeaks, 2 Cor iv. 7. (B.) Unleſs God ſpeak to the heart, the very ſame truths, which have converted thouſands of ſouls, are to others a law which only hardens and provokes them, and increaſes their ſin. Paſſion blinds the eyes of men, and hinders them from ſeeing, that they ſtrike at God himſelf, when they attack his ſervants. How blind and ſenſeleſs are theſe pretended ſages of the world! As if he who, but juſt now, deliver'd the apoſtles out of their priſons, were not able to deliver them out of their hands. (Q.)

Ver. 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. Then ſtood there up one in the council, a Phariſee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apoſtles forth a little ſpace, And ſaid unto them, Ye men of Iſrael, take heed to yourſelves, what ye intend to do as touching theſe men. For before theſe days roſe up Theudas, boaſting himſelf to be ſomebody, to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themſelves; who was ſlain, and all, as many as obey'd him, were ſcatter'd, and brought to nought. After this man roſe up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him; he alſo periſhed, and all, even as many as obey'd him, were diſperſed. And now I ſay unto you, Refrain from theſe men, and let them alone; for if this counſel, or this work be of men, it will come to nought: But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; leſt haply ye be found even to fight againſt God. And to him they agreed: And when they had called the apoſtles, and beaten them, they commanded that they ſhould not ſpeak in the name of Jeſus, and let them go. And they departed from the preſence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name. And daily in the temple, and in every houſe, they ceaſed not to teach and preach Jeſus Chriſt.

A Phariſee, named Gamaliel.] He was Paul's tutor, Acts xxii. 3. and was called Rabban Gamaliel, a title of the higheſt eminency, and given, ſay the Jews, only to ſeven perſons; which ſhews ſufficiently the reputation that he had among the people. Biſhop Pearſon, very probably conjectures, That the Sadducees, after our Lord's reſurrection, being the greateſt enemies to the apoſtles; they, being griev'd, that they "preached through Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead," chap. iv. 2. Gamaliel, being a Phariſee, and ſo a ſtiff aſſertor of the reſurrection, did therefore give his advice for the diſmiſſion of the apoſtles: For we find the Phariſees, almoſt in the ſame words, pleading for St. Paul, preaching the ſame doctrine, viz. That they ought not to moleſt him, leſt they ſhould be found, theomachoi fighters againſt God. (W.) See the notes on John i. 38.

Before theſe days, roſe up Theudas.] A ſtory there is of one Theudas, which Joſephus mentions, Ant. l. 20. c. 5. and Euſebius Hiſt. l. ii. c. 11. who undertook to be a prophet, and promiſed that he would divide Jordan, &c. But that was in Claudius's time, in the time of Fadus's præfecture, who deſtroyed him and his followers: And ſo that cannot be the perſon here mention'd; for this here was before Judas Galilæus, ver. 37. and he was in the time of Cyrennius's being governor of Syria. This Theudas here then muſt needs be ſome other perſon, whom they had recorded in their writings; and from thence Gamaliel here recites the ſtory, though we have no other record of it. (H.) And the ancient Fathers agreed in this, that there was a Theudas, pretending to great things, even before the coming of our Lord; tho' Joſephus hath taken no notice of him. (W.)

After this man, roſe up Judas of Galilee.] Of this Judas of Galilee, and of this enrolling, Joſephus's teſtimony is moſt clear, Antiq. l. xxviii. c. 1. Cyrenius, ſaith he, came to Syria, ſent from Cæſar, or under him, as judge of the nation, and to take the valuation of their eſtates. Upon this, Judas Gaulonita rebell'd, or made defection, and Saddochus with him, ſaying, that this valuation of their eſtates, the enrolling here, brought in direct ſervitude upon them, and therefore called the whole nation to follow them, and vindicate their liberties. So again, de Bell. Jud. l. ii. c. 12. Judas led them to make a defection, reproaching them, or making it a great crime in them, if they ſhould endure to pay tribute to the Romans, and acknowledge mortal rulers, after God had been their king. This doctrine, of the unlawfulneſs to pay tribute to men, upon pretence that they muſt acknowledge no other power but that of God over them, was it for which this Judas is by Joſephus ſet down, as the leader or head of a fourth hereſy among the Jews. And the texts of ſcripture on which he grounded it, may be thought, by the words of Joſephus, now cited, to be that of Deut. xxiii. 18. in the Septuagints reading of it, which Tertullian renders, Non erit vectigal pendens ex filiis Iſrael, None of the children of Iſrael ſhall pay tribute, and that of Deut. vi. 13. "Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him," by way of excluſion of all others. The falſeneſs of which concluſion from theſe premiſes, will appear not only from the Hebrew text, Deut. xviii. 23. where the matter is very diſtant from that of paying tribute; There ſhall be no whore of the daughters of Iſrael, nor a ſodomite of the ſons of Iſrael; but the right underſtanding of the Greek itſelf, where, ſay the Fathers, the words teleſphoros and teleſcomenos refer to the myſteries of the heathens, the unclean rites in their diabolical worſhips; and the firſt ſignifies him that thus initiates, or enters, any in thoſe debaucheries; the latter him that is thus initiated. (H.) See the notes on Luke xiii. 1. and John x. 8.

Leſt haply ye be found.] Theſe words are in the ſenſe to be connected to thoſe in the foregoing verſe, thus, "Let them alone, leſt haply ye be found even to fight againſt God:" So that all that is between muſt be read as in a parentheſis. (H.)

Worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name.] Obſerve here, the ſucceſs or iſſue of Gamaliel's counſel: His advice being ſo wiſe and rational, it prevailed with the rulers to deſiſt from their former intention of putting the apoſtles to death; but they come not off without blows, tho' without bloodſhed: They are ſcourged, as their maſter was before them; which was both a painful and reproachful puniſhment: Yet were they ſo far from being diſcouraged, that they were the more reſolved: They rejoiced that they were ſo graced, as to be diſgraced for Chriſt; and accounted it their higheſt honour to be diſhonoured for him; eſteeming it a very great favour and happineſs to bear reproach for Chriſt, according to that of the apoſtle St. Peter, 1 Epiſt. iv. 14. "If ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye; for the ſpirit of grace and of glory reſteth upon you." This ſent them from the preſence of the council, "rejoicing, that they were accounted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name." (B.) The ſigns of patience are, 1. Tolerantia crucis: When a man finds upon examination, that he is able and willing, according to the Greek word, hypomenein, to abide under the croſs: When a man is ſo affected to the croſs, that, if it pleaſe God to take away his ſin, the cauſe of puniſhment, he is willing to bear the puniſhment. 2. When we can tolerare & amare, bear and love too: When our ſuffering turns not to murmuring or diſobedience; but ſo affecteth us, that, notwithſtanding our chaſtiſement, we can love God, with his chaſtiſement and for it, and ſay, with Job i. 21. "bleſſed be the name of the Lord." And, 3. When we find ourſelves humble in our ſufferings; which is a diſtinction between true Chriſtian patience and the heretical. The fathers, in the primitive church, were forced to uſe theſe two notes of diſtinction between a true Chriſtian and a Donatiſt. 1. That in the ſuffering of a Donatiſt, (which is to be obſerv'd in our days) they ſhould find a ſpirit of pride and vanity; whereas true patience is humble. And this humility appear'd in the martyr's ſufferings; which was without diſputation with God about the cauſe, or murmuring at the torments: They either bore them, and mourn'd in ſilence; or if they replied, it was on God's behalf, like Job i. 22. and ii. 10. or like David, Pſal. xxxix. 9. 2. The other note is alacrity. It was obſerv'd by the Fathers, that the Circumcellions in their ſufferings, had no alacrity. 'Tis true, they were not moved; but they ſuffer'd not chearfully: They bore them; but they rejoiced not: They did, nican, overcome, as thoſe who, in ſome diſeaſes, cure without pain, or, uſing narcotick medicines, do overcome the pain; but Chriſtian patience doth more; "In all theſe things, (ſaith the apoſtle) hypernicomen, we are more than conquerors." It doth hypernican, overcome; and more than ſo, for it rejoiceth too. So the apoſtles here, after they had been ſcourged, "departed, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for the name of Chriſt." (Andr.) That is, that they were admitted to the honour of ſuffering diſgrace, as their enemies falſely eſteem'd it, for the ſake of ſuch an adorable name and cauſe. The two Greek words, catexiotheſan atimaſthenai, are ſtrong, and expreſs the thing with great happineſs and beauty, not to be come near in a tranſlation. (Blackw.) See the notes on chap. vi. 15. and Matt. v. 11, 12.

Daily in the temple.] Obſerve how wiſely and well the holy apoſtles improve their reſtored liberty: They redouble their pains and diligence in preaching the Goſpel, and are unwearied in the way of their duty, and in the work of their God, "Daily in the Temple, and in every houſe, they ceaſed not to teach and to preach Jeſus Chriſt;" That is, they laid hold on every opportunity, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, publickly and privately, to publiſh the Goſpel to thoſe that had not receiv'd it, and farther to inſtruct thoſe that had already received the faith of Chriſt. Thus the more outragious were their adverſaries, the more couragious were the holy apoſtles. They religiouſly profeſs the name of Chriſt, and reſolutely abide by their profeſſion, tho' they were derided, impriſon'd, perſecuted, and beaten for the ſame Lord! Help thy miniſters at this day to ſuffer reproach for thy Goſpel; but never let any of them either reproach it, or be a reproach unto it. Amen. (B.) See chap. ii. 42, 46.

CHAP. VI.

The order of Deacons inſtituted. Seven perſons choſen by the church, and ordained by the apoſtles. Stephen, one of them, falſely accuſed of blaſphemy.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. AND in thoſe days, when the number of the diſciples was multiplied, there aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians againſt the Hebrews, becauſe their widows were neglected in the daily miniſtration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the diſciples unto them, and ſaid, It is not reaſon that we ſhould leave the word of God, and ſerve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you ſeven men of honeſt report, full of the Holy Ghoſt and wiſdom, whom we may appoint over this buſineſs. But we will give ourſelves continually to prayer, and to the miniſtry of the word. And the ſaying pleaſed the whole multitude; and they choſe Stephen, a man full of faith, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proſelyte of Antioch. Whom they ſet before the apoſtles: And when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them. And the word of God increaſed; and the number of the diſciples multiplied in Jeruſalem greatly; and a great company of the prieſts were obedient to the faith. And Stephen full of faith and power did great wonders and miracles among the people.

There aroſe a murmuring.] The Devil, having in vain attack'd the church from without, now attempts to ſubvert it by ſowing diviſions and diſſentions within itſelf. (Beza) The more the number increaſes, the more does perfection decreaſe; every one bringing along with him his own imperfections, and communicating them to others. The devil finds means to raiſe diviſion among men, even by works of charity. Where humility is, there is peace: Pride produces envy; envy ſuſpicion; ſuſpicion murmuring; and murmuring weakens charity. All this may be prevented, by obſerving an exact equity towards all. (Q.)

Of the Grecians.] It is much diſputed, who theſe Helleniſts were: 'Tis beyond doubt, that they were not Greeks by nation or birth; whether unconverted, or Proſelytes to the Jewiſh nation: For theſe are never called Helleniſts; but always, in the ſcripture, Hellenes, and by Joſephus, hellemnicoi; and are diſtinguiſhed, not from the Hebrews, but the Jews: As, when mention is made of the Jews and Greeks, Acts xvi. 1, 3, 19. — xix. 10. — xx. 21. Rom. i. 16.—ii. 9, 10.—iii. 9 —x. 12.— 1 Cor. i. 22, 23.—x. 32. —xii. 13. Gal. iii. 28. Coloſſ. iii. 11. and of thoſe Greeks, who came to the Jewiſh ſynagogues; and therefore ſeem to have been Proſelytes, Acts xiv. 1.—xviii. 4. And a diſtinction is made, not between Hebrews, but "Jews and Proſelytes," Acts ii. 10. 2. They who were ſcatter'd, upon the perſecution which followed the death of Stephen, Acts viii. 1. ſpake "the word only to the Jews," Acts xi. 19. and yet they ſpake to the Helleniſts, ver. 20. And, 3. Paul, coming to Jeruſalem, diſputed againſt the Helleniſts, and "they went about to kill him," Acts ix. 29. as the Jews at Damaſcus had done before, ver. 23. Which ſhews, they muſt be Jews by birth, and not only ſtrangers of other nations come thither: For how durſt they attempt to kill a Jew, among the Jews, without bringing him to their tribunal? 2. I think it not ſufficient to ſay, with the Syriac, or St. Chryſoſtom, that they were Jews uſing the Greek tongue: For this they of Judea, eſpecially the learned among them, generally did; for we never find in Joſephus, that they ſpake to the Romans, or others who uſed that tongue, by an interpreter. Dr. Lightfoot therefore adds, that they were Jews, who, living among the Greeks, underſtood, and uſed that tongue only; and then they muſt be called Hebrews, who uſed the Hebrew, or Syriac tongue, as their uſual dialect: But then, whereas Dr. Lightfoot will not allow, that in their ſynagogues, they uſed the Greek tongue, or read the ſcriptures according to the Greek tranſlation, I incline rather to the opinion of the learned Grotius, that they uſed this tongue alſo in their ſacred exerciſes: For why ſhould they, whoſe Synagogues conſiſted of perſons, underſtanding neither Hebrew nor Syriac, have both, or either of thoſe languages, read to them in their aſſemblies? Moreover, that in their exhortations, made in their Synagogues, conſiſting both of Jews and Proſelytes of the Grecians, they uſed the Greek language, ſeems evident from this, That "Paul and Barnabas ſo ſpake in them, that a multitude of the Greeks, as well as of the Jews believed," Acts xiii. 43.—xiv. 1.—xvii. 4, 12.—xviii. 4. (W.) See the notes on chap. ii. 5. and John vii. 35. and xii. 20.

Their widows were neglected.] That is, ſuch of them as were either ſick, or charged with children, received leſs out of the common ſtock, than the widows which were Jews born. The occaſion of this was, becauſe the apoſtles did not intruſt any certain perſons with the management of this diſtribution; but ſometimes employ'd one, and ſometimes another, and thoſe generally of the native Jews. But now this grievance was effectually redreſs'd, by the inſtitution of the order of Deacons, choſen out of the whole body by common conſent. (G.) And as the names of the perſons choſen are all Greek; ſo we may believe, they were all, or moſt of them, Helleniſts. (Fleury) See the notes on chap. ii. 44. and iv. 32.

The multitude of the diſciples.] Multitude of diſciples here, are the community or ſociety of Chriſtians, called ſometimes "the all," 1 Tim. v. 20. "the many," 2 Cor. ii. 6. anſwerable to "the multitude" here; and ſometimes Chriſtians, or followers of Chriſt; in reſpect of whom as their doctor, or maſter, they are here called diſciples; and both ordinarily united together in the word church, and the brethren, c. xv. 3, & iv. 23. and Matt. xviii. 17. Now what power the church, or brethren, conſider'd in this notion, the ſociety of Chriſtians, do here appear to have, may be conſiderable. The choice of the perſons of the deacons is here committed to them: But that, Firſt, By the appointment of the apoſtles, declared to them. "The twelve called to them the multitude, and ſaid, Look out," &c. ver. 2, 3. Secondly, they had by the apoſtles theſe bounds ſet them, 1. To take ſeven; the number ſpecified by the apoſtles, not left arbitrary to them. 2. To pitch on men generally known, and well reputed of. 3. With theſe qualifications,

1. Faith; ſuppoſed in Some of you; that is, Believers, Chriſtians; 2. "Fulneſs of the Holy Ghoſt;" extraordinary gifts; 3. Fulneſs of wiſdom; fitted by all theſe for this employment. And when by the apoſtles appointment, together with the obſervation of theſe preſcribed rules, the multitude have ſought out the perſons, then ſtill the apoſtles reſerve the ordination, or conſtitution of them to themſelves, ver. 3. In the nomination of biſhops and deacons in other churches, the like may be concluded, from the Epiſtles to Timothy and Titus, viz. That ſomewhat was referred to the church; particularly, their teſtimony concerning the qualifications of the perſons. For the biſhop that was to ordain, is by St. Paul's direction, firſt to enquire, as it were upon articles, If, or whether, he be blameleſs, &c. which concerning a biſhop are fifteen, Tit. i. 6. &c. Seventeen, 1 Tim. iii. 1. &c. Fewer concerning a deacon: And all of them, being matters of fact and manners, Timothy, which was newly enter'd upon his province, and Titus lately left in Crete, could not poſſibly be inſtructed ſufficiently from their own experience; and therefore muſt be ſuppoſed to have it by enquiry of the church. So, in the cenſures of the church, the offender muſt be rebuked before the many, 2 Cor. ii. 6. before "the church," Matt. xviii. 17. "before all," 1 Tim. v. 20. Where yet it is Timothy, the biſhop, that muſt rebuke the offenders; only in the preſence, and with the notice of the church, to make the rebuke more conſiderable, to produce ſhame and reformation. Laſtly, in the Council at Jeruſalem, with "the apoſtles and elders," or biſhops of Judæa, is joined "the whole church," chap. xv. 22. in the chuſing, and ſending meſſengers to Antioch: But that with a moſt diſcernible diſtinction: The apoſtles, and elders, as they, whoſe decree or appointment it was, It pleaſed, or "ſeemed good to, the apoſtles and elders to ſend choſen men;" the choice and miſſion belonging to them, and the perſons ſent, Men of them, biſhops of the council; but this with the knowledge and approbation of the whole church joined with them, as of thoſe that were acceſſaries, or principals in the ſending. So in the inſcription of the Epiſtle of the council, ver. 23. "The apoſtles and elders and brethren ſend greeting:" Not that any but the apoſtles and elders, that is, biſhops of Judæa, were members of the council, or had voices in it, for that is cleared, ver. 6. at the firſt mention of their convening, "The apoſtles and elders came together to conſider of this matter," the debate of the queſtion, and the deciſion, belonging only to them, but that the whole church, joined with the apoſtles and biſhops, ſhewing their conſent and approbation, and ſubmiſſion to the decree of the council. And thus, in following times, have lay-men ſubſcribed the acts of councils in this form, Conſentiens ſubſcripſi, I have ſubſcribed conſenting, or teſtified my conſent under my hand. As for the decree of the council, though that be in the ſtyle of Us, ver. 28. which may be conceived to refer to all thoſe that are named in the front, and ſo to the brethren; yet 'tis apparent by ver. 25. "It ſeemed good to us, being aſſembled together," that that belongs only to thoſe that were aſſembled or ſat in the council, that is, the apoſtles and elders, ver. 6. and ſo it is expreſly ſet, c. xvi. 4. "The decrees ordain'd by the apoſtles and elders." (H.) See the notes on chap. ii. 1.

And ſerve tables.] See the notes on ver. 6.

Look ye out.] We have here an abridgment of the whole diſcipline relating to eccleſiaſtical ordinations. It belongs to the church to preſent the miniſters of the altar; and to the paſtors to ordain them. The neceſſary conditions are, 1. Examination and diſcretion in the choice of them. 2. The church muſt chuſe, Not children but men, in maturity of underſtanding, ſolidity of judgment, virtue, experience, &c. 3. Not unknown, wandering perſons, &c. but from "among you," in the very boſom of the church; and ſuch whoſe birth and life are known. 4. Not perſons who are any way ſcandalous, but of a ſound and unſpotted reputation. 5. Such whoſe piety is eminent and remarkable, by their having a "fulneſs of the Holy Ghoſt; which appears, as it were viſibly, in a life and converſation holy in all reſpects. 6. Piety is not alone ſufficient; the gift of wiſdom and prudence is neceſſary for the guidance and direction of others. 7. They muſt be appointed, or ordained by lawful and apoſtolical authority. And, 8. They muſt enter into the miniſtry with no other deſign, but to ſerve and labour in the work and buſineſs thereof. (Q.)

Full of the Holy Ghoſt, and wiſdom.] What is meant by "full of the Holy Ghoſt," in this place, may perhaps be beſt collected by a farther conſideration of the words of Chriſt, Mark xvi. 17, 18. But ſigns ſhall attend them which believe theſe things, or "Theſe ſigns ſhall (attend, or) follow them that believe." Theſe words ſeem to contain a promiſe of extraordinary gifts, of "caſting out devils, ſpeaking ſtrange languages, healing, &c. to others, beſide the apoſtles, under the name of believers. For the believers there are all one with "He that believeth and is baptized," ver. 16. and that is thoſe that, upon the apoſtles preaching, ſhall believe, and enter into the church, or be added to it: But this not ſo unlimitedly on one ſide, as that all that did believe ſhould have thoſe gifts beſtow'd upon them, for then here would have been no choice; all being "full of the Holy Ghoſt," they could not look out men that were full; nor yet with ſuch reſtrictions on the other ſide, as that none had theſe gifts, but thoſe that were ordained to ſacred functions, for then theſe, who were not yet ſo ordained, could not thus be full. But I ſuppoſe the truth is in the middle. At the apoſtles preaching and mens receiving the Goſpel, many of them that believed had extraordinary gifts, miraculous powers, beſtowed upon them, for the teſtifying to themſelves and others the truth of the Goſpel in thoſe firſt times, and to qualify them for the ſervice of the church, when they ſhould be called to it. And agreeably, thoſe that were thus endowed, were generally choſen to ſuch employments, before others who had them not, as there was need of them: And ſuch I ſuppoſe are here meant under the phraſe of "Full of the Holy Ghoſt," and that phraſe mention'd by the apoſtles, as a qualification required in thoſe whom they would appoint deacons here, and, beſide the care of the poor, communicate the power of preaching and baptizing to them, which 'tis evident Philip had. This may moſt probably be it, which is affirmed of Cornelius's family, chap. x. 44. "The Holy Ghoſt fell on all them which heard the word," and "The gift of the Holy Ghoſt was pour'd upon them," 45. "For they ſpake with tongues," &c. 46. So again, chap xix. 6. the Epheſian diſciples being newly baptized in the name of Jeſus," ver. 5. by the apoſtles benediction, and "impoſition of hands, the Holy Ghoſt came upon them, and they ſpake with tongues, and propheſied." And ſo chap. ii. 38. when Peter tells them, that upon their repentance and baptiſm, they ſhould "receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt," the very phraſe which is uſed of Cornelius's family, it follows accordingly, chap. iv. 31. "The place was ſhaken, and they were filled with the Holy Ghoſt;" and ſo, beſide the inward gifts and graces of the Spirit, they were, many of them, endowed with thoſe extraordinary gifts, which c. ii. 1. had fallen upon the apoſtles, and were uſeful for the confirming them in the faith, and to teſtify to them and others the truth of what was preach'd to them. And of them that were at that time converted, they are now to chuſe ſome here, for the office of deacons, men "full of the Spirit," &c. (H. and W.) See the notes on ver. 6.

Whom we may appoint.] As the French New Teſtaments have alter'd ſeveral texts, in favour of the doctrines of Rome, our Diſſenters, in ſeveral editions of the bible, have changed theſe words of the apoſtles, to whom ye may appoint; that it might favour their pretended power, of the people to chuſe their own paſtors: And this text, thus alter'd, was quoted in many of their books, for this purpoſe. (Leſl.) Thus it was, in many, or moſt, of our Engliſh bibles, from the year 1638. to 1660. and in ſeveral ſince, viz. The edition in 8vo. by J. Field, 1660. in 24°. by the aſſigns of J Bill and Chr. Barker, 1674. In 8vo. by J. Bill and Chr. Barker, 1674. In 8vo. at Edinburgh, by And. Anderſon and partners, 1673. and 1675. In 8vo. by J. Bill, T. Newcomb, and H. Hills, 1679. and 1680. In 8vo. by the aſſigns of J. Bill, and T. Newcomb, 1685. In fol. at Amſterdam, 1679. And in Baxter's paraphraſe, and ſeveral others: Where the Greek word, cataſteſomen, is perverſly render'd, Ye may appoint; thereby to give the power of ordination into the hands of the laity. (Howel) See the notes on ver. 6.

Give ourſelves continually to prayer.] See the notes on chap. ii. 42.

They choſe Stephen.] The ſcripture gives us no particular notice either of his country or kindred. That he was a Jew is out of queſtion; for he owns this in his apology, chap. vii. But whether he was born in Judæa, or among the diſperſed in the Gentile provinces, is impoſſible to determine; unleſs, from his Greek name, we may conclude him to have been of the latter. Antiquity reckons him, with great probability, to have been one of the ſeventy diſciples of our Lord: And how well he was qualified for an holy office, appears both from the character here given him, "a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghoſt," and from the proofs he gave of it, in confounding thoſe who diſputed with him, ver. 10. and in his defence of himſelf againſt the charge of blaſphemy, chap. vii.

And Philip.] Some account of him, and his miniſtry, will be met with hereafter, chap. viii. 5, 26. and xxi. 8.

And Nicholas.] See the notes on Rev. ii. 6.

A Proſelyte.] See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 15.

They ſet before the apoſtles.] Here two things are diſputed; 1. Whether theſe ſeven were choſen, and ordained, to a civil office only, viz. that of miniſtring only to the neceſſities of widows, and other indigent diſciples; or alſo to the ſacred office of a deacon, and ſo impower'd to preach the word, and baptize. Certain it is, that of theſe ſeven, St. Stephen did preach the word, and that Philip did both preach and baptize, chap. viii. 12, 38. But then it is ſaid, they did ſo, not as men choſen and ordained to this office, but as being of the number of the ſeventy diſciples; of whom theſe ſeven were, ſaith Epiphanius. And indeed, the ancients ſeem to have been divided about this matter: The council of Neocæſarea, Can. 14. ſaying expreſly, that there ought to be but ſeven deacons, in the great cities, as we learn from the Acts of the apoſtles; and the apoſtles, in their conſtitutions, That they, after our Lord's aſcenſion, had choſen ſeven deacons; of which number, Stephen was one: And the Synod in Trullo, on the other hand, ſaying, That the apoſtles ſpake not there of thoſe who ſerved at the altar, but of thoſe that ſerved to the buſineſs of tables: But this is as true of the deacons mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Tim. iii. 8. &c. that there is not a word ſaid of their miniſtring at the altar: And it ſeems very unlikely, that the apoſtles would have made this one requiſite of the perſons to be choſen, that they ſhould be full of the extraordinary gifts "of the Holy Ghoſt, and of wiſdom," if their office had confined them to the miniſtry of the widows at Jeruſalem; or that they, who were Evangeliſts before, as Philip is expreſly ſtiled, chap. xxi. 8. ſhould wholly lay aſide the preaching of the word, and attend only on a civil office. Moreover, it is certain, that deacons were inſtituted before St. Paul writ his firſt epiſtle to Timothy: For we have mention of them in the epiſtle to the Philippians, writ three years before that to Timothy; and they are mentioned in the advice to Timothy, not as an office to be inſtituted, but as a ſtanding office, then ſettled in the church; as they muſt be if biſhops were then ſo, they being neceſſary attendants on that higher function, according to theſe words of Epiphanius, A biſhop cannot be without a deacon. Now if they were not inſtituted here by the apoſtles, I deſire to know, when, where, and by whom they were inſtituted; and what other record we have left us of ſuch an inſtitution of them? Againſt this it is objected, firſt, That theſe ſeven are never called deacons, in the whole hiſtory of the Acts of the apoſtles; and that this name is never given either to St. Stephen, or to Philip the Evangeliſt. But this objection can be of no ſtrength, againſt the ſuffrage of all antiquity, which hath ſtill given them the name of deacons; ſeeing they have no other name aſcribed to them, in the whole Acts of the apoſtles, or the ſacred hiſtory: They are never called Miniſters of tables in all the Acts; tho' here they are ſaid to be appointed for that work: And ſo ſaith St. Jerom, of the deacons of his age, That they were Menſarum & viduarum miniſtri, The miniſters not only of the prieſts, but alſo of widows and tables. So he ſtiles them, in his Epiſtle to Evagrius; and bids them learn the reaſon of their inſtitution from the Acts of the Apoſtles. 2. It is further objected, That, in St. Paul's account of the deacons of the church, there is no mention of this part of their office, to provide for widows, and "ſerve tables," nor any quality required of them which reſpects that office. I anſwer, 1. That, according to this argument, ſhould all that hath been ſaid be granted, the deacons could have no authority to baptiſe, or adminiſter either the bread or the cup to the laity; there being not one word of any ſuch office belonging to them in St. Paul's Epiſtles to Timothy, nor of any aſſiſtance they are to give the biſhop. 2. That, as the deacons of St. Paul are to be "grave, and hold the faith in a good conſcience," ſo are the deacons here to be "men of honeſt report, and wiſdom," ver. 3. As they were to "be approved, and then to execute the office of a deacon," 1 Tim. iii. 10. So was it here, ver. 5, 6. Now men of "double tongues, and given to much wine," could neither be men of good report, nor men of wiſdom; and much leſs could they be approved as ſuch. So that the characters of the deacons here, ſeem virtually to include all the characters required of them there; and two more, eſpecially relating to ſacred offices, viz. That they ſhould be "men full of the Holy Ghoſt, and wiſdom;" and that which St. Stephen doth here, and St. Philip did, in preaching to the Samaritans, and then baptizing them, is the foundation of the authority given by biſhops to deacons, to preach the word, and to baptize. Moreover, their being miniſters of tables, made them alſo miniſters at the Agapæ; where the biſhop was to be acquainted with the neceſſities of the widows and the poor, ſay the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, l. ii. c. 28. by the miniſters, that is, the deacons; and ſo they became attendants alſo on him, or on the preſident, who conſecrated the Euchariſt, celebrated at the ſame time with theſe feaſts of charity; and ſo they diſtributed the bread and wine to the communicants, and carry'd them, ſaith Juſt. Martyr, to thoſe that were abſent. Hence are they ſtiled, by Ignatius, and Polycarp, not only the miniſters of meats and drinks, but the ſervants of the church of God, and ſaid to be ſervants, not of men, but of God and Chriſt; as ſervants are, in that relation, ſaid to ſerve the Lord Chriſt, and therefore are bid to do all things "as to the Lord, and not unto men," Col. iii. 23, 24. And Clemens of Alexandria ſaith, That in the church the presbyters have the repreſentation of thoſe who make men better; and the deacons, of them that ſerve. And, becauſe they perform this miniſtry under the inſpection of the biſhop, and gave him an account of the condition of the widows and the poor, and had from him, or his presbyters, the treaſury of the church to diſtribute to others; therefore is this ſo often mentioned in church hiſtory, as part of the Epiſcopal office, to have the care of all that are in need, as Juſt. Martyr ſaith, The presbyters and deacons doing this only by his authority. In fine, To ſay that Philip and others of theſe deacons, might preach and baptize, but not as deacons, but only as Evangeliſts, is not ſufficient in this caſe: For if they were all Evangeliſts, or, as Epiphanius ſaith, of the Seventy, and afterwards by the apoſtles ordain'd deacons, it is hence evident, that they muſt have, with this office, a power to preach and baptize; as doubtleſs the Evangeliſts and ſeventy diſciples had: And hence we find, that Philip being one of thoſe ſeven, chap. xxi. 8. did both theſe offices by the direction and aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, chap. viii. 12, 29, &c. If they were not, yet being men "full of the Holy Ghoſt," and of that wiſdom which enabled them to teach others, we cannot reaſonably conceive, they were diſabled by their ordination to this office, from doing that work, for which they were thus fitted, and as it were appointed, by theſe gifts of the Holy Spirit confer'd upon them. In a word, It is evident from this hiſtory, that, before the ordination of theſe deacons, the apoſtles themſelves were engaged in this work; for the treaſure of the church was "laid at the apoſtles feet, and diſtribution of it was made to every man according as he had need," chap. iv. 35. This diſtribution therefore muſt be made, by them who had this treaſure in their hands; and therefore they appoint theſe ſeven over this buſineſs, to eaſe themſelves of this trouble, that they might give themſelves more entirely "to prayer and to the miniſtry of the word," and might not, by attending on this work, be hinder'd in the execution of that higher office. Now ſurely, that work which the apoſtles perſonally perform'd for a ſeaſon, muſt be conſiſtent with their commiſſion, to "teach and to baptize all nations," Matt. xxviii. 19. (Comb. W. and Slater) See the notes on chap. i. 24.

When they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.] This was an ancient rite in the church; the perſons ordained being thereby, as it were, conſecrated unto God. It was derived from the Hebrews; who uſed this form, as well in the publick and ſolemn conſecration of their ſacrifices, as in their private prayers and benedictions. And the ſame is retained in the Chriſtian church, chap. viii. 17. 1 Tim. v. 22. But there is no mention here of Chriſm, or the tonſure, or the croſs, &c. (Beza, Comb. and B.) It was uſed on diverſe occaſions; as, 1. In bleſſings, Gen. xlviii. 14, 15. Matt. xix. 15. and Mark x. 16. 2. In dedicating ſacrifices to God, Exod. xxix. 10. and Lev. i. 4. 3. In the condemnation and puniſhment of criminals, Lev. xxiv. 14 and Deut. xvii. 7. 4. In appointing and ordaining perſons to offices, Numb. viii. 10, 20. xxvii. 18, 23. Deut. xxxiv. 9. Acts xiii. 3. and elſewhere. 5. In the working of miraculous cures, Mark vi. 5. xvi. 18. Luke iv. 40. xiii. 13. Acts ix. 17. and xxviii. 8. And, 6. In conferring the miraculous gift of the Holy Ghoſt, chap. viii. 17. and xix. 6. (Fox) This caſe can give no countenance to lay, or presbyterian ordinations. For, tho' the choice of theſe perſons was committed to "the multitude of the diſciples," yet this was done, 1. By the particular appointment of the apoſtles themſelves; for "the Twelve called the multitude of the diſciples unto them, and ſaid, Look ye out," &c. 2. They ſpecify both the number and qualifications of the perſons to be choſen; "Among you, ſeven men, of honeſt report," &c. 3. They reſerve to themſelves the appointment of them to this office; "Whom we may appoint over this buſineſs." And, 4. The apoſtles, and only they, "laid their hands on them." (Comb. W. Brett, Barclay, and Slater) Nor does it give any colour of authority to the Papiſts, for the pretended ſupremacy of St. Peter: For neither did he alone propoſe or act in this, but "the Twelve." (Maſon.) See the notes on ver. 2. and chap. i. 15. and Matt. ix. 18.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Then there aroſe certain of the ſynagogue, which is called the ſynagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia, and of Aſia, diſputing with Stephen. And they were not able to reſiſt the wiſdom and the Spirit by which he ſpake. Then they ſuborned men, which ſaid, We have heard him ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt Moſes, and againſt God. And they ſtirred up the people, and the elders, and the ſcribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council, And ſet up falſe witneſſes, which ſaid, This man ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt this holy place, and the law. For we have heard him ſay, That this Jeſus of Nazareth ſhall deſtroy this place, and ſhall change the cuſtoms which Moſes delivered us. And all that ſat in the council, looking ſtedfaſtly on him, ſaw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

The ſynagogue of the Libertines.] That the word ſynagogue is to be repeated before all the places mentioned here, appears from this, That the Jews mention a ſynagogue of the Alexandrians at Jeruſalem; as Dr. Lightfoot here noteth. Moreover, there being men of all theſe nations living in Jeruſalem, and ſpeaking their native language, and who yet were proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion, chap. ii. 8, &c. it is reaſonable to conceive, that they had alſo ſynagogues for prayer, and hearing of the law, and pious exhortations, in a tongue they underſtood. By the ſynagogue of theſe Libertines, ſome underſtand the Jews that were free-born, or had obtained the Roman freedom, as St. Paul had; ſo Dr. Lightfoot: Others think, they were Roman ſervants who had obtained their freedom; as ſaith Oecumenius here. The firſt opinion ſeems to me moſt probable. For though Tacitus, in his Annals, ſaith, That four thouſand Libertines, infected with the Jewiſh ſuperſtition, were baniſhed into Sardinia; yet Suetonius ſaith, That they were the young men of the Jewiſh nation that were ſent thither; and that he only expelled the other Jews and their Proſelytes out of the city: Joſephus, that he commanded all the Jews to be expelled Rome; and that four thouſand of them were ſent to Sardinia by the Conſuls: And Philo ſaith, That he ſuffered a great part of the city beyond Tyber to be inhabited by the Jews, and that theſe Jews were moſt of them Romans ſet at liberty; for, being carried captives into Italy, they obtained their freedom from their maſters. (W.) The Jews report, that there were four hundred and eighty ſynagogues in Jeruſalem; partly for Jews, and partly for ſtrangers: And theſe were as ſo many inferiour churches, ſubordinate to the temple as their cathedral. (G. and Godw.)

They were not able to reſiſt.] See here, how faithful Chriſt was, in ſo punctually fulfilling his promiſes made, Matt. x. 20. and Luke xxi. 15. (W. and B.) See the notes on Luke xxi. 15. Dr. Cave cites ſome very ancient manuſcripts, particularly Cod. Bez. MS. and 2 Codd. H. Steph. wherein is this elegant addition to this verſe, Cai antophthalmein te aletheia, and with open face to reſiſt the truth.

Then they ſuborned men.] Obſerve here, 1. That St. Stephen's adverſaries, being baffled in their diſputes, do burn with revenge: They hire men to accuſe him falſely, that they may take away his life. The beſt arguments of a baffled adverſary are ever found to be craft and cruelty. It has been an old artifice of the devil, to ſwear innocent men out of their lives: And therefore, 'tis next to a miracle, that no greater number of innocent perſons have been murder'd in the world by perjury and falſe accuſation; when ſo many thouſands hate them, who make no conſcience of falſe oaths. 2. The charge and accuſation brought againſt Stephen, That he ſpake diſhonourably of the Jewiſh religion; That he was continually foretelling deſtruction to the temple; and threatning the change of all the Moſaic rites. 'Tis very probable, that he told them, the ſhadows and ceremonies were to vaniſh now the ſubſtance was come; and that the Moſaic rites were to give place, that a more excellent and ſpiritual worſhip might ſucceed: For, as God was worſhipped aright, four hundred years, before either the temple or tabernacle were built, or the Jewiſh rites inſtituted; ſo he might again be truly worſhipped after they were aboliſhed. (B.) Artifice, violence, and calumny, are the only things, which the ſpirit of the world has, in all ages, oppoſed to the conduct of the moſt holy perſons: And men have not yet learnt to diſtruſt it, and to ſecure themſelves from being deceiv'd thereby. Calumny is ſtill as prevalent, and as well receiv'd, as if it had never been confuted and put to ſhame: Holy men are at preſent the victims thereof; but the calumniators themſelves ſhall, in their turn, be the victims of the divine juſtice. (Q.)

As it had been the face of an angel.] Obſerve, how Almighty God, by a miracle, bears witneſs to the innocency of his holy ſervant St. Stephen: And, to convince his accuſers, that he had done no wrong to Moſes, God makes his face to ſhine now, as Moſes's face had ſhined of old; and gave him an angelical countenance, in which appear'd an extraordinary luſtre and radiancy: Not that an angel has a face, or ſhines viſibly; but it intimates that amazing brightneſs of beauty which was inſtamp'd upon the face of Stephen. He now began to border upon heaven, and had receiv'd ſome beams of glory approaching: It pleaſeth God ſometimes to give his children and ſervants ſome prælibations and foretaſtes of heaven before they ſtep into heaven; eſpecially holy martyrs and confeſſors, who love not their lives unto death: God bears an honourable reſpect to them that bear witneſs to his name and truth; and as they ſhall ſhine forth in the kingdom of their Father, ſo will God ſometimes put a luſtre upon their faces here. "All in the council ſaw St. Stephen's face, as it had been the face of an angel." (B.) This expreſſion of the "ſhining of the face like that of an angel," ſeems to have been proverbial among the Jews: For ſo Eſther ſpeaks to Artaxerxes, "I ſaw thee, as an angel of God, and my heart was troubled, for fear of thy glory," Eſth. xv. 13. And the Chaldee paraphraſt on Cantic. i. 4. ſaith, When Iſrael made the calf, their viſage was black, as that of an Æthiopian; but when they repented, and their ſin was remitted, the ſplendor of the glory of their countenance was like that of an angel. Now God, by this ſplendor of St. Stephen, teſtified his innocence, and that he was pleaſing to him as Moſes was, in that he made his face to ſhine as did that of Moſes. (W.)

CHAP. VII.

Stephen, being permitted to anſwer for himſelf, refuteth the charge of blaſphemy, in a large hiſtorical deduction, relating to the true worſhip of God, from the days of Abraham, and the patriarchs, before the temple, or tabernacle, were built, or the Jewiſh rites inſtituted: And inferreth, That it could not be blaſphemy to affirm, that God might alſo be rightly worſhipped after all theſe were aboliſh'd; reprehending the Jews withal, for their murdering Chriſt, who had been foretold by Moſes, and all the prophets. This cloſe application ſtinging them to the heart, they ſtone him to death; while the holy martyr prays to God for his murderers.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. THEN ſaid the high-prieſt, Are theſe things ſo? And he ſaid, Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken, The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Meſopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, And ſaid unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I ſhall ſhew thee. Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran: And from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell. And he gave him none inheritance in it, no not ſo much as to ſet his foot on: Yet he promiſed that he would give it to him for a poſſeſſion, and to his ſeed after him, when as yet he had no child. And God ſpake on this wiſe, that his ſeed ſhould ſojourn in a ſtrange land, and that they ſhould bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years. And the nation to whom they ſhall be in bondage, will I judge, ſaid God: And after that ſhall they come forth, and ſerve me in this place. And he gave him the covenant of circumciſion: And ſo Abraham begat Iſaac, and circumciſed him the eighth day: And Iſaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

Men, brethren and fathers.] It is cuſtomaay with the Hebrews to add the word man, when it imports no more than the word to which it is annexed. (W.) But 'tis cuſtomary likewiſe in the Greek writers of the beſt age and merit; Homer, Thucidides, Demoſthenes, Herodotus and Xenophon, as well as in the Latin of Tully. (Blackw.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 15.

The God of glory appeared.] How God appear'd to Abram, whether it were by a dream, or a viſion, or an angel, the text does not tell us: But this phraſe ſeems to make it probable, that this was done by a voice from the Schechinah, or divine preſence. (W.)

When he was in Meſopotamia.] Here note, that that part of Meſopotomia, which is next to Aſſyria, is called the land of the Chaldees: For Ur of Chaldea, as Abarbinel obſerves, was in Meſopotamia, lying in the way from Tigris to Niſibis; and therefore Ammianus, lib. v. ſpeaks of an Ur in Meſopotamia ſo ſituated: And Chaldea and Babylon are reckon'd as parts of Meſopotamia, both by Joſephus, and by Pliny. That "God appear'd to Abram when he was in Meſopotamia, (i. e. in Ur of Chaldea) before he dwelt in Haran," tho' it be not expreſly ſaid, Gen. xi. 31. yet is it to be underſtood there: For Gen. xv. 7. God ſaith expreſly to him, "I am Jehovah, that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees;" and Neh. ix. 7. the Levites ſpeak thus, "Thou art the Lord, which did chuſe Abram, and broughteſt him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees;" And therefore it is ſaid of the reſt, Gen. xi. 31. that "they went forth with them," that is, with Terah and Abram, "from Ur of Chaldea, and came to Haran." Yea, it is obſervable, that Terah is made the chief agent in this remove: For he, ſaith the text, "took Abram and Lot, and went forth from Ur of the Chaldees," with an intention to go to Canaan; whence we may gather, that Abram had made known God's call to him, and that he believed now in that God, who had thus ſpoken to his ſon. For what ſhould move him to leave Ur, but obedience to the divine call which Abram receiv'd, to which he would not have agreed, if he had not believed in God, as it is certain Lot and Sarah did, who went with them. (W.) See the notes on chap ii. 9.

Before he dwelt in Charran.] Charran, or Haran, was a city of Meſopotamia, beyond Edeſſa, called at this day Charra, where the Roman army under Craſſus was cut to pieces by the Parthians, and himſelf among the reſt. (Aſſemb. Prid. and Parker)

Get thee out of thy country.] The Jews having, in the foregoing chapter, accuſed St. Stephen of blaſpheming the law, and prophaning their temple, imagining that Almighty God was ſo pleaſed with the temple-ſervice and Moſaic rites, that no other way of worſhip could be acceptable to him: Therefore, by an hiſtorical deduction, he ſhews them, That God was worſhipped aright, before either tabernacle or temple was built, or any of the Moſaic rites inſtituted or ordained; and conſequently that the true worſhip of God was not neceſſarily and inſeparably annexed to any of theſe things. For the proof of this, he begins at Abram, and ſhews them, That he living of old at Ur of the Chaldeans, in the midſt of idolaters, God was pleaſed, of his free mercy, to call him, to enlighten, and draw him to own and worſhip the true God; commanding him to leave his native country, and go into a land which he ſhould ſhew him: He promiſed to make of him a great nation, and that in him all the families of the earth ſhould be bleſſed. Now the deſign and drift of Stephen in this relation is to prove, That Abram, from his firſt call in Chaldea, when he was ſeventy years old, to the time of his being ninety years old, had ſerved God faithfully all that time, without either circumciſion or ceremony, without tabernacle or temple; and conſequently that the true worſhip of God might be now performed acceptably, after theſe ceremonies were aboliſh'd, as well as it was perform'd before they were inſtituted. Learn hence, 1. That religious worſhip is manifeſtly due to God, by the law and light of nature. 2. That the manner how that worſhip ſhould be acceptably perform'd, was not known by the law of nature, but diſcover'd by divine revelation. Adam in innocence knew God was to be worſhipped; yet he did not know by what outward acts he was to teſtify that homage, till God, the ſovereign governour and ſupreme lawgiver, did give direction. 3. That the worſhip due from the creature to God the creator, is a ſpiritual worſhip, and ought to be ſpiritually perform'd. 4. The judaical worſhip, tho' appointed by God himſelf, was fleſhly and carnal, and never pleaſed God for its own ſake. 5. The evangelical worſhip being ſpiritual, and moſt ſuitable to the nature of God, is therefore moſt acceptable and beſt pleaſing to him. The ceremonial worſhip was therefore good, becauſe God commanded it; but the evangelical worſhip is therefore commanded becauſe good. The legal worſhip is called fleſh in ſcripture, and a carnal ordinance, in oppoſition to the Goſpel, which is called ſpirit, and a miniſtration of the ſpirit, becauſe attended with a more ſpiritual efficacy on the hearts and lives of men. (B.)

He removed him into this land.] Having proved, in the former note, that Abram went out from Ur of the Chaldees by an eſpecial call from God; the call he receiv'd, after his father's death, by virtue of which he remov'd from Charran into the land of Canaan, muſt be a ſecond call; even, that mention'd, Gen. xii. 1. "Now the Lord had ſaid to Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's houſe, to a land that I will ſhew thee." In the firſt call he is only bid to go out of his country, and from his kindred, which at his firſt removal was not completely done: Charran was in the land of Meſopotamia, as well as Ur; and though Nachor did not preſently go along with his father to Haran, yet that he follow'd him with all his family, and dwelt in Meſopotamia and in Charran, is evident: For Eliezer goes to Meſopotamia, to the city of Nachor, for Rebeccah, Laban's ſiſter, and the daughter of Bethuel, the Son of Milcah, the wife of Nachor, Gen. xxiv. 15. and Rebeccah ſent Jacob to her brother Laban to Charran, Gen. xxvii. 43. See alſo Gen. xxviii. 10. and xxix. 5. At this ſecond call therefore he is bid to depart from his country, where he yet was, and from his kindred, and from his father's houſe; and now he leaves his brother Nachor, and all his father's houſe behind him. (W.) Here St. Stephen ſays, Abram, "when his father was dead, remov'd" from Charran to the land of Canaan: And Gen. xii. 4. it is ſaid, "Abram was ſeventy and five years old, when he departed out of Haran;" and chap. xi. 26. that Terah was "ſeventy years" old, when he begat Abram; and ver. 32. that he died, being "two hundred and five years" old: But at this rate, Terah muſt have liv'd ſixty years after Abram's going from Charran: For, ſeventy-five, the number of Abram's years when he left Charran, being added to ſeventy, the number of Terah's years when he begat Abram, make 145 years only, whereas 'tis ſaid, that he liv'd 205 years. Interpreters are ſtrangely puzzled to reconcile this: But it is more natural to acknowledge, with Sir Norton Knatchbull, that there is a fault crept into the text of Moſes; and that of the 205, which are given to Terah, when he died at Charran, he only liv'd 145, according to the Samaritan verſion, and the Samaritan chronicle, which without doubt do agree with the Hebrew copy from which they were tranſlated. (Eſſay)

He promiſed that he would give.] Obſerve the great trial which God put Abram's faith unto: The Lord promiſed to give him the land of Canaan for a poſſeſſion; but he gave him not a foot's breadth: He promiſed to give it unto his ſeed, when as yet he had no child; and when God gave him ſeed, yet they were to ſojourn in a ſtrange land, Egypt, and continue there in bondage four hundred years. Learn hence, That there is no grace which God delights more to exerciſe and try, than the faith of his people: As faith puts honour upon God, ſo doth God put honour upon faith; and faith never honours God more, nor is more highly honour'd by him, than when it is put upon the greateſt exerciſe and trial, 1 Pet. i. 7. "That the trial of our faith, being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, might be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory." Here the apoſtle compares faith unto, and prefers it before, gold; even the moſt precious gold purified in the fire. Is gold precious and rare? So is faith. Is gold laſting and durable? So is Faith. Is gold purified and improved by trying in the fire? So is faith by exerciſe; as the inſtance of Abram here fully proves. (B.) The land promiſed and given to Abram, was a type of heaven promiſed to Chriſtians. A man cannot be remov'd thither, till he has forſaken the world and its deſires, and renounc'd whatever proceeds from the corruption of his firſt birth. (Q.)

Four hundred years.] That the "four hundred years" here mention'd, as alſo Gen. xv. 13. or the "four hundred and thirty," Exod. xii. 40. are not to be interpreted of the ſpace wherein the Iſraelites continued in Egypt, ſo as to begin at Jacob's and his ſons coming thither, and to end at Moſes's carrying them out, is ſufficiently manifeſt by all hiſtory of thoſe times: The Chaldee paraphraſt, and the generality of the Jews determining that ſpace to be but two hundred and ten; only Joſephus defining it two hundred and fifteen years. Firſt then, it muſt be obſerved, That the words here, and in thoſe other places, being not ſtrictly reſtrained to their dwelling in Egypt, but ſo as to contain alſo their ſojourning in Canaan, the "ſtrange land," here may fitly comprehend both of them, and the paroicon eſtai, "ſhall ſojourn," may do ſo too: For Abram ſojourned in Canaan, before his poſterity were ſojourners in Egypt, yea and himſelf firſt "ſojourned in Egypt," Gen. xii. 10. And ſo the words in Gen. xv. 13. are in the ſame latitude, "Thy ſeed ſhall be a ſtranger in a land which is not theirs, and ſhall ſerve them;" Where the "land which is not theirs," diſtinctly the "ſtrange land" here, is common to both thoſe lands, where they ſojourned, and where they were ſervants. And in the place, Exod. xii. 40. the words in our Engliſh, "The ſojourning of the children of Iſrael, who dwelt in Egypt," are reconcileable with this alſo; their ſojourning being defined to be ſo many years, part of which they dwelt in Egypt; but not their ſojourning in Egypt ſo many years. And therefore, when the Septuagint read it, The ſojourning of the children of Iſrael which they ſojourned in Egypt, they add, by way of neceſſary paraphraſe, And in the land of Canaan; and ſo the Samaritan Pentateuch read; and Solomon Jarchi, And in other lands, inſtead of it. Secondly, It muſt be obſerv'd, what latitude belongs in that place of Exod. xii. 40. to that phraſe, "children of Iſrael;" not ſo as to denote the poſterity of Jacob only, but incluſively them and their fathers, Jacob, and Iſaac, the poſterity of Abram: This is done by the figure Synecdoche, ordinary in all languages: And therefore the Septuagint, to expreſs it more plainly, thought fit to enlarge their paraphraſe; and having added Canaan to Egypt, they add alſo to the "children of Iſrael," Both they, and their fathers; and ſo read that whole verſe thus, The ſojourning of the children of Iſrael, which they and their fathers ſojourned in the land of Egypt and Canaan, was four hundred and thirty years. And tho' ſome copies of the Septuagint have not this latter addition of They and their fathers; yet St. Auguſtine, in Exod. qu. 47. acknowledgeth both additions. Mean while, the words both here, and Gen. xv. 13. have no need of ſuch a paraphraſe, aſſigning it to Abraham's, not to Jacob's ſeed. And ſo ſaith Joſephus, Antiq. l. 2. They left Egypt in the month Xanthicus, on the fifteenth day, four hundred and thirty years after our father Abraham came into Canaan. So that now, the only difficulty behind, is to accord the "four hundred years" here, and in Geneſis, with the "four hundred and thirty" in Exodus: And that muſt be, by diſtinguiſhing of the beginning of the account; which may be either from Abraham's leaving Chaldæa, and receiving the firſt promiſe of Canaan; or elſe from the birth of Iſaac, Abraham's ſeed. If the account be begun from the leaving Chaldæa, Abraham's own country, when his ſojourning did begin, then it falls right, to be "four hundred and thirty years," as it is in Exodus: For Abram, being born in the year of the world 2007, and the warning of God to him, to "go out of his country, being in the 70th year of his age, that is, in the 2077th of the world, "four hundred and thirty years," added to that number, make up 2507. and in the next year after that, is the departure out of Egypt placed by the beſt chronologers. But, if the account begin from Abraham's ſeed, that is, from the birth of Iſaac, which we know was in the hundredth year of Abraham's age, and ſo thirty years after his departure from Chaldæa, then it muſt conſequently be thirty years leſs from thence to the departure out of Egypt; and ſo that will accord exactly with the "four hundred years" here, and in Geneſis, which are aſſign'd to his "ſeeds ſojourning in a ſtrange land." Thus the Jews, in Seder Olam, collect from that place in Geneſis, "Thy ſeed ſhall be a ſtranger, &c. four hundred years;" that is, Iſaac, from his birth, and his poſterity, till the delivery out of Egypt by Moſes: Of which ſpace, the ſervitude and oppreſſion of the Iſralites in Egypt came not (ſay they) to much above one hundred and thirty years; but their ſtay, after Jacob's deſcent, to two hundred and ten; to which adding one hundred and ninety years, from Iſaac's birth to Jacob's going down into Egypt (which is accordingly placed by Chronologers, A. M. 2298.) the whole four hundred years are made up exactly (H. and Fox) See the notes on John xx. 26.

The nation, to whom they ſhall be in bondage, will I judge.] Crino; I will puniſh: And ſo God did the Egyptians, with diverſe heavy Judgments. (Aſs.) God makes uſe of ſinners, and their paſſions, to puniſh and to purify his people; but he likewiſe puniſhes the former in their turn. He delivers his ſervants from their viſible or inviſible enemies, for no other end, but that he may render them worthy to ſerve him. He has his own peculiar time and ſeaſon for his deliverance: It is our duty to wait for it; and in the mean while to pray and to hope. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 20.

And ſerve me in this place.] This is not ſaid expreſly, Gen. xv. 14. But ver. 16 it is ſaid, that "in the fourth generation they ſhall come hither again;" which ſeems equivalent to this expreſſion. This ſeems preferable to the expoſition of ſome, who refer this to what is ſaid, Exod. iii. 12. four hundred years after, viz. "Ye ſhall ſerve God upon this mountain;" that being mount Sinai in Arabia, and not the place, or land, where St. Stephen was when he ſpake theſe words. (W. and F.)

Gave him the covenant of circumciſion.] Obſerve, how God takes Abraham and his ſeed into covenant with him, and gives him circumſion, the ſeal of the covenant. Thence learn, that in the covenant which God made with Abraham, he gave himſelf to be a God to Abraham and to his ſeed, and received Abraham and his ſeed to be a people to himſelf. 2. That circumciſion was both the ſign and the ſeal of the covenant which God made with Abraham, and his ſeed, the people of the Jews: It is here called "the covenant of circumciſion," becauſe circumciſion was both the ſign and the ſeal of that covenant made with Abraham. 1. Circumciſion was the ſign, and that in ſeveral reſpects: It was the commemorative ſign of God's covenant with Abraham: It was a repreſentative ſign of Abraham's faith and obedience towards God: A demonſtrative ſign of original ſin, and the depravity of human nature: A diſcriminating and diſtinguiſhing ſign of the true church, and people of God, from all the reſt of the world: An initiating ſign, by which all ſtrangers were admitted into the Jewiſh church: And laſtly, it was a prefigurative ſign of baptiſm; which ſucceeded in the room of circumciſion in the chriſtian church. 2. Circumciſion was not only a ſign, but a ſeal alſo, Rom. iv. 11. "He received the ſign of circumciſion, the ſeal of the righteouſneſs by faith." It was a ſeal on God's part, to confirm all the promiſes made to Abraham and his ſeed; and it was a ſeal on his and their part, to bind them to renounce the ſervice of all other gods, and to oblige them to the obſervation of the whole Jewiſh law. (B.) See the notes on Luke xxii. 20.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. And the Patriarchs, moved with envy, ſold Joſeph into Egypt: but God was with him, And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wiſdom in the ſight of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and all his houſe. Now there came dearth over all the land of Egypt and Canaan, and great affliction; and our fathers found no ſuſtenance. But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he ſent out our fathers firſt: And at the ſecond time Joſeph was made known to his brethren; and Joſeph's kindred was known unto Pharaoh. Then ſent Joſeph and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threeſcore and fifteen ſouls. So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he and our fathers, And were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the ſepulchre that Abraham bought for a ſum of money of the ſons of Emmor, the father of Sychem.

The patriarchs.] Here St. Stephen purpoſely recites ſome great faults of the patriarchs, to teach the Jews, that they ought not unadviſedly to inſiſt upon the authority and examples of their fathers. (Beza)

Moved with envy.] Zeloſantes. See the notes on ch. v. 17.

Sold Joſeph into Egypt.] Here St. Stephen proceeds to the hiſtory of Joſeph, and ſhews, That Joſeph, as well as Abraham, worſhipped God acceptably, without either temple, or tabernacle, or any ſuch cuſtoms as Moſes delivered: And conſequently, That the worſhip of God is not confined to any Moſaical miniſtrations; nor could it therefore be blaſphemy in him to ſay, that God might be ſo worſhipped without them. (B.)

Threeſcore and fifteen ſouls.] There is ſome difference between the accounts of Moſes, Gen xlvi. 27. and Deut. x. 22. and that of St. Stephen here: But this will be no unſurmountable difficulty, when it is conſider'd, That the deſign of Moſes ſeems to be, to number Jacob, and thoſe who proceeded out of his loins; whereas St. Stephen's deſign was not to number Jacob's family, but the perſons Joſeph ſent into Egypt. This takes in their kindred; that is, their wives, as well as their deſcendants from Jacob. Among the "threeſcore and fifteen," Jacob, the head of the family, is not reckoned; nor Joſeph, nor his two ſons, becauſe they were already in Egypt. But the "threeſcore and fifteen" may be thus computed: Joſeph's brethren and their wives two and twenty; their children two and fifty; and their ſiſter Dinah, which makes up the number before-mentioned. (Fox) Beſides this, the more inquiſitive reader may ſee it otherwiſe accounted for, by Hammond, Lightfoot, Whitby and Surenhuſius.

And were carried over into Sychem.] All interpreters acknowledge, that there is an inſuperable difficulty in what the verſions make St. Stephen ſay here, "So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he and our fathers, and were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the ſepulchre that Abraham bought for a ſum of money of the ſons of Emmor the father of Sychem." For, 1. This verſion ſuppoſes, that Jacob was tranſported to Sychem with the fathers, contrary to the authority of ſcripture; which expreſly ſays, that Jacob was tranſported a long time before the going out of Egypt; and that "he was buried by his ſons in the cave of the field of Macpelah, which Abraham bought with the field for a poſſeſſion of a burying-place, of Ephron the Hittite," Gen. l. 13. 2. This verſion ſuppoſes, That Abraham bought the ſepulchre from the ſons of Emmor; contrary to the truth of the hiſtory, which ſays, That he bought it from Ephron the Hittite, Gen. xxiii. 16. and that it was Jacob who bought one from the ſons of Emmor, Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19. 3. It ſuppoſes, That Emmor was the ſon of Sychem; contrary to the truth of the ſame hiſtory, which plainly ſays, that Emmor was the father of Sychem, Gen. xxxiii. 19. and therefore our tranſlators have well inſerted the word father here. 4. It ſuppoſes, That the fathers were buried at Sychem, againſt all probability: For, according to reaſon, and the cuſtom of thoſe times, they muſt have been buried in the ſame place with their forefathers; that is to ſay, at Hebron, ſince Jacob, after his death, was laid in the cave of the "field of Macpelah, which Abraham had bought" for a burial-place, without doubt for his family; according as Jacob himſelf ſays to Joſeph, "But I will lie with my fathers, and thou ſhalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying-place," Gen. xlvii. 30, 31. where "they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife, where they buried Iſaac and Rebecca his wife, and where I buried Leah, ch. xlix. 31." 'Tis then very probable, that the ſons of Jacob were buried in the ſame grave with Jacob and Leah; and that Joſeph only was buried at Sychem (according to the oath, which he "took of the children of Iſrael," ch. l. 25.) "in a parcel of ground, which Jacob bought of the ſons of Hamor, the father of Shechem, for an hundred pieces of ſilver (called lambs) and it became the inheritance of the children of Joſeph," Joſh. xxiv. 32. There is nothing that can be oppoſed to this, but the conjecture of St. Jerome; who ſays, that the brethren of Joſeph were buried at Sychem. But to him we may oppoſe Joſephus, whoſe authority is no leſs to be valued in a matter of fact which concern'd his own nation; and who ſays expreſly, That the brethren of Joſeph died in Egypt, and that their ſons and grandſons carried and buried their bodies at Hebron; to wit, in the cave of the field of Macpelah, which is Hebron, which was "made ſure unto Abraham, for a poſſeſſion for a burying-place, by the ſons of Heth," Gen. xxiii. 20. But that the bones of Joſeph were carried into Canaan by the Hebrews, when they came out of Egypt, according to the oath which Joſeph took of them. This relation of Joſephus has nothing that can be ſuſpected, nor that is contrary to the ſacred hiſtory: And the Hebrews did nothing upon this occaſion contrary to their duty, or contrary to reaſon; they firſt buried the bones of Joſeph at Sychem, perhaps to diſtinguiſh him from his brethren, becauſe he had been governor of all Egypt; and they carried from thence the bones of his brethren, to bury them at Hebron. Interpreters have run to ſeveral violent remedies, to juſtify this verſion, and to ſolve thoſe difficulties. Some have not ſcrupled to acknowledge, that there is a fault crept into the original; and that we muſt put the name of Jacob in the place of that of Abraham; or take the word Abraham in the genitive, which would then ſignify the grand-ſon of Abraham, to wit, Jacob; or that we muſt take this name for a patronymick, which would likewiſe denote Jacob; or that we muſt quite blot it out; and that it is the production of ſome ignorant perſon, who not knowing who had bought the ſepulchre, had put the word Abraham on the margin, over againſt the verb bought; which tranſcribers, no leſs ignorant, had afterwards brought into the body of the text. Others don't attribute this fault to St. Luke, for fear of weakening the authority of the holy ſcripture; but to St. Stephen, whoſe memory was diſturbed upon that occaſion, and made him confound Abraham's purchaſe with that of Jacob. But, not to inſiſt upon the particular refutation of thoſe opinions, it's ſufficient to obſerve, That we cannot ſuppoſe, that either St. Luke or St. Stephen could have been deceiv'd, without giving advantage to Deiſts or Libertines, and without contradicting the holy ſcripture, which repreſents them as guided by the Holy Ghoſt, who could not ſuffer them to fall into a fault of this nature, which the Jews had not failed to magnify. 'Tis much more natural to tranſlate the text, with Lud. de Dieu, and Sir Norton Knatchbull, thus; "So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he and our fathers, and were carried over into Sychem, and laid," by the ſons of Emmor, the father of Sychem, "in the ſepulchre that Abraham bought for a ſum of money." This verſion has nothing but what's agreeable to the terms of the original, and to the truth of the hiſtory; and could give no occaſion to the prophane to cavil, or to the pious to doubt. (Eſſay)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. But when the time of the promiſe drew nigh, which God had ſworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt, Till another king aroſe, which knew not Joſeph. The ſame dealt ſubtilly with our kindred, and evil entreated our fathers, ſo that they caſt out their young children, to the end they might not live. In which time Moſes was born, and was exceeding fair, and nouriſhed up in his father's houſe three months: And when he was caſt out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nouriſhed him for her own ſon. And Moſes was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and deeds. And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to viſit his brethren the children of Iſrael. And ſeeing one of them ſuffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppreſſed, and ſmote the Egyptian: For he ſuppoſed his brethren would have underſtood, how that God by his hand would deliver them; but they underſtood not. And the next day he ſhewed himſelf unto them as they ſtrove, and would have ſet them at one again, ſaying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another? But he that did his neighbour wrong, thruſt him away, ſaying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us? Wilt thou kill me as thou didſt the Egyptian yeſterday? Then fled Moſes at this ſaying, and was a ſtranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two ſons. And when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderneſs of mount Sina, an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a buſh. When Moſes ſaw it, he wondered at the ſight: And as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moſes trembled, and durſt not behold. Then ſaid the Lord unto him, Put off thy ſhoes from thy feet; for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground. I have ſeen, I have ſeen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will ſend thee into Egypt. This Moſes whom they refuſed, ſaying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the ſame did God ſend to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hands of the angel which appeared to him in the buſh. He brought them out, after that he had ſhewed wonders and ſigns in the land of Egypt, and in the Red ſea, and in the wilderneſs forty years.

The people grew and multiplied.] Their mighty increaſe, no doubt, proceeded more immediately from the ſpecial direction of divine providence. How far natural cauſes might have contributed, under that, is what we muſt not pretend to determine. Only, 'tis worth our notice, That Ariſtotle obſerves, that the country of Egypt, in which the Hebrew women bred ſo plentifully, was ſtrangely prolifick. The Egyptian women, ſays he, are known to have brought forth three or four children at a birth. None among them were barren, but brought forth every year. They commonly had more than one at a time: And tho' ſuch are frequently very weak, and not long-liv'd, yet theſe grew up to be men and women, and to have children of their own ſtrong and luſty. Rabbi Salom. ſays, That ſometimes the Hebrew women had ſix at a birth: And Aben Ezra, That he himſelf had ſeen four ſons, which were born of one woman at one labour. (Park.)

Another king aroſe, which knew not Joſeph.] That he did not know him perſonally is poſſible, becauſe this was 64 years after Joſeph's death. (W.) But that he ſhould not know, either that there had been ſuch a prime miniſter in his predeceſſor's reign, or what his adminiſtration was, is not to be ſuppoſed: But only, that he did not like his meaſures, or reliſh his proceedings, much leſs ſubmit or adhere to the conſtitutions introduced by him. Thus I. B. Uz. explains it; adding moreover, that neither did he walk in the ſtatutes of Joſeph. Which remark in general is confirmed by a parallel we meet with, Judg. ii. 10. (Park.) To ſee the beſt of men want the protection of earthly powers is a misfortune, and a temptation to thoſe who have but little faith: But, to thoſe whoſe faith is lively, it is an earneſt of God's protection, and a happy omen of their approaching deliverance. (Q.)

The ſame dealt ſubtilly.] The Syriac hath, He oppoſed, or ſet himſelf againſt them. The Greek word cataſophiſamenos, of cataſophizo, (which is ſophiſtically to deceive, to beguile, or circumvent with a fallacy,) importeth craftily deviſing, or plotting againſt. He alludeth to that which Pharaoh ſaid, Exod. i. 10. Where the Hebrew word, nithchachema, ſignifies the being crafty, as well as wiſe. So the phraſe here importeth a clandeſtine and ſecret deſtroying the Iſraelites. For ſo he firſt gave in charge to the midwives, Exod. i. 16. but, that not taking, he uſed open violence; commanding the male-infants to be caſt into the river, ver. 22. (Aſſemb.) Rab. Salom. ſays, 'Twas a receiv'd opinion among the Rabbins, that the Egyptians choſe to deſtroy the Hebrews rather by drowning than any other way, becauſe they underſtood, that the God of the Hebrews had tied himſelf up from retaliating that way, by an oath that he would never again bring a flood. (Park.) Deceit and force are generally employ'd againſt the church, the truth, and the defenders thereof. God multiplies his people, partly to the end they may be perſecuted: He ſuffers the world to perſecute them, in order to wean them from it, to ſanctify them, and to prepare them for the enjoyment of the eternal promiſes. But the more men ſtrive to overturn the works of God, the more are we to hope for the accompliſhment of them; ſince this is the way of the ſaints. (Q.)

They caſt out their young children.] What poiein ectheta ſignifies, there can be ſmall doubt. 'Tis, after the Hebrew idiom, no more than ectithenai, to expoſe, or caſt out helpleſs, to certain ruin; in the ſame manner as poieſai eleos, to do mercy, Luk. i. 72. is eleein, to pity, or commiſerate. All that is here to be taken care of is, that tou poiein be ſo rendred, as that it may with truth belong to Pharaoh, the agent in this verſe, and not to the Iſraelites, who were ſo ill-handled by him. As it lies in our ordinary Engliſh, and the vulgar Latin, it ſeems to refer to the Iſraelites expoſing their own children; "Pharaoh dealt ſubtilly with our fathers, ſo that they caſt out," that muſt be our fathers caſt out, and ſo the Latin, ut exponerent infantes ſuos; which perhaps was thought to have truth in Moſes's mother, Exod. ii. 3. But it muſt be remembred, That what ſhe did, was by her deſigned (as the hiding ver. 2.) to the preſerving of the child, whereas here the expoſing of the children is ſaid to be "to the end they might not" be preſerved, or kept alive. It muſt therefore be reſolved, that tou poiein belongs to Pharaoh: He that "evil intreated" the Iſraelites did it in, or by, expoſing, or caſting out, their children;" for ſo the infinitive mood, with, or without the article, but eſpecially with it, is to be rendred, after the manner of a gerund, faciendo, in, or by expoſing. Without the article 'tis Acts xv. 10. "Why tempt ye God," epitheinai, in, or by, impoſing a yoke: With it, Ruth i. 6. where the Hebrew read, "The Lord had viſited his people," (which we rightly render) in (or by) giving them bread; the Greek hath, epeſceptai dounai, and in Aſulanus's copy, tou dounai, as here tou poiein. And Pſal. lxxviii. 18. "They tempted God in their hearts," we rightly render, "by asking meat for their luſts;" the Greek in all copies hath, They tempted God, by, or in, asking. Now what Pharaoh did, by his bloody officers, or by his people, that is, the Egyptians, to whom the charge is given, Exod. i. 22. himſelf is fitly ſaid to do. (H.)

In which time Moſes was born.] From the hiſtory of Abraham and Joſeph, St. Stephen proceeds to that of Moſes; wherein are ſeveral particulars, to be noted on the following verſes. (B.) Moſes, as a type of Chriſt, is born in a ſtrange land, in a time of great neceſſity, on purpoſe to fulfil the promiſes. Becauſe he was acceptable to God, therefore was he perſecuted by men, from the very time of his birth. But who is it, that, when he conſiders the paternal providence of God over Moſes, (as well as over Abram aud Joſeph,) will not ſtill hope in God, even under the moſt deſperate circumſtances? Who can diſtruſt his providence, in the greateſt want and neceſſities? (Q.)

And was exceeding fair.] Aſteios to Theo, fair to God, may be an Hebrew phraſe for "exceeding fair;" for ſo the word may ſometimes import an auxeſis, or increaſe: But it is poſſible, that the to Theo here may be a miſtake of the ſcribe, for te thea, to ſee, or look on; for ſo Exod. ii. 2. where this is related, it is ſaid, "When ſhe ſaw him that he was a goodly child;" and Hebr. xi. 23. eidon aſteion, "They ſaw he was a proper child." (H.) Moſes was fair to Theo; that is, by the ſingular providence and counſel of God, that hereby Pharaoh's daughter might be moved to ſave him, and bring him up as her ſon, thereby fitting him for the great work to which God had aſſign'd him. (Aſſemb.) With this great beauty of Moſes, the ancient Heathens were acquainted. For Juſtin, out of Trogus, ſaith, The gracefulneſs of his countenance recommended him to others: And Huet ſhews, That the whole ſtory of Adonis, hid by Venus in an ark, and deliver'd to Proſerpina, becauſe ſhe admired the great beauty of the infant, was framed out of this ſtory of Moſes. (W.)

Learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians.] Like to this ſaying is that of Lucian, of an Egyptian prieſt, skilled in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians. But what this learning of the Egyptians then was, 'tis not eaſy to define. I ſuppoſe, with the Pſeudo-Juſtin, that it might be aſtronomy, aſtrology, and geometry; to which you may add, from Clemens of Alexandria, skill in phyſick: But whereas Philo adds, arithmetick, muſick, hieroglyphical learning, and ſaith, that the Greeks, ſent for into Egypt for that purpoſe, taught him the liberal ſciences, he is utterly out; for the Greeks had no learning till long after the time of Moſes, as Clemens Alexandrinus, Joſephus, and may others teſtify; and what they had was at firſt borrowed from other nations; Moſes, ſaith Joſephus, being older, not only than their learning, but even than their laws, and gods. (W.) Hence note, that the greater men are, the greater ſhould their care be for the learned and religious education of their children; becauſe nothing is more incongruous and unſuitable, than greatneſs of eſtate and meanneſs of underſtanding. Moſes was learned in all the "wiſdom of the Egyptians." Where obſerve, 1. The different end which God had in his providence, from what Pharaoh's daughter had in her particular care. She intended, by this education of Moſes, the good of Egypt; but God intended the good of Iſrael: She deſign'd the good of Pharaoh; but God deſign'd Moſes to be a deliverer from Pharaoh. Thus the wiſe and holy providence of God uſeth the diligence of men, to bring things about which they never thought of. 2. How that great prophet, whom God ſpake to, mouth to mouth, is here commended for his learning; yea, for Egyptian learning. Thence we may gather, That human learning is a noble and beneficial gift of God, and a very great honour and ornament unto the greateſt and moſt excellent men; for it is in it ſelf an ornament and perfection to the mind; it renders men the more uſeful and ſerviceable in their generation, and a greater bleſſing to human ſociety, but eſpecially to the church of God. Human learning indeed is far inferior to holineſs; but in holy men, learning is a rare ornament and acceſſion to holineſs: Sanctify'd wit beautifies religion; ſanctify'd reaſon defends it; ſanctify'd power protects it; ſanctify'd elocution perſwades others to the love of it. So that to decry the uſe of human learning muſt proceed either from ignorance, or from malice, and a deſire to have religion betray'd. Let us ſee, that we get our learning ſeaſon'd with holineſs, that we uſe it with humility, moderation and ſobriety, as an handmaid unto Chriſt: Not vain-glorioully unto oſtentation; not proudly with contempt of others; not heretically in defence of error; never ſuffering human learning, but divine revelation, to determine the articles of faith: Then if, with Moſes, we be learned in all the learning of the philoſophers, the more glory we ſhall bring to God, and be the more uſeful and beneficial to mankind. (B.)

It came into his heart to viſit his brethren.] Epiſcepſaſthai. Which as it ſometimes importeth viſiting to puniſh, Jer. v. 9. ſo alſo it ſignifieth, to viſit for help and comfort; as phyſicians viſit their patients, Luke vii. 16. So were the governors of the church call'd Epiſcopi, quorum eſt inſpectio in præſidiis Chriſti, & ſumma cura, ſaith Budæus; becauſe they were, quaſi ſpeculatores, overſeers of the faith and manners of the people committed to their charge, chap. xx. 28. So the apoſtles viſited the churches which they had planted, to reform their errors in faith and converſation, and to confirm and comfort them in the truth. Now, that Moſes having been brought up forty years in king Pharaoh's court, ſhould on a ſudden have "it come into his heart," to look into the condition of his afflicted brethren the Iſraelites, it appeareth to be by the inſtinct and motion of God's Spirit, to do that which neither they nor Moſes before thought of. (Aſſem.)

Smote the Egyptian.] As is related, Exod. ii. 11. Wherein he did not give us any example for any private revenge; but to ſhew them, that he was appointed by God to deliver Iſrael, which he "ſuppoſed his brethren would have underſtood:" For the power of the ſword is in the lawful magiſtrate only. (Idem.) But what reaſon was there for the Iſraelites to ſuppoſe, that Moſes was the perſon deſigned by God for their delivery? Anſwer, Very great reaſon; becauſe, 1. They knew that the time of their deliverance did now draw very near. 2. From the extraordinarineſs of Moſes's preſervation; by his being hid three months in his father's houſe without diſcovery; by his floating upon the waters in the ark of bulruſhes without danger, when an infant; they might have rationally thought that ſuch a perſon was deſigned by God for very great purpoſes. 3. From his readineſs to defend them at this time, when an Iſraelite and an Egyptian contended: for it was wonderful, that ſo great a perſon as Moſes was, and might have been, ſhould concern himſelf in a private quarrel betwixt two obſcure perſons. Moſes might well "ſuppoſe that his brethren would have underſtood, how that God by his hand would have delivered them; but they underſtood it not." (B.)

Who made thee a ruler and a judge?] Obſerve here the ill treatment given to Moſes, when he offered himſelf to be a reconciler. They "thruſt him away, ſaying," &c. Where note, 1. Who were the perſons doing wrong to each other: They were Iſraelites; both Iſraelites: To ſee an Iſraelite and an Egyptian ſtruggling, had been no Wonder; but to ſee two Iſraelites, who were brethren, brethren by nation, brethren in religion, brethren in tribulation, both of the ſeed of Abraham, both initiated into the ſame covenant, both in bondage to a cruel tyrant, who had condemned them to an ignominious ſlavery, and deſigned ſuch a degree of cruelty, as to murther all the male iſſue: This was an aſtoniſhing ſight; and Moſes might well ſay, "Why do ye wrong one to another?" Plainly implying, that both parties were to blame; but that party moſt, who would not hear of a reconciliation, or putting a ſtop to the quarrel. A reconciler is more odious than a ſtranger, in the apprehenſion of ſome. 2. How Moſes, being thus ill treated by them, departs from them, and they hear no more of him for forty years, ver. 29. "Then fled Moſes, and was a ſtranger in the land of Midian:" Where obſerve, The years of Moſes's life were an hundred and twenty; Forty years he ſpent at the court in Egypt; forty years he ſpent in Midian, with his father-in-law Jethro; and the laſt forty years of his life in the wilderneſs. Now all this time Moſes was a worſhipper of the true God, and that in an acceptable manner; and moſt of this time he worſhipped God without either tabernacle or temple: From whence St. Stephen draws his argument to prove, That as God was acceptably worſhipped by holy men, before either tabernacle or temple were erected, in like manner he may be ſo again, after both tabernacle and temple are deſtroyed; and conſequently, that they unjuſtly accuſed him of blaſphemy, or ſpeaking blaſphemous words againſt Moſes, and againſt God. (Idem.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 18.

When forty years were expired.] As in Exod. iii. 2. Here was the long trial of Moſes's faith; and the miſchief which one or a few men's ſins brought upon all Iſrael: Driving away their deliverer, and as much as in them was, lengthening their heavy oppreſſion forty years. This was their ingratitude to God and Moſes; whom they ſorely wanted all that time. (Aſſem.)

An angel of the Lord.] That God himſelf was glorioully preſent here, attended with his holy angels as his miniſters, of which one appeared in the buſh, and was by God employed in forming the voice by which he ſpake to him, is evident, 1. From the expreſs aſſertion of Chriſt, viz. That "God ſpake to Moſes in the buſh," Mark xii. 26. So Moſes himſelf informs us, when he prays, Deut. xxxiii. 16. That "the bleſſing of him that appeared in the buſh might fall upon the head of Joſeph;" that is, ſaith Onkelos, Of him whoſe majeſty dwells in the heavens, and was revealed to Moſes in the buſh; Saith B. Uziel, Of him who made the glory of his divine majeſty dwell in the buſh. 2. This appears from the words here ſpoken, ſaith Stephen, by "the voice of the Lord, I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, I have heard the affliction of my people, I will ſend thee into Egypt;" and alſo from the words in Exodus: For there Moſes, who went boldly towards the angel, to ſee that great ſight, when God ſaid, "I am the God of Abraham," trembled, and durſt not behold, Exod. iii. 6. being "afraid to look upon God;" and, ver. 13. Moſes ſaid to God, "What is thy name?" and God anſwers, "I am;" and bids him ſay, "I am, and the God of your fathers hath ſent me to you." And laſtly, if theſe names could belong to a created angel, I would gladly know how Chriſt received "a more excellent name than the angels;" as we read, Heb. i. 4. So that God was here preſent, as the chief perſon ſpeaking to Moſes; the angel only as his miniſter and attendant. (W.) This buſh was an emblem of the church: This buſh burning, pointed out the afflicted ſtate of the church in Egypt, having a long time been in the fiery furnace there; but the burning buſh, not conſumed, ſignified the churches preſervation. God was in the midſt of the buſh, whilſt the buſh was in the midſt of the burning. Where note, 1. How Almighty God intending to ſend Moſes, as a deliverer of his people out of Egypt, gives him a viſible ſign for confirming of his faith, in the ſight of this burning, but unconſumed buſh. 2. To aſſure him of his people's deliverance, that tho' they were now ſlaves in Egypt, yet they ſhould be ſet free, and enſtated in a land flowing with milk and honey; and to ſatisfy him that he ſhould be the inſtrument to bring to paſs ſo glorious a work. O how gracious is God's condeſcenſion towards his ſervants, who is pleaſed by viſible ſigns to ſupport the weakneſs of their faith! "The Lord appeared to Moſes in a flame of fire in the buſh." 2. How Moſes, in the faith of God's preſence with him, protection over him, and aſſiſtance of him, goes forth to Egypt, where he works many ſigns and wonders before Pharaoh, and at laſt brings the people forth into the wilderneſs to mount Sinai, where God gave them his law, and appointed Moſes then to make a tabernacle for his worſhip. Now, the uſe which St. Stephen makes of this, is to convince the Jews, that, for above four hundred years, their fathers had worſhipped God without any taber nacle at all; and conſequently, that now that ſort of worſhip was aboliſhed, God might be very acceptably ſerved and worſhipped in the abſence of it. (B.)

I am the God of thy fathers.] That Moſes might not doubt of his calling, God, who called him, revealeth himſelf to him; to which end alſo he mentioneth his mercies to the fathers, unto whom he made the promiſes of delivering his people, their poſterity, from the bondage they were now in; to aſſure him that he would perform the ſame, and that the time was now come wherein he would do it. Hereon was Moſes's confidence grounded, becauſe he had the ſure covenant of God with the fathers, and his word to himſelf for his warrant. From this place, Exod. iii. 6. Chriſt proveth the reſurrection of the dead, Matt. xxii. 31. Where ſee the notes.

I have ſeen, I have ſeen.] This, in the Septuagint, and the New Teſtament writers, is a vigorous repetition, after the Hebrew dialect; but 'tis, at the ſame time, pure Greek. Lucian has it; and 'tis quoted by Pſochenius: But his adverſary ſets aſide Lucian's authority, and ſays, he mixes many poetical phraſes in his ſtyle, and inſinuates this may be one: Or elſe he rather ſuppoſes, that that ſcoffing buffoon uſes it here, by way of contempt and ridicule of the ſacred phraſe. Tho' I think there is no ground for theſe ſuppoſitions, let them paſs. We prove the expreſſion claſſical, by authority ſuperior; and ſuch as muſt entirely ſilence all cavils. In Herodotus, Thucidides and Plato, are the ſame repetitions expreſſed in the ſame manner. (Blackw.) But, to avoid ridiculous ſpeculations, we ſhould tranſlate it, I have certainly ſeen, &c. (Eſſay). God is ſaid to ſee our evil or affliction, when he regardeth it ſo as to undertake our deliverance: As, on the contrary, he is ſaid to ſhut his eyes or ears, or to turn away, when he will not regard or deliver. This is ſpoken to our capacity. And ſo he is ſaid to hear their groanings, and to come down: Tho' indeed the evidence of every fact or paſſion be ever preſent with him; and tho' he who "filleth heaven and earth," comprehending all, comprehenſible of none, changeth not place, Jer. xxiii. 24. Yet is he ſaid to deſcend, when he evidently manifeſteth his preſence. This Stephen here mentioneth, to beat down all opinion of merit in their fathers. God ſaw nothing in them but afflictions to pity. (Aſſem.)

This Moſes, whom they refuſed, ſaying.] Tho' only one of them ſaid to him, "Who made thee a ruler," &c. yet that one is thought to have been a ruler of a tribe; and ſo to have ſpoken in the name of the reſt. Moreover, none of them acknowledged him, as one by God appointed to be their prince, and ſaviour out of the hands of the Egyptians: And therefore it is ſaid, that erneſanto, they denied him; as the Jews are ſaid to deny that Jeſus, whom they would not acknowledge. See the notes on ch. iii. 14. (W.)

He brought them out.] Houtos; which ought to be render'd emphatically, This very man. (Maſſey.)

Ver. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53. This is that Moſes which ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you, of your brethren, like unto me; him ſhall ye hear. This is he that was in the church in the wilderneſs, with the angel which ſpake to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us: To whom our fathers would not obey, but thruſt him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt, Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us; for as for this Moſes, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him. And they made a calf in thoſe days, and offered ſacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands. Then God turned, and gave them up to worſhip the hoſt of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye houſe of Iſrael, have ye offered to me ſlain beaſts, and ſacrifices, by the ſpace of forty years in the wilderneſs? Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the ſtar of your god Remphan, figures which ye made, to worſhip them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witneſs in the wilderneſs, as he had appointed, ſpeaking unto Moſes, that he ſhould make it according to the faſhion that he had ſeen: Which alſo our fathers that came after, brought in with Jeſus into the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles, whom God drave out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David: Who found favour before God, and deſired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob. But Solomon built him an houſe. Howbeit the moſt High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as ſaith the prophet, Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footſtool: What houſe will ye build me? ſaith the Lord? Or what is the place of my reſt? Hath not my hand made all theſe things? Ye ſtiff-necked, and uncircumciſed in heart and ears, ye do always reſiſt the holy Ghoſt: As your fathers did, ſo do ye. Which of the prophets have not your fathers perſecuted? And they have ſlain them which ſhewed before, of the coming of the juſt One, of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers: Who have received the law by the diſpoſition of angels, and have not kept it.

A prophet.] See the notes on ch. iii. 22.

In the church, in the wilderneſs, with the angel.] When the people were encamped "in the wilderneſs," Moſes was called up to Mount Sinai, where an "angel ſpake to him," and the Iſraelites, Exod. xix. 3. (H.) Perhaps the ſame angel which appeared to him, as an attendant on the divine Majeſty in the buſh. For, tho' the law was given "by the diſpoſition of angels," ver. 53. yet ſeems there to have been a principal angel, (perhaps "Michael their prince," Dan. x. 21.) who attended upon Moſes and the children of Iſrael; and who is therefore ſtiled by God, "My angel," Exod. xxiii. 23. that is, ſaith Baal Hatturim, Michael, my peculiar angel: So alſo, Exod. xxxii. 34. and Numb. xx. 16. where the Jews underſtand it of Michael the prince: Who therefore ſaith, Joſh. v. 14. "As captain of the hoſt of the Lord am I now come;" which is the title of Michael, Dan. x. 13. But this is not ſo to be underſtood, as to exclude the preſence of God himſelf: For this angel was ſent from the ſchechinah, or divine preſence, which was in the pillar of the cloud. (W.)

Received the lively oracles.] The law of Moſes is here ſtiled "the lively oracles:" Not becauſe they were able to give life; for that St. Paul expreſly denies, Gal. iii. 21. calling this law the miniſtry of death and condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 6, 9. But becauſe they were oracles, proceeding not from dumb idols, but from the living God, and promiſing a proſperous and happy life in Canaan to all which obeyed them, Lev. xviii. 5. Deut. xv. 16. and xxxii. 47. On which account this word is ſtiled, Heb. iv. 12. the word of the living God, and 1 Pet. i. 23. the living word of God, as being quick and vital in its operations. (Idem.)

They made a calf.] Here note, 1. That the calf, worſhipped by the Jews, is expreſly called an idol; and they who worſhipped it are expreſly ſtiled idolaters, 1 Cor. x. 7. and with good reaſon, becauſe they changed the image of the incorruptible God into the ſimilitude of a calf, Pſal. cvi. 19, 20. 2. That the worſhip, performed by them to this golden calf, was worſhip directed by them to the true God; viz. to that God which brought them from the land of Egypt; for when they had made them a molten calf, they ſaid, "This is thy God, which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt," Nehem. ix. 18. Nor can we otherwiſe conceive, if we conſider, 1. That, by this God, they could not poſſibly intend to ſignify the very image they had made; there being nothing more repugnant to common ſenſe, and more irrationally ſtupid, than to conceive that what they made the other day, was both their maker and preſerver, whilſt it was nothing in the world; and that it gave them power, before it was in being: Men may aſſert ſuch things, who have no other refuge or defence, but cannot poſſibly believe themſelves in what they do affirm. 2. They could not be conceived to affirm, that this God, who brought them out of the Land of Egypt, was the Egyptian Serapis; For then they muſt imagine, that this Egyptian God wrought all the miracles they ſaw done in Egypt, upon thoſe that owned and worſhipped him, in favour of thoſe perſons who did not own him for a God, but looked upon him as a devil; and that he did inflict the heavieſt judgments upon them that fear'd him, and ſhew'd the greateſt kindneſs unto thoſe that feared him not, by ſeparating betwixt them and the Egyptians, and not permitting any of his judgments to moleſt or touch them: They muſt believe, that the Egyptian Serapis had enjoined them to abſtain from all thoſe modes of worſhip with which he was ſerved in Egypt, as an abomination to him; for "in the day that he lifted up his hand unto them to bring them forth of the land of Egypt,——then ſaid he unto them, Caſt ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not your ſelves with the idols of Egypt, I am the Lord your God," Ezek. xx. 6, 7. Laſtly, They muſt believe, that he who executed his judgments on the Egyptian gods, was the Egyptian god, and that the god of the Hebrews, who ſaid, "Let my people go, that they may ſerve me," Exod. v. 1. was the god of Egypt; and that he who wrought thoſe miracles unto this end, that "the Egyptians might know that he was the Lord," Exod. xiv. 18. was he whom the Egyptians owned as their God: All which deductions are too abſurd to be believed. Moreover, 1. The reaſon why they deſired the making of this god to go before them, is delivered thus, "Up, make us gods which ſhall go before us; for as for this Moſes, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him," Exod. xxxii. 1. And from theſe words it is apparent, that the want of Moſes was the only cauſe why they required this golden calf "to go before them." Now it is certain, that they eſteemed not Moſes to be God, but only one who repreſented God, and who declared his mind unto them; on which account God himſelf ſaith, that he ſhould be to Aaron "inſtead of God," Exod. iv 16. and therefore it is alſo certain, that they deſired only ſome other repreſentative of God, which Aaron might conſult to know the mind of God. 2. Here they expreſly do acknowledge, that "Moſes brought them out of the land of Egypt," i. e. the God of Moſes did ſo. Now they all knew, the true Jehovah was that God whom Moſes taught them to adore; and that the God of Moſes was not that calf, which he knew nothing of; nor that Egyptian Apis which he had ſo much oppoſed and vilified: When therefore they affirm, at the beholding of this calf, "Theſe are thy gods," this affirmation muſt be ſuppoſed conſiſtent with their former words, which do acknowledge that the God of Moſes brought them forth, &c. Now ſince the golden calf, or the Egyptian Apis, were not, even in the apprehenſion of theſe men, the God of Moſes, theſe words, viz. "Theſe are thy gods," cannot be ſpoken of the calf, or the Egyptian Apis; and therefore muſt be underſtood of him, who was indeed the God of Moſes; and ſo muſt ſignify, This is the ſign, This is the repreſentation, of that God, which brought us forth, &c. Again, This we may gather from the feaſt they conſecrated; For Aaron doth expreſly ſay, it was a feaſt to Jehovah: Whereas, had it been really intended as an honour done to the Egyptian dæmons, it cannot be conceived that Aaron would both give unto theſe devils, the proper and incommunicable name of God, and alſo offer ſacrifice to devils. He therefore, whom he called Jehovah, and to whom he offered thoſe peace offerings, was he who truly bears that name. And, 3. This is plain from St. Stephen's words here, "And they made a calf in thoſe days, and offered ſacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands; then God turned, and gave them up to worſhip the hoſt of heaven:" For it is obſervable, that the idolatry of the calf was diſtinct from the other heathen idolatry; this being the puniſhment of the other, and only a conſequent of that; for "then God turned, and gave them up to worſhip the hoſt of heaven." Since then the worſhip of Oſiris, under the ſpecies of a golden bull, and of the Egyptian Apis, in the ſymbol of a living calf, was really the worſhip of the ſun and moon, as the great Selden doth inform us, it follows, that when they worſhipped the golden calf, they were not given up unto the worſhip of Oſiris, or the Egyptian Apis, which were adored by the Egyptians, as the moſt glorious part of all the hoſt of heaven. Hence then, it muſt demonſtratively follow, that the worſhip of the true God, in an image, or material repreſentation, is, in the ſcripture-ſenſe, idolatry. (Idem.)

Worſhip the hoſt of heaven.] That is, the ſun, moon, and ſtars; as appears, Deut. xvii. 3. and 2 Kings xxiii. 5. (Aſſ.) From their worſhipping him in images, againſt his command, he ſuffered them to proceed to "worſhip the creature inſtead of the creator," Rom. i. 25. The invention of idols, (i. e. images, ſaith the book of Wiſdom, ch. xiv. 12.) "was the beginning of ſpiritual fornication," i. e. idolatry: And therefore God is ſaid to have given this hoſt of heaven to the Heathens to worſhip. See Druſ. and the Septuagint, Deut. iv. 19. Juſt. Martyr, Dial. p. 274. Clem. Alex. Strom. 6. p. 609. B. viz. He ſuffer'd them to proceed to that more vile idolatry, in puniſhment of their worſhip of him by images. And to this alludes that of the Septuagint, Hoſ. xiii. 4. God gave not the hoſt of heaven to you, to go after them; but ſent his prophets to forbid it, which he did not to the Heathen world. (W.)

The tabernacle of Moloch.] That the word Moloch, is originally the Hebrew Melech, a king, there is no doubt. And ſo here it notes ſome deified king of the Egyptians; that is, an idol, falſe god, worſhipp'd and plac'd among the ſtars: And accordingly, an old Egyptian's alphabet, that ſets down the names of the planets, hath for Mars, moloch. See Kercher. Prodrom. Copt. c. 5. Now for the ſceene here, the tabernacle of Moloch, that is ſure ſome little cabinet, wherein the image of this falſe god was kept, ſuch as the ſilver chappels of Diana, (ſee note on ch. xix. 24.) This is in Amos, v. 26. the tabernacle, or ſoccoth, of your king, or Moloch; that is, the chapplet, where that image of your falſe god, call'd here typos, a figure, made to be worſhipped, was enſhrined, or dwelt; (ſo ſceenoun ſignifies) and the like ſeems to be underſtood by Succoth Benoth, the tabernacle of Venus, ſome little chappel or ſhrine, where her image was kept and worſhipped. (H.)

The ſtar of your god Remphan.] Diodorus Siculus, l. 1. mentions Remphis, ſon of Cephna, as king of Egypt, about the time that Jacob went down thither; and ſaith of him, that he gathered an infinite maſs of wealth, and left behind him at his death four millions of talents; which makes it probable that he was that prince, which in the famine, by Joſeph's advice, got all the wealth of Egypt and the neighbour-countries. This perſon was afterwards worſhipped as a god, for having preſerved Egypt, and accordingly placed among the ſtars; and ſo the image of one of the planets, here called a ſtar, ſet to ſignify him. This ſtar, it ſeems, was Saturn, for ſo that Egyptian alphabet (mention'd before) which ſets down the names of the planets, for Saturn hath Rhephan. Of this perſon that tradition in Suidas is very intelligible, where, of Apis the Egyptian god, it is ſaid, that he was a certain rich man, to whom at his death they erected, a temple, in which an ox was fed, as being the hieroglyphick of an husbandman. By which alſo it appears, that this was that calf, or bullock, worſhipped by the Iſraelites: Saturn being among the Gentiles preſident of husbandry, and therefore ſometimes worſhipped in the ſhape of that beaſt, (under the name of Apis,) as being the chief inſtrument in ploughing of the ground; but withal faſtened among the ſtars in heaven, and the image of him here called a ſtar, or, as it ſeems to be beſt rendered, Am. v. 26. the ſtar-images of your god, &c. referring to both the images precedent, (to which alſo the typoi, figures in the plural, that follow, do belong.) For that Chiun, which is there in Amos put in ſtead of Remphis, or Cevan, or Caivan, was among the Perſians and Arabians another name of their Saturn, hath been obſerved by others. So in Plautus's ſecond Punick ſcene, Melechianna is by learned enquirers diſcovered to be no more than the image of Chiun, all one with temunah ſel ucoch in the former ſcene; that is, an image, which is El, God, and ſculpture, that is, God engraven; the word El, God among the Phœnicians, ſignifying peculiarly Chronos, Saturn. And this is the reaſon why Bacchus Pericionius is ſaid to be placed in the eighth ſphere, becauſe that ſphere encompaſſeth the planet Saturn. So in the Arabick Lexicon, called Camus, Caiwano is Zohalo, or Saturn, which is nomen invariabile. Which Lud. de Dieu miſtaking for Raialon mamnuon, he renders it vir rigidus, &c. See Mr. Pocock on Abul Faraii, p. 394. Now that they are here ſaid for this ſin to be carried into Babylon, is agreeable with that notion which the Jews generally had, who were wont to ſay, that in every plague and captivity that fell upon them, there was an ounce of the calf; God continuing to puniſh this ſin in all their poſterity that continued to provoke him with the like. (Idem.)

The tabernacle of witneſs.] That which is rendered by the Septuagint the tabernacle of the teſtimony, and ſo made uſe of here by St. Luke, is generally in the Hebrew the tabernacle of meeting, viz. of meeting with God, whither every one that ſought the Lord was to go, Exod. xxxiii. 7. This we render, "the tabernacle of the congregation," as if it referred to our meeting with one another: But certainly it muſt be taken in that other ſenſe, of meeting with God; as appears, Exod. xxix. 42. "At the door of the tabernacle of meeting before the Lord, where I will meet you, to ſpeak there unto you." So ch. xxx. 36. "The tabernacle of meeting where I will meet with thee:" And ſo, Numb. xvii. 4. Now this place of God's meeting with men is ſo called, in two reſpects; 1. Becauſe there he communicates his will, makes known his pleaſure to them. 2. Becauſe there, by his appointment, his name being recorded or commemorated by men, his acts of mercy praiſed and magnified, there he evidences his preſence, to accept thoſe offerings, to bleſs thoſe perſons, Exod. xx. 24. "In all places where I record my name," (or, in every place where the memorial, that I ſhall appoint of my name, ſhall be) "I will come unto thee, and I will bleſs thee." In the former reſpect, the tabernacle is called the tabernacle of teſtimony, becauſe of the ark, containing the two tables; wherein God's Covenant or Commands concerning men were made known and teſtified by God, and that is oft called the ark of the teſtimony. In the ſecond reſpect the tabernacle is call'd the tabernacle of the teſtimony, in reſpect of our acknowledging, and teſtifying, and recording of God; and God's owning and recording, and bleſſing of us, evidencing and teſtifying his accepting of us. (Idem.) Now this tabernacle was an ambulatory temple, as the temple was a ſtanding tabernacle: This tabernacle was moveable; they carried it with them from place to place, and they ſojourned in the wilderneſs, and at laſt they brought it with them into Canaan, ver. 45. which tabernacle "our forefathers brought in with Jeſus, (that is, Joſhua) into the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles," that is, the Land of Canaan; where it continued all the days of David, till Solomon began his reign, who built the temple in a moſt magnificent and ſumptuous manner. Here note, 1. That the publick worſhip of Almighty God is a moral Duty, founded in the light of nature, and the common reaſon of mankind. 2. That ſolemn places of publick worſhip have been from the beginning, before the giving of the law. The ancient devotion of the world delighted much in groves, Gen. xxi. 33. "Abraham planted a grove, and called there on the name of the Lord." This was a ſort of oratory or chapel; whither Abraham and his family reſorted, to worſhip the true God. After the giving of the Law, while the people of the Jews were in an unſettled condition, God was contented with a mean tabernacle; but when they were ſettled in Canaan, then a magnificent temple is built; in ſome meaſure ſuitable to the greatneſs and majeſty of that God who was to be worſhipped in it. From whence we may infer, That the publick worſhip of God, tho' it doth require inward and ſpiritual devotion; yet, as publick, is neceſſarily external: And as ſuch it ought to expreſs, in the beſt manner we are able, that profound reverence which we pay to the divine Majeſty: And therefore, that the Circumſtances of it ſhould not only be decent, but very ſolemn and magnificent, the light of nature ſeems plainly to require, and the goſpel doth no where gain-ſay. When David determined to build God a houſe for publick worſhip, he reſolved it ſhould be exceedingly magnificent: Which reſolution was not a piece of ceremonial piety, but grounded upon a moral and eternal reaſon, of equal force in all ages; namely, That the greateſt and beſt of beings be moſt awfully adored by us in the beſt manner we are able; and that we declare our high regard and eſteem of ſo glorious a majeſty, by all outward fitting teſtimonies of reſpect and reverence. Obſerve laſtly, That after the temple was built, the worſhip of God was not ſo tyed to that place, as that he could not be worſhipped acceptably any where elſe: For God hath declared by the mouth of his holy prophet, Iſa. lxvi. 1, 2. That he delighted "not in temples made with hands," as if he were included therein, and bound thereto. And thus St. Stephen, by a large induction of particulars, made good his defence, That he was not guilty of blaſphemy, for affirming, That Chriſt would deſtroy the temple, and change the cuſtoms which Moſes delivered. He cloſes his apology with this argument, That which was not blaſphemy to affirm of the tabernacle, tho' it was ſet up by God's ſpecial appointment given to Moſes, is not blaſphemy to affirm of the temple: But it was no blaſphemy to affirm the uſe of the tabernacle to have been temporary, and conſequently alterable; therefore to affirm the ſame of the temple, is not blaſphemy, eſpecially ſince the Lord hath ſaid, That "He dwelleth not in temples made with hands." (B.)

Ye ſtiff-necked.] Sclerotracheloi proverbially ſignifies undiſciplinable fooliſh people; according to a rule in phyſiognomy, that thoſe who have necks that do not eaſily bend, are ſuch. So ſaith Adamantius Phyſiog. l. c. 26. Hard-necked perſons are indocile and ignorant: And again, Some men have necks that will not bend; and this is an argument of folly. But I ſuppoſe the meaning of St. Stephen is not to be fetch'd from this notation of the word, but from the metaphor of beaſts, oxen, &c. that, till they be diſciplined, and accuſtomed to the yoke, are not willing or patient to bend down to it: And ſo hard or ſtiff-necked ſignifies no more than refractory, diſobedient, undiſciplinable; and ſo 'tis here ſet to denote them that "do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt," in all God's methods toward them, and walk contrary to him. (H. and B.)

Which of the prophets.] See the notes on ch. iii. 13, 14.

By the diſpoſition of angels.] That is, ſaith Grotius, inter angelorum turmas, by God appearing with his hoſt of angels: For ſo we read, he did at mount Sinai, when he gave the law. So Deut. xxxiii. 2. and Pſa. lxviii. 17. I chuſe rather to ſay, by the adminiſtration of angels; they all here miniſtring to God when he gave the law. (W. and Maſſey)

Ver. 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60. When they heard theſe things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnaſhed on him with their teeth. But he being full of the Holy Ghoſt, looked up ſtedfaſtly into heaven, and ſaw the glory of God, and Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God, And ſaid, Behold, I ſee the heavens opened, and the Son of man ſtanding on the right hand of God. Then they cried out with a loud voice, and ſtopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, And caſt him out of the city, and ſtoned him: and the witneſſes laid down their clothes at a young mans feet, whoſe name was Saul. And they ſtoned Stephen, calling upon God, and ſaying, Lord Jeſus, receive my ſpirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge: And when he had ſaid this, he fell aſleep.

They were cut to the heart.] See the notes on ch. v. 33.

He being full of the Holy Ghoſt, looked up, &c.] Here we may obſerve theſe four remarkable particulars, 1. St. Stephen's accommodation to his death; His "being full of the Holy Ghoſt," that fitted and diſpoſed him to it. 2. His preparation for it: He "looked up ſtedfaſtly into heaven;" ſo that he prepared himſelf for it. 3. His confirmation to it: He "ſaw the glory of God, and Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God;" that encouraged and confirmed him in it. And 4. His profeſſion at it: "Behold, (ſaid he,) I ſee the heavens opened, and the ſon of man ſtanding on the right hand of God;" in which words he profeſſed his faith, and proclaim'd his viſion of it. By all together we ſhall fully underſtand the requiſites of a martyr; what is required to make one ſuch: viz. To be "full of the Holy Ghoſt;" to "look up ſtedfaſtly into heaven;" to look upon Chriſt as there, and as boldly to profeſs it; to be full of grace and ſpirit; full of piety and devotion; full of faith and hope; full of courage and reſolution: All proportionably requiſite to the ſpiritual martyrdom of dying to the world, and leaving all for Chriſt; requiſite too, all of them, in ſome meaſure, to die well at any time. (Frank)

Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God.] As ready to ſuccour and receive him. (Beza, G. and W.) Or, as our advocate, interceding with the father for us. (Aſſem.)

They ſtoned Stephen.] The time of this martyrdom is, by ſome, placed after our Lord's death about eight months: By others, at the diſtance of about four; by others again ſeven years. Euſebius is expreſs, that it follow'd quickly after his election into the office of deacon: And from St. Chryſoſtome, and ſome others, who ſpeak in his honour, we are to conclude, that he was martyr'd young. The place where he ſuffer'd is ſaid to have a ſtately church built upon it, by Eudocia, the empreſs, wife to Theodoſius. (Stanh.)

Calling upon God, and ſaying.] Obſerve here, 1. The holy deportment of this humble ſaint at his death; he prays. Learn thence, That good men ſhould ſhut up their lives with prayer, and die with prayer in their mouths. Our ſaviour did ſo; his firſt martyr here did ſo. St. Stephen imitated the death of Chriſt, and he imitated Chriſt in his death; turning from malicious men, to ſpeak unto a merciful God in prayer. "They ſtoned Stephen calling upon God." 2. The object of his prayer, or whom St. Stephen prays to; Jeſus Chriſt: He doth not ſay, O bleſſed virgin! O St Thomas! O St. Bridget! intercede with my ſaviour for me: But he directs his ſupplications immediately to Chriſt, ſaying, "Lord Jeſus!" From whence we may ſtrongly infer the divinity of Chriſt. Prayer is an act of religious worſhip; and he that is the proper object of religious worſhip, muſt be God: None muſt be the object of my prayer, but he that is the object of my faith. How ſhall I pray to him, in whom I have not believed? 3. The ſubject of his prayer, or what he prays for; his ſoul. "Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit;" He doth not ſay, Lord Jeſus ſave my life, which is in ſo much danger of being taken away; Oh deliver me from the hands of my perſecutors, and bring me off ſafe! Not a word like this; but let it go well with my ſoul: "Lord, receive my ſpirit." Learn hence, That the godly man's care, living and dying, is for his ſoul; becauſe this is the principal and immortal part, becauſe this is the greateſt talent that ever God put into our hands, and becauſe the happineſs and eternal welfare of the body, depends upon the bleſſed condition of the ſoul: If the ſoul be happy, the body cannot be miſerable. 4. The ſweet ſurrender, the willing and chearful reſignation, which the good man makes of his ſoul into the hands of Chriſt. "Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit." 1. The godly man's ſpirit or ſoul is his own; he has not ſold it to ſin, nor pawned it to Satan, nor exchanged it for the world; but he has reſerved it for Chriſt, who redeemed it for him. 2. "Receive." Learn thence, It is the duty and diſpoſition of a gracious perſon, to reſign up his ſoul willingly and chearfully into Chriſt's hands, whenever God calls for it: His ſoul is ſurrendered by him, not extorted from him. The knowledge that a good man has of Chriſt's love and care, of his faithfulneſs and power, encourages him to this reſignation, Pſal. xxxi. 5. "Into thy hands I commit my ſpirit, thou haſt redeemed me, O Lord God of truth." (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 21. and Luke xxiii. 46.

He kneeled down.] Proſtration, or falling flat on the face, and ſtanding, are proper poſtures of worſhip and adoration: But that which is recommended to us, not only by the practice of David, Solomon, Ezra, and Daniel, in the Old Teſtament, but by our Lord and his apoſtles in the New, is kneeling; as may be ſeen 1 Kings viii. 54. Ezra ix. 5. Pſa. xcv. 6. Dan. vi. 10. Luke xxii. 41. Acts ix. 40. xx. 36. and xxi. 5. and Eph. iii. 14. And our church, conformable to theſe unexceptionable examples, requires the ſame poſture. We ſhould be careful to avoid both irreverence and ſuperſtition; expreſſing our reverence of Almighty God, by ſuch outward tokens as our condition and circumſtances will admit of; which holy men have not neglected, even on their death-beds. The places of ſcripture alledg'd, to excuſe ſitting at prayer, will not, upon examination, be found ſufficient: For ſitting is proved to denote, not the poſture of ſitting, but the being, remaining, and continuing in a place. See Mr. Waple's Sermons, vol. iii. p. 37. (Fox)

Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge.] That this prayer was heard for ſome of them who had a hand in St. Stephen's blood, appears by God's ſpecial mercy to Saul, who was a principal perſon in it, and was miraculouſly converted, in the ninth chapter; according to that ſaying of one of the fathers, If St. Stephen had not pray'd, the church had not had St. Paul. (H.) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 34.

He fell aſleep.] See the notes on John xi. 11.

C H A P. VIII.

The church ſcattered by perſecution. Philip the deacon, preaching and working miracles in Samaria, converteth many there. Peter and John confirm thoſe converts, and confer the Holy Ghoſt. Simon the ſorcerer, offering them money for the like power, is ſharply rebuked. The apoſtles return to Jeruſalem: But Philip is directed, by an angel, another way; where he meets, and converts, the treaſurer of the queen of Æthiopia, and thence proceeds towards Cæſarea.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. AND Saul was conſenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great perſecution againſt the church which was at Jeruſalem; and they were all ſcattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apoſtles. And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. As for Saul, he made havock of the church, entring into every houſe, and halling men and women, committed them to priſon. Therefore they that were ſcattered abroad, went every where preaching the word.

Saul was conſenting unto his death.] That is, to St. Stephen's death, mention'd in the cloſe of the foregoing chapter; of which theſe words ſeem to be the proper concluſion. (Trem. and Maſſey) How far he conſented to his death, the text tells us, ch. vii. 58. His hand did not throw one ſtone; but his will concurred with others in the bloody act; and this denominated him guilty. Learn hence, That God chiefly inſpects the heart: And, if the vote be paſt there, he looks upon the man as guilty, tho' he proceeds no farther. 'Tis eaſy to murder another by a ſilent wiſh, or a paſſionate deſire. In all moral actions God values the will for the deed; and reckons that man an actor, who is an applauder: Conſent unto the ſins of others makes their guilt our own. (Aſſem. Cave and B.) But a man may properly be ſaid to "conſent to the death" or martyrdom of another, tho' he had no actual hand in it, 1. If he does not prevent it, as far as he is able. 2. If he any ways encourageth or aſſiſteth them who do it, ch. vii. 58. and Matth. xxvii. 22, 25. And 3. If he is not ſorry or troubled for it, when it is done, Matth. xxvii. 39, &c. (Andr. and Bever.)

A great perſecution againſt the church.] The rage they were in, for what was ſpoken, as they conceived, againſt the law and the temple, for which they had the higheſt veneration, and the cutting words St. Stephen had pronounced before, and even of, the ſanhedrim, as of "a ſtiff-necked and uncircumciſed generation," wanting that circumciſion they ſo gloried in, not obſerving that law they ſeemed ſo zealous for, perſecuting the prophets who foretold of the meſſias, "betraying and murthering him," when he was come, gave in all likelihood, the occaſion to this perſecution of all others who believed this, as St. Stephen did: And that this perſecution was ſet on by the authority of this great council, we may learn from the part Saul bore in it; for he confeſſes, that he received his authority to treat the Chriſtians thus from them, ch. xxii. 5. and xxvi. 10. (W.)

Except the apoſtles.] Perſecution ſcatters the profeſſors of religion: But God makes ſcattering the way to increaſing; and what was intended for the hindrance, God over-ruled for the furtherance of the goſpel. This ſcattering perſecution at Jeruſalem, which was deſigned to ſmother and ſuppreſs the goſpel, did propagate and ſpread it more and more. Obſerve alſo, How God ſets bounds and limits to this ſharp perſecution: Tho' the believers were ſcattered, yet the apoſtles continued at Jeruſalem. The twelve ſtayed there untouch'd in the midſt of the fiery furnace of perſecution, to comfort and cheriſh the church in that ſad and doleful day, maugre the malice of angry men, and of enraged devils; and thoſe who were ſcattered carried the light of the goſpel among the Gentiles. Thus, out of the darkneſs of perſecution God bringeth forth the light of the goſpel; providing at once for the ſafety of ſome by flight, and for the calling home of others by their diſperſion. (B.) It is a very antient tradition, mention'd by Clemens of Alexandria, that our Lord aſſign'd twelve years after his aſcenſion, for the converſion of the unbelieving Jews in Judæa, leſt any of them ſhould ſay, We have not heard; ſaying to his apoſtles, Go ye out into the world after twelve years: And Apollonius, who flouriſh'd at the ſame time, ſpeaks of this, as delivered by tradition, That our Lord commanded his apoſtles not to recede from Jeruſalem by the ſpace of twelve years. Now, if there be any truth in this tradition, it ſhews the reaſon, why the apoſtles continued at Jeruſalem, when the reſt of the diſciples were ſcattered abroad. (W.) See the notes on ver. 4. and Luke xxiv. 47.

Carried Stephen to his burial.] That is, They prepared Stephen for his burial; as the Greek word properly imports: They did all things in order to it, waſhing his body, ch. ix. 37. anointing it, and winding it up in linen, putting it in the coffin, carrying it forth to the burial-place, and weeping there over it after the manner of the Jews. But, whereas Grotius tells us, from St. Auſtin, De Civ. Dei, lib xxii. 8. That the relicks of S. Stephen cured many diſeaſes, it is wonderful he ſhould depend much on the authority of St. Auſtin in this matter, ſeeing he tells us, That the relicks of this martyr were latent, for about four hundred years, and only found by revelation in his time: For is there not ſufficient reaſon to ſuſpect ſuch revelations appearing only in that age, when religion began much to decline, and ſuperſtition, as St. Auſtin confeſſes, to abound? Would God thus honour this martyr only then, and neglect to do it for four hundred years? Or did not Grotius know, that St. Auſtin ſaith, in that very chapter, of theſe very miracles, that they are not of ſuch authority, that we ſhould believe them without difficulty or doubting? (Idem.)

And made great lamentation over him.] A moderate, and pious, mourning for the dead, is juſtifiable by the example of Chriſt, John xi. 35. the patriarchs, Gen. l. 1, &c. and the ſaints here; which is obſervable againſt the unnatural apathy of Stoicks, rather than Chriſtians. (Aſſem.)

Made havock of the church.] Let us not deſpair of any man's ſalvation. This wolf, which now makes ſuch "havock of the church," will ſoon be changed into a lamb and a paſtor. God reſerves ſometimes his greateſt mercies for thoſe whom we ſee abandoned to the greateſt crimes. Inſtead of expreſſing our anger againſt ſuch, we ought to pray for them, and to adore the deſigns of God concerning them. (Q.) See the notes on ch. ix. 1.

Went every where, preaching the word.] Some difference may perhaps be here obſerved, between evangelizomenoi ton logon, "preaching the word," in this verſe, and eceruſſe ton chriſton, "preaching Chriſt," in the next verſe; but this not with reſpect to the matter of their preaching, but of the manner, and the qualifications of the perſons. The latter of theſe, ceruſſein, doth generally ſignify a public, ſolemn, proclaiming, like that of cerux, a herald, or crier: But evangelizeſthai imports no more than the telling, or making known; as good news is publiſh'd, by every one that hath heard it, to all that he meets with. And tho', in one reſpect, viz. that of proclaiming what was not known before, theſe two phraſes do agree; yet, in this other reſpect, they ſometimes differ. Not that evangelizeſthai is never uſed of that public, authoritative proclaiming: For it is ſometimes uſed of the apoſtles, as ch. v. 42. and xv. 35. And evangeliſtes is the name of an office in the apoſtles times; And then, whenſoever it was done, by way of office, either apoſtolical, or by miſſion from them, evangelizeſthai and ceruſſein are in all reſpects the ſame. But ſometimes, and particularly in this place, the former may belong to whatſoever publiſhing of the goſpel, and by whomſoever. For when the doctrine of Chriſt was firſt preach'd by the apoſtles, and the miraculous gifts exerciſed in their preſence, and a multitude of men, "Jews and Proſelytes," received the faith, and for ſo doing profeſſedly, were preſently perſecuted, and driven out of Jeruſalem, ver. 1. it is not to be imagined, but that all, whereſoever they came, both men and women, publiſhed what they knew, both of the doctrine, and the miracles whereby it was confirmed, and of their own ſufferings for it; tho', that all theſe, even women, who, by St. Paul's decree, are "not permitted to ſpeak in the church," 1 Cor. xiv. 34. and 1 Tim. ii. 12. ſhould by the apoſtles be intruſted with "preaching the word," by way of office, it cannot be imagin'd. And therefore, when it is here related of Philip, who was a deacon, ordain'd by the apoſtles, that he "preached Chriſt unto them," it follows, ver. 12. that he baptized them alſo: But of theſe other diſciples, there is no more ſaid, but that they paſſed along, "throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria," (the terror that drove them from Jeruſalem purſuing them ſtill further,) evangelizomenoi ton logon, publiſhing this good news, the goſpel, which they had received; but no mention of their gathering diſciples, or baptizing. And accordingly, chap. xi. 19. when there is mention, in the proceſs of the ſtory, of theſe very men, that they being "ſcattered abroad, upon the perſecution that aroſe about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenicia, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none, but unto the Jews only," the phraſe uſed there is obſervable to this matter, laleuntes ton logon, ſpeaking the word; this word lalein being known to belong to any way of reporting, or relating, by talk, or diſcourſe. And ſo, ver. 20. elaloun pros tous Helleniſtas, they ſpake, talked, to the Heleniſts, evangelizomenoi ton cyrion Jeſoun, telling them that good news, the goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt: And, upon the ſucceſs of this, through God's proſpering hand, and many receiving the faith, it follows, that when the church of Jeruſalem heard of it, they ſent Barnabas to viſit and confirm them. Thus, of the believers in common, chap. iv. 31. it is ſaid indefinitely, that "they ſpake (elaloun) the word of God with boldneſs," according as they had prayed they might, ver. 29. noting thereby a valiant profeſſion, and publiſhing of the goſpel, notwithſtanding the terrors of men. And tho' it be there ſaid of them, that "they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt," and ſo that may be taken for a commiſſion and authority given to all them, and ſo theſe here being contained in that number, the ſame will be competible to theſe; Yet 1. It cannot be imagined, that all ſimply, that is, every believer there, women as well as men, had any ſuch authority then given them; but that there are other meanings of the phraſe, "filled with the Holy Ghoſt," beſides that one of being ſent into the miniſtery; and the very courage of profeſſing and publiſhing the goſpel, was one ſuch gift or effect of the Holy Ghoſt. And 2. It is clear, in the proceſs of this ſtory, that ſome others, which were not ſo qualified as theſe, that is, that had not "received the Holy Ghoſt," or aſcended any farther than the baptiſm of John, did thus publiſh the goſpel, as theſe are here ſaid to do. Thus Apollos, chap. xviii. 25. elalei, cai edidasken "ſpake, and taught exactly the things concerning the Lord, knowing only the baptiſm of John," and Aquila and Priſcilla "expounded to him more exactly the way of God;" and ſo I ſuppoſe did the Epheſian diſciples, ch. xix. who had "not received the Holy Ghoſt," ver. 2. nor gone any farther than John's baptiſm, at the time of Paul's coming to them. (H.)

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Chriſt unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto thoſe things which Philip ſpake, hearing and ſeeing the miracles which he did. For unclean ſpirits, crying with a loud voice, came out of many that were poſſeſſed with them: And many taken with palſies, and that were lame, were healed. And there was great joy in that city. But there was a certain man, called Simon, which before time in the ſame city uſed ſorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himſelf was ſome great one. To whom they all gave heed, from the leaſt to the greateſt, ſaying, This man is the great power of God. And to him they had regard, becauſe that of long time he had bewitched them with ſorceries. But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jeſus Chriſt, they were baptized, both men and women. Then Simon himſelf believed alſo: And when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondred, beholding the miracles and ſigns which were done.

Philip went down.] That this was Philip the deacon, and not the apoſtle, ſeems evident from theſe conſiderations, 1. That he ſeems not to have had the power of giving the Holy Ghoſt by impoſition of hands: For he fell upon none of the Samaritans, till Peter and John came, and "laid their hands upon them," ver. 14, &c. And ver. 18. it is particularly noted, that "the Holy Ghoſt was given, through laying on of the apoſtles hands" only. 2. That the apoſtles were ſtill at Jeruſalem, ver. 1. whereas this Philip was one of thoſe who were diſperſed: For, when St. Luke had ſaid, that the reſt were diſperſed, preaching the word, ver. 4. he adds here, "Then Philip went down to Samaria, and preach'd." And, 3. He goes from Azotus, "preaching in all the cities, till he came to Cæſarea," ver. 40. and there we find Paul, "abiding in the houſe of Philip the evangeliſt, who was one of the ſeven" deacons, ch. xxi. 8. (W.)

The city of Samaria.] Samaria was the name of a mountain, city and region, 1 Kings xvi. 24. and 2 Kings xvii. 5. The capital city ſo called, having been demoliſh'd by Hyrcanus, was rebuilt by Herod, and named Sebaſte, in honour of Auguſtus. See the notes on Luke xvii. 11. and John iv. 4.

Unclean ſpirits.] See the notes on John x 20.

A certain man called Simon.] See ſome account of this arch-heretick, in the notes upon ver. 23.

Of long time he had bewitched them.] Whereas St. Luke here ſo diligently ſetteth down their long and great opinion of this impoſtor, he thereby ſheweth the divine power of the Holy Ghoſt in Philip's miniſtry, who was to break through ſuch difficulties, that he might plant the goſpel there. Old diſeaſes are more hardly cured: They having been ſo long ſtupified with lying miracles, might ſeem the moſt unapt hearers of the goſpel; but truth ſhall prevail againſt all the power of Satan. (Aſſem.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Now when the apoſtles, which were at Jeruſalem, heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they ſent unto them Peter and John: Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghoſt. (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the holy Ghoſt. And when Simon ſaw, that through laying on of the apoſtles hands the holy Ghoſt was given, he offered them money, Saying, Give me alſo this power, that on whomſoever I lay hands, he may receive the holy Ghoſt. But Peter ſaid unto him, Thy money periſh with thee, becauſe thou haſt thought that the gift of God may be purchaſed with money. Thou haſt neither part nor lot in this matter; for thy heart is not right in the ſight of God. Repent therefore of this thy wickedneſs, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity. Then anſwered Simon, and ſaid, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of theſe things which ye have ſpoken come upon me. And they, when they had teſtified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jeruſalem, and preached the goſpel in many villages of the Samaritans.

They ſent unto them Peter and John.] Obſerve here, 1. How the apoſtles at Jeruſalem, hearing the glad tidings of Samaria's converſion by Philip's miniſtry, thought fit to ſend down two of the twelve, to confirm the new converts in their faith, and to conſtitute a church there by their apoſtolical authority. 2. The Perſons, whom the college of the apoſtles at Jeruſalem thought fit to ſend to Samaria; Peter and John. Where note, That Peter's being deputed by the reſt of the apoſtles to this ſervice, is an argument that Peter had no primacy, or ſuperiority, over the reſt of the apoſtles: Or if, in this employment, there was any ſign of primacy, John was ſharer in that, as well as Peter. "The apoſtles ſent Peter and John." 3. What the apoſtles, Peter and John, did, when they came to Samaria; "They prayed, and laid their hands on them; and they received the Holy Ghoſt." Where by the Holy Ghoſt is not to be underſtood the ſanctifying graces of the Holy Ghoſt; which the apoſtles never did, nor could diſpenſe, but the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; the gifts of tongues and prophecy, and a power to work miracles. Theſe were now conferred on ſuch perſons, whom the Holy Ghoſt directed them to lay their hands upon, as perſons appointed and choſen to be preachers of the goſpel. Where note, That impoſition, or laying on, of hands, has been an antient rite uſed by the officers of the church, in their ſolemn dedicating of perſons to the ſervice of God and his church. (Beza, W. and B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 38.

Laid their hands on them.] For the ſeveral uſes of this rite, ſee the notes on chap. vi. 6. But two of which can be ſuppoſed to be meant here; viz. confirmation, and ordination. As to the former, it may appear probable, becauſe it ſo ſoon attended their converſion and baptiſm: "When the apoſtles which were at Jeruſalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they ſent unto them Peter and John," ver. 14. which agrees well with that of confirmation; which is an act reſerved to the rulers of the church, and not communicated, or allowed, to inferior officers, ſuch as Philip, the deacon, here was: And accordingly, the biſhops are called didaſcaloi, doctors, as that ſignifies the farther inſtructing them, to whom the goſpel hath formerly been preach'd, and as evangelizeſthai differs from didaſcein, preaching from teaching. And in confirmation it was, that, in thoſe firſt times, the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt uſed to be conferr'd on them; ſee notes on ch. ii. 38. But it is probable alſo, that the faith being here planted by Philip, and the apoſtles coming down to confirm them, and thoſe not ſtaying there, but "returning to Jeruſalem," ver. 25. they did, at their being there, "ordain elders (or biſhops) in the ſeveral cities;" as we know Paul and Barnabas did, ch. xiv. 23. and Titus in Crete, Tit. i. 5. This, ſaith Clemens Romanus, the apoſtles did in their journeyings, when they went out preaching the goſpel: Preaching through regions and cities, they conſtituted their firſt fruits, (thoſe that firſt believed) biſhops and deacons of thoſe which ſhould afterwards believe. And thus, before this time, they had, at Jeruſalem, conſtituted James, the brother of our Lord, biſhop there, in the firſt year after Chriſt's aſcenſion, and ſeven deacons to attend him, ch. vi. And therefore, it is not reaſonable to believe, that the apoſtles, Peter and John, ſhould thus come down to Samaria, where the goſpel had been ſo univerſally received, ver. 6. and, having taken care to confirm them, ſhould not alſo ordain ſome governors over them, before they returned again. That therefore which is moſt reaſonable is, ſo to interpret this "laying on of hands," and their "receiving the Holy Ghoſt" here, as to comprehend confirmation and ordination both: The Holy Ghoſt, by their miniſtry, coming on all the ſincere believers, and endowing them with inward, and ſome of them with extraordinary external, gifts, of healing, propheſy, &c. and the apoſtles, by "laying on their hands" on ſome ſpecial perſons among them, ordaining them biſhops and deacons in ſeveral cities; a power which belonged only to the apoſtles to exerciſe, and ſo was not competible to Philip, who yet had power to preach and to baptize. (H) Theſe arguments of Dr. Hammond are controverted by Dr. Whitby: But they are well ſupported by biſhop Sparrow, Dr. Hickes, Dr. Stanhope, Dr. Comber, Dr. Brett, Dr. Barclay, Dr. Marſhall, Mr. Howell, Mr. Wheatly, and other learned moderns; and that upon the authority of the beſt antiquity. To which I cannot but ſubjoin this remark, That tho' the Aſſembly of divines (convened by the long parliament) are very particular in their annotations on the reſt of the holy ſcripture, they have paſs'd over this whole caſe, from ver. 12. to 23. without the leaſt note. Whether that was done, to avoid taking notice of ſo clear a proof of the neceſſity of biſhops, and their ſuperiority (as ſucceſſors to the apoſtles) over the other orders in the church, or to what other motive it can be fairly imputed, I leave the reader to judge.

He offered them money.] Here obſerve, 1. How infinitely miſtaken this wretch was, 1. In thinking that the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt could "be purchaſed with money." 2. In ſuppoſing that the apoſtles had a power to diſpenſe theſe gifts, when and where, and to whom they pleaſed. And 3. That they could enable others to impart this alſo; which were all very groſs conceits. From this deed of Simon's, it is called ſimony, to ſeek to buy ſpiritual gifts or offices with money. Obſerve, 2. What it was that put Simon upon purchaſing this power; doubtleſs it was covetouſneſs and vain-glory: He hoped to make a penny of this privilege, and to render himſelf famous among his followers by this prerogative. Learn thence, That cunning and cloſe hypocrites, corrupt and hypocritical profeſſors, do ſeek to make a gain of godlineſs, and a merchandize of chriſtianity. Simon had never bid ſo freely for the Holy Ghoſt, if he had not expected to receive as freely of others for the Holy Ghoſt: Which he deſired to buy, but not to keep; and intended to ſell, not to give. 3. How St. Peter ſcorns the vile motion made by Simon, and rejects it with the greateſt deteſtation: "Thy money periſh with thee." Learn thence, That wicked, tho' gainful, motions are to be ſcorned and refuſed by the godly, with the greateſt deteſtation and abhorrence: Our hearts can never riſe too high in a juſt indignation againſt ſin, and againſt all temptation unto ſin; "Thy money periſh with thee;" Thou and thy money periſh together. 4. How plainly St. Peter deals with him: He ſearches him to the quick, to the heart; ſounds the depths of ſin; lays open the core of his hypocriſy before his face, and tells him to his teeth, that his heart was rotten and unſound: "Thy heart is not right in the ſight of God." The baptiſmal water had waſhed his out-ſide, but his inwards were unclean. The heart is the worſt part of man till it be mended; and then it is the beſt: Where moſt evil lies, there we muſt firſt begin to be good; all will be good, if the heart, which is the ſeat, the ſink and ſeed-plot of all evil, be made good. The life would not be ſo bad, if the heart were not worſe: All the obliquity of our lives proceeds from the impurity of our hearts and nature, as the muddineſs of the ſtream from the foulneſs of the fountain. (B.) See the notes on Matth. x. 8.

In the gall of bitterneſs.] What is the importance of chole picrias (or picria cholees, as the antient Greek and Latin MS. read it) will be beſt diſcerned by Deut. xxix. 18. where apoſtaſy, or falling from God, is deſcribed to be "a root bearing gall and bitterneſs," ſay the vulgar, "gall and wormwood," ſay our Engliſh, and the Septuagint, ſpringing up in gall and bitterneſs: But the Hebrew word, which we render gall, ſignifies alſo a poiſonous herb; and ſo muſt ſignify there, where 'tis joined with "a root bearing," or bringing forth; and ſo the wormwood following will beſt agree with it, and both together will expreſs that ſin to be a root, whoſe effects are poiſonous and bitter, very hurtful and infectious to men, and moſt diſpleaſing to God. Anſwerable and equivalent to this, is the chole picrias here; which therefore ſignifies this apoſtatical condition of Simon, ſo lately baptized, to be dangerous to him, and odious in God's ſight, he being that firſt-born of Satan, as he is ſtiled, and an apoſtate from the Chriſtian faith. And accordingly, his followers, the Gnoſticks, and the poiſon of their hereſy, together with him, the root from whence all thoſe peſts of the primitive apoſtolick church did ſpring, are expreſſed, Heb. xii. 15. by "a root of bitterneſs ſpringing up," en chole, in poiſon, a root of wormwood bringing forth, or fructifying, in poiſon; that is, bringing on the perſon that which is ruinous to himſelf, or on others that which is poiſonous or infectious to them: And ſuch moſt eminently was the hereſy of the Gnoſticks at that time. (H.)

And in the bond of iniquity.] The word ſyndeſmos ſignifies, in the Septuagint, 2 Kings xi. 14. treaſon, and ch. xii. 20. and Jer. xi. 9. a conſpiracy, league, or covenant: And, with adicias, unrighteouſneſs, added to it, it denotes, by an hypallage, a moſt unrighteous, impious treaſon, or treachery: Simon's deſign, in this his propoſal, being not to advance Chriſt's kingdom, by his having that power of giving the Holy Ghoſt; but to ſet up for himſelf, as he afterwards did, in oppoſition to Chriſt; and to have this addition of miracles ſuperadded to thoſe which by his ſorcery he was able to do. (Idem.) This monſter of a man was the greateſt adverſary the apoſtles had, and the firſt author of hereſy. He was born at Gitthon, in the province of Samaria; became learned in the Greek tongue, and very expert in philoſophy and the art of logick. He gave out, that he was the ſovereign power, who ſuffer'd himſelf to be named according to the fancies of men: That he had appeared among the Jews as the ſon, at Samaria as the father, and amongſt other nations as the holy Ghoſt. He carried about with him a woman called Helena, or Selene, (which ſignifies the moon) whom he had bought at Tyre, where ſhe was a proſtituted ſlave. He called her the firſt conception of his ſpirit, and the mother of all things, by whom he had made the angels and arch-angels, &c. And whatſoever he had learned of the goſpel, he preſumed blaſphemouſly to transfer to himſelf: And, to draw the more ſectaries to him, he taught them to be indifferent as to idolatry; and thereby to deliver themſelves from the peril of death, to which the Chriſtians expoſed themſelves. They worſhipped him under the figure of Jupiter, and Selene under that of Minerva. Their prieſts lived in debauchery; applying themſelves to magick, enchantments and charms, to communicate love; to the explanation of dreams, and to all vain curioſities. Tho' this ſect was not perſecuted, yet it did not ſubſiſt, in any part of the world, two hundred years afterwards. As for this Simon himſelf, after he had been foil'd by St. Peter at Samaria, as is here related, he is ſaid to have fled to Rome, and there alſo, by his ſorceries, to have inſinuated himſelf into the favour of the people; and particularly into that of the emperor Nero, inſomuch that he was honour'd with divine worſhip: But that St. Peter, meeting with him there alſo, did by real miracles confound the impoſtor; and at laſt, while he was pretending to fly to heaven, the apoſtle, by his prayers, gave him a fall to the earth, with the bruiſes of which he ſoon after ended his wretched life. (Biſhop Alley, Cave, Fleury, and Sharpe)

Ver. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. And the angel of the Lord ſpake unto Philip, ſaying, Ariſe, and go toward the ſouth, unto the way that goeth down from Jeruſalem unto Gaza, which is deſert. And he aroſe and went: And behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treaſure, and had come to Jeruſalem for to worſhip, was returning; and ſitting, in his chariot, read Eſaias the prophet. Then the ſpirit ſaid unto Philip, Go near, and joyn thy ſelf to this chariot. And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Eſaias, and ſaid, Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt? And he ſaid, How can I, except ſome man ſhould guide me? And he deſired Philip that he would come up, and ſit with him. The place of the ſcripture which he read, was this, He was led as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, and like a lamb dumb before his ſhearer, ſo opened he not his mouth: In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: And who ſhall declare his generation? For his life is taken from the earth. And the eunuch anſwered Philip, and ſaid, I pray thee, Of whom ſpeaketh the prophet this? Of himſelf, or of ſome other man? Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the ſame ſcripture, and preached unto him Jeſus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: And the eunuch ſaid, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip ſaid, If thou believeſt with all thine heart, thou mayeſt. And he anſwered, and ſaid, I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the ſon of God. And he commanded the chariot to ſtand ſtill: And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the ſpirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch ſaw him no more: And he went on his way rejoycing. But Philip was found at Azotus: And paſſing through, he preached in all the cities, till he came to Ceſarea.

Unto Gaza, which is deſert.] Haute eſtin eremos; "The which is deſart." The queſtion is, whether haute here refers to the city Gaza, or to "the way that goeth down from Jeruſalem unto Gaza?" Oecumenius ſaith, There is a way "toward the ſouth," (as Philip was now directed to go,) and that way is deſart: According to which this paſſage is interpreted, by Tremellius, The deſart way, &c. In which he is follow'd by Whitby and Burkitt. But, ſince 'tis plain, there was another city of the ſame name, in the tribe of Ephraim, mention'd 1 Chron. vii. 28. not far from the place where Philip was, when the angel ſpake to him, it may be as reaſonable to underſtand it of the city "Gaza, which is deſart," to diſtinguiſh this remoter city, to which it is agreed he was ſent, from that other which was then nearer to him; as it is underſtood by the divines of the aſſembly, and Monſieur Fleury. For this Gaza of the Philiſtines, mention'd Judg. i. 18. xvi. i 21, &c. and 1 Sam. vi. 17. lay upon the ſea coaſt, beyond Azotus, and according to the prophecy, Zeph. ii. 4. became forſaken, or a continued deſart, as Strabo calls it; being utterly deſtroy'd by Alexander: Not Alexander the Great, as ſome, by miſtake, have reported, but Alexander Jannæus, one of the princes of Judæa, 97 years before Chriſt, as Dr. Prideaux, more accurately, informs us; and never rebuilt, till Conſtantine, long after, built another near the ſame place.

Of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority.] This was not Ethiopia in Arabia, where the queen of Sheba dwelt, but Ethiopia in Africa under Egypt, where Candace had long been the name of their queens. So Pliny, ſpeaking of Meroe, ſaith, There reigns Candace, which hath, for many years, been the name of their queens. See Bochart. Geogr. S. l. iv. c. 6. ſect. 4. Moreover, That this eunuch, was a Proſelyte of juſtice, or one who had embraced the Jewiſh faith, to which he was converted by thoſe Jews which from Alexandria ſpread themſelves into Ethiopia, Grotius concludes; Not only becauſe he came ſo long a journey to worſhip at Jeruſalem, and there to celebrate the feaſt of Pentecoſt, but becauſe Cornelius was the firſt-fruits of the Gentiles: And perhaps the fame that he had heard in Jeruſalem of the ſufferings and reſurrection of Chriſt, might induce him to read this prophet. (W.) See the notes on Matth. xix. 12.

Come to Jeruſalem, for to worſhip.] See the notes on John xii. 20.

The ſpirit ſaid.] It may here be queſtion'd, what is meant by to pneuma, "The ſpirit's ſaying unto Philip." Some kind of extraordinary revelation it certainly was: But whether 1. In a viſion by appearance of an angel; or 2. By a voice from heaven; or 3. By afflation of the ſpirit of God, after the manner that prophets received revelations, it is uncertain. Of the firſt ſort, there are examples in this book; ch. x. 3. "Cornelius in a viſion ſaw an angel of the Lord coming, and ſaying to him:" And ſo here, ver. 26. "The angel of the Lord ſpake unto Philip." Of the ſecond, at the baptiſm of Chriſt, and at the converſion of St. Paul. And of the third, ch. x. 19. where, after his viſion of the ſheet, as "Peter thought thereupon, the ſpirit ſaid unto him;" and the ſame is repeated again, ch. xi. 12. and ſo, ch. xiii 2. "as they were miniſtring," that is, praying and faſting, "the holy ſpirit ſaid, Separate to me Barnabas and Saul:" Which, as it was not in any dream or viſion, ſo that it was by voice from heaven, doth not appear probable by any argument diſcernible in the ſtory. But, on the other ſide, the frequent teſtimonies of the ſpirit's revealing, by way of prophetick afflation, who ſhould be ſet apart for the offices of the church, are evidences that it was ſo here. Thus Clemens tells of thoſe times, that they ordained biſhops, diſcerning by the ſpirit who ſhould be ordained; and again, that they did it having received perfect foreknowledge who ſhould be conſtituted biſhops; as Moſes, ſaith he, foreknew, by revelation from God, that Aaron ſhould have the prieſthood, and accordingly that, without the direction of the ſpirit they advanced none to this dignity. So ſaith St. Paul, of Timothy, that the chariſma, or epiſcopal office, "was given by prophecy," 1 Tim. iv. 14. and ch. i. 18. that is by revelation; as propheſying is of things preſently to be done, as well as predictions of the future; and ſignifies no more, 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 31. than having ſomewhat revealed to him, ver. 30. So ſaith St. Chryſoſtome, The epiſcopal dignity being great, wanted God's ſuffrage, to direct on whom it ſhould be beſtow'd. Thus Acts xx. 28. it is ſaid of the biſhops of Aſia, That "the Holy Ghoſt had ſet them over the flock." And in this ſenſe it may fitly be affirmed of Philip, that being "full of the Holy Ghoſt," ch. vi. 3. he had the afflations of the ſpirit of God, ſuch as prophets had; and by ſuch an afflation the ſpirit here bad him, &c. Thus "Agabus ſignified by the ſpirit," that is, by prophetick revelation, "that there ſhould be a famine," ch. xi. 28. Thus "the Holy Ghoſt witneſs'd in every city," that is, prophets foretold, ch. xx. 23. and xxi. 11 "that bonds and afflictions did abide Paul." One only objection I foreſee againſt this expoſition in this place, that ver. 39. it is ſaid, that "the ſpirit of the Lord caught away Philip;" which probably is to be underſtood of an angel carrying him away out of his ſight: And then why ſhould not the ſpirit here, as well as the ſpirit of the Lord there, ſignify an angel alſo? Eſpecially when there is mention of an "angel ſpeaking" to him, ver. 26. But to this the anſwer will be very ſufficient, if the reading of the king's MS. be accepted in that verſe, (and that is atteſted by many other copies own'd by Eraſmus and Beza, and ſo cited by St. Jerome, Dial. Orthod. & Luciferian.) the holy ſpirit fell upon the eunuch, &c. but the angel of the Lord caught away Philip. For then, as the angel bad him go to the eunuch, ſo he carried him away again; which no way hinders but that the ſpirit here may be taken in that other ſenſe. (H.)

How can I, except ſome man ſhould guide me?] Here Grotius notes, that the eunuch did not think the ſcripture was every where ſo perſpicuous, or contained a ſenſe ſo obvious to all, as do now our mechanicks, and women, who would do better if they thought they needed a guide: But ſure it will not follow, that becauſe the eunuch wanted a guide in an obſcure prophecy, therefore we muſt want one to obtain the knowledge of the plain principles and precepts of Chriſtianity: Nor ſurely could he be ignorant, that when we aſſert the clearneſs and perſpicuity of ſcripture in all things neceſſary to be believed, or done, we do this not in oppoſition to the aſſiſtance of reaſon, or in excluſion to the inſtruction, and help of others, but in oppoſition to the neceſſity of a living judge and, infallible interpreter, ſuppoſed neceſſary to the knowledge of that will of God, by which alone we can be ſaved. Moreover, we do not ſay that holy ſcripture is abſolutely, and in all things, perſpicuous: For we willingly acknowledge, with Origen, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Auſtin, Gregory, and almoſt all the fathers, that there is in ſcripture a mixture of obſcure, and plain texts, ſome things which are "hard to be underſtood," and ſome things which are eaſy to be apprehended, by very mean capacities: But our aſſertion is, that of St. Chryſoſtome, That all things neceſſary to be believ'd or done, are there delivered with ſufficient clearneſs, or ſo that all who are concern'd to know and do them that they may be ſaved, may hence learn them; and that of St. Auſtin, That every one may there obtain that faith, without which he cannot piouſly and rightly live. And the reaſon hereof, ſaith Mr. Chillingworth, is convincing, and demonſtrative; becauſe nothing is neceſſary to be believed, but what is plainly revealed; For to ſay, that when a place of ſcripture, by reaſon of ambiguous terms, lies indifferent between divers ſenſes, whereof one is true, the other is falſe, that God obliges men under pain of damnation, not to miſtake through error, and human frailty, is to make God a tyrant, and to ſay that he requires us certainly to attain that end, for the attaining whereof, we have no certain means. Moreover, the apoſtles did not write only for the learned, but for all men: And therefore, unleſs we will imagine the Holy Ghoſt and them, to have been wilfully wanting to their own deſire and purpoſe, we muſt conceive, that they intended to ſpeak plain even to the capacity of the ſimpleſt, at leaſt touching all things neceſſary to be publiſhed by them, and believed by us. 2. We do not ſay, that all things neceſſary to be believed or done are perſpicuouſly mentioned in all places of the holy ſcripture which reſpect thoſe things: But then we ſay, with Irenæus, and the generality of the fathers, that thoſe things which are ambiguouſly ſpoken in ſome places, are to be expounded by thoſe things, which are plainly, and without ambiguity, contained in the ſcriptures; or if they cannot be this way expounded, the ſenſe of them cannot be needful to be known; for if God's will had been, that we ſhould have underſtood him more certainly in ſuch places, he would have ſpoken more plainly. (W.)

He was led as a ſheep to the ſlaughter.] Theſe words are part of Iſa. liii. Where, that the prophet ſpeaks of Chriſt, no Chriſtian can reaſonably doubt; there being ſcarce a verſe in that whole chapter, which is not, by the Holy Ghoſt in the New Teſtament, applied to Chriſt: The firſt verſe, in John xii. 38. and Rom. x. 16. the third verſe, in Mark ix. 12. the fourth verſe, in Matth. viii. 17. the fifth verſe, in 1 Cor. xv. 3. and 1 Pet. ii. 24. and ver. 12. in Mark xv. 28, &c. And tho' the latter Jews will not allow of this interpretation; yet ſome of them do own, that their antient Rabbins did with one mouth confeſs theſe words were ſpoken of meſſiah the king. (Idem.)

In his humiliation.] Here Mr. Clerc gives a good ſenſe of theſe words, viz. In his humiliation was his judgment, i. e. he appeared ſo mean to Pilate and the Jews, that they paſſed judgment againſt him; and he was taken away by them, as an inconſiderable perſon, fit to be ſacrifiſed, to prevent ſeditions, or the coming of the Romans. The Hebrew ſaith, From force and from judgment he was taken away, i. e. It proceeded from the judgment of Pilate, and from the force, the continual clamours of the Jews laid upon him to paſs that judgment, that he was taken away; and who ſhall declare the wickedneſs of that generation, who dealt thus with their meſſiah? Which therefore in the goſpels is ſtiled a viperous, Luke iii. 7. an adulterous, Mat. xii. 34, 39. a wicked, ver. 45. an untoward generation, Acts ii. 40. and was ſo to be, ſay the Jews, in the days of the meſſiah. (Idem and Maſſey.)

They came unto a certain water.] Viz. A fountain in or near the town of Bethſora, in the tribe of Judah. (G.)

What doth hinder me to be baptized?] By this queſtion it appears that Philip, in expounding to the eunuch the prophecy of Iſaiah, concerning the meſſiah, had particularly inſtructed him in the neceſſity of baptiſm. (Hieron)

If thou believeſt with all thine heart, thou mayeſt.] This clauſe, by Dr. Mills, is taken for a ſuppoſititious clauſe put into the text from the firſt ages of the church, as many other clauſes are (ſays he) in the Acts of the Apoſtles. And yet this clauſe is found in the vulgar and Arabic verſions, in Irenæus, l. iii. c. 12. l. iv. c 40. in Tertullian, de Baptiſmo, c. 18. in Cyprian ad Quirinum, l. iii. ſect. 33. in St. Jerom, tom. iv. fol. 46. in St. Auſtin de fide & operibus, c. ix. 12. and in Oecumenius in locum: And even the Doctor, Proleg. p. 40. col. 2. owns it, in contradiction to his former ſelf. And hence we may judge of his other ſuppoſed additions, ſo confidently and ſo frequently mention'd, in this and the other ſacred books: Which, were there any truth in what he ſays, as bleſſed be God there ſeldom is (on this head,) would render the whole ſcriptures of the New Teſtament dubious and uncertain. (W.)

I believe, that Jeſus Chriſt.] Obſerve here, 1. That the eunuch is inſtructed before baptized; and he deſireth baptiſm of Philip: It was not forced upon him by Philip againſt his will, "The eunuch ſaid, What hinders me to be baptized?" To drive men to baptiſm, and force Chriſtianity upon them againſt their wills, to ſend forth booted apoſtles with javelins in their hands, to dragoon men into Chriſtianity, is the way to make hypocrites, but not Proſelytes: For 'tis not whole armies that can beſiege my reaſon, nor cannons batter my will. 'Tis conviction, not compulſion that muſt induce aſſent. 2. The eunuch, after inſtruction, deſired baptiſm; "See here is water;" let me be baptized. As if he had ſaid, O Philip! As thou haſt inſtructed me, I pray thee alſo baptize me: Now, that I have received the benefit of thy doctrine, let me not want the comfort of the ſacrament. Where the heart is truly touched by the miniſtry of the word, and the ſoul throughly converted unto God, there is a deſire to be partaker of the ſacraments. 3. The condition required of the eunuch before he was baptized; Namely, A profeſſion of his faith in the promiſed meſſias; "If thou believeſt," thou may'ſt be baptized. There is a neceſſity of faith, to render man a meet partaker of the holy ſacraments: If we come to any of the ſacraments without faith, we are ſure to depart without fruit. 4. The qualification of that faith which gives a right to the holy ſacrament; "If thou believeſt with all thy heart:" Only that faith gives a right to baptiſm, and entitles to ſalvation, which is with all the heart. The eunuch believed with his whole heart, "that Jeſus Chriſt was the ſon of God." This gave him at once a right to baptiſm, and a title to heaven. 5. The manner of the adminiſtration of baptiſm to the eunuch; he went down into the water and was baptized by Philip: In thoſe hot countries it was uſual ſo to do: And we do not oppoſe the lawfulneſs of dipping in ſome caſes; but the neceſſity of dipping in all caſes. In ſacraments, it is not the quantity of the elements, but the ſignificancy of them that ought to be attended: As in circumciſion, it was not the quantity of the fleſh cut off; and in the Lord's ſupper, it is not the quantity of the bread and wine taken down; ſo in baptiſm, a few drops of water poured upon me, doth ſignify and ſeal, and convey and confirm to me a right and intereſt in all the benefits of my ſaviour's death and reſurrection, as fully as if, with Jonah, I were plunged into the main ocean. 6. What followed upon the eunuch's baptizing and coming out of the water. 1. "The ſpirit of the Lord caught away Philip;" by the miniſtry of an angel he was carried out of his ſight; that the eunuch might be more aſſured of the truth of thoſe things which were taught him by Philip's miniſtry, and that he was a perſon ſent of God to direct him in the way to true happineſs. 2. The eunuch "went on his way rejoicing;" as well he might; it was the happieſt journey he ever took, to meet with Chriſt and converſion in his way, and heaven and ſalvation at his journey's end. A converted man hath great cauſe of rejoicing; the goſpel proclaimed, much more heartily embraced, is matter of joy. Behold the fruit of faith, joy and rejoicing; the eunuch is inſtructed, believed, is baptized, and goes home rejoicing. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt." Laſtly, "Philip was found at Azotus," or Aſhdod, thirty-four miles from Gaza; ſo far had the miniſtry of the angels carried him, and there ſafely ſet him down. Learn, How good it is to obey God in the moſt difficult command. When we attend the execution of God's commands, the holy angels ſhall attend us, and take care of us, and adminiſter neceſſary help unto us; like tender nurſes they keep us ſafe whilſt we live, and bring us home in their arms to our father's houſe when we die. Bleſſed be God for the miniſtry of his holy angels. (B.) See the notes on John vi. 69.

The ſpirit of the Lord caught away Philip.] In the Alexandrian copy, in the king's library, and ſeveral other antient manuſcripts, it is read thus, "The ſpirit of the Lord" fell upon the eunuch, and an angel of the Lord "caught away Philip." (H. and W.)

CHAP. IX.

Saul, going towards Damaſcus, with deſign to perſecute the church there, is miraculouſly called from heaven. Ananias reſtores him to ſight by impoſition of hands; and baptizeth him. Saul preacheth the goſpel in Damaſcus. The Jews conſpire to kill him. He is recommended by Barnabas to the diſciples at Jeruſalem. The Grecians alſo laying wait to ſlay him, he is convey'd to Cæſarea and Tarſus. The church at peace. Peter cureth a paralytic, and raiſeth the dead.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AND Saul yet breathing out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of the Lord, went unto the high prieſt, And deſired of him letters to Damaſcus to the ſynagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jeruſalem. And as he journeyed, he came near Damaſcus: And ſuddenly there ſhined round about him a light from heaven: And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice ſaying unto him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? And he ſaid, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord ſaid, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt: It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks. And he trembling and aſtoniſhed, ſaid, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord ſaid unto him, Ariſe, and go into the city, and it ſhall be told thee what thou muſt do. And the men which journeyed with him, ſtood ſpeechleſs, hearing a voice, but ſeeing no man. And Saul aroſe from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he ſaw no man: But they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damaſcus. And he was three days without ſight, and neither did eat nor drink.

Saul, yet breathing out threatnings.] Homer's expreſſions of warriors breathing out vigour and courage, are juſtly admir'd by the criticks: And is this of St. Paul's breathing out threats and murder againſt the Chriſtians an inferior or leſs vigorous beauty of ſpeech? The rage and bloody cruelty of a perſecuting ſpirit could not be better expreſs'd, than by ſaying, he "breath'd out threats and ſlaughter;" nor the lamentable effects of a barbarous and cruel zeal, than by the words uſed in this chapter, and the epiſtle to the Galatians. Dioco, in the latter place, Gal. i. 13. has an alluſion to the eagerneſs of a victorious army, purſuing a routed and flying enemy, to cut 'em all off and deſtroy 'em: And the other word (eporthoun) properly ſignifies to lay waſte, and ſack a town taken by ſtorm; when the victor, in heat of blood and revenge, violates all the decencies, diſtinctions, and tenderneſs of human nature; where all manner of outrage and barbarities are committed with impunity and greedineſs. (Blackw.) See the notes on ch. vii. 58. and viii. 1. Divers other particulars, relating to the life and acts of this great apoſtle, will alſo be noted in the ſequel of this book of the Acts, and in the introductions to his reſpective epiſtles.

Deſired of him letters to Damaſcus.] Saul, in the fury of his zeal, did not wait for, but addreſs'd himſelf to the high-prieſt and ſanhedrim, for orders to take up all Jews at Damaſcus, who confeſſed Jeſus Chriſt; that they might be made publick examples for the terror of others. (Aſſem. H. Cave, Stanh. W. B. and Nelſ.)

He might bring them bound.] It appears hence, that the power of capital puniſhments was not ſo taken from the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, held at Jeruſalem, but that they might inflict puniſhment upon thoſe of their own nation, either by their own power, or by the conſent of the Roman governors, in caſes puniſhable with death by their laws and cuſtoms. For Saul confeſſes, that he " perſecuted this way unto the death," by virtue of this power received from the ſanhedrim; binding and delivering up to priſon men and women, ch. xxii. 4. See the note on John xviii. 31. (W.)

A light from heaven.] Saul was willing to perſecute, who deſired a licence ſo to do; but was converted againſt his intentions, and beſide his will. God ſuffer'd him to gain letters, to approach " near to Damaſcus," to conceive hope, and to form bloody thoughts for the execution of thoſe cruel deſigns; and then ſuddenly he ſtayed his courſe who ran ſo headlong to his own deſtruction. So true is that of Fulgentius; He preventeth the impious, that he may become holy; he followeth the holy, that he may not become wicked; he preventeth the fallen, that he may riſe again; he followeth him that is raiſed, that he may not fall; and that ſuddenly, and without, and beyond, their expectation. (Aſſ.)

He fell to the earth.] He, and his company, being Jews, could not be ignorant, that ſuch ſtrong emanations of light as this were the method uſually made choice of by God, for exhibiting his glory and peculiar preſence. Many inſtances of that kind are recorded in the books of Moſes; many in the prophetic ſcriptures, which ſeem plainly intended, and were conſtantly underſtood, to this purpoſe: And thoſe interpreters appear to have judged very reaſonably of the caſe before us, who ſuppoſe the whole company falling on their faces to the ground, (ch. xxvi. 14.) to have underſtood it ſo; as well, by that act of proſtration, to expreſs their profound reverence of the divinity, whoſe glorious preſence that brightneſs ſignified, as from the ſtrength of a light which they were not able to bear up againſt. (Stanh.)

Heard a voice.] Which to him was articulate and diſtinct, tho' not underſtood by the reſt. (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 7.

Why perſecuteſt thou me?] That is, Me, in my members. Whatever is done againſt Chriſtians, for any thing that Chriſt commandeth them, he takes it as done againſt himſelf. Such as perſecute the ſaints for their ſanctity, perſecute Chriſt himſelf; and he can no more endure to ſee them wronged than himſelf: As the honour of Chriſt the head redounds to the members; ſo the ſorrows of the members are reſented by the head. Chriſt ſaid not thus to his own murderers on earth, Why bind ye me? Why buffet ye me? Why ſcourge ye, and crucify me? But here, when the members ſuffer, he cries out from heaven, " Saul! Saul! Why perſecuteſt thou me?" (B.)

Kick againſt the pricks.] It was a proverbial ſpeech, to kick againſt the goad, ſignifying to be refractory to puniſhment and diſcipline, when it comes to teach us our duty; for then the refractorineſs doth but involve us in more guilt and puniſhment. So in Eſchylus, If thou wilt take my counſel, thou ſhalt never kick againſt the goad; for thou wilt bring more ſufferings upon thy ſelf by that means. Parallel to this is Striking the adamant, and Treading on the fire, in St. Chryſoſtome: So again, He who ſtrikes the adamant is himſelf ſtricken; and he who kicks the goads is himſelf goaded: And ſtimulos pugnis cædere, in Plautus, To beat the goads with his fiſts. For this of goads was uſed not to beaſts only, but to ſervants; which he calls ſtimuleum ſupplicium: And the ſervant thus handled ſeverely, is by him call'd carnificinum cribrum; his back being, as it were, like a ſieve, full of holes. (H.) The like alſo is to be met with in Euripides, and Pindar: But the great Bochart will not have this proverb taken from Eſchylus, Euripides, Pindar, or Plautus, but from the holy ſcriptures; it being uſed, ſaith he, by Moſes, Deut. xxxii. 15. and by God himſelf, 1 Sam. ii. 29. (W.)

Lord, what wilt have me to do?] Obſerve here, 1. How eaſily God can make the fierceſt perſecutor to quake and tremble. Saul is ſtruck down; but it is to convert him, not to confound him: He trembles; but his trembling was in order to rejoicing: It was a favourable, tho' an affrighting ſtroke, which ſtruck him down, but with deſign to raiſe him up again. Humiliation for ſin, in ſome meaſure, always goes before a ſoul's acceptance of Chriſt and ſubjection to him. 2. How ready and deſirous a converted perſon is to know and do the mind and will of God. Saul is now inquiſitive after his duty, and deſirous of the knowledge of it. We may ſooner find fire without heat, than a true convert without operative grace. It is not, Lord, What wilt thou have me to ſay? But, " What wilt thou have me to do?" It is not the talking, but the walking and working perſon that is the true Chriſtian. 3. God's anſwer to Saul's inquiry; " Ariſe, and go into the city, and it ſhall be told thee what thou muſt do." Mark, He was going to Damaſcus before, on the devil's errand; but now God bids him go: He had better authority for his going thither now, than what he had from the high-prieſt before: He went before for others deſtruction; but he now goes for his own inſtruction, in order to ſalvation. (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 37.

Hearing a voice.] What is here ſaid of thoſe that were with Paul, that " they heard the voice," ſeems directly contrary to what is affirmed, ch. xxii. 9. " They heard not the voice." As for the way of reconciling it, by ſaying, that the former belongs to Paul's voice, the latter to the voice of him that ſpake to him, there is little ground in the text for that nicety: But, on the contrary, the " ſeeing no man," which follows in this place, belongs ſurely not to their not ſeeing of Paul, but of " him that ſpake" to him. The only way of reconciling the difficulty is by obſerving the notion of the Hebrew word, which ſignifies both a voice, and thunder; and thoſe promiſcuouſly taken the one for the other. So Heb. xii. 26. " Whoſe voice ſhook the earth;" that is, whoſe " thunder and lightnings" and " voice of a trumpet exceeding loud," Ex. xix. 16. And ſo Luke ix. 35. " The voice out of a cloud, ſaying," was the thunder, with a voice in it; a revelation from heaven, given in thunder. So Matt. iii. 17. " A voice from heaven," ſaying; that is, a thunder from heaven, ſending forth this voice; which therefore was wont to be called the daughter of voice, or voice coming out of it; or as the " voice from heaven," John xii. 28. is expreſſed by the by-ſtanders, that " it thundred," and " an angel ſpake to him;" which is explained diſtinctly by St. John, Rev. iv. 5. where " thundrings and voices" both are named, and ch. x. 3. The " ſeven thunders delivered their voices." By this the difficulty will be cleared: For here the voice ought to be rendred thunder, which was here joined with lightning, which ſhone or flaſh'd about him, ver. 3. As for " The voice of him that ſpake to me," ch. xxii. 9. that was the voice of the angel ſpeaking out of heaven, or out of the cloud: Both which put together ſignify no more than this, that St. Paul's companions at that time ſaw the light or the lightning, and heard the noiſe of the thunder (which is the importance of the place here) but heard not the articulate voice that came out of the thunder; that is, the words " Saul, Saul," &c. the voice of the angel ſpeaking to him. (H.) That this interpretation of the word phone, voice, is frequent in the Old Teſtament, cannot be doubted. But if it be objected, 1. That we find no mention of any thunder here, It may be anſwer'd, That it was uſually an attendant of ſuch glorious coruſcations as this was. If you add, 2. That here is mention of a voice ſpeaking " in the Hebrew tongue," ch. xxvi. 14. It may be ſtill replied, That thus it was at Sinai; where God anſwered Moſes, te phone, out of the thunder, Exod. xix 19. If you object, 3. That it is ſaid, " They heard a voice, but ſaw no man;" and in thunder this is not expected; I anſwer, This is true of common thunder: But, in ſuch an extraordinary illumination as this was, they reaſonably might expect the viſion of an angel, or ſome glorious perſon; eſpecially, if the conjecture of moſt interpreters be true, that Paul not only heard, but ſaw, the Lord Jeſus, ſpeaking to him, this will be no objection againſt the interpretation of this learned man. Or, 2. This ſeeming contradiction may be reconciled thus, " They heard a voice," but ouc ecouſan, they underſtood not the words, " of him that ſpake unto me:" For ouc acouein frequently in ſcripture ſignifies, not to underſtand what we hear; as Gen. xi. 7. Deut. xxviii. 49. 2 Kings xviii. 26. Jer. v. 15. Ezek. iii. 6. and 1 Cor. xiv. 2. But Oecumenius affords us a third ſolution alſo, viz. That they heard the voice of Saul ſpeaking to Chriſt, not the voice of Chriſt ſpeaking to him. (W.)

When his eyes were opened, he ſaw no man.] That is, Tho' his eyes were open, yet he could not ſee any thing. (G.) Being ſtruck blind with the extraordinary brightneſs and " glory of the light," ch. xxii. 9. and was accordingly led by his companions into Damaſcus; in which condition he there remained, faſting, three days together. And at this time we may probably ſuppoſe it was, that he had that viſion and ecſtaſy, wherein he was " caught up into the third heaven," where he ſaw and heard things great and unutterable, 2 Cor. xii. 1, &c. and was fully inſtructed in the myſteries of the Goſpel; and hence he expreſly affirms, That " the Goſpel which was preached of him, was not after man; for he neither received it of man, neither was he taught it, but by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt," Gal. i. 11, 12. (Cave) Chriſt taught him by his bodily blindneſs, the blindneſs of his ſoul in ſpiritual things, which till now he was inſenſible of. As Saul was, ſo all men naturally are, ſpiritually blind, before regeneration and converſion. 'Tis true, he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and was a great proficient in human learning: But, after his converſion, he counted that knowledge no better than blindneſs, in compariſon with the knowledge of Chriſt, Phil. iii. 7, 8. (B.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. And there was a certain diſciple at Damaſcus, named Ananias, and to him ſaid the Lord in a viſion, Ananias. And he ſaid, Behold, I am here, Lord. And the Lord ſaid unto him, Ariſe, and go into the ſtreet, which is called Straight, and enquire in the houſe of Judas, for one called Saul of Tarſus: For behold, he prayeth, and hath ſeen in a viſion a man named Ananias, coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his ſight. Then Ananias anſwered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy ſaints at Jeruſalem: And here he hath authority from the chiet prieſts, to bind all that call on thy name. But the Lord ſaid unto him, Go thy way: For he is a choſen veſſel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Iſrael. For I will ſhew him how great things he muſt ſuffer for my names ſake. And Ananias went his way, and entred into the houſe; and putting his hands on him, ſaid, Brother Saul, the Lord (even Jeſus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou cameſt) hath ſent me, that thou mighteſt receive thy ſight, and be filled with the holy Ghoſt. And immediately there fell from his eyes, as it had been ſcales; and he received ſight forthwith, and aroſe, and was baptized. And when he had received meat, he was ſtrengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the diſciples which were at Damaſcus. And ſtraightway he preached Chriſt in the ſynagogues, that he is the Son of God. But all that heard him were amazed, and ſaid, Is not this he that deſtroyed them which called on this name in Jeruſalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief prieſts? But Saul increaſed the more in ſtrength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damaſcus, proving that this is very Chriſt.

Named Ananias.] Obſerve here, 1. That tho' Chriſt himſelf converted Saul, yet Ananias, his miniſter, muſt inſtruct him. By Chriſt is grace infuſed, but by his miniſters increaſed: Such an honour doth Chriſt put upon them, that he makes uſe of their endeavours ordinarily, both for the production and augmentation of grace in the hearts of his people. Oh, the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of a ſtanding miniſtry! 'Tis a ſingular favour, to have the mind of God made known to us by men like our ſelves: And behold the honour that God puts upon the miniſters, in uſing them as conduit-pipes, for conveying the water of life to us, which he is not pleaſed to communicate immediately from himſelf. 2. What an exact knowledge the Lord has of particular perſons, and particular places: He tells Ananias in what city Saul was, in Damaſcus; in what ſtreet he was; "in the ſtreet called Straight;" in whoſe houſe he was; "in the houſe of Judas." It is matter of conſolation, yea, of higheſt conſolation, to the children of God, to know and remember, that God knows them, that God knows their perſons, knows their purpoſes, knows their performances, knows their place of abode; that he knows who they are, what they do, and where they dwell. It aſſures them as to their perſons, that they ſhall be accepted; as to their performances, that they ſhall be rewarded; and as to their habitations, that they ſhall be loved, bleſſed and protected by him. So dear are the holy ſervants of God unto him, that he loves the very ſtreet in which they lodge, the houſe in which they dwell; the walls of their habitation are always before him, and he delights continually to look upon them. Let "holineſs to the Lord" then, be always writ in fair and legible characters upon the walls of our houſes, Zach. xiv. 20. 3. The courſe which Almighty God takes to remove all fear from Ananias's mind, and to encourage him to go to Saul, according to the direction given him: Altho' he had been ſuch a bloody perſecutor, he tells him, That, "Behold, he prayeth;" as if he had ſaid, tho' he has been bad, he is not now what he was, he is another man; nay, he is a new man, he is truly and throughly converted: And this is the undeniable evidence and teſtimony of it, That whereas before he perſecuted, now he prayeth. Learn thence, That ſpiritual breath is a good ſign of ſpiritual birth: None of God's children are ſtill-born, they all come crying into the world. The duty of prayer faithfully and perſeveringly performed, is a good evidence that a ſoul is thoroughly converted and brought home by repentance unto God. But did he never pray till now? Yes, no doubt, many a time, when he was a ſtrict Phariſee, he prayed after a looſe and cuſtomary manner: But he never prayed ſo ſenſibly and feelingly, ſo ſpiritually and affectionately, ſo fervently and perſeveringly before, as he did after, his converſion: His prayer before, was the cry of the old, now of the new creature; before he prayed with coldneſs and indifferency, now he prays with warmth and fervency, as a perſon in earneſt for his ſoul's happineſs and ſalvation; therefore Chriſt brings it in with a note of attention and obſervation: Now, "behold, he prayeth." (B.) This Ananias was one of the ſeventy diſciples, as the ancients inform us; and probably the firſt planter of the Chriſtian church in Damaſcus. (Cave, and Nelſ.) Not a meer lay-man, as ſome would perſuade us.

In a viſion.] That is, ſaith Grotius, An angel in the ſhape of the Lord. But, as we have no example in the New Teſtament, of any ſuch appearance of an angel in the perſon of Chriſt; ſo is it certain, that here it was not ſo, but really a viſion of the Lord Jeſus: For Ananias not only calls him Lord, but calls the Chriſtians "his ſaints," and thoſe "that call on his name," ver. 13, 14. (W.)

How much evil he hath done.] See the notes on ch. viii. 3.

Here he hath authority.] By this it appeareth, that the ſaints at Damaſcus had knowledge of his coming, and of his commiſſion againſt them. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 2.

All that call on thy name.] There are two periphraſes of the Chriſtian, which occur in this chapter, and in other places of The Acts. The firſt, in ver. 2. That they are men and women, tes hodou, "of the way." So, when St. Paul went into the ſynagogue at Corinth, "they did ſpeak evil of the way," ch. xix. 9. And at Epheſus, there was "no ſmall ſtir, peri tees hodou, about the way." See chap. xxiv. 22. And ſo ſome of the ancients ſeem to have ſpoken: So, in the hiſtory of the perſecutions of the Gallican church, we read of ſome apoſtates from the faith, who blaſphemed the way. And Epiphanius introduceth the Melchiſedecians, ſaying, that Chriſt was choſen, that he might turn us from idols, and might ſhew us the way. The ſecond periphraſis is this, That they were ſuch as invoked Jeſus Chriſt, or "called upon his name." Thus Ananias complains here of Saul to Chriſt: And the unbelieving Jews ſay of him, preaching Jeſus Chriſt in their ſynagogues, "Is not this he who deſtroyed thoſe that call upon that name?" ver. 21. Thus St. Paul writes to ſaints called, and to all other Chriſtians, under the title of "all that call upon the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in every place," 1 Cor. i. 2. and then in the very next verſe, he himſelf prays, that "grace and peace may be derived upon them, from God the father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt:" And 2 Tim. ii. 22. bids Chriſtians "follow after peace with thoſe that call upon the Lord with a pure heart;" that is, with all believers; it being the ſame thing to believe in, and to call upon the name of the Lord Jeſus. Hence St. Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 6. ſaith, "he that believeth in him ſhall not be aſhamed, becauſe it is written, whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord ſhall be delivered," Joel ii. 32. And hence we learn who that Lord is, whom Ananias bid St. Paul invoke, when he ſaith chap. xxii. 16. "Ariſe, and be baptized, calling upon the name of the Lord; even the Lord Jeſus who appeared to him," chap. ix. 17. And what is meant by that phraſe, viz. Profeſs thy faith, by being baptized in, and by calling on his name. This was a thing ſo continually practiſed by the firſt Chriſtians, that Pliny mentions it, in his epiſtle to Trajan; telling him, that 'twas the cuſtom of the Chriſtians, Carmen Chriſto, quaſi Deo, canere, to ſing an hymn to Chriſt as God: For, as St. Paul, in his thirteen firſt epiſtles, prays for grace and peace from God the "father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt;" and St. John, in his ſecond epiſtle, ver. 3. doth the ſame: So doth Polycarp, the diſciple of St. John, in the proem of his epiſtle to the church of Philippi, pray, that mercy and peace may be multiplied to them from God omnipotent, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt our ſaviour: And the church of Smyrna, in her circular epiſtle to all Chriſtians, prays, that mercy, peace and love, may be multiplied to them from God the father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Ignatius in like manner, in the proem to his epiſtle to the Magneſians, wiſhes them health from God the father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: In that to the Romans, health in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt our God: In that to the church of Smyrna, health in the immaculate ſpirit, and the word of God. And as St. Paul, in his epiſtles, often prays to Chriſt both for himſelf, and for other Chriſtians: So did the primitive Chriſtians pray, and intreat others to pray to him. So Ignatius ſaith, to the church of Rome, Pray to Chriſt for me, that by the beaſts I may be found a ſacrifice to God; and ſaith to the church of Epheſus, If Jeſus Chriſt ſhall make me worthy by your prayer: And the church of Smyrna ſaith, They could not leave Chriſt, orationis precem impendere, and worſhip, or pray to any other. (W.) See the notes on ch. ii. 21. and John xiv. 13. and xvi. 23.

He is a choſen veſſel.] Obſerve here, 1. Ananias's reluctancy and fear to go to Saul, becauſe of his former violent perſecution, and preſent commiſſion; "Lord, I have heard of this man," &c. Learn, That ſuch as are very ready and forward for Chriſt's ſervice, vice, may, upon appearing difficulties hang back, till they be help'd over thoſe difficulties by the hand of Chriſt. Thus it was with Ananias: "Behold, (ſays he) here am I, Lord," ver. 10. to ſhew his readineſs to run on any errand that Chriſt would ſend him: But when he came to underſtand his meſſage, he was affrighted, and began to draw back: Therefore the Lord graciouſly condeſcends to remove the ſtumbling-block that lay in the way of his ſervant's obedience. Fear not; as if Chriſt had ſaid, "Go thy way," he is not what he was, he is another man; yea, he is a new man. 2. The honourable title which Chriſt puts upon Saul, "he is a choſen veſſel:" That is, a perſon choſen of God, to convey the divine treaſure of the Goſpel, not only to Jews, but Gentiles alſo, even to the greateſt and higheſt amongſt them; "He is a choſen veſſel, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings." Where note, 1. The term of uſefulneſs; he is a veſſel. Now a veſſel is not a natural but an artificial inſtrument. No man is born, but made a miniſter of the Goſpel. Veſſels are not of equal capacity; ſome are greater, others leſs: All miniſters have not like endowments, nor are they equally fitted for the ſacred employment. Again, veſſels are receptive inſtruments; they muſt take in before they can give out: What the miniſters of the Goſpel have receiv'd of the Lord, that they deliver to their people; they give out what God gives in. Finally, Veſſels are for effuſion, as well as for reception; they let out as well as take in, yea, therefore take in, that they may let out: Therefore have the miniſters of Chriſt a treaſure of divine knowledge in themſelves, that they may communicate and impart it to others; and it is not impaired by imparting, but, like the oil in the widow's veſſel, increaſed by pouring out. A miniſter by communicating the treaſure of his knowledge, enriches others without impoveriſhing himſelf. Note, 2. The term of excellency, "He is a choſen veſſel," choſen to preach Chriſt; choſen to ſuffer for Chriſt; a veſſel choſen to bear the divine treaſure of the Goſpel, both to Jews and Gentiles. Lord! what honour doſt thou put upon thy miniſters, in making them veſſels of honour fit for the maſter's uſe, and the family's ſervice? If I may not be a veſſel of gold or ſilver, let me be a veſſel of wood or ſtone, ſo I may be a veſſel unto honour, and a ſucceſsful inſtrument in thy hand, for thy glory and the church's good. (B.)

To bear my name.] That is, my word. God's word is the ſpecial means to magnify his name; his name is in a ſpecial manner printed upon it. Therefore, that abominable and curſed practice of ſundry ungracious perſons, of applying certain ſentences of this holy word to prophane libels and jeſts, is condemn'd and anathematiz'd by all the ſacred councils in former times; yea, even by the council of Trent it ſelf. What ſhall we ſay, ſaith St. Auguſtine, but that theſe men put themſelves in a way, by diſeſteeming God's word, to have a ſlight eſteem of his name; and, by abaſing and prophaning his word, to come to abuſe and blaſpheme his name? (Andr.)

How great things he muſt ſuffer.] And endure terrible perſecutions, as he of late inflicted ſuch: And yet the proſpect of ſufferings ſhall in no degree take off from his endeavours to propagate my truth. (G. and Stanh.) A miſſion to the miniſtry, and a ſubmiſſion to ſufferings, are things inſeparable. Men engage men by no other motives but ſoft perſuaſions, or the allurements of hope: But God manifeſts his ſovereign power over their hearts, in drawing them after him by the proſpect of ſufferings and death. The more graces God prepares for a ſoul, the more ſufferings does he likewiſe prepare for it. (Q.)

Putting his hands on him.] See the notes on ch. vi. 6.

Jeſus, that appeared unto thee.] Ho ophtheis ſoi; that is, who was ſeen of thee. I think it not neceſſary, from theſe words, to affirm, that St Paul here ſaw the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt; ſeeing in three relations of this matter he mentions no ſuch thing, but only that he ſaw the glorious light in which he did appear, and which was the ſymbol of his preſence: For ſo, in the Old Teſtament, men are often ſaid to have ſeen the Lord, when they ſaw only the glory in which he did appear; for they never ſaw his ſhape. Thus, of the nobles that went up with Moſes into the mount, it is ſaid, Exod. xxiv. 10, 11. That "they ſaw God, the God of Iſrael;" and yet they ſaw no manner of ſimilitude," Deut. iv. 12, 15. Whence the Chaldee paraphraſt, in all theſe places, ſaith, They ſaw the glory of God: But, if it were neceſſary to ſay St. Paul ſaw his perſon, the text ſeems rather to require us to ſay, he ſaw him "in the way," than in the heavens. But yet, by comparing theſe with thoſe other words of the ſame perſon, "The God of our fathers hath choſen thee, that thou ſhouldſt ſee that juſt one," ch. xxii. 14. as alſo from the inquiry of St. Paul, "Am I not an apoſtle? Have I not ſeen Jeſus Chriſt, our Lord?" 1 Cor. ix. 1. and from thoſe words, 1 Cor. xv. 8. "Laſt of all he was ſeen of me alſo;" it is certain, that St. Paul ſaw the perſon of Chriſt; and therefore highly probable, that he did it at this time, or elſe at his return to Jeruſalem, ch. xxii. 18. (W.)

And was baptized.] Obſerve here, That baptiſm, adminiſtred to a convert under ſuch circumſtances, is a ſufficient intimation, how guilty and fatal a neglect thoſe deluded people allow themſelves in, who treat this, and other like ordinances, with ſcorn and contempt; who vainly preſume upon the privileges of the Goſpel, before the ſeals of the covenant have ſecured their right to them: And that the moſt perverſe abuſe men can poſſibly make of this miracle, would be, to go on ſecurely in ſin, and defer their converſion, by neglecting to apply ſuch means as are ordinarily neceſſary, and ordinarily ſufficient, upon idle pretences of waiting for ſuch awakening and extraordinary calls and illuminations, as that, which God vouchſafed to this apoſtle. (Stanh.)

Straightway he preached.] Here we have an account of St. Paul's entrance upon his miniſterial office in preaching the Goſpel. Where note, 1. The time of his preaching; "ſtraightway:" He fell preſently to his maſter's work; not conſulting fleſh and blood, about the difficulties and dangers that might attend it; but performs his duty with ſuch zeal and immediate application, as became a perſon of his holy character and profeſſion. 2. The place where he preach'd; "In the ſynagogues" of the Jews: He was afterwards indeed the apoſtle of the Gentiles; but, according to Chriſt's command, he firſt preach'd the word of life to the Jews, to convert ſome, and to leave others without excuſe: After which he turned from them to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 46. And, 3. The doctrine he preach'd; That Jeſus was "the ſon of God," the true, promiſed, and expected meſſias; and that all the prophecies and predictions of the prophets, concerning the meſſias, were exactly fulfill'd in his perſon. (B.) See the notes on ver. 23.

Proving that this is very Chriſt.] The participle ſymbibazon is a metaphor taken from building; in which the ſeveral parts being commodiouſly fitted together, are properly ſaid ſymbibazein. It ſhould therefore be thus rendred here, proving, by comparing places (viz. of ſcripture,) that he is the Chriſt. The ſame word is alſo uſed by St. Paul in this very ſenſe, Eph. iv. 16. and Col. ii. 19. And here ch. xvi. 10. where ſymbibazontes is well rendred "aſſuredly gathering." (Maſſey)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counſel to kill him: But their laying await was known of Saul: And they watched the gates day and night to kill him. Then the diſciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket. And when Saul was come to Jeruſalem, he aſſayed to joyn himſelf to the diſciples: But they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a diſciple. But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apoſtles, and declared unto them how he had ſeen the Lord in the way, and that he had ſpoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damaſcus in the name of Jeſus. And he was with them coming in, and going out at Jeruſalem. And he ſpake boldly in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and diſputed againſt the Grecians: But they went about to ſlay him. Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Ceſarea, and ſent him forth to Tarſus. Then had the churches reſt throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the holy Ghoſt, were multiplied.

Many days were fulfilled.] The hiſtory of St. Paul's preaching at Damaſcus, and going after to Jeruſalem, is ſomewhat intricate, and interpreters differ much about it; ſome thinking that St. Paul preached at Damaſcus, immediately after his converſion, and that the Jews then thought to kill him, and that then alſo he went thence to Jeruſalem; others, that this only happen'd, three years after his converſion, and that then only he went to Jeruſalem: I ſhall therefore endeavour to give a brief account of this matter. And, 1. I grant, that St. Paul preached at Damaſcus immediately after his converſion: This ſeems plain, 1. From the text; which ſays, he "was baptized, and receiving meat was ſtrengthned, and ſtraightway he preached Chriſt in the ſynagogues" of Damaſcus, ver. 18, 19, 20. And, 2. From the amazement of the Jews, that he ſhould do this who "came hither for this very purpoſe, to bind them that call upon this name," ver. 21. 2. It ſeems as evident, that this "conſultation to kill him" could not be at his firſt converſion, but ſome years after. For he was "let down the wall in a basket, and eſcaped their hands," and then went to Jeruſalem, and was brought by Barnabas "to the apoſtles," ver. 25, &c. and 2 Cor. xi. 32. Now, he himſelf declares, that, ſoon after his converſion, he "went not up to Jeruſalem, to them which were apoſtles before him, but went (immediately) into Arabia, and returned again unto Damaſcus: Then, after three years, he went up to Jeruſalem;"

ſalem;" where he ſaw Peter and James, Gal. i. 16, &c. The ſeries of the hiſtory therefore ſeems to lie thus; 1. St. Paul, after his converſion, inſtantly preaches in the ſynagogues of Damaſcus, that Jeſus was "the ſon of God," ver. 20. 2. That, going thence into Arabia, betwixt two and three years after, he "returns to Damaſcus," Gal. i. 17. and of this journey, Luke being not with him, gives no account. 3. That, at his return, being increaſed in wiſdom and ſtrength, he continues many days in "Damaſcus, proving, that Jeſus was the Chriſt." 4. That, "after three years," he, eſcaping from Damaſcus, comes to Jeruſalem, and is by Barnabas "brought to the apoſtles," Peter and James, and continued there "fifteen days," Gal. i. 18. 5. That there Chriſt appears to him in a viſion, commanding him to depart out of Jeruſalem; and he accordingly goes thence to Cæſarea Philippi in Cæloſyria, and to Tarſus in Cilicia, Acts ix. 30. Gal. i. 21. It being then ſo long ere he came to Jeruſalem, Barnabas might well know, either from the brethren of Damaſcus coming to Jeruſalem, or from ſome journey he had taken thither, the certainty of his converſion to the Chriſtian faith. (W.)

The Jews took counſel to kill him.] By exaſperating and incenſing the civil powers againſt him. At this time Damaſcus was under the government of Aretas, king of Arabia Petræa; who kept an ethnarch, or governor conſtantly reſiding there. To this governor the Jews made their addreſs, with crafty inſinuations, perſuading him to apprehend St. Paul; poſſibly under the notion of a ſpy, there being war at that time, between the Romans and that king: And thereupon the gates were ſhut, and extraordinary guards ſet, and all engines that could be laid to take him. (Cave and Fleury)

Let him down by the wall in a basket.] The wiſdom of God is never at a loſs to find out ways and means, either ordinary or extraordinary, for the deliverance of his ſervants, when their deliverance makes moſt for his own glory, and the goſpel's advantage. God had much work for Paul to do: And, till he had finiſhed his work, his enemies could not take him off, with all their combined power and malice. (B.) The aſſurance he had by revelation, as to the deſigns of God concerning him, did not hinder him from making uſe of human means, even ſuch as were extraordinary, to ſecure his life. The protection of God often lies conceal'd under thoſe mean and humbling ways of ſecurity which he ſuggeſts to the mind: To neglect theſe, and to have nothing but an idle and unactive confidence, is to tempt God. (Q.) But, as to the particular queſtion, concerning the lawfulneſs of flying from perſecution, I ſhall here briefly add the ſubſtance of a learned prælection of Dr. Abbot, afterwards archbiſhop, viz. That God hath given all men a natural inclination to preſerve themſelves; which will incite a Chriſtian to withdraw from approaching dangers: For ſince he, who has given us hands to fight, and backs to bear them, has alſo given us feet to eſcape from them; we may ſometimes take the benefit of theſe, eſpecially if there be no prohibition in the holy ſcripture to the contrary. That no man can be ſo ſure of his own ſtrength, as not to acknowledge his weakneſs in bearing the croſs: For fleſh and blood ought not to preſume upon a ſufficient ſtock of patience, courage, and conſtancy, to ſupport us under the terrors and ſufferings of the moſt exquiſite torments, while we may fairly avoid them; Wiſd. ix. 15. 1 Cor. x. 12. Rom. xi. 20. Matth. xxvi. 33, &c. That therefore 'tis better, when opportunity offers, to cut off all occaſion, by a timely flight, than by too boldly facing the danger, run the hazard of falling in the conflict, to the ſcandal of our holy profeſſion: But then if, after all, any one happens to be intercepted, he muſt pray to God to give him ſtrength and confidence, to confeſs his name, even to death. That this was the practice of the ſaints of old, 1 Sam. xxi. 1. xxii. 1. and xxvii. 1. 2 Sam. xv. 14. Acts viii. 1. Hebr. xi. 37, 38. as well as in later times. That Tertullian's opinion is therefore not to be follow'd; who aſſerted, that we ought not, on any account, to turn our backs, even upon death: But rather that of Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, and Cyprian; from whom we may gather, that Chriſtians are not, abſolutely and ſimply, forbid to avoid perſecution by flight. But the determination is another thing, as to thoſe who are paſtors of flocks, and preachers of the goſpel, by ſpecial office and vocation. For theſe are not only to take care of their own bodies, but of the ſouls of other people: And our ſaviour himſelf makes this a diſtinction between a good ſhepherd and an hireling, John x. 11, 12. xv. 13. and 1 John iii. 16. This the holy biſhops and paſtors in the primitive church did both retain in their memory and obſerve in their ſufferings; as ſome others have alſo done in later times: All which apoſtles, fathers, biſhops and miniſters, muſt have been guilty of the laſt degree of folly, if they had not been perſuaded, that to have ſecured themſelves by flight was inconſiſtent with their duty to Chriſt, and the due care of their flocks; according to that ſentence of our ſaviour, in Luke xiv. 26. But 'tis ſaid, That holy prophets in ſcripture, and even our ſaviour himſelf, did ſometimes betake themſelves to flight, and yet were never tax'd for it, as deſerters of their flocks, Exod. ii. 15. 1 Kings xix. 3. Jer. xxvi. 21. Matth. ii. 14. John viii. 59. Yea, and our ſaviour gave his apoſtles a ſpecial command, ſaying, "When they perſecute you in this city, flee ye into another," Matth. x. 23. Of which precept, or permiſſion, they frequently took the benefit afterwards; and particularly St. Paul, in the caſe before us. But theſe ſeveral inſtances can be of no force againſt our determination, if they be duly conſider'd, with their reſpective circumſtances For, as to Moſes, when he "fled from the face of Pharaoh," he was not yet indued with the ſpirit of God: What Elijah did, was by the expreſs command of "the angel of the Lord." And when our ſaviour withdrew himſelf, from any apparent dangers, it was only becauſe he had ſtill many works to do, in teaching, healing, and working miracles, and his hour of ſuffering was not yet come; as he perfectly knew by virtue of his divinity. But when the proper time was come to make a ſtand, not only he, but the reſt too, expoſed their lives to the utmoſt perils, Exod. v. 1. 1 Kings xviii. 18. and John xiii. 1. And therefore thoſe caſes can be no precedent in our times. Neither had the apoſtles at that time, the particular charge of any certain congregations; ſo that their withdrawing from one place to another was no reſtraint upon, but rather an extending of the exerciſe of their vocation. But when the goſpel was eſtabliſh'd, the reſpective churches had their proper miniſters; as they now have: And every one knows his own particular flock; of which he has taken the charge, and for which he is therefore to be accountable to God; and conſequently he ought not for any terrors to deſert them. As to St. Paul's caſe, as he had not any diſtinct charge at Damaſcus; ſo the Chriſtians there could not be deſtitute of the word and ſacraments on his withdrawing, while Ananias ſtill remain'd there: And as the perſecution was particularly levell'd at St. Paul; ſo his withdrawing from it, was an action meerly perſonal, and was of much greater benefit to the church, than he could have done it, by running the hazard of ſtaying with them. The ſame may be ſaid for Urijah's "flying into Egypt," when Jeremiah ſtill remain'd upon the ſpot, at Jeruſalem: And the like alſo of St. Athanaſius and others; as is fully and ſolidly determined by St. Auguſtine, in ep. 180. ad Honorat. with whoſe judgment agrees that of the whole orthodox church, ſo far as I know, from that time to this. The ſum of all is, That laymen, women, and children, as having no charge of the ſouls of others to account for, may lawfully fly from perſecution: But that a miniſter, who has a cure of ſouls, ought to ſtand his ground; unleſs the perſecution be intended perſonally againſt him, and there be more paſtors to ſupply his abſence; for if ſo, he may commit his flock, for that time, to the common charge of the reſt. (Abbot)

They were all afraid of him.] The converſion of a perſecutor is ſo rare and ſeldom heard of, that it puts the largeſt charity hard to it to believe the reality of it. The diſciples, who had formerly felt the effects of Saul's perſecuting rage and fury, might juſtly be afraid of taking him into intimate fellowſhip and communion with the church. (B.) But Barnabas his teſtimony was full and ſatisfactory in his favour; who Brought him to the apoſtles] That is, To Peter, who was not yet caſt into priſon, and to James, our Lord's brother, the biſhop of Jeruſalem. (Beza, Aſſ. Cave, B. and Fleury) For "other of the apoſtles ſaw he none," at that time, Gal. i. 19. See the notes on ch. iv. 36.

How he had ſeen the Lord.] See the notes on ver. 17.

Diſputed againſt the Grecians.] See the notes on ch. vi. 1.

And were edified.] Oicodomein ſignifies properly to build, or raiſe a ſuperſtruction, upon a foundation, and to add all the perfection of the building deſign'd or belonging to it. And ſo, being accommodated to ſpiritual matters, it ſignifies to teach the whole Chriſtian doctrine of ſtrict and pious life, of which Chriſt's being the meſſias ſent from God, is the foundation or corner-ſtone; and the receiving and practiſing all that he commands, is that which is naturally and neceſſarily built upon it: And therefore, to their being edified here, is added in the next words, "walking in the fear of the Lord." The word is elſewhere very often uſed in theſe books; eſpecially in St. Paul's epiſtles: And therefore it will here be fit to premiſe that which may give light to it in all thoſe places. 'Tis generally uſed, in this metaphorical ſenſe, with application to the church of God, and the ſpiritual building thereof, partly in reſpect of knowledge, but principally in reſpect of Chriſtian practice. The church is the houſe of God, 1 Pet. ii. 5. "a ſpiritual houſe," and every Chriſtian one of the "living ſtones," which are edified or built, and of which this houſe is made up. And the building it ſelf, that is, edification, is the compacting, or orderly joining together of theſe living ſtones, in belief of the truth, and charitable living together; from both which proceeds the ſtrength and comelineſs of the ſtructure, and the fitneſs for the uſe and honour of him whoſe it is, that is, Chriſt. So that whatſoever tends in any eminent manner, either to the converting of Infidels, bringing them into the church, to the advancing of Chriſtian knowledge, or eſpecially of piety, in any one or more particular men, or to the planting of unity, peace, and charity, in any particular national, or in the univerſal church of God, that is ſaid to edify, or build up: And which of theſe ſenſes peculiarly belongs to the word in any place, muſt be judged by the context, and circumſtances of the place where it is found, and may not be here ſet down more particularly. (H.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35. And it came to paſs, as Peter paſſed throughout all quarters, he came down alſo to the ſaints which dwelt at Lydda. And there he found a certain man named Eneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was ſick of the palſy. And Peter ſaid unto him, Eneas, Jeſus Chriſt maketh thee whole: Ariſe, and make thy bed. And he aroſe immediately. And all that dwelt at Lydda, and Saron, ſaw him, and turned to the Lord.

Peter paſſed throughout all quarters.] He being the chief apoſtle of the circumciſion, viſits the brethren in thoſe parts that were circumciſed: But, that he went down to Antioch, and founded the church there, and ſat biſhop in it five, or ſeven years, as Baronius fancies, is not only beſides the text, which mentions nothing of St. Peter's going beyond the places here mentioned, but it is plainly inconſiſtent with his impriſonment at Jeruſalem, chap. xii. and with his abode at Joppa till he went to Cæſarea, chap. ix. 43. and xi. 5. Still more ridiculous are they who ſay, he went to viſit all Chriſtian churches every where: It being plain from the hiſtory of the Acts, that he abode at Joppa, till he went to Cæſarea, and that from thence he returned to Jeruſalem, ch. xi. 2. And there is as much reaſon to ſay, that Philip did ſo, becauſe from Azotus, a city of the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. v. 2. "he preached through all the cities till he came to Cæſarea, ch. viii. 40. That ever he was at Antioch, till St. Paul and Barnabas having founded a church there, he came, and was ſharply rebuked by St. Paul, for his diſſimulation againſt his own knowledge and miraculous conviction, I find no reaſon to believe. (W.)

Jeſus Chriſt maketh thee whole.] Note, 1. The difficulty of the cure: The diſeaſe was a dead-palſy, which had taken away the uſe of his limbs, and made him bed-rid for "eight years." All this is recorded, to ſhew the difficulty of the cure, and the greatneſs of the miracle; To an almighty phyſician, as the great God is, no diſeaſe is found incurable. 2. The manner of the cure: St. Peter acts in Chriſt's name, not his own; and lets the lame man know whom he ſhould own for his benefactor; Chriſt himſelf. The apoſtle was but the inſtrument in Chriſt's hand: And that the cure was perfectly miraculous, appears by this; The cripple was cured immediately, and cured perfectly; it was a preſent cure, "He aroſe immediately." The inſtantaneous manner of the cure ſhews it to be miraculous, and by a divine power, for nature and art act in time and by degrees, bringing nothing to perfection on a ſudden; Whereas this cure was wrought in a moment, his ſtrength is reſtored in an inſtant: It was alſo a perfect cure, and as an evidence of it, he takes up his bed: This was to ſhew that he was fully recovered. 3. The effects of this cure: It had ſuch an influence upon the ſpectators of this miracle, That "all that dwelt at Lydda, and Saron, when they ſaw it, turned to the Lord," That is, they embraced the faith, ſeeing this cripple ſo ſtrangely, ſo ſuddenly, and ſo perfectly cured. (B.)

Ver. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. Now there was at Joppa a certain diſciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: This woman was full of good works, and alms-deeds which ſhe did. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that ſhe was ſick, and died: Whom when they had waſhed, they laid her in an upper chamber. And for as much as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the diſciples had heard that Peter was there, they ſent unto him two men, deſiring him that he would not delay to come to them. Then Peter aroſe, and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: And all the widows ſtood by him weeping, and ſhewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made while ſhe was with them. But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed, and turning him to the body, ſaid, Tabitha, ariſe. And ſhe opened her eyes: And when ſhe ſaw Peter, ſhe ſat up. And he gave her his hand, and lift her up; and when he had called the ſaints and widows, preſented her alive. And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord. And it came to paſs, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas.] The reaſon why St. Luke gives this interpretation of her Syriac name, ſeems to be this; that ſhe being a Greciſing Jeweſs, was called by the firſt name by the Jews, and by the ſecond among the Greeks. (W.) Note here, 1. That tho' ſhe was a woman rich in good works, full of alms-deeds; yet neither her piety towards God, nor her liberality to the poor, could preſerve her either from death or from diſeaſes: A dear diſciple may be diſeaſed, and die: "Behold, he whom thou loveſt is ſick," John xi. 3. yea, and dead too: Strength of grace, and dearneſs of reſpect, even from Chriſt himſelf, cannot prevail againſt diſeaſes. Good Dorcas here lies dead, with her body waſhed, not only to fit her for burial, but eſpecially to ſhew their hope of the reſurrection. 2. The doleful lamentation made by the widows, for the loſs of this good woman, who uſed to cloath the naked with the labour of her hands: She did not ſpend her time in making rich apparel for herſelf, but in making garments for the poor; and it ſeems ſhe had good ſtore of them ready made by her, for the poor's uſe, as their neceſſities did require; They "ſhewed the coats and garments which Dorcas had made;" the undoubted tokens and evidences of her pious charity. The beſt reliques of ſaints, that can remain, in honour of them when departed, are acts of piety towards God, and of charity to the poor. 3. The manner of St. Peter's working this miracle. 1. He "puts them all out" of the room where the dead lay: Partly to prevent oſtentation and vain-glory; partly to prevent diſturbance by their immoderate mourning, and partly to prevent interruption in the exerciſe of prayer, which he was now about to perform. 2. He "kneeled down; which recommends to us that reverential poſture in our prayers to the great God, of kneeling before him. 3. He prayed; thereby owning and acknowledging, that the power of raiſing her was from God, not from himſelf. Note laſtly, The effect of this miracle; "Many believed in the Lord:" She was raiſed more for the good of others than her own; for her reſtoring to natural life, was the occaſion of raiſing many to a life of faith. (B.)

He tarried many days.] Viz. Till he was ſent for to Cornelius, chap. x. 6.

CHAP. X.

Cornelius, a devout Gentile, by the direction of an angel, ſendeth for Peter: Who, in the mean time, is taught in a viſion, not to deſpiſe the Gentiles. While Peter preached Chriſt to Cornelius and his company, the Holy Ghoſt falleth on them all, and they are baptized.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. THERE was a certain man in Ceſarea, called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band, A devout man, and one that feared God with all his houſe, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway. He ſaw in a viſion evidently, about the ninth hour of the day, an angel of God coming in to him, and ſaying unto him, Cornelius. And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and ſaid, What is it, Lord? And he ſaid unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. And now ſend men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whoſe ſirname is Peter: He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whoſe houſe is by the ſea-ſide: he ſhall tell thee what thou oughteſt to do. And when the angel which ſpake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his houſhold-ſervants, and a devout ſoldier of them that waited on him continually: And when he had declared all theſe things unto them, he ſent them to Joppa.

In Cæſarea.] Not Cæſarea Philippi, in the tribe of Napthali, built by Philip the tetrarch, in honour of Tiberius: But another, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, on the ſea-coaſt of Paleſtine, built at Straton's tower by Herod the great, with vaſt expence, in honour of Auguſtus. Here the Romans kept a ſtrong garriſon, to awe the conquer'd Jews; and here was the uſual reſidence of their preſident.

Cornelius, a centurion.] Here we may obſerve, 1. The perſon deſcribed, to whom St. Peter is ſent to preach the Goſpel: By his name, Cornelius; by his occupation, a ſoldier; by his religion, a proſelyte or converted Gentile: Of which there were two ſorts; ſome were proſelytes of the covenant; that is, ſuch Gentiles as ſubmitted themſelves to circumciſion, and the whole Moſaical Pædagogy: Theſe were counted as Jews, and freely converſed with as ſuch. Others were called proſelytes of the gate: Theſe were not circumciſed, nor did they conform to the Moſaick rites; but were obliged only to obſerve the ſeven precepts of Noah: namely, to worſhip the true God, and not idols; to abſtain from blood, from fornication, from robbery; to adminiſter juſtice impartially, and do as they would be done unto. Such a proſelyte as this, the Jews would not converſe with, but counted unclean, being Gentile; and ſuch an one was this Cornelius: But tho' a Gentile, tho' a ſoldier, tho' a commiſſion-officer, yet a pious, charitable, good man. In all nations, in all places, of all employments, God has a number of holy and gracious perſons, to honour him in the world, according to their preſent meaſure of light received from him. 2. The evidence which Cornelius gave of his religious fearing God; he "feared God with all his houſe;" he "gave much alms, and prayed to God always." Cornelius was therefore really, becauſe relatively, religious; he obligeth his family to fear God as well as himſelf, and together with himſelf; like Abraham, he "commands his houſhold after him, to keep the way of the Lord," Gen. xviii. 19. And thus the bleſſing of Abraham came upon this Gentile, Cornelius; "he feared God with all his houſe." And his charity was as eminent as his piety; he "gave much alms to the people:" that is, to the people of the Jews; to whom alms was not unclean, tho' given by an heathen perſon. It is further added, that he "prayed to God always:" He prayed to the true God, not to idols; and he prayed to God always; that is, at every fitting ſeaſon, and convenient opportunity for the duty. We are ſaid in ſcripture to do a thing continually, when we do it ſeaſonably. Thus to "pray always," to pray evermore, and to "pray without ceaſing," is, 1. To keep the heart continually, as much as may be, in a praying frame or diſpoſition: And, 2. To embrace all the proper ſeaſons and opportunities for prayer. The beauty of religion lies much in the harmonious performance of the duties of it; when one duty doth not interfere with another, but we prudently find time for all. (B.) See the notes on Luke xviii. 1.

The Italian band.] The Romans had various ways of diſtinguiſhing their bands of ſoldiers, and giving names to them. Sometimes it was from the order of their places: So they were called the firſt, the ſecond band, &c. according to their precedency. Sometimes from the countries they were quarter'd in: So the German, the Panonian band, &c. becauſe they were there in ſervice. Sometimes from the commanders they were under: So the Auguſtan, the Claudian band, &c. becauſe perſons of their name did lead them. Sometimes from their own behaviour: So victrix, ferrea, the conquering, the iron band, &c. becauſe of emergencies they had appeared in. Sometimes from the parts they were gather'd from: So this is here called "the Italian band," becauſe raiſed out of that country. And in this Cornelius was a centurion (Meggot) That is, the commander of one hundred men.

A devout man, and one that feared God.] It will be worth obſerving here, what titles the New Teſtament hath made uſe of, to expreſs the ſecond ſort of proſelytes; thoſe, not of juſtice, but of the gates, or the uncircumciſed proſelytes: And theſe titles are, 1. Andres eulabeis, pious men, chap. viii. 2. and ſometimes with this addition, "out of every nation under heaven," chap. ii. 2. which is the very title the Rabbins give them, of the good men of the nations of the world. 2. Hoi catoicountes, they who dwell as ſtrangers at Jeruſalem, chap. ii. 14. all one with proſelytes, ver. 10. 3. Euſebeis, pious, ch. x. 2, 7. 4. Phoboumenoi ton Theon, thoſe who "fear God," ver. 2. And ſo chap. xiii. 16. "Men of Iſrael, and ye that fear God:" And again, ver. 26. Thoſe "among you fearing God;" meaning theſe proſelytes, as Oecumenius ſaith expreſly. 5. Sebomenoi, worſhippers, ver. 43. As chap. xvii. 4. meaning the ſame proſelytes ſtill: And agreeable to many of theſe was the name Timotheus, ſignifying in the Greek a worſhipper of God; his father being a Greek, tho' his mother was a Jew, and himſelf a proſelyte as his father was, yet not circumciſed, till St. Paul cauſed him to be ſo afterwards. And, 6. Proſerchomenoi to Theo, they who come to God, Heb. x. 2. which is the very word proſelytos with a ſlight change. (H. and W.) The Fathers reſolve it well, why Cornelius is ſaid to be "one that feared God;" becauſe he did not "hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs," as the apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. i. 18. and did not abuſe his natural light: And therefore God beſtowed a further light upon him. So that if men uſe Cornelius's means, viz. prayers, alms, and faſting, and ſuppreſs not the light they have, God will give them his grace, and further light to lead them into all neceſſary truths. (Andr.) See more of the proſelytes, in the notes on chap. ii. 5. Matt. xxiii. 15. and John iii. 5.

Gave much alms.] When a man finds his bowels open to the poor, it is a good ſymptom of God's mercy to him. When Cornelius gave alms, his calling was near. Our Saviour ſaith, "Give alms, and all things are clean unto you," Luke xi. 41. ſpeaking of ceremonial cleanneſs under the law: And St. James ſaith, This is a part of the moral purity required under the Goſpel; for "pure religion and undefiled before God, is to viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction," James i. 27. (Idem) Cornelius "gave much alms:" Much, not only with reſpect to his rank and fortune, or to his religion, being at moſt but a proſelyte of the gates; but much, even conſider'd in itſelf: For it is ſaid, he "gave much alms to the people;" which muſt imply an enlarged generous bounty. To give alms, might have argued a ſenſe of religion; but to give much, zeal and fervency: To give alms, might have argued in him humanity and a tenderneſs of nature; but to give much alms, a heavenly diſpoſition and greatneſs of mind, made ſo by faith: Something he might have done for reputation, ſomething out of compliance and decency; but to give much alms, in a perſon of his circumſtances, was an unqueſtionable proof of ſincerity and perfection too. (Meggot and Lucas) Prayer and alms are powerful ſolicitations with God: One aſſiſts the other. Alms give wings to prayer, that it may aſcend more ſwiftly to God; and prayer gives ſtrength to alms, to enable them to follow. (Q.)

For a memorial before God.] The word mnemoſynon, render'd, a memorial, is uſed both of the incenſe offered up with the ſacrifice, Levit. ii. 2, 9. and of a part or handful of the mincha offered up to God, Lev. v. 12. Numb. v. 15, 18, 26. In which two places no incenſe was to be admitted, it being an offering for ſin, or a memorial for iniquity; ſo that there, not the incenſe or perfume, but part of the mincha, or oblation put upon the altar, is called aſcharah, a memorial. Now, ſeeing alms are the Chriſtian ſacrifices, and are called ſo by the apoſtle, Phil. iv. 18. and ſeeing our prayers are ſaid to aſcend as incenſe, and are ſo ſtiled, Rev. v. 8. and viii. 3. Seeing they are our ſacrifice of praiſe, Heb. xiii. 15, 16. and alms our odor or ſweet ſavour, Phil. iv. 18. the alluſion here may very fitly relate to both. (H. and W.) That God Almighty hears prayers, is an expreſſion common to all writers. But that prayers aſcend up to heaven, as a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to God, is an Hebrew form of ſpeech, not of leſs vigour, propriety, or agreeableneſs. 'Tis a beautiful alluſion to the odors and fragrancies of ſacrifice and incenſe aſcending into the skies; grateful to God Almighty as his own appointment; and a proper expreſſion of the duty and obedience of his pious worſhippers. (Blackw.)

He ſhall tell thee.] Obſerve here, 1. That tho' God ſent an angel to Cornelius, to acquaint him with his will; yet the angel was to direct him to the apoſtle, who was to inſtruct him in the faith. This, no doubt, God did, to put honour upon the miniſters and miniſtry; as alſo to let us know, that we are not to expect extraordinary ways of teaching, when God affords us the uſe of ordinary means. The angel might as eaſily have "told him what he ought to do," as to bid him ſend for Peter on that occaſion; and have baptized him alſo: And God could as eaſily have given him his Holy Spirit at that time, as four days after; and alſo fully inſtructed him by that Spirit in all things that Chriſt had commanded. But this would not have been agreeable to the order Chriſt had ſettled in his church. Chriſt had appointed his apoſtles to miniſter his ordinances; and therefore God did not ſuffer even his angel to break in upon this œconomy. But the apoſtle came; and having given them a brief account of what they ought to believe and do, "he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord," ver. 48. And ſo Cornelius and his friends were baptized, by ſuch as the apoſtle commiſſioned or appointed for that purpoſe. If therefore an angel from heaven durſt not attempt to preach authoritatively, and to adminiſter the ſacraments, becauſe he had no commiſſion, how ſhall any man, being not lawfully commiſſioned for that purpoſe, undertake to do it? (Bever Cave, Brett, and B.) 2. That, notwithſtanding the extraordinary piety and devotion of Cornelius, who was certainly as great a moraliſt as ever lived; yet he had ſomething ſtill to do, which as yet he did not know of, and without which he could never get to heaven. He muſt ſend to Simon Peter, to be inſtructed in the faith of Chriſt. Which doubtleſs is as clear a demonſtration as poſſibly can be deſired, that all the devotion and good works imaginable can never bring us to heaven without Chriſt, chap. iv. 12. And therefore, altho' it be indiſpenſably neceſſary that we do good works; yet we muſt not truſt on them, but only on Chriſt, for happineſs and ſalvation. (Bever.) And, 3. That God does not ſend Cornelius to St. Peter, but commands St. Peter to come to his houſe: As well, that he may not take Cornelius away from the place where his duty required his preſence; as that this mercy may extend to his relations and friends. (Q.) See the notes on chap. xi. 11.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the houſe-top to pray, about the ſixth hour. And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance, And ſaw heaven opened, and a certain veſſel deſcending unto him, as it had been a great ſheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth: Wherein were all manner of four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. And there came a voice to him, Riſe, Peter; kill, and eat. But Peter ſaid, Not ſo Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean. And the voice ſpake unto him again the ſecond time, What God hath cleanſed, that call not thou common. This was done thrice: and the veſſel was received up again into heaven. Now while Peter doubted in himſelf what this viſion, which he had ſeen, ſhould mean; behold, the men which were ſent from Cornelius, had made enquiry for Simon's houſe, and ſtood before the gate, And called, and asked whether Simon, which was ſirnamed Peter, were lodged there. While Peter thought on the viſion, the Spirit ſaid unto him, Behold, three men ſeek thee. Ariſe therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have ſent them. Then Peter went down to the men which were ſent unto him from Cornelius; and ſaid, Behold, I am he whom ye ſeek: what is the cauſe wherefore ye are come? And they ſaid, Cornelius the centurion, a juſt man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to ſend for thee into his houſe, and to hear words of thee. Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him. And the morrow after they entred into Ceſarea: and Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinſmen, and near friends. And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worſhipped him. But Peter took him up, ſaying, Stand up; I my ſelf alſo am a man. And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together. And he ſaid unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation: but God hath ſhewed me, that I ſhould not call any man common or unclean. Therefore came I unto you without gainſaying, aſſoon as I was ſent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have ſent for me? And Cornelius ſaid, Four days ago I was faſting until this hour, and at the ninth hour I prayed in my houſe, and behold, a man ſtood before me in bright clothing, And ſaid, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the ſight of God. Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whoſe ſirname is Peter; he is lodged in the houſe of one Simon a tanner, by the ſea-ſide; who when he cometh, ſhall ſpeak unto thee. Immediately therefore I ſent to thee; and thou haſt well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

Upon the houſe-top to pray.] The buildings in Judea had generally domata, plain roofs, fit to walk upon and converſe in. Of theſe the Jews had a ſpecial uſe, in places out of Jeruſalem; that they might more freely look that way in performing their devotions. For the temple of Jeruſalem being the ſolemn place of worſhip, they that were at diſtance from that place were to pray toward it. So, 1 Kings viii. 48. in the firſt inſtitution, they that were carried captive out of the land were to "pray toward their land:" And accordingly, Dan. vi. 10. Daniel "went into his houſe, and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jeruſalem, he kneeled on his knees three times a-day, and prayed." So when it is ſaid of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 2. that "he turned his face to the wall, and prayed," Jonathan's Targum reads, Towards the wall of the ſanctuary; that is, toward that wall of the room which pointed toward the ſanctuary, as now-a-days the Jews in the Weſt, in Italy, Germany, &c. are ſaid to have their walls inſcribed The Eaſt, becauſe Jeruſalem lies eaſt from them. That St. Peter at this time obſerved this cuſtom, there is little doubt, when we remember, that as Daniel obſerved thoſe two circumſtances, of time and of poſture, ſo Peter retaining the one, as appears here by "the ſixth hour," may as reaſonably be deemed to have retained the other, that of the poſture, toward Jeruſalem, in offering up his devotions, and to that end to have gone "up to the houſe-top to pray," where he might moſt freely look that way. When he was at Jeruſalem, he went up ſolemnly to the Temple, to pray, at the hours of prayer, Peter and John "at the ninth hour of prayer," chap. iii. 1, &c. And ſo all the apoſtles were "continually (viz. at the conſtant hours) in the Temple," Luke xxiv. 53. And then there will be little doubt, but they retained that other part of obſervance to that place, of praying towards the Temple, when they were further from it; it being no part of Chriſt's reformation, to forbid all the religious ceremonies which had been of uſe among the Jews, but rather to adapt and accommodate many of them to the Chriſtians uſe. (H. and W.)

He fell into a trance.] Ecſtaſis, in the Greek, anſwers to the Hebrew word, which ſignifies either, 1. A deep ſleep, and a trance of the nature of that; or, 2. Amazement, or aſtoniſhment; and which by the Septuagint is accordingly render'd ſometimes thambos, 1 Sam. xxvi. 12. and ſometimes ecſtaſis, as Gen. ii. 21. where, tho' we read it "a deep ſleep," it is of the ſame kind with that here, a trance or ecſtaſy; and therefore is by the Targum render'd a ſtrong ſleep, intimating it to be ſomething more than that ſleep which is ordinary among men. (H.) St. Peter's ſoul was, as it were, abſtracted out of the body, and abſent from it; that is, drawn off from the perception of all earthly and ſenſible objects, and enabled unto a more entire attendance upon ſpiritual and heavenly matters and myſteries. (B.)

Saw heaven opened.] See the notes on chap. vii. 56.

Common or unclean.] That is, what the preſcript of the law had made ſo. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Mark vii. 2.

That call not thou common.] Me ſu coinou, Do not thou pollute. For explication of all that in this chapter is mentioned, with relation to this matter, let it be noted, 1. That it was the prieſt's office, in caſe of leproſy and other matters of like nature, to pronounce the thing or perſon under examination clean or unclean. And tho' this was done only by a declarative ſentence, yet is it expreſſed effectively, both in the Hebrew and Greek; The prieſt ſhall cleanſe him; The prieſt ſhall pollute him, Lev. xiii. 6, 8, &c. Accordingly, the voice here ſaith, "What God hath cleanſed," (that is, by this viſion and command, declared to be clean) that do not thou pollute, i. e. pronounce not thou unclean. 2. That the two great things which made the partition-wall betwixt Jew and Gentile, were the rite of circumciſion, and the diſtinction betwixt clean and unclean meats. Of theſe two, circumciſion was common to them from the beginning, with the Iſhmaelites, and afterwards with many other nations. But the abſtaining from all meats, forbidden by the law of Moſes as unclean, was peculiar to the Jews, and diſtinguiſhed them from all the nations of the world: And that this was the true ſcope of theſe laws, even to ſeparate them from all other nations, by a diet peculiar to themſelves, which might keep them from familiar converſation with the Gentiles, and ſo from learning their idolatrous cuſtoms, God himſelf declareth, ſaying, Lev. xx. 24, &c. Hence it muſt follow, that tho' the Egyptians, the Syrians, and other nations might abſtain from ſome of theſe beaſts as unclean, yet not any of them obſerved the diſtinction of meats preſcribed by Moſes; for then God could not by it have ſeparated them from all other nations to himſelf. And ſuitable to this is the account which Eleazer the high-prieſt gives of theſe laws, in Ariſteas, That God had hedged them in with theſe purifications, as to meats and drinks, that not eating, or converſing with evil men, they might not be defiled: Or, as Euſebius hath it from the ſame author, That they might in nothing be mixt with other nations, but be kept pure both as to ſoul and body. And laſtly, being thus ſeparated, by this precept, from all familiar converſe with other nations, hence they came to look on them, who did not uſe this abſtinence, as unclean, becauſe they freely did eat of thoſe things which the law made unclean to them; and to ſay that the unclean beaſts did ſignify the people of the world. So R. Menahem on Lev. xi. Now hence we learn, 1. Why, in this viſion, there is a repreſentation of all manner of beaſts, fowls, and creeping things; viz. Becauſe all theſe are mentioned, Lev. xx. 25. as things by abſtaining from ſome of which as unclean, God had ſeparated them from other nations to himſelf. 2. We ſee the reaſon, why the men of the circumciſion object to St. Peter theſe two things, viz. That he "went in to the uncircumciſed, and did eat with them," chap. xi. 3. to wit, Becauſe it was chiefly by theſe two things they were ſeparated from other nations. 3. We learn why St. Peter ſaith, ver. 28. that "God had, by this viſion, ſhew'd him, that he ſhould call no man common, or unclean," viz. Becauſe he, by this declaration and command, had taken away that diſtinction which hinder'd their converſe with other nations: And 4. We ſee how neceſſary and expedient it was, that this liberty of eating meats indifferently, ſhould be ſo fully declared from heaven to the Jews; Becauſe it being by God declared a law given for this very purpoſe, that they might be ſever'd to himſelf from other nations, they durſt not do any thing, without a revelation, which ſeem'd to violate it; and without breaking through the traditions they had receiv'd about it, they could not have executed their commiſſion, to teach, or "make diſciples in all nations." Hence Peter is bid to go to them, meeden diacrinomenos; putting no difference betwixt them and the Jews; as that phraſe often ſignifies. (W.)

Doubted in himſelf.] Dieporei; in the Syriac, methdamar, he wondred. But diaporeo ſignifieth ſuch a ſuſpenſion of the mind, as perplexeth and ſtraitneth it ſo, that one knoweth not what to do. (Aſſ.) Here note, 1. How St. Peter ſets himſelf to meditate upon what he had ſeen and heard from God. He ponder'd with himſelf "what this viſion which he had ſeen ſhould mean." Whatever paſſes from God to man, either by the eye, or through the ear, ought to be the ſubject of our deepeſt meditation. We are to contemplate the excellencies and perfections which are in the word and works of God, with an intellectual eye, and to dwell upon them in our ſerious thoughts. 2. The care, which the Holy Spirit took to reſolve ſatisfactorily the inward doubtings and reaſonings of St Peter's mind concerning this matter. "I have ſent them (ſays the Holy Spirit) therefore ariſe and go down, nothing doubting." Where obſerve, Both the divinity and perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt: He that knows the thoughts, the doubtings and reaſonings of man's heart, as the Holy Ghoſt here did St. Peter's, is truly and really God; and he that commands and forbids, is really a perſon. So doth the Holy Spirit here, he commands St. Peter to go to Cornelius, and forbids his doubting of the lawfulneſs or ſucceſs of his journey; "Go with them, doubting nothing, for I have ſent them." (B.)

A juſt man.] The verſions expreſs the character that is given to Joſeph, Matt. i. 19. and to Cornelius here, and to other good men, by the word juſt. 'Tis true, the term in the original has that ſignification: But it is alſo certain, that the Hebrew words, which ſignify juſt or righteous, and juſtice or righteouſneſs, do likewiſe often ſignify mercy and merciful. The deſign therefore of the author who employs them, determines their ſignification, in the places where they are to be found. See the notes on Matt. i. 19. Luke xii. 33. Rom. iii. 25. and 1 John i. 9.

One that feareth God.] See the notes on ver. 2.

To hear words of thee.] This is to be underſtood in the ſame manner, as in Job xxxii. 10. "Hearken to me:" And chap. xxxiv. 2. "Hear my words." Thus, chap. xxxii. 18. Elihu ſays, "I am full of matter;" that is, of words; as our margin renders it. The meaning therefore is, To be inſtructed by thee; rhemata, words, being here underſtood in the ſame ſenſe with catechoſis, inſtruction; agreeable to which St. Peter is ſaid to have catechized the centurion. (D. Heinſ.)

And worſhipped him.] The Greek word proſecyneſe, which we tranſlate worſhipped, ſignifies alſo ſaluted reverendly. So the Hebrews uſe their verb ſhacha, to fall down, or bow down, either for divine adoration, or civil reverence. Thus, Gen. xxiii. 7. Abraham "bow'd himſelf to the people of the land;" which the Seventy render by this very word proſecyneſe. But we can't imagine, that Abraham adored the people as God; or that Cornelius ſo adored St. Peter. Yet it appeareth, that Cornelius, being ſtricken with reverence at the preſence of ſo great a ſervant of God, exceeded the bounds of mere civil reſpect, as appeareth by St. Peter's words to him, ver. 16. (Aſſ.) If the worſhip intended, and given to him, was religious worſhip, St. Peter declares ſuch worſhip was not to be given to a mere man: If it was only civil worſhip, he who thought it not fit to receive that, would much leſs have received religious worſhip. (W.) Whatever St. Peter's pretended ſucceſſor challenges as his due of reverence and homage, St. Peter himſelf would not ſuffer Cornelius to lie at his feet, much leſs to kiſs his feet. (B.)

An unlawful thing.] The law of God forbad them to marry with heathens, to have familiar converſation with them, &c. But their traditions barr'd them from eating with them, or coming into their houſes, &c. chap. xi. 3. So that where St. Peter ſaith, "It is unlawful," we muſt underſtand him to ſpeak after the common tradition, or ſenſe of the Jews. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John iv. 9. and xviii. 28.

All here preſent before God.] The Syriac and the old Latin copies read it, "before thee." (H.) Obſerve here, The preparation and readineſs of Cornelius and his friends, to hear and receive the word of God from St. Peter's mouth; "We are all here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God." Where note, 1. He deſires the ſame holy doctrine which the apoſtle came to preach, may be deliver'd to his family, his friends and his kinsfolk, as well as himſelf. A good man would not go to heaven alone; but is deſirous of the inſtruction, converſion, and ſalvation of others, as well as of himſelf: "We are all here." 2. That the place of God's pure worſhip is the place of his ſpecial preſence; "We are all here preſent before God." 3. The end for which they are now come into the preſence of God: It was to hear what God ſhould ſpeak; yea, to hear all things which God ſhould command the apoſtle to ſpeak: Intimating to us, that as St. Peter himſelf was, ſo all the miniſters of Chriſt are, confined within their commiſſion, and muſt only ſpeak what God commands; neither are hearers bound to receive any thing elſe. Wo unto us, if when God ſends us of his errand, we tell our own tale: The word is the counſel of God: Now it is the counſel of God only, and the whole counſel of God alſo, that we are to declare, and our people are to hear; "We are all preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded us of God." (B.)

Ver. 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. Then Peter opened his mouth, and ſaid, Of a truth I perceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons: But in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. The word which God ſent unto the children of Iſrael, preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt; (he is Lord of all.) That word (I ſay) you know, which was publiſhed throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptiſm which John preached; How God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil: For God was with him. And we are witneſſes of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jeruſalem; whom they ſlew and hanged on a tree: Him God raiſed up the third day, and ſhewed him openly, Not to all the people, but unto witneſſes choſen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he roſe from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to teſtify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witneſs, that through his name whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins.

God is no reſpecter of perſons.] Reſpect of perſons, in matters judicial, is ſhew'd, when men judge others not according to the merits of the cauſe, but according to outward reſpects which relate nothing to it; as the greatneſs, riches, meanneſs, and poverty of the perſon, relation, friendſhip, or affection: And ſo in ſpirituals, to accept perſons is to reſpect them and their ſervices, not on the account of any thing that makes them better, or more fit to be regarded than others, or which is more acceptable in the ſight of God, but on the account of the nation to which they belong, or the anceſtors from whom they were deſcended. Thus, becauſe God had choſen the Jews to be his people, by reaſon of the piety of their forefathers, and to perform his promiſe made to them, the Jews imagined that God would accept them, and their ſervices, on that account, that they were of the Jewiſh nation, and of the ſeed of Abraham according to the fleſh, and that he would not accept the perſons, or regard the ſervices of the Gentiles, for want of theſe things: But theſe falſe conceptions St. Paul, in his epiſtle to the Romans, and St. Peter here refutes; ſhewing, 1. That men, not only of the Jewiſh, but of any other nation, may be acceptable to God, there being one God, who "is rich (in goodneſs) to all that call upon him," whether Jew or Gentile, Rom. x. 12. he being the God, not of the Jews only, but alſo of the Gentiles, and ſo as ready to juſtify them through faith, as to juſtify the Jews, Rom. iii. 29, 30. 2. That God accepts ſuch men, not on the account of their deſcent, or circumciſion, but becauſe they fear God, and work righteouſneſs: Thus Cornelius, being one that "feared God, and gave much alms, his prayers and alms came before God for a memorial," for good to him; whence it is evident, that ſome of other nations owning the true God, not only might, but actually did "fear God, and work righteouſneſs;"

otherwiſe they very ill deſerved the title given to the proſelytes of the gate: Nor could St. Peter perceive, that God was "no reſpecter of perſons on the account of a thing which never did, or could happen; or St. Paul ſay, "Glory, honour, and peace ſhould be to every one that doth good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile; for there is no reſpect of perſons with God," Rom. ii. 10, 11. How far ſuch perſons may be accepted with God, and on what account, See the notes on Rom. ii. 14. (W.)

The word which God ſent.] The apoſtles diſcourſe, from this to the 43d verſe, ſeems to be to this effect; Viz. 1. That there was an offer made by the Goſpel, of peace, i. e. of reconciliation and ſalvation, "by Jeſus Chriſt," the author of that Goſpel, ver. 36, 37. 2. That he was able to make good that promiſe, as being "Lord of all" things. 3. That he who preached this doctrine was a true prophet; he being "anointed with the Holy Ghoſt" for that office, and confirming what he ſaid by powerful miracles, ver. 38. 4. That this doctrine, and theſe miracles, could not be reaſonably queſtioned; they who were with him from the beginning being witneſſes of what he ſaid, and did, ver. 39. And, 5. Whereas it might be objected, that he was dead, and ſo could not be able to confer theſe bleſſings on them who believed in him, it is added, ver. 40. that "him God raiſed up the third day," according to his own prediction, and that of this reſurrection they were all eyewitneſſes, ſufficiently inſtructed to give in their teſtimony concerning it, by his frequent appearances to, and familiar converſe with them, ver. 41. 6. That after his reſurrection they had received a commiſſion from God, to "teſtify that he was appointed to be judge of the quick and dead;" and ſo to give that peace, and ſalvation, he had promiſed in his Goſpel to his faithful ſervants, ver. 42. And, laſtly, That, to all this, "all the prophets" had given in their ſuffrages, by declaring, that "through his name all that believed in him ſhould receive remiſſion of ſins," ver. 43. Note alſo, That it is not to be wondred, that St Peter ſhould ſay to Cornelius, and his kinſmen, who were already Proſelytes of the gate, and lived at Cæſarea, the ſeat of the governor of Judea, where the Jews dwelt, and whither they continually reſorted, and where Philip had already preached the Goſpel, Acts viii. 40. "Ye know this word;" he meaning not that they were perſuaded of the truth of it, but only that they had heard the fame, and were acquainted with the report of it. (Idem.)

After the baptiſm which John preached.] St. John the Baptiſt is the bond which connects the two covenants. Where he ends, Jeſus Chriſt begins. He preached the baptiſm of repentance: But it belongs to Chriſt to give the ſpirit and the truth thereof. (Q.)

God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth.] That the uſe of oil among the Jews was for feſtivals, hath been noted on Matt. xxvi. 7. and conſequently the cuſtom of anointing, notes a ſolemn entertainment of any one: Water to waſh the feet, and bread to eat, was allow'd to every of the gueſts; but not ſo the fatted calf, but when they would expreſs a great joy, and welcome, and making merry, as in the return of the prodigal. And ſo, in like manner, the anointing, or pouring oil on the heads of the gueſts, is the higheſt expreſſion of acknowledging and teſtifying the greateſt joy, (and ſo called "the oil of gladneſs," Pſal. xlv. 7.) that is to be found among them. This anointing therefore from hence came to denote the preferring one before another, (and the Targum generally renders it by a word which ſignifies preferring, or advancing,) and ſo became the ceremony of conſecrating to any ſpecial office, and was ordinarily uſed in the inſtalling men to offices of any eminence. From hence, as in many other things, doth the word come to be uſed metaphorically, for any that is preferred before, or ſet over others. Abraham and the patriarchs, that muſt not be touch'd in the Pſalmiſt, are called God's anointed; that is, perſons by God preferred and advanced before others, taken into his ſpecial care, and ſo ſignally teſtified to be by God's dealings towards them: And ſo the anointed of the Lord are thoſe whom God hath ſet over other men. Agreeable to this is it, that that eminent perſon, propheſyed of by Moſes, whom God ſhould ſend, and whom they were to hear, is generally known by the name of The anointed, the meſſias or Chriſt, becauſe he was thus preferred by God (Pſal. xlv. 7. and Heb. i. 9.) "above his fellows," men and angels themſelves. According to this notion it is, that when the Holy Ghoſt came down on Chriſt, and thereby (by a voice from heaven, "Thou art my beloved ſon in whom I am well pleaſed)" mark'd him out, as the perſon whom God had ſent, (of whom John therefore ſaid, that he was "greater than he, and preferred before him)" it is expreſs'd by the prophet in theſe words, "The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach," &c. Iſa. lxi. 1. and Luke iv. 18. that is, the Lord hath preferred me before others, and ſet me apart to this office, as he hath no other man: So again Acts iv. 27. "Thy ſon Jeſus whom thou haſt anointed;" that is, marked out to be that beloved ſon of thine; which was done at the ſpirit's coming down upon him, which therefore muſt be reſolved to be the meaning of anointing him in that place. And ſo 'tis evidently in this place, "How God hath anointed him with the holy ſpirit, and with power;" that is, whom God by thoſe two means (the deſcent of the ſpirit upon him, and the power of miracles, as by privileges and marks of prelation) preferred, and dignified, beyond all others that ever were in the world, and demonſtrated him to be that promiſed meſſias. This uſe of the phraſe, being ſo remarkable of Chriſt, and ſo particularly applied to this reſpect of the Holy Ghoſt's teſtifying of him and ſetting him apart for his office (for the very teſtifying that he was God's beloved ſon, who was to be heard before all others, is the enſtalling or conſecrating him to his prophetick office, to teach the world) is farther enlarged to the apoſtles of Chriſt, on whom the Holy Ghoſt afterward deſcended in like manner, and even to all other faithful Chriſtians alſo, 2 Cor. i. 21. where, with that phraſe of confirming them into Chriſt, that is, giving them aſſurance of the truth of Chriſt's being the meſſias, (as an oath is ſaid to be for confirmation) is joined alſo God's having anointed them; which ſignifies God's having afforded them ſuch ſpecial favour, and giving them ſuch evidences and teſtimonies of the truth of that they were to believe; viz. the Holy Ghoſt's deſcending upon the apoſtles (which was one aſſurance of Chriſt's being the true meſſias, and the miracles which they wrought was another) which being not ſo peculiar to the twelve apoſtles, but that, like the oil on Aaron's head, it deſcended to the beard, and "to the skirts of his clothing," it is communicated by St. Paul to himſelf, and the believing Corinthians alſo. From this laſt place thus underſtood will appear alſo what is meant by the chriſma, or unction, 1 John ii. 20. which the Chriſtians, or believers, to whom he writes, are by him ſaid to have "from the holy one, that is, I conceive, from the Holy Ghoſt. The Holy Ghoſt, by deſcending on the apoſtles, had taught them all things, that is, given them aſſurance that what Chriſt had preached was true, and conſequently, that he being the true meſſias, all other contrary teachers were falſe teachers, and to be avoided. This teſtimony from heaven afforded the apoſtles, and attendant on that, the power alſo of doing miracles in Chriſt's name allowed to many others in the church of the firſt times, was the foundation of belief to that and the whole ſucceeding church, and therefore that privilege, as it was allowed them, being call'd chriſma, or unction, is ſaid there to belong to theſe believers: They have it, that is, either the extraordinary gifts of the ſpirit in the church, or elſe the benefit of it, the evidence of thoſe truths, which the coming of the Holy Ghoſt confirmed, belongs unto them; and therefore, as that deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt was ſaid to teach them all things, ſo here they which have this chriſma, "know all things;" that is, have ſufficient evidence thereby of the truth, ver. 21. that is, of the Goſpel, or "that Jeſus is the meſſias," ver. 22. and that what they had received "from the beginning," ver. 24. that is, from the beginning of Chriſt's appearing among them, at his baptiſm, when the Holy Ghoſt thus deſcended, was ſuch a truth as they were never to part with. And ſo ver. 27. the unction again, that is, that which God had afforded them, to demonſtrate, that Jeſus was the meſſias, "teacheth you of all things," that is, gives you aſſurance of the truth of the Goſpel of Chriſt, "and is truth, and not a lie;" that is, infallibly true, and fit to be confronted unto, and to fortify you againſt all thoſe that come to deceive you, ver. 26. (H.)

Did eat and drink with him.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 42. and John xxi. 12.

The judge of quick and dead.] That is, As well of thoſe who being found alive at his coming, ſhall be changed, as of thoſe who ſhall be raiſed from the dead, to come to judgment. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John v. 22, 27.

To him give all the prophets witneſs.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 26, 46.

Ver. 44, 45, 46, 47, 48. While Peter yet ſpake theſe words, the holy Ghoſt fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumciſion which believed were aſtoniſhed, as many as came with Peter, becauſe that on the Gentiles alſo was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. For they heard them ſpeak with tongues, and magnify God. Then anſwered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that theſe ſhould not be baptized, which have received the holy Ghoſt, as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

The Holy Ghoſt fell on all.] In the ſame manner, and exerting himſelf in the ſame miraculous effects, as he did at his firſt plenteous effuſion on the day of Pentecoſt. See the notes on ch. ii. 4. and viii. 15.

Then anſwered Peter.] See the notes on Luke xiv. 6.

Can any man forbid water?] Theſe words contain a plain, and a convincing demonſtration of the falſhood of the Quaker's doctrine, that water-baptiſm is unneceſſary to them, who have received the inward baptiſm of the ſpirit: Since the apoſtle here not only declares that water-baptiſm ought therefore to be adminiſtred to theſe perſons; becauſe they had already been baptized with the holy Ghoſt, but alſo commands them to be baptized upon that account. (W. B. and F.)

Commanded them to be baptized.] That is, he commanded water to be brought for their baptiſm: And then, either perform'd the office himſelf, or elſe more probably commanded it to be done by ſome of the deacons, as Dr. Comber conjectures. What Dr. Whitby means by ſaying, he "left it to be done by gifted perſons," I can't underſtand, unleſs it be intended of the gift of the Holy Ghoſt conferr'd in epiſcopal ordination: For that none elſe, howſoever otherwiſe pretendedly gifted, were authorized by Chriſt to adminiſter ſacraments in his church, has been clearly demonſtrated, by the author of Lay-baptiſm invalid, and ſeveral other learned writers.

In the name of the Lord.] This muſt be underſtood as relating to the uſe, not to the form, of baptiſm. They were "baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, as Chriſt commanded, Matth. xxviii. 19. But here, "baptizing in the name of the Lord," importeth conſecration to the Lord Chriſt, and implantation into the church whereof he is the head. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ii. 38.

Then prayed they him to tarry.] That they might be further inſtructed, confirmed, and comforted by his miniſtry. (Aſſ. Cave, and B.) Such was the beginning of the converſion of the Gentiles: And it is ſaid, That Cornelius was afterwards biſhop of Cæſarea; which was then one of the greateſt cities in Judæa, and the greateſt part of its inhabitants Greeks. (Fleury)

CHAP. XI.

Peter juſtifieth his going in to the Gentiles. The Goſpel being ſpread further abroad, Barnabas is ſent to confirm the new converts at Antioch; where the diſciples are firſt called Chriſtians. Agabus propheſying of a great famine, the church there ſend relief to the brethren in Judea.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. AND the apoſtles and brethren that were in Judea, heard that the Gentiles had alſo received the word of God. And when Peter was come up to Jeruſalem, they that were of the circumciſion contended with him, Saying, Thou wenteſt in to men uncircumciſed, and didſt eat with them. But Peter rehearſed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, ſaying, I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I ſaw a viſion, A certain veſſel deſcend, as it had been a great ſheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me. Upon the which when I had faſtened mine eyes, I conſidered and ſaw four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild-beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. And I heard a voice ſaying unto me, Ariſe, Peter; ſlay, and eat. But I ſaid, Not ſo, Lord: For nothing common or unclean hath at any time entred into my mouth. But the voice anſwered me again from heaven, What God hath cleanſed, that call not thou common. And this was done three times: And all were drawn up again into heaven. And behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the houſe where I was, ſent from Ceſarea unto me. And the ſpirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover, theſe ſix brethren accompanied me, and we entred into the man's houſe: And he ſhewed us how he had ſeen an angel in his houſe, which ſtood and ſaid unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whoſe ſirname is Peter: Who ſhall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy houſe ſhall be ſaved. And as I began to ſpeak, the holy Ghoſt fell on them, as on us at the beginning. Then remembred I the word of the Lord, how that he ſaid, John indeed baptized with water; but ye ſhall be baptized with the holy Ghoſt. Foraſmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, what was I that I could withſtand God? When they heard theſe things, they held their peace, and glorified God, ſaying, Then hath God alſo to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

Contended with him.] Obſerve here, 1. How the Jews apprehending that Chriſt and his grace had been only promiſed and confined to themſelves, the call and converſion of the Gentiles became a dreadful ſtumbling-block unto them, even to the believing as well as the unbelieving Jews. Hereupon obſerve, 2. How they contended with Peter for eating and converſing with the Gentiles, and eſpecially for admitting them into goſpel-communion without circumciſion: Whereas altho' God forbad marriages with the Gentiles, he never forbad commerce and converſation with them: No converſation with the Gentiles, in order to the gaining of the Gentiles unto God, was ever forbidden by God; but only ſuch as might withdraw the Jews from God, and corrupt them by idolatry. (B.) Some tell us, that the arch-heretic Cerinthus was the chief author of this contention. (Fleury) But I ſee no reaſon to except any of the Jews (unleſs perhaps the apoſtles) from a ſhare in it; they being all zealous of the law, and of their cuſtoms, and not enduring to hear that any Jew ſhould act contrary to them, ch. xxi. 20, 21. St. Peter himſelf being of that mind till he had received this viſion, and laying it down, as a known rule, ch. x. 28. That it was unlawful for a Jew to converſe with an alien: And, even after this viſion, withdrawing himſelf from the believing Gentiles, for fear of the Jews who came from Jeruſalem, Gal. ii. 12. and thoſe of the diſperſion preaching to the Jews only. Note here alſo, That the believers knew nothing of the ſupremacy, and much leſs of the infallibility, of St. Peter: For otherwiſe they would not have dared thus to riſe up againſt their ſupreme governor; much leſs would they have condemn'd the actions of their infallible teacher! (W.) See the notes on ch. x. 28.

Peter rehearſed the matter.] Obſerve here, 1. How far St. Peter was from pretending a ſuperiority over the reſt of the Apoſtles: He did by no means think himſelf ſo far above them, as to diſdain to render an account of his actions to them; but, with great ſincerity and humility, rehearſed and related the whole matter of fact, to their entire and joint ſatisfaction. 2. How he acquaints the apoſtles with the viſion he had ſeen: In which he was commanded to make no diſtinction of clean and unclean: Becauſe there was no natural turpitude in any kind of meat, ſave only as it was prohibited by God; and that God, who having made the law about difference of meats, had now abrogated it, and made all meats clean and free to be eaten. 3. How he gives them the interpretation of this viſion, and acquaints them with the end for which this viſion was deſigned: Namely, Not ſo much to reveal to him the lawfulneſs of eating all ſorts of meats, as to acquaint him with his liberty and duty to converſe with and preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles; whom he was no longer to look upon as unclean, tho' they were not circumciſed; but as "heirs and fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God." 4 The concluſion which St. Peter drew from the premiſes: Seeing God hath made the Gentiles equal in grace with the believing Jews; ſeeing the Holy Ghoſt came down upon them in the ſame manner, and with the ſame effects as he did upon us apoſtles, I could not reaſonably deny them baptiſm, and by baptiſm admiſſion into the goſpel-church: For having the grace ſignified by baptiſm, they ought to have baptiſm, the ſeal of that grace; they that have the inward, are not to be denied the outward baptiſm; they that were baptized with the Holy Ghoſt (as Cornelius and his family were) might and ought to be baptized with water, as Cornelius was: For had I denied them church-communion for want of the ceremony of circumciſion, it had certainly been a downright reſiſtance of, and diſobedience againſt God. See the whole caſe ſet forth and explain'd, in the notes on ch. x. 9, &c.

The Holy Ghoſt fell on them, as on us.] That is, in the like power, tho' not in the ſame ſign of fiery tongues, nor with the ſame degree of fulneſs. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ii. 4. and Mark i. 8.

Baptized with the Holy Ghoſt.] See the notes on ch. i. 5. Matth. iii. 11. Mark i. 8. and John i. 26.

What was I, that I could withſtand God?] See the notes on ch. v. 39. and x. 47.

Held their peace.] That is, They were ſatisfied: Which is indeed the property of good men, who contend not for victory, but for truth; whereas the perverſe will not be ſatisfied with reaſon. (Aſſ.)

Repentance unto life.] See the notes on Luke xix. 9.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Now they which were ſcattered abroad upon the perſecution that aroſe about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only. And ſome of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which when they were come to Antioch, ſpake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jeſus. And the hand of the Lord was with them: And a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord. Then tidings of theſe things came unto the ears of the church, which was in Jeruſalem: And they ſent forth Barnabas, that he ſhould go as far as Antioch. Who when he came, and had ſeen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpoſe of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. For he was a good man, and full of the holy Ghoſt, and of faith: And much people was added unto the Lord. Then departed Barnabas to Tarſus, for to ſeek Saul. And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to paſs, that a whole year they aſſembled themſelves with the church, and taught much people; and the diſciples were called Chriſtians firſt in Antioch.

They which were ſcatter'd abroad.] Perſecutions are beneficial to the church. That which its enemies imagine will deſtroy it, is the very thing which cauſes it to increaſe. It belongs to God to open the way of the Goſpel; to us, to wait for his orders, and faithfully to obſerve them. Perſecution never diſcourages a true Chriſtian. He finds his own country wherever he can love God, and ſerve the church. He cannot poſſibly be baniſh'd here on earth, ſince the whole earth, is no other than a place of baniſhment, wherein he was born. (Q.) This perſecution ſcatter'd the diſciples indeed: But, at the ſame time, it diſperſed the Goſpel too, and open'd a paſſage for the word of truth, wider and readier than could have been found, ſuppoſing its proſelytes quietly to have continued and aſſembled together in any one place. (Stanh.) See the notes on ch. viii. 1, 4.

Preaching the word.] Woltzogenius here notes, that theſe men preach'd without any miſſion: And hence concludes, that an ordinary miſſion is not required to authorize men to preach the Goſpel. But this is ſaid without juſt grounds: For theſe men ſeem to be of the number of thoſe, on whom the Holy Ghoſt fell on the day of Pentecoſt; among whom were thoſe of Cyrene, ch. ii. 10. Moreover, it follows here, ver. 21. that "the hand (or power) of the Lord was with them," to confirm their doctrine by miracles. He therefore who will plead a commiſſion from God to preach the Goſpel, without an ordinary miſſion, muſt ſhew the like extraordinary gifts, or miraculous aſſiſtances; God never ſending any perſon to do his work, without ſome teſtimony from himſelf, or from ſome perſons commiſſion'd by him. (W.) See the notes on ch. viii. 4.

Unto the Grecians.] Pros tous Helleniſtas; To the Helleniſts. Grotius here ſaith, Certo legendum, pros tous hellenas, We muſt certainly read to the Greeks; becauſe the Syriac, Arabic and Latin, ſo read: Whereas, that is no ground at all; for ſo they all read, ch. vi. 1. where Grotius himſelf acknowledges, the Jews are to be underſtood by the Helleniſts: He adds, that the Alexandrian MS. ſo reads; but ſo it doth in oppoſition to all the other MSS. Chryſoſtom here ſaith, That they ſpake Greek, being Hebrews. Oecumenius ſaith, He ſtiles them Helleniſts, not as being addicted to the worſhip of the Greeks, but as ſpeaking the Greek language: And it ſeems neceſſary to underſtand the Jews uſing the Greek tongue, and reading the ſcriptures in that tongue in their ſynagogues, as Buxtorf ſays, they did; 1. Becauſe theſe perſons "preached to the Jews only," ver. 19. And, 2. Becauſe they of the church of Jeruſalem ſend to them Barnabas; whom they would ſcarce ſend to the uncircumciſed. (Idem.) See the notes on ch. vi. 1.

The hand of the Lord was with them.] By "the hand of the Lord," is meant the power and aſſiſtance of the Lord; which did accompany them in diſpenſing of his word, and enable them to work miracles for the confirmation of it. The hand is the organ or inſtrument of working in man: When it is attributed to God, it denotes his power and help; the hand of God was manifeſted in the miracles which they wrought, and in faith and converſion, which the ſight of thoſe miracles produced. Learn hence, That faith and converſion are wrought by the hand of the Lord; they are his work: Study and endeavour is the miniſter's, the bleſſing and ſucceſs is God's: When he takes the ſword of the ſpirit into the hand of the ſpirit, then ſhall it work wonders.

The church which was in Jeruſalem.] The mother-church of Jeruſalem is always intent on the welfare of the new churches. The power of miſſion is attributed to the church, as being the depoſitary of the apoſtolical authority: It is to her, that every thing is given; Unitati, non uni. (Q.)

They ſent forth Barnabas.] See the notes on ch. iv. 36.

And had ſeen the grace of God.] That is, the admirable effects thereof, through the preaching of thoſe who were there before him.

Was glad.] The very name of jealouſy ought not ſo much as to be known among evangelical workmen: But every one of them ought to be as glad of the ſucceſs of others, as of that which attends his own labours. Nothing gives greater comfort to a ſoul which loves God, than to ſee his kingdom flouriſh and increaſe. (Q.)

Cleave unto the Lord.] That is, with a firm and fixed reſolution of will, to keep cloſe to the profeſſion of the truth of Chriſt, what ever tribulation or diſtreſs they might meet with. Young converts need exhortation and counſel, to eſtabliſh and confirm them in the faith of the Goſpel, and to encourage them to hold faſt to Chriſt. (B.)

Added to the Lord.] That is, won to the faith in Chriſt, and to his church. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ii. 41, 47. iv. 4. and xxi. 20.

To ſeek Saul.] Barnabas, having a great zeal and fervent deſire, that the Goſpel might be more and more propagated, went to Tarſus, to ſeek out Saul, that they might join together in the work of Chriſt: And having "found him, he brought him to Antioch;" where for "a whole year," they inſtructed the church in that city, and "taught much people." O how happy is it for the church of Chriſt, when her miniſters, laying aſide all private intereſt, do unitedly apply themſelves to promote the common intereſt of Chriſtianity. (B.) See the notes on ver. 23. and ch. ix. 27.

The diſciples were called Chriſtians.] Before, they were called diſciples, as here; believers, ch. v. 14. men of the church, ch. xii. 1. men of the way, ch. ix. 2. The ſaints, ver. 13. Thoſe that called on the name of Chriſt, ver. 14. and by their enemies, Nazarenes and Galileans: But now, by the converſion of Cornelius, and his kinſmen, and his family, the believing Jews and Gentiles being made one church; that the name of Jew and Heathen might no more continue the diſtance that was betwixt them, this new name was given to them both; as ſome conceive according to the propheſy mentioned, Iſa. lxv. 15. A name embraced by all Chriſtians, as more expreſſive of their relation to their maſter Chriſt; and which they gloried in, and owned before the face of their enemies, Tertull. Apol. c. 3, 5. Euſeb. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. l. v. c. 1. But that Euodius ſhould be then biſhop of Antioch, and give this name firſt to the Chriſtians, and St. Luke ſhould ſay nothing either of his doing this, or ever mention his being there, it is not eaſy to believe. (W.) But however, this has gain'd credit with many other learned writers, who have mention'd it, without any ſcruple, on the credit of good and ancient authors. Joan. Antiochen. in chronol. informs us, That this honourable name was fixed upon the diſciples of Chriſt, at Antioch, about the beginning of Claudius's reign, ten years after Chriſt's aſcenſion: And adds, that Euodius, lately ordain'd biſhop of that place, was the perſon that impoſed this name upon them. (Suidas, Selden, Gregory, Cave, and Stanh.) And the original word, chrematiſai, here uſed by St. Luke, (which we render "were called,") implies the thing to have been done by ſome public and ſolemn act and declaration of the whole church: For ſuch was the uſe of the word in the imperial edicts and proclamations of thoſe times; the emperors being ſaid chrematizein heautous, to ſtyle themſelves, when they publickly proclaim'd by what titles they would be call'd. Inſtances of this are recorded, in relation to this very city of Antioch: And St. Luke, being himſelf a native of it, uſeth the word in that ſame ſenſe. (H. Greg. Fuller, Cave, Stanh. B. and Maſſey)

In Antioch.] There are no fewer than ſeven and twenty cities in Aſia of this name: But the Antioch here mention'd is certainly known to be that in Cœlo-Syria, between the mountains Libanus and Antilibanus; commonly call'd Antioch the Great, having been a metropolis for trade in thoſe eaſtern parts; but now dwindled to an inconſiderable village. (Full.) Here we may obſerve, That providence ſo order'd, that the name of Chriſtians did not begin firſt at Jeruſalem, 1. Becauſe that city had lately loſt its credit with the great God of heaven, for its ingratitude to God, and cruelty to his ſervants, Matth. xxiii. 37, 38. Yea, 'twas utterly unfit, that the name of Chriſtians ſhould begin in that place where Chriſt himſelf was ſo cruelly put to death. 2 Becauſe Jeruſalem was of a covetous, envious, and ingroſſing nature, ready to monopolize and incloſe all honour to it ſelf: So that had the name of Chriſtians firſt begun within thoſe walls, the Jews would have been ready alone to lay claim thereto, excluding the Gentiles from any participation therein. As Chriſt therefore ſuffer'd without the walls of Jeruſalem, to proclaim himſelf a public good, not appropriated to that private nation; ſo, for the ſame reaſon, the name of Chriſtians began not there: Nor yet, ſecondly, at Rome. O how would the tide of Tyber have ſwell'd beyond its banks, had this name firſt begun in that city? How would the Papiſts boaſt, tho' not without ſome cauſe, yet beyond all meaſure, that Rome, in a manner, was the God-mother of true religion, and gave her the name of Chriſtianity? If an ancient father cannot, in his writings, give a civil reſpect to that which was the imperial city; if an eccleſiaſtical hiſtorian cannot give it a rhetorical compliment, as having been a famous church, and an ancient patriarchal ſee; without having their expreſſions wreſted, to ſignify (contrary to the mind of the ſpeakers,) the ſupremacy and infallibility of the Romiſh church; how would they have imperiouſly upbraided us, if the name of Chriſtians had had its riſe from Rome, and its original within the walls thereof? But God hath blaſted their boaſting: For Chriſtians were firſt ſo call'd, not at Rome, but in Antioch. (Idem.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30. And in theſe days came prophets from Jeruſalem unto Antioch. And there ſtood up one of them named Agabus, and ſignified by the ſpirit, that there ſhould be great dearth throughout all the world: Which came to paſs in the days of Claudius Ceſar. Then the diſciples, every man according to his ability, determined to ſend relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea. Which alſo they did, and ſent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

Prophets from Jeruſalem.] See the notes on ch. ii. 17. and xiii. 1.

Dearth throughout all the earth.] That Oicoumene ſignifies the Roman empire, has been already noted. Accordingly, Euſebius ſaith of this famine, That it oppreſſed almoſt the whole empire; and that it was recorded by hiſtorians, moſt averſe to our religion: Viz. by Suetonius, in the life of Claudius; who ſaith, it happen'd thro' a long barrenneſs. Joſephus ſaith, It raged ſo much in Judea, that many periſhed for want of victuals. And Dion Caſſius, That it was a very great famine; and happened when Claudius and Caius Largus were conſuls: That is, in the ſecond year of Claudius; tho' it ſeems rather to have been that which happened, as Euſebius in his Chronicon, and Oroſius, l. vii. c. 6. place it, in the fourth year of Claudius. (W) See the notes on Luke ii. 1. and xxi. 35.

Every man, according to his ability.] Relieving the poor and neceſſitous is a duty, which all, in ſome degree or other, are bound to practiſe, tho' the exact proportion is not any where ſet down in the New Teſtament, probably, that there might be room for men to make a free-will offering to God. The rich ſhould look upon themſelves as ſtewards, and think that God will hereafter call them to an account of their ſtewardſhip. Thoſe therefore who have hoarded up their riches, and done little or no good with them, and thoſe who have abuſed them by riot and exceſs, can never hope to eſcape puniſhment, becauſe they have both been unfaithful in the management of the truſt committed to them. The circumſtances of people are ſo vaſtly different, that no general rule can be laid down, as to the meaſure of every man's charity: But if any ſhall deceive themſelves, and knowingly and wilfully miſtake their condition and ability, the judgment they paſs will not be approv'd of at the tribunal of Chriſt. It is ſafer to give too much, than too little: And when the neceſſities of our Chriſtian brethren are urgent, we ſhould go even beyond our ability. But what is given, ſhould be done with a ready and chearful mind. (Fox) See the notes on ch. ii. 45. Matth. xxiii. 23. and Luke xi. 41.

Sent it to the elders.] The word presbyteroi, elders, is here firſt met with in the Chriſtian church. Among the Greeks it was anciently uſed to ſignify both rulers, and old men; as it is ſtill in uſe among all nations to call their rulers ſeniors, majors, aldermen, &c. among the Hebrews it ſignified the ſame; denoting dignity and preferment. Thus Eliezer, Abraham's ſteward, who "ruled over all that he had," is call'd presbyteros tes oicias autou, The elder of his houſe, Gen. xxiv. 2. And "the elders of Pharaoh's houſe," ch. l. 7. were the adminiſtrators of the king's houſe and kingdom. In the like ſenſe are we alſo to underſtand "The elders of Moab," Numb. xxii. 7, 8. "The elders of Iſrael." Exod. iii. 16, 18. iv. 29. vi. 14. xvi. 22. xvii. 5, 6. and xviii. 12. "The elders of the tribes," Deut. xxxi. 28. and The "ſeventy elders," Numb. xi. 16. to whom the great ſanhedrim ſucceeded; wherein there were three ſeveral orders, viz. elders, ſcribes, and chief-prieſts. In alluſion to all which this word presbyteroi, elders, is fitly applied, in the New Teſtament, to the governors of the Chriſtian church, the biſhops of the ſeveral cities. And tho' this title has been extended to a ſecond order in the church, and is now only in uſe for them, under the name of presbyters; yet in the ſcripture-times it belong'd principally, if not alone, to biſhops; there being no evidence, that any of that ſecond order were then inſtituted, tho', before the writing of St. Ignatius's epiſtles, we find them in all churches. Clemens Romanus, in ep. 1 ad Corinth. ſays, Chriſt was ſent from God, and the apoſtles from Chriſt, and they went out preaching the Goſpel: They therefore preaching in the cities and countries, conſtituted their firſt converts into biſhops and deacons of thoſe who ſhould afterwards believe. Where it appears, that when the Goſpel was firſt preached by the apoſtles, and but few converted, they ordained in every city and region no more but a biſhop, and one or more deacons to attend him; there being at the preſent ſo ſmall ſtore out of which to take more, and ſo ſmall need of ordaining more, that this biſhop is conſtituted more for the ſake of thoſe which ſhould after believe, than of thoſe which did already. Agreeable to which is that of Epiphanius l. iii. c. 1. When need required, and there were thoſe that were fit for it, biſhops were conſtituted: But while there was no multitude of Chriſtians, there were none among them conſtituted presbyters (in our modern uſe of that word) and they contented themſelves with a biſhop in every place; and his deacons to miniſter to him. And accordingly, when St. Paul gives directions to biſhop Timothy, for the ordaining of officers in the church, he names biſhops and deacons, but no ſecond order between them, 1 Tim. iii. 2, 8. and ſo to Titus, Tit. i. 7. and ch. ii. 2. And ſo in the church of Jeruſalem it is clear by ſtory, that James, the brother of the Lord, being ſoon after Chriſt's aſcenſion conſtituted their biſhop, the deacons are the firſt that are added to him, Acts vi. and no mention as yet of any middle order: From whence it will be ſufficiently cleared, who are the presbyteroi, elders here; viz. The biſhops of the ſeveral cities, or of "the brethren that dwelt in Judæa," ver. 29. to whom theſe alms were deſigned: For, the famine being in all Judæa, and not only at Jeruſalem, and there being brethren, that is, Chriſtians, inhabiting through ſeveral parts of Judæa, there can be no reaſon to imagine, that Jeruſalem only ſhould have the benefit of this collection; or conſequently that the elders, to whom it was delivered, ſhould belong only to that city. And thus it is known in the primitive church that alms and collections, called charis and logia, whether in the ſame church brought by the communicants in the offertory, or by officers ſent from one church to another, were ſolemnly intruſted to the biſhop, as the ſteward of the houſe of God; as the oblations were brought to the high-prieſt under the law, and the liberality of the faithful to the apoſtles feet, ch. iv. 34. So is the 41ſt canon apoſtolical, and ſo ſaith Juſtin Martyr from this explication of presbyteroi here, muſt be taken the notion of it, ch. xv. 2. Where the elders at Jeruſalem with the apoſtles, are not the elders of Jeruſalem, that one city, but the biſhops of all Judæa, now met in council at Jeruſalem, ver. 4, 6, 22, 23. which joined in making that decree, ch. xvi. 4. And ſo ch. xxi. 18. when Paul again went up to Jeruſalem, and addreſs'd himſelf to James the biſhop there, it is added, as in council, "And all the elders were there." An image or repreſentation of which council we have Rev. iv. 4. and xi. 16. "One ſitting upon the throne:" The biſhop of Jeruſalem, as metropolitan, ſitting in the midſt, and "four and twenty elders" (cyclothen) round about, (in faſhion of a crown or ſemicircle,) ſitting on thrones (on each ſide of him,) in white garments, and golden crowns (or mitres, the characters of epiſcopal dignity,) and ſeven lamps of fire, (the emblems of ſeven deacons, ver. 5.) waiting on them. And as the biſhops of Judea, being at Jeruſalem, are thus fitly ſtyled presbyteroi, elders, (not of the church of Jeruſalem, but either ſimply elders, or eis or en, at, or in Jeruſalem, noting only the place where they met in council, not of which they were elders, or governors:) So Acts xiv. 23. it is ſaid of Paul and Barnabas, paſſing through Lyſtra, Iconium, and Antioch, that having confirmed the churches they "ordained them (presbyterous cat' eccleſian,) elders, church by church;" that is, a biſhop in every church, one governor in Lyſtra, another in Iconium, another in Antioch. And ſo ch. xx. 17. the "elders of the church" of Aſia, are the ſame that are called "biſhops of the flock," ver. 28. "ſet over them by the Holy Ghoſt;" to wit, the biſhops of all Aſia, who, (ſaith Irenæus,) were called together from Epheſus and the reſt of the cities near, l. iii. c. 14. To all which places in this book of the Acts belongs that ſaying of Oecumenius, The book of the Acts uſes to call biſhops elders. So Tit. i. 5. when Titus is ſaid to be "left in Crete, to ordain elders city by city," there is little doubt, but as Titus was metropolitan of that iſland, (in which there were ſaid to be an hundred cities, and Gortyna the metropolis) ſo the elders in thoſe ſeveral cities were a biſhop in each; and ſo they are diſtinctly called, ver. 7. and the ſame directions given for the ordaining of them and the presbstai, that to Timothy are given for the biſhops and deacons, 1 Tim. iii. And the Greek ſcholiaſts ſay diſtinctly on that place, He calls the biſhops elders; and The apoſtle left Titus to conſtitute biſhops, having firſt made him biſhop: And Theodoret, He had commiſſion to ordain biſhops under him: And Theophylact, He was intruſted with the judging and ordaining of ſo many (that is, an hundred) biſhops. So 1 Tim. iv. 14. The presbytereon, or elderſhip, that "laid hands on Timothy," and made him biſhop, may well be reſolved to be the biſhops, or apoſtolical men; thoſe that were vouchſafed the favour to be apoſtles, (ſaith Theodoret,) who with St. Paul (2 Tim. i. 6.) conſecrated him. Thus St. Peter calls himſelf, Peter the elder, 1 Pet. v. 1. and St. John The elder John, 2 John i. and 3 John i. And accordingly, ſaith St. Chryſoſtome on that place, By elderſhip he means not thoſe that were in his days called presbyters, but biſhops; for presbyters did not ordain biſhops: And ſo Theophylact and Oecumenius, presbytery, that is, biſhops: And ſo Ignatius calls the apoſtles The presbytery of the church: And Theodoret renders the reaſon of the appellation, For ſo, ſaith he, the holy ſcripture call'd the chief men of Iſrael, the ſenate or elderſhip. So 1 Pet. v. 1. and 5. "The elders among you," are no doubt the biſhops in all the diſperſions of the converted Jews; of whom it is there ſaid that they ſhould poimainein and epiſcopein, ver. 2. do the part of a paſtor and biſhop. Some other places there are, where the word presbyteros may poſſibly ſignify a lower order, if any ſuch there were in thoſe times; but yet it is not certain that they do ſo. Such is that 1 Tim. v. 1. "Rebuke not an elder," and ver. 19. "Receive not an accuſation againſt an elder:" Where 'tis the opinion of Epiphanius, that biſhop Timothy's power over the presbyters is ſpoken of. But when it is remembred that Timothy was not only a biſhop, but of a metropolitical ſee, the chief of all Aſia, and ſo a metropolitan, and he appointed by Paul to ordain biſhops there (whoſe qualifications are therefore ſet down, and thoſe of deacons, but no mention of a middle order) there is no doubt, but thoſe biſhops of inferior ſees ordained by him, were alſo accuſable and rebukable before him, in the ſame manner as Theophylact ſaid of Titus, that the judgment, as well as ordination of ſo many biſhops was committed to him. And therefore, tho' St. Chryſoſtome, explaining thoſe places, interpret them of all old men, (and ſome circumſtances in the context incline to that ſenſe:) Yet having made this queſtion, What ſhould be done in caſe the faults were confeſs'd, but had no witneſſes, but only an evil ſuſpicion? He anſwers, and ſo alſo Theophylact, and Oecumenius, in the ſame words, "The apoſtle had anſwered above, He ought to have a good teſtimony from them that are without;" which plainly referring to the qualifications of biſhops, 1 Tim. iii. 7. muſt ſuppoſe the elders to denote biſhops in that place alſo: And ſo again, ſaith Chryſoſtome on that other place, It is manifeſt that he was intruſted with churches, or indeed with a whole nation, that of Aſia; wherefore St. Paul diſcourſes to him of elders: Where the mention of churches in the plural, and of all Aſia, over which Timothy was placed, muſt interpret elders of biſhops there. A third place there is, in that epiſtle, 1 Tim. v. 17. "Let the elders that have ruled well be thought worthy of double honour:" Which may alſo very commodiouſly be interpreted of the biſhops, the peeſtootes or prefects of churches (ſo ſtyled by Juſtin Martyr, and others,) and thoſe diſcharging their office duly, and beſides the farther inſtructing, or teaching their churches already conſtituted, labouring and travailing in the preaching the Goſpel to them that have not before heard it, to whom therefore the double portion of alimony, the "labourer's reward," ver. 18. is aſſign'd by the apoſtle. A fourth place is that of St. James, v. 14. "Is any man ſick, let him call for the elders of the church," &c. Where, as the office of viſiting the ſick, of praying, anointing, abſolving, and reſtoring health to the ſick, may well agree to the biſhop; ſo the ſetting it in the plural number is nothing to the contrary, for that only ſignifies the elders, or biſhops of the Chriſtian church to be the men, whom all are to ſend to in this caſe: Not that there are more elders than one in one particular church or city, any more than that more than one are to be ſent for by the ſame ſick perſon. To this purpoſe belongs that place of Polycarp, the primitive biſhop of Smyrna, and Martyr, Let the elders be merciful to all; viſiting all that are weak, or ſick: Where many other particulars are mention'd, judicature; ſeverity, or exciſion; accepting of perſons; believing haſtily againſt any; as alſo reducing hereticks; which belong properly to the office of the biſhop, and not to any ſecond order in the church: And accordingly, in all that epiſtle, there is no mention of any but of elders and deacons. As in Papias alſo his contemporary, and after him in Irenæus, and Juſtin Martyr, tho' presbyteroi ſometimes ſignify that ſecond order; yet 'tis alſo uſed to ſignify the biſhop; and Polycarp himſelf, ſtyled an apoſtolick elder, or biſhop, Iren. in Ep. ad Plotinum; and ſo Seniores in Tertullian. C H A P. XII.

Herod perſecutes the church: Killeth James the Great; and impriſons Peter. Peter, delivered by an angel, retires to Ceſarea. Herod, devoured of worms, dieth miſerably.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. NOW about that time Herod the king ſtretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church. And he killed James the brother of John with the ſword. And becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the Jews, he proceeded further, to take Peter alſo. (Then were the days of unleavened bread) And when he had apprehended him, he put him in priſon, and delivered him to four quaternions of ſoldiers to keep him, intending after eaſter to bring him forth to the people. Peter therefore was kept in priſon; but prayer was made without ceaſing of the church unto God for him. And when Herod would have brought him forth, the ſame night Peter was ſleeping between two ſoldiers, bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the priſon. And behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light ſhined in the priſon: And he ſmote Peter on the ſide, and raiſed him up, ſaying, Ariſe up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. And the angel ſaid unto him, Gird thy ſelf, and bind on thy ſandals: And ſo he did. And he ſaith unto him. Caſt thy garment about thee, and follow me. And he went out and followed him, and wiſt not that it was true which was done by the angel: But thought he ſaw a viſion. When they were paſt the firſt and the ſecond ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city, which opened to them of his own accord: And they went out, and paſſed on through one ſtreet, and forthwith the angel departed from him. And when Peter was come to himſelf, he ſaid, Now I know of a ſurety that the Lord hath ſent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews. And when he had conſidered the thing, he came to the houſe of Mary the mother of John, whoſe ſirname was Mark, where many were gathered together, praying. And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damſel came to hearken, named Rhoda. And when ſhe knew Peter's voice, ſhe opened not the gate for gladneſs, but ran in, and told how Peter ſtood before the gate. And they ſaid unto her, Thou art mad. But ſhe conſtantly affirmed that it was even ſo. Then ſaid they, it is his angel. But Peter continued knocking: And when they had opened the door, and ſaw him, they were aſtoniſhed. But he beckning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the priſon. And he ſaid, Go ſhew theſe things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place. Now aſſoon as it was day there was no ſmall ſtir among the ſoldiers, what was become of Peter. And when Herod had ſought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they ſhould be put to death. And he went down from Judea to Ceſarea, and there abode.

Herod the king.] There are ſeveral of the name of Herod, mention'd in the New Teſtament, viz. 1. Herod, ſirnamed The Great; who, in hopes to deſtroy our Saviour, order'd the maſſacre of the innocent children at Bethlehem, Matth. ii. 1, 16. 2. Herod Antipas, his ſon; who put to death John the Baptiſt, Matth. xiv. 1, 10. Mark vi. 27. Luke iii. 20. and ix. 9. and had an hand in the indignities done to our bleſſed Lord himſelf, Luke xxiii. 11. and Acts iv. 27. And 3. Herod Agrippa, grandſon to Herod the Great (being the ſon of Ariſtobulus,) which Agrippa is the Herod here ſpoken of, and father to that Agrippa, before whom St. Paul pleaded his cauſe, ch. xxv. 13, &c. But all of them were tributary to the Romans.

Killed James the brother of John.] By this addition we may diſtinguiſh this James, ſirnam'd The Great, from the other James, mention'd afterwards in ver. 17. who was biſhop of Jeruſalem. Euſebius relates, That his behaviour on this occaſion was ſuch as converted his accuſer; who, publickly profeſſing himſelf a Chriſtian, was reconciled to and beheaded together with the apoſtle. Thus did our Lord not only verify to this apoſtle his promiſe, that he ſhould "drink of his cup, and be baptized with his baptiſm," Matth. xx. 23. but, in ſome ſenſe, grant his requeſt of precedence in his kingdom too; in regard he had the honour to die, firſt of all the twelve, a martyr for the Chriſtian cauſe. (Brough, Cave, Stanh. W. B. Nelſ. and Fleury) A primacy more advantagious than that which he deſired our bleſſed Lord to confer upon him. Thus God rectifies the deſires of his ſervants; and hears them, in giving them ſomething which is better than that for which they aſk. (Q.) But then the ſtory of this apoſtle's being long in Spain, and other weſtern parts, muſt be an idle ſtory of the monks: For he ſuffer'd at Jeruſalem, A. D. 43. within ten years after our Lord's aſcenſion; which could not well ſuit with the time which the apoſtles ſpent in Jeruſalem and Judea, after the diſperſion of the other diſciples. (Cave, W. and Nelſ.) See the notes on Matth. xx. 23.

He ſaw it pleaſed the Jews.] Obſerve here, 1. In this, as in a former Herod, a tragical inſtance of the abuſe of power; and of the mercileſs cruelty, into which rulers and great men are betray'd, when once they let go the reins of juſtice, and become unſteady in the meaſures of government, for the ſake of envy, ambition, jealouſy, partiality, or any other corrupt paſſion whatſoever. 2. Of all thoſe paſſions this ſcripture points us out one of the moſt dangerous; affectation of popularity and applauſe. With this the deadly poiſon is generally gilded, by thoſe who would inſinuate miſchief, and perſuade to wicked, becauſe acceptable, methods: It was becauſe the death of James "pleaſed the Jews," that Herod "proceeded farther, to take Peter alſo." Nor is this any great matter of wonder: For the humours of the people are ſo extravagant, and their expectations ſo unreaſonable, that whoſoever takes his directions from thence is the greateſt of ſlaves. 3. The danger and miſery of going paſt retreat, loſing all remorſe, and falling from one wickedneſs to another. But, againſt theſe melancholy obſervations the following verſes help us to another moſt comfortable: viz. 4. The wiſdom and goodneſs of that ever-watchful providence, by which the evil deſigns of ſuch wicked men are diſappointed, and his faithful ſervants wonderfully preſerved from them. (Stanh.) Perſecutors cannot do all the miſchief they would; and they ſhall not do all they can. (B.)

Then were the days of unleavened bread.] That is to ſay, the paſchal feſtival. By which and the following verſes, we may perceive the impropriety of the Papiſts celebrating the commemoration of St. Peter's impriſonment on the firſt of Auguſt, (which they call Feſtum S. Petri ad vincula,) when 'tis plain, he was put into thoſe chains during the paſchal feaſt, and deliver'd from them at the cloſe of it; that is, about four months earlier in the year. (W.) See the notes on ver. 7. Matth. xxvi. 18.
